Library
University of Pittsburgh
Darlington Memorial Library
Class Dar 9 JK 1
Book N 69
v. 40

WILLIAM & MARY DARLINGTON
MEMORIAL LIBRARY
UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

NILES'

WEEKLY REGISTER,

CONTAINING

POLITICAL, HISTORICAL, GEOGRAPHICAL, SCIENTIFICAL, STATISTICAL, ECONOMICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL

DOCUMENTS, ESSAYS AND FACTS;

TOGETHER WITH

NOTICES OF THE ARTS AND MANUFACTURES,

AND A

RECORD OF THE EVENTS OF THE TIMES.

H. NILES, EDITOR.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

FROM MARCH, 1831, TO SEPTEMBER, 1831—VOL. XL. OR, VOLUME IV.—FOURTH SERIES.

Baltimore:
PRINTED BY THE EDITOR,
AT THE FRANKLIN PRESS, WATER-STREET, EAST OF SOUTH-STREET.

107

INDEX TO VOLUME XL.

Abestos 168: Accidents 365
Adams, Jefferson and Monroe, curious calculation concerning 341; dying words of Adams and Jefferson 362
Adams, John Q. letter to J. C. Calhoun 24; to W. H. Crawford 40; on the rights of Georgia and the Indians 48; at Baltimore 168; 4th of July psalm 345; toast at Quincy 395; 4th July oration 430
Africa—Mungo Park's MSS. 241; the Niger 286; the Landers 241, 432
Age of ships 390
Alabama—governor resigns 64: cotton twine manufacture 149: public dinners in 191: slave murdered 285: gold mines 285: small pox 456
Alaman, Lucas 228
Albany Argus 71, 165, 373, 402
Algiers—229, 434: colonizing 242: dey of 185: bey of Oran 73
American bull 142
American System, address to the friends of 45: definition of 60: effects of the 192, 218, 338: letters to the editor on 353, 435: See editorial, &c.
Am. Sentinel 165, 299, 373, 374
Anderson, James, death of 168
Anderson, Joseph, his circular 284
Andre, major 233
Anonymous letters 305
Anthracite coal 342, 390
Anti-tariff convention, notices 234, 305, 368: prospects of 205
Apology, a strange one 365
Appointments in Maryland 46, 395
Appointments by the president and senate 26, 55, 59, 63, 95, 131, 220, 222, 223, 254, 292, 337, 394, 401, 433
Arabian horses 70, 196, 283
Arkansas—Geo. F. Owen, killed 221: steam boats at Little Rock 344
Archbold, James 308
Army, United States 196
Arms, quantity manufacturing 64
Asparagus 284: Asses 185
Attorneys—free admission of 408
Austria—cholera morbus in 93: invades Italy &c. 197, 222: lines her frontiers 241: reported alliance 241: preparations 363: and Sardinia 400: army 436: commercial 462
Avalanche, diligence lost by a 185
Bainbridge, commodore 113
Baltimore 129, 142, 398
Bank of the U. States, on its renewal in Pennsylvania 56: in New York 114: in Bibb county, Geo. 73: monthly statements 112: export and import of bullion 75; Globe's remarks on 62: Pennsylvania Inquirer's do. 312: sale of stock 95: rise of stock 166: branch at Louisville 200, 313: refutations 224, 312: divided 341: Mr. Madison's letter on 351
Banks—robbery of the City bank N. York 62, 74, 143: Nashville bank 62; capital of banks, principal cities 64, 65: Amherst 196: sale of stock at Albany 221: Ulster, N. Y. 221: of Buffalo 285: broken 309
Banner, Mr. Raguet's, 178, 185, 205
Banks, Henry, of Va. 386
Barbour, James 61
Barbour, John S. 401
Bargain and intrigue, case of 276
Barnwell, R. W. letter of 97
Barron, commodore, dinner to 221
Barringer, Mr. of N. C. 235
Barnet, & Co. and Mr. Clay 207
Barry, W. T. 283: prescribes the duty of postmasters 423
Bavaria—prosperity of 184
Bear killed in Maine 408
Belgium—protocols of the 5 powers 9; union with France desired 53: the 5 powers prescribe limits 53: debates in nat. cong. 53: duke de Nemours elected king 74: Brussels quiet 74: interference by France 53: gun boat blown up 93: Brussels unsettled 93: conspiracy at and arrest of gen. Nypels 151: affairs unsettled at 184: regent appointed 140: ministers resign 141: Nypels and Barremas prosecuted 197: mob at Ghent 197: reports of dividing Belgium 199: gen. Lamarque offered command of the army 222: civil dissentions 240, 296: prince Leopold proposed for king 184: doubts of acceptance, &c. 255, 275, 296, 312: his election expected to be almost unanimous 328: officially announced 363: the election 400: probability of his acceptance 407: urged to intercede 407: accepts the throne 426, 437: lord Ponsomby departs from Brussels 275: armistice at Antwerp broken and some skirmishing 312: national congress 312: confidential communications 312: the budgets 426: protocols 312: conflict at Namur 328: regent requested to march against the Dutch 407; adjustment of differences expected 329: boundaries fixed 364: treaty formed by the 5 powers 437: commotion in Louvain 437: the congress agrees to terms of the 5 powers 457
Bene-plant, a cure for cholera 407
Benton, Thomas H. 308
Bernard, gen. 185, 285, 341
Berrien, J. M. speech at Savannah, Geo. 260: correspondence with the president 304: with F. P. Blair 375; with J. H. Eaton 381: exposition to the public 377: to col. Johnson 382
Billow, the brig 185
Biscuit making 168: 282
Black Book, of England 366
Blacksmith, the study of a 235
Blair, Mr. of S. C. threat in congress 68: correspondence, &c. 96: do. with judge Cooper 154, 190
Blankets, manufactory of 452
Blayney, Willis H. 373
Bockee, A. and Duff Green 276
Bonaparte, Louis Napoleon 406, 425
Bonnets, domestic 281, 282
Bonpland, the naturalist 287
Boston Transcript 180
Boston Courier 345, 350
Botanic garden, Bartram's 367
Bourbons, the last abode of 364
Branch, John, letters of resignation 153, 165: letters concerning 201, 220, 252, 253: defiance to 268: cor. with Mr. Bynam 385: Ingham and Berrien's 426
Brastow, Mr. S. liberality of 405
Brazil—revolution at 223, 241: disturbances 364: explosion at Rio 390: ex-emperor 400

British affairs.

Arms manufactoring 64; do. shipped to Holland 311; America, dreadful state of things in, as reported 309; actresses 283
Ball to the king and queen 92; bible society 363; the black book 366; brig Billow 185; Brougham, H. 256; bullion 284; Belgium 363
Canals in Canada 92; capital punishment 364; census 423, cholera morbus 406; church, reform 160, livings 195, reforms 425; coal consumed 168; cock-fighting parsons 419; colonial trade 250; duties 256; custom house construction 310, Cobbett W. 457; cotton, contemplated duty on 74, 92, 94; spinners 436; Codrington, sir E. 436; crime 464; calicoes 94, 366
Debt and taxation, increase of 142; diplomatic corps 168; disturbances in Wales 400; Brighton 418; duchess of Berri 436; Dundas, Mr. 255
Earl Fingal and others knighted 406; East India company, debt due to, to be refunded 223; Edinburg. 255; Eldon, lord contribution of 255; elections 241. 255, 275, 311, 328, 338, 363; elections in the 17th century 256
Flour market 249; seized 407; females, of certain 256; Foot. Miss 283; funds 329
Grey, earl made a knight of the garter 328
Hemp, speculations in 196; Hunt, elected 52, 92, 241; he quarrels with O'Connell 168
Imports, &c. of American cotton 65; India, governor and commander in chief differ 275; insolvents 142; iron manufactured 291; Irving rev. Mr. 406; Ireland, lord lieutenant mobbed—run on the bank 53, 93; O'Connell 52, 53, 74, 92, 94, 130, 140, 406; distress 53, 93, 184; famine 150; patriotic feeling 256; embarkations for America 264, 400; bishop of Dublin 264; elections 150, 196, 296; tythes 264; Dublin 141, 355; massacre at Castlepollard 419; murders in Clare 199; do. in Newtownbarry 419; in Clare 255, 264, 272, 328, 400, 406, 417, 418; military law 275; arrests 296; persons starving in Mayo 400, 406, 417; catholic synod 436; mob at Castlebar 455
King, amusements of the 183; dissolves parliament 238, 239, 256; popularity 241, health of 311; declines a dinner; col. Fitz Clarence a baron 275; his escape in America 342
Landers, brothers, arrive 406; Liverpool, census of 454; London 184, 295; failures 328
Markets 249, 266; Manchester calico printers quit work 457; mediation, rumor of 329; miners and colliers 406; ministers 238; monopoly 271; mourning charges 168
Navy, experimental 343; construction 363; sale of ships 365; fleet at Spithead 406
Officers, number in G. B. and Ireland 92
Parliament, meeting of 53, 92; to meet 328; meeting opened by the king 424; report of intended dissolution 141, 150; stormy debate 238; dissolution of 239; remarks on 239; how composed 255, 311, 423; elect a speaker 406; coincidence in dissolution 366; reform bill 436
Queen, provision granted to the 224
Reform, table of various motions 67; progress of 92, 94, 140, 150, 198, 223, 238, 255, 271, 436; voters 455; revenue 196, 436, royal expenditures 91; Roscoe, Wm. dies 425; Russia protests 457
Statistics 65, 67, 97, 159, 263, 264, 271, 355; Scotland, distress in 93; election 363, 423; Siddons, Mrs. death of 406; Sirr, major witness against O'Connell 53; snow storm 92; Spanish refugees, allusion to 150; Spanish bonds held in England 255; stocks, value of &c. 222, 241, 264, 457; subscriptions to defeat reform 271; Sutton, hon. Manners 400, 406; steam-power 457; sinecures 366
Tythes on a poor-house garden 93; tax proposed on cotton 74: tonnage 271: transports wanted 425: tax on candles 457
Vyvian, sir Richard 239, 436
Wars, cost of various 263; weather intensely hot 457; Wellington, duke of visit to Windsor 406; West India trade 66; meeting of delegates 306; see colonial trade above; Wilson, sir Robert, 238; wool maintains its price 368; Wynn C. W. 150; Wales 400
Brown, Obadiah B. 67
Brown, Martin, dies 142
Broom corn, origin of 168
Buchanan, James 61, 328
Bucks, locked together 221
Buenos Ayres—exports 457
Bullion, rates of carriage 284
Bunker Hill 353, 426
Burges, Mr. at N. York 64, 89, 119: originally a mechanic 168
Cabinet—dissolution of, &c. 142, 143, 146, 152, 153, 165, 168, 178, 201, 202, 220, 252, 253, 268, 269, 289, 298, 300, 301, to 304, 317, 329, 340, 346, 347, 367, 374, 375, 377, 387, 411, 417, 426: See the names of persons and things.
Calico printing 452
Calhoun, John C. correspondence with gen. Jackson 11: letters to Mr. Monroe and Mr. Wirt 23: to Mr. Adams 24, to Mr. Crawford 24, 37, 42: to Mr. Hamilton 44: the stolen letter 70: letters of Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Forsyth and Mr. Hayne 88: declines a public dinner 61: accepts one 171: his toast at 395: intends making an expose 361: nominated 417, 462: his exposition 428, 437
Cambreleng, C. C. 280, 250

Camden Journal 234
Campbell, A. 203: Campbell, J. 302
Canada—disbursements of 74: emigration to 295
Canals—Chesapeake and Delaware 74, 142, 307, 333: Chesapeake and Ohio 91, 95, 180, 206, 307, 328, 359: Dismal Swamp canal 95: Welland canal 95: Chambly 181: Savannah, Ogechee and Altamaha 143: Morris canal, and its inclined plane, 159: tolls collected on 405: Erie canal 180: Delaware and Hudson 180, 307: Ohio canals 180, 181, 307, 344, 405: experiments on 181: Pennsylvania 181, 307, 405: Miami canal 307, 405: New Orleans canal & banking company 284, Louisville and Portland, 285: New York canals 181, 307, 310: Blackstone canal 307: Rideau 311: projected 451, 452
Candle ends 168
Canton—employments, &c. 345
Carter, Mr. 116: Carr, D. S. 319
Carr, Benjamin, obsequies of 309
Carroll, Charles of C. 364
Cass, Lewis 337, 428
Cast iron piliars, &c. 281
Census, of U. States 170: do. of British provinces, (now U. States), in 1755—6, 237: of the city of N. York 254: Poland 51, 335: London 256, 295: Paris 295: Virginia 261, 262: Indians in U. S. 280: Lynn 281: Italy 295: Liverpool, 454: on Am. census 454
Chambers, Ezekiel 1, 166
Channing, Dr. 420
Chanting cherubs 283: Charity 341
Charleston Mercury 72, 114, 161, 165, 179, 349, 368, 395
China—sacrifices in 131: Chinese Tartary invaded 241, population, &c. of Canton 345: royal tenderness 185
Cholera infantum 407
Cholera morbus 93, 362, 422, 426: general treatment 459
Church in England 160, 195
Cincinnatti—account of its trade 52
Circulation of values 59
Claims on France 92
Clark, Wm. 409: Clarke, Mrs. 396
Clay H. his speech on Seminole war 48: present of cutlery to 206: various 91, 181, 192: on seaman's protections 389: named at Albany 254, 278
Clayton, I. R. 32
Coal, consumption in England 168: used for smelting 274: various 283, 285, 308, 338, 339, 342, 405, 452, 453: certain articles manufactured from 451
Coincidence, curious one 366
Coins 51
Cold water, death by drinking 283
Columbia Telescope, its opinions of general Jackson 277: denounces Mr. Webb 191: pities Mr. Madison 386: the "Times" 163
Colombia—factions 93, 296
Colonial trade 250: British act 256: see West Indies.
Colonization of free blacks, Mr. Jefferson's letter on 47: Mr. Doddridge's remarks 47: society 408
Coleman, N. D. 341: W. A. 305
Combs, manufacture of 282, 340, 451
Compunctions of conscience 341
Comet, brig, wrecked 63
Comforts, solid ones 338
Commerce, of the U. S. 182, 200
Compass, vegetable ones 344
Congress.
Acts passed 35; appropriations 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 29; Arabian horses 70
Bates Mr. 57; Bell Mr. 7; Benton Mr. 2, 4, 29, 30; Bradley's memorial 4, 32; Brown Mr. 2, 3; Burges Mr. 7; Burnet Mr. 3, 30; Baltimore and Ohio rail road 3
Carson Mr. 31; Chambers Mr. 3; Choctaw Indians 4, 5; Clayton Mr. 32, 35; contempts of court 4, 6, 7; committees of conference 2, 7; congressional doc. 4, 5, 6, 31
Dickerson Mr. 2, 3; Delaware, resolutions of 3; Drayton Mr. 7; District of Columbia 30; duties 6; Dwight, Mr. 6; debtors 4
Ellsworth Mr. 7; engineer and ord. dept. app. for 6; Evans Mr. 5; Everett Mr. 6; executive business 4, 30
Florida and Arkansas 7; boundary line 7; Foot Mr. 3, 4; fort Delaware 2
Grundy Mr. 3, 32, 34
Haynes Mr. 6; Hayne Mr. 2, 3; Hendricks Mr. 3, 30; Holmes Mr. 3, 32
Importers of foreign m'dze. certain relief to 2; improvements of harbors, rivers, &c. 4, 6; internal improvements 4, 5, 6; Mr. Hemphill's report on 207; proceedings in the senate 224; Indians, Cherokees 4, 5, 6, 7, 106; Iron, of the duty on 2, 3; call for information 5
Judiciary, on the repeal of 25th section 5; printing reports on 5
King Mr. 4
Letcher Mr. 7; Lea Mr. 5; live oak and cedar 4, 6; Livingston Mr. 2, 30; lighthouse hill 6; Lumpkin Mr. 6
Mail road in Creek nation 2; Marks, Mr. 4; Mercer Mr. 31; McDuffie Mr. 5, 6; McKinley Mr. 4; military app. 4, 7; military road 5; Missouri and Ohio rivers 29; Monroe, Jas. 4
National road 2, 6; naval service, 4; Naudain Mr. 3; new ports of entry 6; New York, new custom house 6, 7; Noble Mr. death and funeral honors 3, 6, 30
Pettis Mr. 5; Polk Mr. 5, 7; Poindexter Mr. 2, 29; post office dept. 4, 5, 32, 67; presidential elect. 6; president of the senate p. t. 4; Potomac bridge 4
Revolutionary officers and soldiers 4; rivers and harbors 6; report of committee of conference 7; roads 2
Salt duty on 3, 7; sugar do. 6, 7; Smith Mr. of Md. 3, 4; speaker Stevenson 31; Storrs Mr. 6, 7; surveys 5
Tazewell Mr. 2, 4; Test Mr. 6; Tyler Mr. 1, 2, 4; Turkish mission, 1, 2
Unfinished business 55; U. S. insolvent debtors 4
Verplank Mr. 7; Vinton Mr. 6, 7
White Mr. of Lou. 6, 7; Webster Mr. 2, 3, 4; Wickliffe Mr. 7; Wilde Mr. 7; White Mr. of N. Y. 5; Whittlesey Mr. 7; Woodbury Mr. 3; western appropriations, 29
Yancey Mr. 7
Yeas and nays.
In the senate—On power of appointment 2; on the bill authorising tolls on national road 2; concerning the duty on iron 3; on the appropriation bill 3; on printing documents 4; relief of James Monroe 4
In the house—On a motion to strike out the appropriation for surveys 5; on the printing of congressional documents 31
Consistency in politicians 182
Connecticut—elections 114: nominate H. Clay 127, 279: seal caught 168: description of Groton monument 227: revenue from crime 283, Mohegan church built 283: the Connecticut navigable by steam 308: lead mines 344: receipts, &c. 356
Conde, prince de, his will 92
Conventions, woollens 145, 220, 242: anti-tariff 234, 305
Constitutional question—a 290
Constructive journies 308
Cooking stove, a cheap one 338
Cooper, Dr. and gen. Blair 155, 190
Copper 307: Copper boilers 12, 407
Copy right, law of 188, 319, 453
Cotton, crop of 1829, 1830, 271: exports from N. O. 282, 306: fineness of thread 282: table of exports for 9 years 306: cotton twine 149: import into Providence 50, 307: price in England 266: cotton bagging 307: Br. contemplated duty 74, 92, 94: import of 65: bet as to its price 451
Crawford, W. H. 12, 37
Crim. con. Spanish case of 345
Crowninshield, B. W. 24, 40
Creighton, com. 182
Crime, progress of 464
Cuba—reduction of tonnage duty 222: insurrection 241: description of the Moro castle 285
Cucumbers, great crop of 405
Cumberland road, condition of 196
Cunnigham, the P. M. 164, 220, 233, 257
Currency, treasury circular on 235
Daniel, Peter V. of Virginia 349
Danish affairs—blacks in W. Indies 160: ruinous condition of 285; Danish claims, 454; new constitution 463; commissioners under the treaty 464
Davis W. R. letter to, I. Blair 96
Death, a terrible one 345
Declaration of Independence, of the signers of the 408
Delaware 358
Desha, Isaac B. dies 285
Dialogue a farmer & shoemaker 389
Differences of opinion, should be tolerated 195
Disbursements, 1798 to 1830, 112
Discoveries, 132: in Pacific 366
District of Columbia, the banks 65; Nourse's case 166; political meetings 166: Fillebrown and McDanniel 233; fishing in 283; maj. Eaton 385
Distressing accidents 52, 167, 345
Distresses, in 1821 75, 114
Diving for silver, 407
Doddridge, Philip P. 47
Dogs, killed in N. Y. 292; in Philadelphia 407; at Paris 345
Doings of editors 149
Dollar, value of 283, 289
Donnelson, Alexander J. letter to gen. Krepps and his reply 128
Downes, capt. of the navy 285
Drayton, William, and others, extract from memorial of 411
Drawback 131
Drowned veal 221
Dry-dock, one at Cleveland, O. 221
Duels &c. 284
Dyeing, substitute for indigo 152
Dyspepsia, kneading for the cure 390
Early marriages 285
Earthquake, awful one in India 255
East Indies—ravages of the cholera 295: the company's profits 426: its tributes from idolatrous temples 426: debt 223: disputes 275
Eaton, John H. 143, 268, 289, 301, 303, 381, 385, 394, 428
Eckford, Henry 284
Economy 180
Editorial articles—American system—address to its friends 45; its influence illustrated 60; its advantages 73, 75; its influence 193, 218; its end and aim explained 391; its standing in Maryland 393; appeal to working men 321; its circulation noticed 392; agent for the Register 391; anti-tariff convention 305, 336, 393, 451; Albany Argus 402
Bainbridge com. 113; Baltimore 129; "Banner of the Constitution" 178, 185, 393; bank U. S 73, 114, 337, 397; battle cry—notice of 113; British—its system at home 60; West India and colonial trade 47, 90, 250, 306, 310, 338, 449; Burges Mr. 89
Crisis 130; cotton market 262; calico printing, turn out in England 451; cabinet dissolution 129, 145, 165, 268, 269, 289, 305, 361, 401; Calhoun, J. C. 1, 25, 61, 432; cap, Dr. Franklin's new one 195; carpeting 436; Cambreleng Mr. 130; census, remarks on 171; Chambers Mr. 1; Charleston Mercury, 114, 161, 337; Charleston custom-house bond 451; circulation of values 59; coins, Mr. White's report on 51; commerce—the Globe's views questioned 182; Columbia Times 163; cotton, its consumption at Providence 50; Crawford W. H. allusion to his speech on U. S. bank 434
Distress in Ireland 417, 418; dollar—its value 285, 289
Edge-tools' factory 394; editor takes relaxation 129, 361, 401; editorial quarrels 182; Encyclopedia Am. 220, 293; tales of horror in America 309; errors of the press 251; economy 293: exchange of papers 417
Flour, stocks, &c. prices of noticed 1, 59, 63, 64, 145, 449; foreign news—remarks on 89, 90, 145, 223; foreign market 233; forgery 295; free trade British professions 90;

Friends persecution of 341; society in England 393; flour market in England 249,266
Georgia, notice of a correspondent from 392; general post-office departm't. Bradley's memorial 25; its abuses 164; gold mines in 270
Hamilton, governor his speech 428; Hamilton, third essay of 361; Hydrophobia 292
Johnson, col. his letter to Mr. Ingham 426; Mr. Ingham's letter alluded to 401
Indiana, address—absurdity exposed 234; internal improvement—essay reviewing governor of Pennsylvania's message and president's veto 146; notice of Mr. Hemphill's report on 193; benefits shewn 338; it is saids 233; Indian medals 26; Ireland—of sending flour there illustrated 418; iron manufacture 113, 177, 249
Judges—being poll-men 113; Johnston, Josiah and his speech 252; Jordon Mrs. 419, 423
King and queen of England 91, 183
Little, col. Peter, his fidelity 91
Madison, James, his letter on U. S. bank 337; Mallary R. C. obituary of 129; manufacturers—woollens convention in N. York—notices of 217, 222, 233, 251; prosperity of the cotton manufacturers 290; Mexico—reflections on its revolutionary course 63; McLean judge 113; McDuffie Mr. comments on his speech 251; mistake—an appointment supposed by a 113; Morgan trials—notices of 26, 49; money 89, 285; its relative value 289, 306; massacres in Ireland 419
N. York and N. Jersey, their controversy 50; N. Y. Courier and Enquirer, 217, 233, 251; Nourse Joseph 166; north eastern boundary 1; nullification 25; notice to a correspondent 417; N. Y. American Advocate 451
Oyster war in Maryland 94; old documents 57, 89, 90
Pennsylvania asking an appropriation for the Chesapeake and Ohio canal 25; remarks on the charge of its being bribed 218; political meetings in Philadelphia 113; past and the present, essay on condition of the country in certain years 75; notice of it 73; Mr. Ritchie and the Richmond Enquirer 58, 66, 73 91, 165, 234, 265, 337, 386, 397, 401; post office 25, 164
Rail roads—notices of the Baltimore and Ohio, 1, 49, 57, 89, 160, 174, 180, 181; general essay on 132; accounts of riots on 327, 338; various 227, 291, 339; Randolph John, of Roanoke, 80, 113, 118, 182, 193, 202, 305, 337, 361, 394, 399; readers, remarks to 25, 113; Rush's letter, notice of 218
Salt—remarks on reducing the duty on 178; Schenck, Abraham H. 253; silk 48, 49, 60; southern views, comments on 114; Stockton & Stokes' factory 433; subscribers, notice to 217; Summers, Mr. 59; Susquehannah obstructions 47, 130; surplus funds, 61; steam coaches 291; southern inconsistency 401
Tallmadge, Mr. of N. Y., 310; Time and Truth 265; U. States' Telegraph 73, 392
Varriek, col. R. 401; Virginia—notice of a request from, to borrow a telescope 290; internal improvements in 25; free trade meetings in 420; volume, the present 361, 401;
Wool—notices of sales, &c. 25, 89, 292, 353, 420, 421, 449; wollens' convention, reply to the Albany Argus 402
Edge tools, manufacture of 394
Egypt—295: the pacha possessed of the secret of making Congreve rockets 366: periodical journal 456
Eldon, lord 365
Elliott, J. shoots Geo. Roberts 149
Emigration from England 273,408
Encyclopædia Americana 220, 293
Encouragement to the young 63
English sinecures, &c. 366
English actresses 283
English-Irish, an anecdote of 364
Erving, Geo. W, 63
Evans's steam carriages 132, 292
Evans, French, S. letter of 335
Evening Post, of N. Y. 317
Expenditures 112
Explosions 168, 408
Factories destroyed by fire 451, 452
Failure, criminal one in N. Y. 283
Fat cattle, hogs, &c. 307
Fayetteville Observer 179: jail 408
Felting and napping 282
Female ingenuity, in Italy 423
Fires 195, 251, 267, 283, 293, 310, 328, 364: see names of places.
Fishing, great luck 168: salmon caught 185: sharks caught 274, 283: mackerel caught 422
Flood, a mighty one 407
Flooring boards, preparer of 251
Florida—gov. Duvall vetoes 8 or 10 bills 63: affray at Pensacola 196: col. White elected 221: election contested 396: timber lands 353: steam boat navigates the St. John 284: gov. orders a new election 437
Flour, savings in transportation 59: value 63: inspections 64: stocks, &c. 145: price in England 266: at N. Orleans and Montreal 338, 364: custom house regulations in Canada 310: seizure of American flour at Newry 418
Floyd, J. gov. of V. denounced 394
Foot, Samuel A. 226
Foot, Miss, English actress 283
Forbes, John M. dies 456
Foreign Quarterly Review 183
Foreign ministers 293
Forgery, growing common 295
Forsyth, John, letter to J. C. Calhoun 17: to gen. Jackson 18: to the editor of the U. S. Telegraph, to Mr. Hamilton 37, 45: to W. H. Crawford 88
Fourth of July, poetry for 345
Franklin on home manufact. 393
Frauds, in packing 91: on the revenue 131, 315: essays 404, 421
Free trade convention 305, 368, 393, 420: letter on 435
Free Masonry 236
Fredericktown Herald 59
Fredericksburg Arena 192
French affairs.
Army 92, 263, 424; Algiers, affairs at 424; appropriations to literary and scientific 221; anniversary celebration 436; Am. claims 436
Ball to Lafayette 93; Belgic affairs 363; Berri, duchess de 436; bishop of Paris 311
Carlists 197; Chateaubriand 150; Charles, ex-king 92; cannon captured at Algiers 93; capital, income and revenue 66; chamber of deputies 140, 150, 240; Clausel, gen. 150; creditors 184
Duke de Nemours 74; debt 66
Electoral law 222; of the elections 425, 457
Finances 199, 263; fugitives 197
Genlis, Madame de dies 53; Henry V. 436; Gregoire dies 311; Jews 92; Hayti, affairs with 311, 314; Irish, relief of 425; king's popularity 53, 255, 423; declines the appointment of his son as king of Belgium 94; ordinance directing a loan 222; speech on dissolving the chambers 240; makes a tour 296, 312, 338; returns to Paris 362; dissolves chambers, &c. 364; his popularity—addresses, &c. 423
Lafitte, pecuniary embarrassments of 53; offers for re-election 407; Lamarque, general 197; literature and science, donations for 221; loans required 197; authorised 184, 222; Lafayette, 53, 141, 199
Ministry, change of 140; new ministry 141—policy 141, 150, 197, 328
Napoleon's statue 263; naval force 92—ships fitting out 141—present state of 343
Paris, quiet 53, 141; mobs in 93, 140; distress in 150: ferment 184, 222, 275; dinner to Polish envoys 199; population, &c. 295; riot, &c. 400, 406, 407, 425; Polignac 222; Polish affairs 275, 363; Perrier 150, 197, 424, Portugal 296
Rigny, admiral de 197
Sebastiani 141; Soult, marshal 424; statistics 66, 263; stocks fall 424
Trade 150; Toulon 197; fleet at 425
War, party 197; preparations 53, 74
French claims 92, 361, 362, 396, 453
Friends, 295: society of 295, 353
Frog, account of a horned one 408
Frost, Mr. of S. C. 394
Frow, James 301
Gaines, E. P. gov. Reynolds 335: expedition against the Sac Ind'ns 409, 439
Gallatin, Albert 94
Gardiner, James B. 249
Garnet, R. S. letter to Mr. Calhoun 23
General government, disbursements for internal improvements, fortifications, &c. since 1789 112
Georgia Cour. 192: Journal 191, 301
Georgia—campaign against the gold diggers 27: law making contracts with Indians void 50: arrests in the Cherokee nation 62, 296, 460: excitement 68: abestos in 168: destruction of penitentiary and gaol 195: Cherokee case 244: coal discovered 283: Wayne's affair with Daniel 310, "Georgia fashions" 310: wine manufactured in 344: cotton crop 271; Macon 452
Georgetown college 408
Germany—theatrical regulation 284: liberty of the press 328
Gibbs, the pirate 53, 94
Gibraltar—communication with the interior 222: civilities of gov. Don 149
Gilmer, G. A. of Georgia 297
Gilmor, R. splendid present of 292
Gold, account of Harris' mine 52: great deposit of 146: large lump of 168: in Virginia 185: the Winyaw nest 185: southern mines 205, 269, 270: discovered in Alabama 285: Russian mines 270
Globe, the 71, 72, 165, 192, 269, 298, 299, 300, 317: its levy on office holders 319: various 347, 348: its explanation of the Jefferson dinner 192: on the degeneracy of the press 372: denies a member of congress was authorised to treat for Mrs. Eaton's being visited 373, 375, 385: its editor's letters to Mr. Berrien 376, 377, 378: denies Mr. Ingham's statement relative to Mrs. Huygens 427
Grape vine, a large one 367
Great zeal, church debt 395
Greece—desperate condition of 93: Capo d'Istrias abdicates 255: executive council 255: affairs 185, 406
Green, Duff, bargain! 276
Gregoire, Abbe 311
Grundy, Mr. 34: Gwynn, Wm. 408
Hayti—reported rebellion 141; quieted 222; French frigate arrives with ultimatum 275, crisis with France 311, Boyer's reply to the F. consul 314
Hail storms 195
Hamilton, Dr. on hydrophobia 292
Hamilton, James A. 41, 44, 45, 88
Hamilton, essay of No. 3, 410
Hats, new mode of felting 282
Hayne, R. Y. 88
Haynes, F. on culture of hemp 228
Hemphill, Mr. on internal imp. 207
Hesse Cassel—subsidies to 54
Hicks, Isaac, the ship 407
Hill, John, dies 142: Hill, Geo. 285
Hogs and cattle 307
Holland—exertions against Belgium 53: affairs of 196: see Belgium.
Honorary degrees 408
Horrid outrages 183
House, moved with chimneys 435
Houston, Samuel, 464
Howard, George, gov. of Md. 341
Hulse, Dr. on health of seamen 459
Humboldt on Russian gold mines 270
Huron territory 285, 344
Hydrophobia 148, 283, 292, 309, 362, 456
Idolatrous temples, revenue 426
Illinois—family frozen to death, &c. 52: denied 167: Green county 284: call on militia, &c. 335: the expedition 408: elections 448
Import duties 65
Immortality, accidental 345
Imprisonment for debt, abolition of 94, 95, 150, 185, 221
Indians and Indian affairs—appropriations for medals 26: general appropriations 74: gen. Jackson's views of a state governor's making war on 48;

Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay's do. 48: arrest in the Cherokee nation 62, 95, 132, 297, 357: the Indians deliver up a murderer 142: appeal of Cherokees 298: manner of paying their annuity 422, 454: case of Cherokees before U. S. supreme court 67, 82, 156: Georgia vs. Worcester and others 244: condition of the Indians 185, 295, 344: Georgia law relative to Cherokees 50: population in the U. S. 280: the Sac and Fox Indians 269, 310, 341: Illinois troops reinforce gen. Gaines, 335, 361, 393, 408: certain arrange their differences 269: John Ridge's interview with the president 186: eloquence of Indians 284; history of Indian character 266: post office reform in Cherokee country 296: the Lewistown Indians 422: missionaries in confinement 422: general Gaines' general order, &c. 430

Indiana—gov. Ray's difference with the senate 50: notice of the Jackson address 234, elections 433, 449. extract from gov. Ray's speech 453

Infant manufactures 345

Ingham, Samuel D. assertion that the president desires his retirement 90: its denial and re-affirmation 113: Mr. I's letter to the president 152, 153, 346: circular concerning U. S. insolvent debtors 158: circular on ad valorem duties 235: correspondence with major Eaton 301: letter to the president 302: at home 329: letters relative to weights and measures 367: denies seeking a quarrel with the president 376; correspondence 376: reply to col. Johnson 383: review of the Trist letter, &c. 411: note correcting a date 426: extract from a letter of 428

Insolvent debtors, law of the U. S. 157: case of a British agent 283

Intemperance, and pauperism 426

Internal improvement, Pennsylvania resolutions 56: Missouri affirms the power of congress over 58: essay on message of gov. Wolf and on president's veto 146: Mr. Hemphill's report 207: proceedings in U. S. senate 224: benefits of 434

Inventions 132, 167, 282

Iron, editor collecting materials for history of 113, 177, 249: manufactures at Pittsburg 281: mode of smelting 390: price of, and certain manufactures 405: iron pillars 281

Irvin, Mr. of Pa. 95: Irving, W. 425

Italy—funeral honors to the late pope 53: prince Carignan 93: revolution 93: pope elected 93, 130: insurrectionary movements 94: Austrian troops defeat the patriots 140, 150: the pope confirms appointments in South America 168: mail stopped 184: dey of Algiers in 185: Austrian invasion 197: the pope takes Austrians into his pay 222: excitement 241: insurrection suppressed 255: king of Sardinia dies 255: population and revenue 295: Savoy and Piedmont 328: the mother of Napoleon 328: Austrian preparations 363: Rome 343: Austrian generals at Milan 400:

Ives, Mr. Pr. bishop of N. C. 222

Jackson, Andrew, correspondence with J. C. Calhoun 11, 12, 17: letter to Mr. Monroe 21, 22: views of Indian rights 70: letters from 127: toasted 143, 428: letter to gov. Rabun 48: his cabinet dissolved 143: letter to J. H. Eaton 143: to M. Van Buren 144: to Ingham and Branch 152, 153: to the managers of Tammany dinner 229: to the Charleston committee 351: his veto examined 146: of his visit to the south 294: letter to persons named by Mr. Ingham 302: to Mr. Berrien 304: departs for Old Point Comfort 305: invited to dine at Norfolk 340: presented with a comb 340: letter to Mr. Ingham 346, 347: manifesto of his original friends 387: see congress, &c.

Jackson, col. George, dies 284

Jackson, M. M. 63

Jamaica—sale of an estate 285

Jarvis, Dr. of N. H. 25

Jefferson, T. views on African col. 47: on differences of opinion 195: on the treatment of an enemy 254: dying words 362: sale of his mansion 456

Jenks, Joseph, of Rhode Island 365

Johnston, Josiah S. 252, 258

Johnson, col. R. M. letter to Messrs. Berrien and Ingham 382: extract from his letter to Mr. Ingham 426: to S. D. Ingham 445: to Mr. Berrien 447

Judiciary, an independent instance of the 52: Pennsylvania resolution against repeal of 25th section 56: attempts to repeal 294

July 4, anniversary poetry 345: a protest against the celebration of 341

Juries, practice of starving 275

Kendall, Amos, extract from his testimony before the Kentucky senate 300: do. from his letter to Mr. Clay 301, 374: denies conspiring, &c. 376

Kent, chancellor 98

Kentucky Gaz. & Mr. McDuffie 191

Kentucky—dinner to gov. Metcalfe 143: rail road 181: consistency of certain members of the legislature 182: exports from 194: hail storm 195: improvements in Lexington 344: allusion to election 401: four slaves sentenced to death 408: elections 417, 433, 449

King, Miles, appointment of 345

King, R. on the fed. constitution 277

Kleeck, L. V. letter of 333

Knights of the garter, female 456

Knives, factories of 282, 283

Kosciusko, patriotic saying of 407

Ladies' fairs, a Quaker's opinion of 237

Ladies' zeal, a singular instance 395

Lad of spirit, an account of a 407

Lafayette 142: letter from 270

Lake Erie 180

Landers, the travellers 241, 432

Lansing, col. G. Y. dies 283

Large cargoes 150, 345

Law cases—wrecked slaves 63: Cherokee Indians 67: Charlestown bridge 67: steam boat case 132: treasure 142: various 149, 185, 221, 222, 244, 274, 311, 334: crim. con. 345, 396

Lawrence's monument 234

Lead, mines 344: price of 405

Leake and Watt's orphan house 52

Letters to the editor 353

Lewis, W. B. charged with interfering in elections 299: letter 303, 350

Leather manufactures in N. Y. 182

Legislator, a blind one 167

Liberia—account of its prospects 51, 63, 131, 168

Liberality, instance of 285

Lightning and lightning rods 391

Lishier, killed 309

Little, Peter, faithfulness 91

Literary calamity 293

Livingston, E. 180, 229, 433, 435

Livingston, lt. gov. N. Y. 230

Lloyd, James 142, 185

Locomotive engines, 64, 192, 227, 235, 291, 308, 343, 344, 422

Longevity, cases of 142, 408, 422

Louisiana—law instructing representatives to apply for appropriations for removing obstructions in the Mississippi 50: cotton and sugar 50, 282, health and longevity 185: Ponchartrain rail road 181, 196, 281, 282: J. S. Johnston's speech 252, 258: N. Orleans, rise of property 282: want of shipping 306: canal and banking company 284: U. S. senate 285

Lumpkin, W. to J. C. Calhoun 12

Lyon, Mr. of Ky. 308

Lynchburg Virg. on the Calhoun corres. 71: on nullification 69, 191

Mackerel fishery 422

Madison, James, letters to Mr. Ingersoll 56, 351: donation of 150: old constitutional grounds of 277, 407: presents Lawson's History of N.C. 426

Mails, robberies 164, 257: irregularity of 182

Magdalen report 407

Maine Democrat 71

Mallary, Rollin C. obituary of 129, 186. base allusion to 194

Manufactories and churches 451

Manufactures. Pennsylvania resolutions in favor of protective policy 56: shipment of domestics 64: convention in N. York 220: proceedings of 242: in Albany 186: leather in N. York 182: silk 281, 282: various 281: invigorates Boston 281: comb manufactories 282: blanket factory 452: cotton thread 282: value of certain 282: pen knives 282: knives and forks 283: large sheet of paper 285: prosperous condition of 290: great sale of manufactures at Boston 306: Chickopee factory 307: Taunton do. 307: Lowell do. 307, 405: Springfield do. 307: demand for cotton goods in the E. Indies 290: straw platting 307: iron manufactures, call for certain information 249: Chambersburg edge tools 394: in Lancaster co. Pa. 405: Baltimore manufactures 433

Maine—as to the north east boundary 53, 54, 55, 95, 114, 272: presidential nomination 127: legislature 142: Mr. Sprague 142: culture of hemp 228: ship built at Hallowell 341

Mann, Mr. 196

Markley, the murderer 222, 309

Markets, on regularity in 458

Marshall, chief justice, 68, 90: opinion on Cherokee case 156

Martin, governor, 341, 395

Martinico, notice of insurrection in 52, 95: execution of insurgents 222, 285

Maryland—election of U. S. senator 1: anti-Jackson members of the legislature 28: of the Susquehannah 47, 62, 95, 129: flour manufactured in Washington county 59: oyster war 94, 95: Baltimore, clippers 62: bank capital 64: inspections 95: number of taverns in 142: corporation loan taken 222: contributes to Fayetteville fire 267: condition and prospects 398: dinner to gen. Chambers 166: produce of sheep on Elk Ridge 250: calico printing 452: gov. Martin dies 341

Massachusetts—settlement of claims against U. S. 50; manufactories of salt 51, 307; penknives 282; palm leaf hats 281; Boston, its commerce 62; impost duties 193, 272; bank capital 64; contributions to the Fayetteville fire 267, 293, 405, benefited by manufactures 281; artillery company 269; Boston guards 293; savings institution 408; sale of a house 345; imprisonment for debt 95; marriage bill 64; the constitution 293; new legislature 285; members nominate Henry Clay for the presidency 126; appoint delegates to attend convention 293; the whale fishermen 50; banks 65; elections 114, 353, 433; broom corn culture 142; prolific family 142; damages against town officers 221; Lowell 221, 281, 307, 405, 452

Isaiah Thomas dies 142; bequests of 236, 237; Lynn 281; Mr. Webster's address 267; Taunton and Springfield 307; Chickopee factory 307; election of Bunker Hill monument directors 426; Bunker Hill boys 353; great wool sale at Boston 343; foreign arrivals in 451; manufacture of Dunstable 452; N. E society's 10th sale 452; Boston auction duties 457: munificent donation 457
Maw, H. L. on cholera morbus 459
Maury, Mr. reception in N. Y. 166
Maze, an Englishman, falls 345
McDuffie, George, letter to Mr Calhoun 23: dinner to, at Charleston 220, 236: notice of dinner speech 251
McLeod, D. C. account of the treatment of missionaries in Georgia 461
McLean, judge, 113, 173, 337, 400: attends a 4th of July dinner 408
McLane, Louis, 294, 328: offered a dinner in England 400, 431: arrives in New York 400: arrives at Washington 417: invited to a public dinner 428
Mead, Richard K. 344
Mechanics, protection to 273
Melcher, Joseph C. convicted 149
Mexico 62, 228
Michigan—territory, condition of the Indians 185: emigration to 285: public lands 293: election 396: case of S. T. Mason 428, 447, 448
Middlesex Gazette 179
Military liberty, specimen of 92
Military school at West Point 342
Miller, Daniel H. dies 149
Mineral forrest discovered 364
Mint, U. S. new one finished 222
Mistake, a fatal one 457
Missouri—affirms the power in the gen. gov. over internal improvements 58: the working men of St. Louis 128: enterprise of citizens 182: copper manufactured at lead mines 307
Mississippi—passage by the river shortened 228, 459
Missionaries and the Geo. guard 461
Modern antiquities 47
Mohegans, a church built for 283
Money, plenty 222, 283: value of the dollar and money generally 289, 306: amount loaned in New York 185
Monroe, James letter to gen. Jackson 20, 22: to Mr. Calhoun 23, 40, 44: to Mr. Crawford 40: receives $30,000, 168: dies 321: biographical sketch of, and funeral ceremonies 369
Monopoly of women 292
Moore, major T. P. 58
Morgan trials at Lockport 26, 49
Mormonism, a new religious sect 353
Morocco, insurrection in 296
Morril, David L. 345
Mortality, curious calculations 341
Mules riding on a rail way 390
Mulberry trees, nursery of 283
Munificent donation 457
Murat, A. arrives in London 406
Murders 94, 222, 221, 285, 345
Murry, W. J. 143
Mustard, James, death of 365
Nail making machine 251
Nantucket, ship building at 406
Napoleon, statue replaced 263
Napoleon, Louis dies 285
Nassau, N. P. case of the wreck of a brig with negroes on board 63
National Rep. con. 254, 278, 279
National Gazette 350, 387
National economy 293
National road 196
National Calendar, notice of 166
National Intelligencer, on unfinished business of congress 55: on Branch's letter 201: on Chesapeake and Ohio canal 206: remarks on internal improvements and policy of the president 225: threatened with prosecution 452
Navy, promotions in 26: secretary visits N. C. 64: Grampus 64: number of officers, &c. 74: Java 183: Fairfield 185: strength of 187: Potomac 284, 285, 293, 394: com. Barron 221: Peacock 149: ration order 273: W. I. squadron 345: Hudson 426: health of seamen 458
Negroes, insurrection of, in Va. 455
New cap, Franklin's illustration of a 185
New Hampshire—elections in 61, 269: R. Enquirer's notice of 91: prolific lady 221: Mr. Woodbury 256: manufacturing towns 281: spear grass bonnets 282: banks 320: ardent spirits 284: militia 342: state prison revenue 342: nominations 353: Great Falls 406
New Hampshire Patriot, 313
New inventions 132, 167, 185
New Jersey—legislative nomination of president 28: controversy with N. York 50, 83: rail road from Paterson 50, 344: destruction of powder mill 195: fire near Rahway 251: water power of Trenton 281: the Morris canal 405: Camden 344
New York (city)—amount of bank safety fund paid in 26; city of New York, census of the 254, concerning the robbery of the city bank 62, 74, 143; robbers sentence 364; M. M. Jackson 63; dinners to Messrs. Webster and Burges 64, 74, 98, 119; dinner given to Mr Verplanck 166; explosion in 168; number of ship letters received at 168; of passengers arriving at 273; opthalmic cases 221; money loaned on mortgage in 185; do. on goods pawned 408; inspection of grain in 65; impost duties received at 65; Albert Gallatin 94; elections 130; prosperous condition of 193, 402; fires in 328,364; seizure of cloths in 131; description of a curious sign 142; vessels suffer in the port of 142; butcher fined 221; Lawrence's monument 234; Tammany dinner 229; dinner tendered to Mr. Van Buren 294; an extravagant insolvent, 283; great sale of wool in the 266; emigrarinn to the 273; death of J. Monroe 369; Harlaem rail R. 283; receipts and expenditures 396; procl. against the cholera 435; great steam eng. factory 452
New York (state) canals—receipts and expenditures 65, 180, 181, 307, 344; when navigable 95, 180; resolutions of the legislature concerning the surplus revenue 69; res. against re-chartering U. S. bank 114; do. nominating general Jackson for re election 136; legislature adjourns 146; imprisonment for debt abolished 95, 150; certain new banks incorporated 95; number of newspapers in the state 92; notice of its controversy with New Jersey 50; documents concerning 83; account of the successful whaling from Hudson 95, 308, 405; Albany regency, &c. 293; sales of certain bank stock 221; Ulster bank 221; leather manufactures 182: fire at Albany 195: do. at Utica 251: Troy jail 196; the salt springs 282: statistics of the state 356: mysterious disappearance of a drover from Albany 196: great snow storm 196: col. Rochester dies 221; A. H. Schenck dies 253; Long Island visitors 221; Ithica 282; finances of the state 248; rail roads projected 308, 405, amount of flour shipped from Rochester 405: national republican convention 254, 278; bank of Buffalo 283: strange proceedings at Albany 293: rail road stock 283: Buffalo harbor opens 221: New York Courier and Enquirer 72, 165, 217, 251, 317, 337, 386, 427: pardoned convicts 457
Newspapers, debts 167: number of in N. York 92: subscribers to 396
Newnan, gen. letter of 12
Nicety of the law 456
Nickerson, E. 142: night rainbow 95
Niger, course of, 241, 286, 432
Noah, M. M. Joint proprietor of Courier and Enquirer 95: name withdrawn 222: notice of 251
North Carolina—account of gold mine 52: great deposit of gold 146: mines 205: law relative to free persons of color 183: horrid outrage in 183: bishop of, elected 222: destruction of Fayetteville 251, 267, 293, 328, 361: branch bank grants loan to university 269: internal improvements urged 281: Beaufort Gazette protests against rejoicing on the 4th July 341: statue of Washington 342: young lady violated and murdered in 345: state house 310: elections 433: silk manufac. 451: superior tobacco 456
Norfolk, duke of, 365
North eastern boundary, 53, 54, 95, 114, 272: see Maine, &c.
Norvel, John appointment of 222
Nourse, Mr. 166
Nullification, letter relative to nomination of Mr. Findlay 25: state law nullified by judges 52: various 68, 69: resolution of the Pennsylvania legislature against 56: manifesto of the nullifiers 104: become a word of contempt 166: the cause of southern distress explained by Hamilton 410: proceedings in Edingsville 462: remarks on 462
Nunnery at Georgetown, 141
O'Connell, Mr. 90, 130
Odd Fellows 149, 310
Ohio—cities on the Ohio, trade, &c. 52: national road in 2, 6, 94: height of the Ohio 52: rail road, projected 181: legislature adjourned 94: of whom consisting 141: presidential nomination 127: dry dock at Cleveland 281: bacon cured 142: hail storm 195: distillery destroyed, meeting house do. 196: females imprisoned in 221: finances 262: canal, debt 280, 283: 190 miles finished 344: amount of property conveyed through the Miami canal 405: do. at Cleveland 405: Zanesville, stage coach arrivals 308: pipe manufactory at 344: Cincinnati, 344: meeting at Columbus 401: judge McLean 408
Old documents, important 345
Old reports of congress 108
Old times, ship building in N.E. 407
On dits 233
Orange, princess, her jewels 401
Orange farm, profits of 227
Oregon—the settlement of the 407
Oriental fables, specimens of 366
Organ, splendid one 345
Overton, John W. 333
Owen, Geo. F. killed 221
Oyster war 94
Paganini, the violinist 456
Palm leaf hats, manufacture of 281
Palladium, Morris, N. J. 196
Paper, a large sheet of 285
Park, Mungo, manuscripts 241
Paraguay—Mr. Bonpland 241
Past and the present, the 75
Patent office, inventions, &c. 159
Paterson, N. J. rail road project 50
Pauperism, comparative view of 74: foreign paupers 74, 130
Pauling, Mrs. of Troy, 49
Pawn brokers 408
Pen knives, manufacture of 282
Pennsylvania—obstructions of the Susquehannah 46, 95, 129; internal improvements 50; of a message of the governor concerning 146, 151, 275; legislature, resolutions concerning the union 56, 69, 73—excitement in 62; adjournment of 142—postage of 283; governor Wolfe burnt in effigy 130; loan for internal improvements 168; economy in transportation 281; anti-masonic convention 237; salt contract 307: legislature rejects the charter of the Susquehannah rail road 74; Kreps and Donaldson's correspondence 128; Charles H. grant to Penn 311; destructive fires 196, 283; Pittsburg manufacturers 207; subscriptions to rail road stock 221; extent of rail roads and canals 394; charge of bribery against legislature and denial 200—refutation 224; finances 248; valuation of property 432: steam boats built at Pittsburg 283; Pittsburg steam boat line 344: Schuylkill trade 405: flood in Franklin co. 364; canal tolls 406; manufactories of Lancaster co. 405; Charles Lloyd 345; Reporter 179

Philadelphia—its bank capital 64; affairs of banks generally 65; Clay meetings 91, 113, 127, 174, 428; Jackson meetings 113, 173; tobacco imported into 92; inspections 142; steam engines 344; Penn township bank 196; persons in Arch street prison 364; storms at 142, 451; a mechanic falls heir to title, &c. 407; comb factory 451; butchers retire from the markets 364; Pennsylvania Whig 453; Philadelphia Sentinel regrets the idea of Mr. Ingham's resigning 168; its charges against maj. Lewis 298, 350, 387; defence of Mr. Ingham 347, 374; Blaney's exposition 373; notice of Mr. Berrien's correspondence 386; Gazette's prediction 387: Inquirer 312, 347
Pig lead, deception in 167
Pinckney, Charles, 277
Pirates, Gibbs and Wansley 52, 94: arrival of 149: condemned at Boston 285: executed 345
Pleasants, John P. 308
Poison, from copper boilers 407
Poland—statistical accounts of 51, 335; enthusiasm of the people, manifesto, &c. 53; adopts the tri-color 74; the five commissioners 93; battle of Warsaw 139; Deibitsch liberates certain prisoners, risings of the peasantry 140; Dwernicki defeats the Russians, the latter violate the women of Putowy 141; great mortality in the Russian army, it retreats, the Poles revolt 151: enthusiastic demonstrations 184, 223, 255, 363, 424; the cause of the Poles prosper, 197, 363; the Poles defeat the Russians at Wawer 198; other successes 222, 242, 275, 312, 328, 329, 363, 400, 406; Polish commander in chief 237, 424; he obtains a victory 241, 255; the women coin their wedding rings 255; Dwernicki capitulates to the Austrians, &c. 296, 312, 364, 426; key to pronunciation 272; rumor of defeat of Poles, 255; exhausted state of the country 255; Skryznecki defeats the Russians at Iychosin 363—is beaten by them at Ostrolenka 399; the Poles beat the Russians at Mariampol, Bialostocki, and in Volhynia 406; Skryznecki prepares to leave Praga 424, 437—excitement against 437; certain districts in Hungary taking interest in favor of the Poles 426; conspiracy discovered at Warsaw 457; Chlapowski 425, 436, 457; national guards 425; Wilna 328; general battle expected 329: Chrzanowski 328, 424; of Sarianow 425, 437; a loan authorised 437; Prussians afford aid to the Russians 437; fortress of Bobrouysek 437; make a levy en masse 437
Politics for working men 321, 417
Politics of the day, 70, 71, 72, 97, 153, 191, 200, 201, 220, 229, 233, 252, 253, 268, 277, 289, 298 to 304, 317, 318, 329, 346, 372, 374, 375 to 389, 426, 445: see the names of persons and things.
Political antiquities, 277
Polish names, 273
Population, of the U. S. 170: of the British provinces, (now U. S.) in 1755–6, 237: of certain South American states 221: of the city of N. Y. 254: Indian 280: of Poland 51, 335: of London 295: of Paris 295: of Constantinople 295: of Virginia 261, 262
Porto Rico—an account of 51
Portugal—horrid executions 151, 241: Don Miguel releases certain prisoners 223: French and English consuls demand redress 241: consents to grant it 275: withholds it as to France, &c. 400, 406, 423: commission as to American losses 363: D. Pedro, &c. 426: the French squadron capture 30 sail 457: Lisbon in a ferment and prisons full 457: cabinet 457
Post office department 4, 32, 35, 67, 164: Watson's history of, 315, 353: duty of post masters prescribed 423
Potatoes converted into sugar 159
Poussin, major 394
Powell, A. H. 428: dies 456
Powers, Gershom, dies 345
Power of intellect 341
Presidents of U. S. 344
Presumption, 130
Printing in England 283
Printer to congress, 71
Prisoners, an aged one 364
Prolific births 221
Protocol of original Jackson men 387
Providence, R. I. its consumption of cotton 50
Provident savings institution 408
Provisions, prospect of 424
Prussia—king grants franchise to new provinces 222: report of intended invasion of Luxembourg 222: lines her frontiers with soldiers 241: army 312
Punchard, John, agent at Boston 305
Pure Bullism 396
Punishment, capital, in England 365
Quadrature of a circle 167
Quick sailing, schr. Fan Fan 142
Quibbling, cases of 456
Raguet, Condy 185, 205
Rail roads, draught on the B. and Ohio 49: notices of 57, 59, 89, 180, 181, 291: receipts of 362: trial of locomotives 308, 339, 433: saving 59: riots on 327, 338, 452: accidents on 340: general exposition of 132: notice of several in the U. S. and Europe 49: stock of the Philadelphia and Norristown 64: Philadelphia and West Chester do. 64: York and Maryland rail road 74: Baltimore and Washington 57: Liverpool and Manchester 49, 132, 161, 174, 180, 227, 291, 340, 436: Baltimore and Susquehannah 180, 339: New Orleans 181, 196, 281: Charleston 181, 281: Philadelphia and Delaware county 221: New York and Harlæm 283: one do. in Ohio 308: New Castle and French town 340, 394: Paterson 344: projected 59, 74, 181, 308, 340, 405: Camden and Amboy 359, 594: transportation on 158: Tuscumbia, commenced 405: Albany and Schenectady 405, 433: Ithica and Owego 433
Randolph, John, of Roanoke 63, 64, 80, 113, 118, 182, 193, 202, 204, 305, 308, 361, 394, 399
Randolph, P. G. 303, 317, 337
Rapid travelling 64, 167: rape 345
Rathbone, Mr. dies, 362
Rats destroyed by steam 284
Ray, James B. Indiana 50
Refreshments at a tavern, given by ladies, to pay a church debt 395
Register's agents, 305
"Reform"—a vane Nortonized 407
Reports 219, 221, 269, 289, 293, 305
Republican sentiments 235
"Retiracy," its origin traced 284
Retort, a gallant one 285
Revenue 65, 200, 272, 290, 315
Revolutionary veterans 396, 454
Rhode Island—Block Island 50: consumption of cotton 50, 307: elections 146, 166: new factory 344: controversy with Massachusetts 356: a giant disinhumed 365: revolutionaries —Mr. Brastow 405
Rhind, Charles, letter of, relative to Arabian horses 70: sale of horses 196
Richmond Enquirer, whipping up the legislature 58: a miracle! 337: on the mails 182: opinion of Mr. Adams in 1818 on the tariff policy, &c. 60, 71, 73, 91: president and the cabinet 168, 178, 179, 180, 191, 234, 265, 266, 268: W. I. trade 90: old constitutional doctrines of 181: letter from Rip Raps 347: tariff 301: on the removal of Mr. Ingham 165: on the election of J. Randolph 428: anti-tariff convention 368: sees Mr. Madison's letter with regret 386: U. S. bank and Mr. Niles, & former opinions of gen. J. 397
Rice, first culture in America 168
Richmond Whig 3, 305
Rio Janeiro 130, 223, 241, 390
Ritner, Joseph 237
Rivers, height of the water in 52
Robins, Asher 357
Rochester, col. 221, 237
Rock salt, mines in Armenia of 284
Rodenbach, a blind legislator 167
Rodney, Cæsar, anecdote of 60
Rogers, com. 433
Roman pavement, in England 345
Ross, I. P. to W. H. Crawford 40
Royal, Mrs. 293
Royal, decorum 167: tenderness 185
Rumsey, Mr. 132
Runaway negroes 95
Rush, Richard, 64, 218, 453
Russia—address to the Poles 7: manifesto 8: troops in motion, cholera morbus, Polish property 53: reported insurrection in Finland, march of troops, skirmish with the Poles 93: affairs with the Poles 139: army at Wawer 198: Warsaw, concentration of forces 222: Lithuania and Volhynia 222, 241: Deibitsch 237, 407, 425, 437: Courland 240: reported defeat 242: new levy 255: gold district 270; rock salt 284: determined to crush the Poles 329: supposed loss of, 364, 457: Ostrolenka 399, 437: army in Poland, 425: gen. Toll 426: gen. Paskewitsch 426, 437: population 456: duke Constantine dies 457
Rutledge, gov. federal conv. 277
Salt, manufactures of, in Massachusetts 51: duties 178: in New York 282: to be delivered at Cincinnati 307: mines in Armenia 284, 405
Saint Albans, dutchess of 167
Saint Charles' college 364
Sanford, col. of Geo. campaign against the gold diggers 27: arrests Mr. Worcester, &c. 297
Santa Fe 222, 344
Saxamelediction, invented 185
Saxony—offered a constitution 140
Schenck, Abm. H. 233
Scrofula iodine, a cure for 185
Seal, caught in Connecticut river 168
Seamen's protections 389
Sea serpent 345
Secretaries 180: securities 334
Seduction, case of 408
Self-defence 273
Self-illustration 168
Sharks, in Charleston harbor 408
Sheep shearing 250, 345
Sentinel, Phila. against W. B. Lewis 299: vindicates Mr. Ingham 317, 347
Siamese twins, affray of the 426, 455
Ship building, increased value of vessels 307: the first vessel built in New England 407: age of ships 390
Ship letters 168
Silk, its culture and manufacture 48, 49: filature invented 49: stockings manufactured 281: handkerchiefs made 282: suit of silk clothes 451
Silver mines 168
Simpson, Stephen, and others, manifesto 387: extract from his letter 428
Skinner, Mrs. dies 456
Slave trade, accounts of 52, 408
Slave labor, in manufactories 281
Small pox exists in Alabama 456
Smith, T. L. 363
Smith, J. letter to Duff Green 318
Smyrna—earthquake at 408
Snowden, Samuel, dies 364
Soutag, Mademoiselle 283
Spanish affairs—93: arrested persons 199: count de Bourmont 151: executions 240: finances in a miserable state 93, 240: Gibraltar 222: reports of insurrection 141, 151, 184, 197, 198: military commission 151: loan spoken of 93: military preparations 53:

post office regulations 356: prisoners shot 198: statistics of 195
Speedy justice, case of 345
Spencer, judge 104
Spinsters, definition of 284
South Carolina—Mr. Blair's threat 68: Columbia Times 69, 97: Mr. Findley and the president 96: Blair and Cooper 154, 190: first introduction of rice 168: election 146, 183: dinner to governor Hamilton 190: dreadful tornado 195: dinner to Mr. McDuffie 256: notice of his speech 251: Charleston 49, 221, 276: cotton crop 271: southern opinions of general Jackson 277: political antiquities 277: argument against rail road 281: rail road to Hamburg 181, 281, 344: steam boats to Augusta 344: Telescope 277: culture of indigo 344: general Jackson invited, &c. 350 351: proceedings of both parties 368: Mr. Frost 395: the Mercury 395: on the price of cotton 451: blankets manufactured 452: southern views 114
South America—assassinations, &c. 141: fire at Guayaquil 184: Bolivia and Peru at war 184: insurrection 184: population of certain provinces 221: Santa Fe 222: Buenos Ayrean exports 457: Peru and Chili, overrun with military tyrants 275: revolution in Columbia 241, 275, 296, 353: Buenos Ayres, insurrection in 275: exports and imports 290: stabbing and shooting 149: Fuenta flies from Chili 364: Francia liberates Bonpland 241
Spontaneous combustion 407
Stambaugh, Mr. 52
Starving juries, policy of 275
State rights, Van Buren's notions of 48: dance in Charleston 49: inflammatory declarations 68, 69: N. York and N. Jersey 83: R. Island and Mass. 357
Statistics—of Poland 51, 335: London, Paris, Constantinople 295: of banks 64, 65: inspections of flour and meal 64: of grain 65: receipts, &c. N. Y. canals, duties on imports at N. Y. 65, 290: British import, &c. of American cotton 65: British W. I. trade 66: national debt and revenue of France 66, 199: British parliament reform 67: general 97, 159, 263, 264, 271: English wars 263: imports from Rio 130: Ireland, tythes in 264: France 263: British stocks 264: Spanish 195: population of America in 1755-6, 237: commerce of the U. S. 200: cotton crop 1829, 271: legislatures of the states 248: finances of Pennsylvania 248: county taxation 432: of N. York 248, 356: city of N. York 254, 273: London 256: of Russia 456: of Virginia 261, 262, 342: of Ohio 262, 280: Boston 272: Indian population in U. S. 280: Lynn 281: export of cotton 282: Italy 295: U. S. disbursements from 1798 to 1830 112: mackerel 422: salt manufactures 51: coal 342: Egypt 295: Liverpool 454: N. Hamp. banks 320: state prison 342: wheat and flour 342: of Dublin, 355: of Conn. 356
Steam engines and coaches, improvements, &c. 199, 227: locomotives 235, 291, 308: accident 291: first inventors, &c. 291: in Philadelphia 343, 344: Shields' 344: explosion on the Charleston rail road 291: effect of steam coaches 291: notice of Mr. Stimpson's car 291: No. in England 423: manu. 452
Steamboats, short passage 64, 167. safety of 142, 254: accidents to 149, 195, 249, 291: at Quebec 185: steam vessels of war 269: on the Connecticut river 281, 308: fitted at Pittsburg 283: line between Detroit and Buffalo 452: the George Washington 284: gunpowder on board a 284: between Baltimore and Charleston 308: between Charleston & Augusta 344: cause of explosions 362: building on the Ohio 344: on the St. John's 284: on the Red R. 451: project on the Winnipiseogee 452
Stewart, com. 433
Stimpson, Mr. his car 291
Stockton & Stokes, factory 433
Stomach pump 221
Storms 196: Stoves 338
Straw platting 307
Sturgeon, large one caught 457
Suicide, an attempt by a Swiss 367
Summers, Mr. of Va. 58
Sunday, how celebrated 353
Surplus revenue 69
Supreme court U. S. case of Cherokee Indians 68: Charleston bridge vs. the Warren bridge 68
Susquehannah river, trade 149, 166
Swann col. James, dies 285
Switzerland 53, 240
Tag rag, an emetic for the 221
"Tales of terror" 308
Tallmadge, Mr. report 310
Taney, R. B. att. general 305, 361
Tanning, new method of 365
Tarring and feathering 185
Tariff, the Enquirer's views of 60: Nat. Gazette's 131: reply to Chalestons Mercury 161, essay on effects of 75: horrible effects of 105: English duties 306: dialogue 389: the alarm of southern politicians 401: gen Jackson and the 428: see editorial, &c.
Tazewell, Mr. remarks on Turkish mission 2, 189: proffered dinner 153: abused 191: attacked 386
Tell, William, bow of 311
Temperance 181, 283, 284
Tennessee—scarcity of provisions 269: exports of 282: communication with Charleston 307: Nashville bank 62: Tuscumbia rail road 405: elections 433, 449: a cotton factory 452
Terrible death 454
Tessalated Roman pavement 345
Thomas, James 28
Thornton, J. B. 319
Thomas, Isaiah 142, 236, 237
Throop, Enos, gov. of N. York 230
Tight lacing, bad effects of 221
Timber lands in Florida 353
Time and Truth, an apologue 288
Tobacco 92, 185
Tonnage, the British 271
Tornado, dreadful one 195
Tornel, col. Jose Maria 293
Transportation, great saving, &c. 338
Treaty of Verona 355
Treatment of an enemy 254
Treasury department 131, 158, 235, 274, 341, 367
Trist, N. P. 347
Trumbull, judge dies 283
Tucker, Henry St. George 180
Turkey—the porte refuses to acknowledge an Armenian bishop 63: young Turks sent to France, grand fete 63: fire at Smyrna 140: insurrection 199, 241, 255, 312, 328, 363, Constantinople 295: Albania 400: Scutari 406: earthquakes 408: ship building 93
Turkish mission 1
Tyler, Mr. 1, 189, 386, 361
U. S. Gazette 180, 201, 361
U. S. Telegraph 70, 71, 72, 179, 191, 192, 268, 298, 300, 301, 317, 318, 349, 350, 373, 374, 376, 394, 427, 433
United States and Mexico 228
Unpassed bills of congress 55
Van Buren, Martin, disclaims agency in the conspiracy against Calhoun 45: letter concerning post masters 350: plan for the defence of the state 48: presented with a horse 63: resignation 143, explanation 179, reports about, &c. 180, 201: declines dinners 229, 294, 337: departure from Washington 249, 289, 293: meets Mr. McLane 401: sails from New York 433
Vaughan Mr. attends a ball 25
Vermont—election 168, 269, 342, 433: steam boat navigation 281
Verona, treaty of 355
Verplanck Mr. dinner to 166
Vessels of war consumption of timber 185: building for foreigners 284
Vice presidency, nominations for 61
Virginia—pleasant interchange 59: James Barbour 61: state right views 69: internal improvements 25, 58, 74, 91, 340: Richmond 130: cotton factory 281: Wheeling 143: Petersburg 267 282; silver mines 168: gold mines 185: Tazewell and Tyler 153, 189: speeches in convention 202: bucks shot 221: university 221, Norfolk 221: contributions to Fayetteville 266: population and taxation 261, 262: Winchester rail road project 340: judges 341: Miles King 345: gov. Floyd 394: wheat and flour exported 342: lieut. gov. Daniel 349: Mr. Randolph 361: honors to James Monroe 372: notice of election 401: Kenawha 405: J. T. Kilby 408: elections 449: insurrection 455
Volunteer, the 179
Wabash, commerce of 183
Walden celebration 454
Warrington, commodore 221
Washington, Mrs. 408
Washington, gen. 48, 183
Water, a feeder of fire 343
Watson's annals, extracts from 315
Wayne, J. posts W. C. Daniels 310
Weather, heat at Baltimore 283
Weights and measures, 367
Webster Daniel, dinner to 64, 74: at N. Y. 98, 267; compliment to 341; extract from biography of 366
Webster, Noah, agency in procuring law of copy rights 319: studies of 406
West India squadron 343
West India trade, accounts of, and remarks on 47, 90, 182, 250: British colonial duty act 256: other notices 310, 338: meeting of delegates 306: extracts from Canadian papers 449
Western literature, state of 284
Western emigrations 285
West Point, honors awarded 342
Whale fishery 50, 98, 308, 405
Wheat, great purchases of 64: market 282: injured 328: price in Montreal 338: do. on Lake Erie 452
Wheeler, Mr. P. M. Providence 428
White, col. of Florida 221
Who is the father of the child? 222
White, judge, declines war office 328
Wirt, W. letter to Mr. Calhoun 23
Wickliffe, Charles A. 341
William 4th 342
Wilson, Mr. on the confederacy 277
Williams, captor of Andre, dies 422
Winchester Rep. 453; Virginian 191
Windfall 407; wine, domestic 344
Wolf, gov. 275; wolves 52
Woodbury, Mr. 256, 274, 433
Wooden lamps 285
Woodside, Jas. D. discovery of 167
Wool and woollens 25, 53, 145, 146, 182, 186, 250, 266, 274, 292, 315, 343, 353, 402, 420
Worcester, rev. Mr. 297
Yancey, Joel 341; yankey wit 408
Yankeys 142, 167, 251, 282, 285, 341
Young, encouragement to the 63
Zinc in Connecticut, 344

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 1—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, MARCH 5, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1015

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞At a much increased exertion and cost, we commence our new volume by complimenting our readers with a SUPPLEMENT, by which we have been enabled to get in the whole of Mr. Calhoun's pamphlet, with a great deal of other matter of unusual interest. We intend to publish, and in the most compact and convenient manner that we can, and as rapidly as we may, all the papers belonging to the political controversy that this pamphlet has given, or shall give, birth to; which, with the heavy stock of valuable articles waiting the adjournment of congress for insertion, promise to render this volume uncommonly valuable.

We have not yet either time nor room to make any remarks on the extraordinary state of political feeling that has lately prevailed at Washington, and is powerfully extending itself to all parts of the United States. Perhaps, we shall keep ourselves altogether out of the arena—though we may faithfully give the remarks of some of the leading editors, on either side of this triangular or quadrangular warfare. The excitement at Washington was unprecedented for eight or ten days before the close of the session, and on many accounts; and many strange rumors were afloat, as to expected changes in the condition of persons and things. But we are so cramped for room that we could not mention them, if so disposed; and are compelled to postpone many current articles which should have had a prompt insertion. A week or two more, will restore us to the usual command over the contents of our pages. We need a great deal more space, to keep up with events. Many articles in type are lying over.

FLOUR. A letter from Liverpool by the Silas Richards, received at the exchange, dated the 25th of January, says:—"In consequence of the prohibition of the export of grain from Poland, flour has risen in Liverpool to 35 shilling per barrel in bond.

On the receipt of this news, flour advanced 25 cents a barrel at Baltimore.

MARYLAND. We omitted to mention last week, that Mr. Chambers had been re-elected a senator of the United States, for six years, from the 3rd inst. without any regular opposition—all the votes not given for him being blanks.

BALTIMORE AND WASHINGTON RAIL ROAD. Bills have passed the congress of the United States and the general assembly of Maryland, authorising the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company to make a lateral road to Washington city. Particulars hereafter.

NORTHERN BOUNDARY. London, Jan. 20. It is calculated that the hasty decision of the king of Holland, relative to the long pending boundary question between this country and the United States, will transfer from Great Britain to the Americans at least six millions of acres. Of this vast extent of country nearly 4,700,000 acres belong to the county of Hertford, and upwards of a million to the county of Devon, two of the nearest counties to the city of Quebec, the capital of the Canadas. It is also calculated that the United States boundary will be brought within about 13 miles of the river St. Lawrence for the distance of 60 miles; and that about 100 miles of the river St. John, along the banks of which runs the old and direct communication between Quebec and New Brunswick, Halifax and Nova Scotia, will be given as the United States boundary. But this is not all; we understand that four other proposed roads to different parts of our lower provinces will be henceforth within the United States territory. As has been observed, "his Orange majesty must have vaster ideas of space than his present limitted sway would lead us to believe."

TWENTY-FIRST CONGRESS—2d SESSION.

[We shall be compelled to use much brevity in our journal of the proceedings, but the important things occurring will all appear on the issue of them, and some of the long articles, such as motions made and resolutions submitted, on which no action was had, shall have place hereafter.]

SENATE.

February 24. In the sketch of Thursday's proceedings given in our last, we were barely able to briefly notice the remarks of the gentlemen who took part in the debate on the motion to strike out some items in the general appropriation bill, relative to the mission to the Ottoman Porte. The following view of the proceedings had on that occasion is more full, and will, therefore, be more satisfactory.

The senate then again resumed the consideration of the amendments to the bill making appropriations for the support of government for the year 1831—as heretofore stated:

Mr. Tyler rose, and, in a speech of about two hours duration, defended the course of his colleague, and replied to the arguments of Messrs. Livingston and Kane. Remarking upon the terms "lawless;" "unconstitutional," and "derogation of the rights of this body," as used by his colleague:—he said that the citizens of Virginia were a bold and fearless people, and called things by their right names. If the terms used were offensive to the senate, he had no doubt his colleague would give such reasons for using them as would justify him in so doing, and satisfy the senate. He said the discussion had been forced upon them, and if the integrity of the party was to be sustained, it required no great sagacity to determine upon the mode in which it should be done. It seemed to be thought, that, if any opposition was made to the measures of the administration by members of the party, it was the desertion of the party and of the executive. This reminded him of an anecdote. At or near the time when his colleague was delivering his speech, commenced the breaking up of the ice in the Potomac. Being in company with a gentleman, he was informed of the breaking up of the ice, and that a portion of the bridge had been carried away, thus serving to show that Virginia had fairly separated from the administration, and raised the flag of the opposition. He was willing to let the anecdote pass for what it was worth. Every senator should feel that on this subject of executive appointments a stand should be taken. Esto perpetua should be the language of every one as to the preservation of the constitution of the United States. Tempests might rage and commotions prevail—yet, amidst the rocking of the battlements and war of the elements, we might laugh, unconcerned, if the constitution was preserved in its purity. As to the independent spirit of Virginia, not the two houses of congress, backed by the federal judiciary, had been able to drive her from taking a stand on constitutional principles.—Mr. T. remarked on the course pursued by the present secretary of state after the stand he had taken upon the Panama question. He read an extract from his speech on that occasion, and said that the honorable secretary had not only turned his back upon that speech, but upon his vote on the question also. He had moved heaven and earth to seek to put down the last administration, but, notwithstanding the shoes which he then had on were not worn out, when he himself—this same individual—the present secretary—originated a mission, and called upon the senate to sanction it. The course pursued by Mr. Adams was then said to be a dangerous infraction of the constitution; and after what had recently transpired, had not the Jackson party a right to complain that the secretary had done all this to break up that party? A great deal was said about modern statesmen—it was difficult to find statesmen at the present day. Certain individuals walked with heads erect, facing the sky, regardless of what ever fell in their way, and trampling upon some of the dearest and most invaluable principles of the nation. He would not give a tittle of the statesmen who framed the constitution of the United States for all the modern statesmen who had been so much lauded. The foregoing is but an imperfect sketch of part of the remarks of Mr. T. He concluded by submitting the following amendment, by way of proviso.

"Provided always, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as sanctioning, or in any way approving, the appointment of these persons, by the president alone, during the recess of the senate, and without their advice and consent, as commissioners to negotiate a treaty with the Ottoman porte."

Mr. Brown was not prepared, nor had he intended to say a word on the subject—but, from the extraordinary course pursued in the debate, he could not remain silent. It had been said that those who voted for the appropriation would prostrate the senate to the executive will. He considered the measure constitutional, and should vote for it, without any fear or design of prostrating himself or the senate at the feet of the executive. A discrimination had been attempted to be made between the president and his ministers. He had been taught to believe that this was the doctrine of Great Britain—he had been also taught to believe that the president was responsible for the acts of his ministers.—Our shafts might be cast at the ministers, but they wounded only the president: for he alone was responsible. The "lawless" and "rank usurpation" must be pardoned, it seemed, because it was the language of fearless Virginia. He had as much respect for that state as any other senator—she had furnished able statesmen in the cabinet and distinguished warriors in the field; but he believed there was not an individual here who would yield the palm to Virginia in zeal for the preservation of the constitution. He had not been able to discover any abuse of power in this case. The practice began with Washington, in sending commissioners to Algiers, and was followed up by Jefferson, in sending a mission to Russia. There was no comparison between this commission and the mission to Panama. Mr. B. read an extract from the speech of Mr. Tazewell on the latter case, in which he made a distinction between a mission to barbarians and civilized nations, &c.

Mr. Tazewell rejoined to those who had replied to his remarks, and defended and enlarged upon them.—Among other remarks he said, he called the power exercised unconstitutional. He had not been bred in courts, and was not acquainted with any diplomatic word to soften it. If the proceeding was actually unconstitutional, was it disrespectful to say so? He might have said the provisions of the constitution had been mistaken—but, nevertheless, would it not be unconstitutional? If a thing was done contrary to law—a power exerted contrary to law—was it not a lawless exertion of power? The terms he had used fell short of what had been charged against a former president. It had been said, on the discussion of the Panama question, by two of the present secretaries, then senators, that the course pursued by Mr. Adams was a lawless usurpation of power. This was the language used on that occasion; and, seeing he had no more than copied the language of the courtiers of the day, he did not know how he could be accused of disrespect. If gentlemen were disposed to apply the terms he had used to particular men, he could not help it. He reiterated that there had been a power exerted in this case in violation of the constitution. Mr. Tazewell continued at much greater length, but we have not attempted literally to follow him, and shall not, on the present occasion, give his further remarks. The foregoing is indeed a mere abstract of the debate.

Mr. Livingston next rose, and occupied about half an hour in explaining his previous arguments, and defending them. He also remarked upon what had fallen from Messrs. Tyler and Tazewell to-day; when,

On motion of Mr. Forsyth, (who has the floor for to-morrow,)

The senate adjourned.

February 25. Mr. Dickerson presented a memorial from certain citizens of New Jersey, praying that the duties at present imposed on the importation of foreign iron may not be reduced.

Messrs. Poindexter and Benton submitted certain propositions that will have place in our next.

Mr. Benton presented a letter from the secretary of war, transmitting the report of a board of inquiry appointed to inquire into the causes of the destruction of fort Delaware. Mr. B. afterwards made an unsuccessful effort to get up the bill for the relief of the officers and soldiers who suffered a loss of their private property by the conflagration.

The bill for the relief of certain importers of foreign merchandise, was read the third time and passed.

The bill for laying out a road from Line creek to Chatahooche, and for repairing the present mail road through the Creek nation of Indians, was also read the third time and passed.

The bill declaring the assent of congress to an act of the general assembly of the state of Ohio, concerning the national road, (to erect toll-gates, for the purpose of keeping the road in repair), was taken up, and discussed by Messrs. Burnet, Hayne, Poindexter, Livingston, Forsyth and Ruggles. It was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. Livingston submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee be appointed to examine and report whether any legislative provision is expedient, in order to prevent and punish the practice of duelling in the District of Columbia, and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

After some remarks by Messrs. Livingston and Hayne—the resolution was then agreed to, and Messrs. Livingston, Hayne, and Clayton, were appointed the committee.

The senate then resumed, as in committee of the whole, the consideration of the amendments to the appropriation bill, the question being on that submitted by Mr. Kane.

After a variety of proceedings—

Mr. Tyler submitted a proviso (to come in at the end of Mr. Kane's amendment), which he had handed to the chair a few days ago in the following words:

"Provided, always, That nothing in this act contained, shall be construed as sanctioning, or in any way approving the appointment of these persons, by the president alone, during the recess of the senate, and without their advice and consent, as commissioners to negotiate a treaty, with the Ottoman Porte:" which was agreed to as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnard, Barton, Bell, Burnet, Chambers, Ellis, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Hayne, Hendricks, Iredell, Johnston, King, Knight, Marks, Naudain, Poindexter, Ruggles, Seymour, Silsbee, Sprague, Tazewell, Tyler, Webster, Willey—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Bibb, Brown, Chase, Dickerson, Dudley, Forsyth, Grundy, Kane, Livingston, McKinley, Robbins, Robinson, Sanford, Smith, of Md. Smith, of S. Carolina, Troup, Woodbury—18.

An amendment then offered by Mr. Webster, to authorise the appointment of a charge des affaires, instead of a minister plenipotentiary, was, after debate, agreed to—ayes 37, noes 7. The senate then adjourned.

February 26. Other business being attended to—the bill declaring the assent of congress to a certain act of the state of Ohio, (as stated in yesterday's proceedings), being opposed by Mr. Poindexter and supported by Mr. Hendricks, was passed by the following vote—

YEAS—Messrs. Barnard, Barton, Bell, Benton, Burnet, Chambers, Chase, Clayton, Dickerson, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Holmes, Kane, King, Knight, McKinley, Marks, Naudain, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Sanford, Seymour, Silsbee, Smith, of Md. Webster, Willey, Woodbury.—29.

NAYS.—Messrs. Brown, Ellis, Hayne, Iredell, Poindexter, Smith, of S. C. Troup.—7.

Mr. Hayne, from the select committee, to which was referred sundry memorials, praying for a reduction of the duties on imported iron; and others, remonstrating against the reduction, made a report, and moved that it be printed.

Mr. Dickerson said, the report was from the majority of the committee; the sentiments of the minority were directly at variance with those of the majority. The report had come under his eye for the first time on yesterday, and he had not yet had time to prepare a report of the views of the minority. He should probably be able to do so on Monday. He thought the views of both parties should go to the world together, and he therefore hoped the printing would not be ordered until the counter report was ready to go with the report of the majority of the committee. He moved to lay the report on the table, but withdrew the motion at the request of

Mr. King, who said the statement made by the senator who had just taken his seat, was one of the most extraordinary he had ever heard. Committees were seldom unanimous; it was generally the majority of the committee which reported measures for consideration. If the minority were not satisfied, they had always an opportunity to present their individual views. He believed such a thing as a counter report had not been known in this body from the first commencement of the government. It had been done, he believed, in the house of representatives. When the report was made to the house, the committee ceased to exist, and it was not in the power of the minority to make a report.

After a general discussion—Mr. Webster moved to refer the report of the select committee to the committee on manufactures; which Mr. Brown remarked was like putting the lamb under the protection of the wolf.

The motion gave rise to a further debate between Messrs. Hayne, Dickerson, Smith, of Md. and Tyler.

Mr. Hayne accepted the amendment of Mr. Webster as a modification of his motion, and then called for a division of the question, so that it might be put on the printing first.

The question being put on the printing, it was determined in the affirmative, unanimously—42 votes being in favor of it.

Mr. Hayne asked, as a matter of justice to the select committee, that a censure might not be cast upon them in sending their report to another committee. The course proposed was unprecedented.

Mr. Holmes said he should vote for the reference, and could not see in what manner it would be a censure on any body.

Mr. Foot said such a course was altogether unprecedented.

Mr. Webster then moved to lay the whole matter on the table; and on this motion he called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered. Being taken, they stood as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnard, Barton, Bell, Burnet, Chambers, Chase, Clayton, Dickerson, Dudley, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Holmes, Knight, Marks, Naudain, Robbins, Ruggles, Sanford, Seymour, Silsbee, Webster, Willey—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Bibb, Brown, Ellis, Forsyth, Grundy, Hayne, Iredell, Kane, King, McKinley, Poindexter, Robinson, Smith, of Md. Smith, of S. Carolina, Sprague, Troup, Tyler, White, Woodbury—20.

So the report was laid on the table, and the decision of this motion in the affirmative, had the effect to prevent the printing. It is understood that the views of the committee are in favor of a reduction of the duty on iron imported.]

The consideration of the general appropriation bill was resumed, and some amendments made in it, in committee of the whole. It was reported to the senate, and Mr. Bibb moved to strike out the proviso, yesterday adopted on the motion of Mr. Tyler; but gave way for Mr. King, who moved to strike out all after the word "Provided," and insert a proviso more general in its nature, referring not only to the present and past administration, but to all former administrations.

Mr. Bibb now renewed the motion to strike out the whole of the proviso, which, after an explanation by Mr. Tyler, of his object in offering it, disclaiming any intention of giving it a particular application to the president, was determined in the negative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Bibb, Brown, Chase, Dudley, Forsyth, Grundy, Kane, King, Livingston, McKinley, Robbins, Robinson, Smith, of Md. Smith, of S. C. Troup, Woodbury—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnard, Barton, Bell, Burnet, Chambers, Clayton, Ellis, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Hayne, Hendricks, Holmes, Iredell, Johnston, Knight, Marks, Naudain, Poindexter, Ruggles, Seymour, Silsbee, Sprague, Tazewell, Tyler, Webster—25.

Other amendments being agreed to, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and then, at 6 o'clock, the senate adjourned.

February 28. On motion of Mr. Burnet, it was ordered that, when the senate adjourns this morning, it will adjourn until half past one o'clock.

Mr. Hendricks then arose, and announced the decease of his colleague, Mr. Noble, who died on the evening of the 26th. Mr. H's notice of Mr. Noble, was brief, but very respectful and kind to the memory of the deceased.

[We cannot go into details—at present. The body was brought into the chamber, as usual, at a little after 11 o'clock, and thence afterwards taken to the place of interment, &c. according to custom in such cases.]

At half past one o'clock the senate again assembled.

Mr. Webster said, that, supposing the chairman of committee on manufactures was prepared to make the counter-report, (of which he had spoken on Saturday), he would move to take up the report of the select committee on the subject of a reduction of the duties on iron, with a view to ordering it to be printed.

Mr. Hayne withdrew the motion which was made by Mr. Webster, on Saturday, and accepted by him, for its reference to the committee on manufactures; and so the printing was ordered.

Mr. Dickerson then presented a paper, which he stated to be the views of the minority of the select committee; but the chair declared that it could not be received as such.

Mr. D. then presented it as an individual senator.

Mr. Hayne called for the reading of the paper.

Mr. Grundy moved to lay the whole subject on the table, with a view to give an opportunity to order the general appropiation bill, as amended, to a third reading.

On this motion the yeas and nays were ordered, and it was decided in the negative, 15 to 20.

The question then being on receiving the paper, a short debate arose between Messrs. King, and Hayne, which was arrested by a motion of Mr. Foot, to lay it on the table; which motion prevailed.

Other proceedings being had, the senate took a recess till 6 o'clock.

Mr. Smith, of Md. presented the credentials of the hon. E. F. Chambers, re-elected a senator of the U. States, by the legislature of the state of Maryland, to serve for six years from the 4th of March next; and they were read.

The general appropriation bill, as amended, was read the third time, and passed.

The evening session continued until 11 o'clock. A great many bills were passed. Among other proceedings were the following—

On motion of Mr. Chambers, the senate took up the bill, "to authorise the extension, construction, and use of a lateral branch of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road into and within the District of Columbia: together with the amendments reported by the district committee of the senate. The amendments were agreed to, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

The bill supplementary to the act to reduce the duty on salt, was, on motion of Mr. Silsbee, read the second time.

Mr. Woodbury remarked that there were two or three other cases of grievances, for which this bill did not provide. Having stated them, he said they all came within the spirit of the law of the last session, and he would therefore submit two additional sections to the bill now under consideration, to embrace them. The amendments were read and agreed to, and the bill, as amended, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. It was subsequently read the third time, and passed.

March 1. Mr. Dickerson moved that the senate now proceed to consider the paper submitted by him, as the views of the minority of the select committee on the subject of reducing the duties on iron.

It was finally ordered to be printed—19 to 18.

Mr. Naudain presented three resolutions of the legislature of the state of Delaware, in relation to the officers of the revolution, the tariff and the public lands; which was severally laid on the table.

Mr. Marks presented petitions from certain citizens of the state of Pennsylvania, relative to the southern Indians; which were laid on the table.

The bill for the relief of certain insolvent debtors of the United States was then taken up, on motion of Mr. Webster, and, being explained by him, was ordered to a third reading.

The military appropriation bill was then taken up, and some amendments made.

The bill from the house, making provision for a subscription to a completion of congressional documents, [by Gales and Seaton], was read a second time, and considered as in committee of the whole.

The yeas and nays were called eight times, on different motions to refer or amend the bill, &c. or, in other words to defeat it; but a general majority of about 3 votes resisted all the propositions. Finally,

The bill was then reported to the senate without amendment; and the question being put on ordering it to a third reading, it was determined in the affirmative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Burnet, Chambers, Chase, Clayton, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Holmes, Johnston, Knight, Livingston, Marks, Naudain, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Seymour, Silsbee, Smith, of S. C. Sprague, Webster, Willey.—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Bibb, Brown, Dickerson, Dudley, Ellis, Forsyth, Grundy, Hayne, Iredell, Kane, King, McKinley, Poindexter, Sanford, Smith, of Md. Tazewell, Tyler, Woodbury—19.

The senate agreed to take a recess from 4 to 6 o'clock.

The bill from the house of representatives, for the punishment of persons for cutting or otherwise destroying live oak and red cedar timber, reserved for the use of the United States, was read a third time and passed.

The bill for the benefit of certain insolvent debtors of the United States, was also read the third time and passed.

The military appropriation bill, as amended, was also read the third time and passed.

After other proceedings—the vice president stated that he should not again attend the meetings of the senate at the present session, and availed himself of this opportunity of wishing the senators a very pleasant return to their homes.

In the evening session, the first business was to elect a president pro tem. There were three ballots—

	1*st.*	2*d.*	3*d.*
Mr. Smith, of Md.	17	18	15
Bell,	12	8
Tazewell,	3	9	21
Scattering,	4	2	3

Thus Mr. Tazewell was elected president pro tempore, of the senate.

Whereupon Mr. Tazewell rose, and with a profession of his sincere distrust of his ability to discharge the duties of the chair with satisfaction to himself or to the senate, begged to be excused from accepting the honorable station which the senate had assigned to him.

Mr. Webster expressed a hope that the honorable senator from Virginia would re-consider his determination, and would not be excused from the duty to which the vote of the senate had called him.

Mr. Tyler, expressed his high respect for his colleague, and declaring that he himself, with all the sincere respect which he had for his colleague, not expecting such a course, had voted for the venerable senator from Maryland, and desirous to pay due regard to the wishes of his colleague, moved that his colleague be excused from serving as president pro tempore.

The secretary of the senate having put the question on this motion, it was decided in the affirmative, by 20 votes to 14.

A fourth ballot was then had—Mr. Smith had 20 votes, Mr. Bell 11, Mr. Ruggles 4, and Mr. King 4.

So Mr. Smith, of Maryland, was elected president pro tempore of the senate; and, being conducted to the chair, made his acknowledgments for the honor which he said he was satisfied was paid rather to his age than to his ability, and said that the only return he could make would be to devote his best ability to the proper despatch of the business before the senate.

Mr. Foot made an unsuccessful attempt to get up the bill for the relief of certain surviving officers and soldiers of the revolutionary army—the votes were 20 to 20.

The bill making appropriations for the naval service was read the third time and passed.

The bill to carry into effect certain Indian treaties was taken up, amended, and ordered to a third reading. The amendment struck out the clause which provides for taking the sum appropriated for carrying into effect the Choctaw treaty from the fund of 500,000 dollars last year appropriated for the removal of the southern Indians, and the expense of carrying into effect that treaty was ordered to be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments of the house to the amendments of the senate of the general appropriation bill were all agreed to, with the exception of that which goes to strike out the clause inserted on the motions of Mr. Kane and Mr. Tyler, (before noticed) and inserting 15,000 for the services of the commissioners employed to conclude the treaty with the sublime porte.

A variety of motions were made on this subject, several points of order were discussed, and then some remarks were made on the constitutionality of the appointment of the commissioners. The effect that the amendment of the house would have, as preventing the senate from expressing their disapprobation of the course of the executive, was also spoken of, when, finally, the senate refused to agree to the amendment, and appointed a committee of conference on its part, consisting of Messrs. Tazewell, Webster and King, to meet conferees to be appointed by the house of representatives.

The senate then adjourned.

March 2. A good deal of business was transacted this day. The bills concerning the public documents proposed to be published by Gales and Seaton, to carry into effect certain Indian treaties, and several private bills were passed.

Certain resolutions offered by Mr. Benton, (to be inserted hereafter) were adopted.

The bill for the relief of James Monroe was discussed and ordered to a third reading by the following vote—

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Bibb, Chambers, Chase, Clayton, Dudley, Frelinghuysen, Grundy, Hayne, Hendricks, Johnston, Livingston, Marks, Poindexter, Robinson, Seymour, Silsbee, Sprague, Tazewell, Tyler, Willey, Woodbury—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Brown, Burnet, Dickerson, Ellis, Foot, Forsyth, Iredell, Kane, McKinley, Robbins, Ruggles, Smith, of Md. Troup—15.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McKinley the senate then proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and sat with closed doors till near 4 o'clock. And then,

After agreeing to the amendments of the house to the bill relative to punishments for contempts of court, the senate took a recess till 7 o'clock.

Evening session, March 2. The various business transacted this evening, can only be briefly noticed. The internal improvement bill occupied much time. It was warmly supported and opposed—many amendments offered, &c. but it was finally passed and returned to the house of representatives for concurrence.

The senate concurred in the amendments of several bills, as made by the house of representatives. The bill making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors, mouths of rivers, &c. was passed. [Another bill on this subject, and providing for surveys, appears to have been refused a consideration. The latter, we believe, relates to new proposed works. The light house bill was passed, and many other bills. Mr. Chambers moved to take up the bill to alter the draw and bridge over the Potomac. [It was now past 1 o'clock at night.] No quorum present. The missing members were sent for, and a quorum appeared. The further proceedings are not fully stated—the senate adjourned at half past two.

March 3. A great part of the sitting of this day was spent in executive business. Among other proceedings was the presentation of a memorial from Abraham Bradley, stating that his name had been inserted in fifty-nine cases of extra allowance; that in thirty-six of them the original document had been mutilated, and the name of

A. Bradley, junior, acting as post master general, carefully inserted; that these documents, were used as proof that he had squandered the public funds during the few days he had acted as post master general, between the 10th of March, when Mr. McLane left the office and 5th of April when Mr. Barry came into it; and that, in order to screen himself, he had charged these things upon the latter gentleman; that the committee of examination had deputed a sub-committee to accompany him to the department, on the 28th ult. to ascertain whether his statements were correct; and that in every case but one, in which an erasure had been made, Mr. Barry was originally and properly charged, and that it was there asserted that these erasures were made by mistake.

☞There were some warm remarks on the affairs of the post office, by Mr. Clayton and others.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Thursday, Feb. 24. The house proceeded to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for carrying on certain roads and works of internal improvements, and providing for surveys.

Some debate arose on an objection by Mr. Carson to the appropriation of $5,000 for a military road in the state of Maine—in which Mr. C. opposed it and Messrs. Verplanck and Anderson supported it; and the appropriation was finally agreed to.

Mr. Pettis moved to amend the item for improving the Ohio and Mississippi rivers by inserting "Missouri," and adding at the end,

"And the president of the United States is hereby authorised to cause to be expended a part of the said sum of $50,000 in removing obstructions to the navigation of the Missouri rivers, within the limits of the state of Missouri, in the same manner as is provided in the 2d section of the act of 24th May, 1824, for improving the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi, if it be ascertained that the obstructions to the navigation of the Missouri are of equal or greater importance than those remaining to be removed from the Ohio and Mississippi rivers," Mr. P. earnestly supported his amendment, but it was negatived.

On the item of 50,000 dollars for the improvement of the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, a long debate took place. It was opposed by Mr. Archer at some length, on principle, as well as on the expediency and inutility of the particular appropriation. From the nature of the river, the obstructions could not be permanently removed, and he wished to know how long these appropriations would be necessary. Mr. Crockett answered frankly "as long as the Mississippi runs." The appropriation was advocated by Mr. Wickliffe and Mr. Crockett—by the latter gentleman repeatedly; and Messrs. Verplanck and Gilmore participated in the defence of the item. It was eventually agreed to.

On the item of 150,000 dollars for the improvement of the Ohio coming up for concurrence,

Mr. Lea objected to the bill on the ground of its comprising so many heterogeneous objects; and argued at some length against the plan of carrying appropriations by such combinations; and moved to recommit the bill for the purpose of having the analagous appropriations classed in separate bills.

On this motion, and the item of 150,000 dollars considerable debate ensued, in which Messrs. Lea, Crockett, Archer, Verplanck, Carson, and Sutherland joined.

The motion to recommit was lost—ayes 62, noes 107.

Mr. Polk then moved to strike out the appropriation of 25,000 dollars for surveys, and argued at some length against the appropriation. Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Crockett advocated the appropriation, and the question being on striking it out, it was negatived as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Alston, Anderson, Angel, Archer, Barnwell, James Blair, Bockee, Bouldin, Brodhead, Cambreleng, Campbell, Carson, Chandler, Claiborne, Clay, Coke, Conner, Craig, Crocheron, Davenport, Desha, De Witt, Draper, Drayton, Earll, Findlay, Foster, Fry, Gaither, Gordon, Hall, Halsey, Holland, Hoffman, Cave Johnson, Perkins King, Lea, Lent, Lewis, Loyall, Lumpkin, Magee, Thomas Maxwell, McCoy, McIntire, Nuckolls, Patton, Pettis, Polk, Potter, Rencher, Roane, Sanford, A H. Shepperd, Shields, Speight, Taliaferro, Wiley Thompson, Trezvant, Tucker, Camp. P. White, Wickliffe, Wilde, Williams—66.

NAYS—Messrs. Armstrong, Arnold, Bartley, Bates, Baylor, Beekman, John Blair, Boon, Brown, Buchanan, Burges, Butman, Cahoon, Childs, Chilton, Clark, Coleman, Condict, Cooper, Coulter, Cowles, Crane, Crawford, Crockett, Creighton, Crowninshield, John Davis, Deberry, Denny, Doddridge, Dudley, Duncan, Eager, Ellsworth, George Evans, Joshua Evans, H. Everett, Finch, Ford, Forward, Gilmore, Grennell, Gurley, Hawkins, Hemphill, Hodges, Howard, Hughes, Hunt, Huntington, Ihrie, Thomas Irwin, W. W. Irvin, Isacks, Johns, R. M Johnson, Kendall, Kennon, Kincaid, Leavitt, Lecompte, Letcher, Lyon, Martindale, Lewis Maxwell, McCreery, McDuffie, Mercer Miller, Mitchell, Muhlenburg, Pearce, Pierson, Ramsay, Randolph, Reed, Richardson, Rose, Russel, Scott, Wm. B. Shepard, Sill, Smith, Ambrose Spencer, Richard Spencer, Sprigg Stanberry, Standefer, Sterigere, Henry R. Storrs, Wm. L. Storrs, Strong, Sutherland, Swann, Swift, Taylor, Test, J. Thomson, Tracy, Vance, Varnum, Verplanck, Vinton, Washington, Whittlesey, E. D. White, Wilson, Yancey Young—109.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and the house adjourned.

Friday, Feb. 25. After the presentation of reports—

Mr. Huntington moved the following resolution; which was read and laid on the table, viz:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to communicate to this house, at the commencement of the next session of congress, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, a statement shewing the quantity, quality, and kinds of iron, and steel, in its various forms, including castings, manufactured in the U. States, annually, for three years, prior to September, 1831, and the estimated value thereof. And that he also inform this house, as aforesaid, whether any legislative provisions are necessary to prevent the evasion of the payment of the existing duties on bar or other iron imported into the United States, and the frauds upon the revenue occasioned thereby, specifying such frauds and evasions, if any exist.

The house took up the resolution of Mr. C. P. White, proposing to print 6,000 additional copies of the reports pro and con of the judiciary committee, on the propriety of repealing the 25th section of the judiciary act of 1789.

Mr. Foster resumed the floor in favor of the repeal, and spoke half an hour in conclusion of his remarks; when

Mr. Evans, of Maine, rose and observed that it could now no longer be said that those who coincided with the report of the majority of the committee, had not had full opportunity for discussing the question and advocating their views. He would, therefore, now move the previous question, which being seconded,

Mr. Pettis asked for the yeas and nays on the previous question; but they were refused.

Mr. Sterigere moved that the resolution lie on the table. Negatived.

The previous question was then carried, and the question being put on the adoption of the resolution, it was decided in the affirmative. Ayes 140, noes 32.

The speaker laid before the house sundry communications—and several private or local bills were passed, or ordered to a third reading.

On motion of Mr. Everett, of Mass. the rule was suspended, (two-thirds concurring), for the purpose of taking up the bill laid on the table yesterday, to authorise a subscription to Gales & Seaton's compilation of the documents of congress, prior to the burning of the capitol; and the bill was then taken up, 94 to 76.

Mr. Wickliffe opposed the bill, and Mr. Chilton advocated it.

Mr. Condict then moved the previous question, and the motion was seconded and carried, by yeas and nays, 87 to 82.

Mr. Speight moved a call of the house, but the motion was negatived.

The question was then put on engrossing the bill for a third reading, and carried, by yeas and nays, 93 to 92.

An engrossed bill entitled "an act making appropriations for carrying on certain roads and works of internal improvement, and providing for surveys," was read the third time, and passed by ayes 107 and noes 57.

The house went into committee, Mr. Polk in the chair, on sundry appropriation bills. The first taken up was the bill for carrying into effect certain Indian treaties.

Mr. McDuffie moved to insert an appropriation of 80,000 dollars for carrying into effect the Choctaw treaty, recently ratified by the senate.

Mr. Bates said he regretted not to see the chairman of the committee on Indian affairs in his place. In this dark sea he thought the house had a right to know from the pilot by what course, or what star it was sailing. If the Indians are the citizens of the states, and subject to the jurisdiction of the states, as contended for, he would thank any disciple of the school of strict construction, or of any other, to show the authority of this government to purchase their land, to remove or educate them, as proposed. Mr. B. said some of his constituents wished to sell their lands and remove, and would be very thankful if the government would buy them out and aid in their removal. If the Indians are in fact independent nations, or tribes, as he supposed they were, then no difficulty appears in the case; but if they are citizens of the states, and subject to the jurisdiction of the states, he saw no power in the government to interfere. The policy seems to be, to consider them as independent for all purposes beneficial to us, and as citizens for all purposes prejudicial to them. He hoped some one of the committee would favor the house with their views upon this obscure subject, that its course might be uniform.

Mr. Lumpkin replied to Mr. Bates, arguing that this Choctaw treaty was just ratified, and that the appropriation had nothing to do with the general policy of the government towards the Indian tribes, or with the general question. He referred to some of the recent arguments of Mr. Everett on the Indian subject; which he would be glad to answer at large if opportunity offered, but this was not a proper occasion for it.

Mr. Storrs of N. Y. desired to know whether the treaty was before the house. It was unprecedented to vote an appropiation to carry a treaty into effect before the president communicated a copy of it to the house. No such communication, he was informed, had been made, and he was therefore opposed to the amendment.

Mr. Dwight was not solicitous about the amendment, but he stated that this object was embraced in the general appropriation of 500,000 last year: but that appropriation had not been touched; it remained in the treasury and would go to the surplus fund, and it was necessary to make a new appropriation for this object, if it was to be effected.

Mr. McDuffie observed he was indifferent about the fate of the amendment in committee. He had offered it now that he might be able to offer it in the house, when a copy of the treaty should be received.

The amendment was then rejected without a count.

The committee took up the bill making appropriations for certain harbors, and providing for certain surveys, and made some amendments thereto.

The committee next took up, in succession, the light house bill, and the bill making an appropriation of 100,000 dollars for a custom house in the city of New York; which having gone through,

The committee rose and reported all the bills to the house; and then

The house adjourned.

Saturday, Feb. 26. After other business, the bill for the preservation of the live oak, &c. in Florida, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Several private and local matters being attended to—

The house resumed the consideration of the resolution moved by Mr. Haynes, of Georgia, on the 11th January last, to reduce the duty on sugar.

Mr. White, of Lou. commenced in reply to Mr. Haynes—but was compelled to stop by the expiration of the hour.

The rule appropriating Friday and Saturday, exclusively, to private business, was suspended, two-thirds voting for it. But several private bills were passed.

The engrossed bill making provision for a subscription to a compilation of congressional documents, was read the third time.

The bill was opposed by Messrs. Speight, Polk and Yancey, and advocated by Messrs. Drayton and Wayne.

The previous question was moved by Mr. Pettis, and was sustained by the house.

The previous question, that is, shall the main question be now put? was then, on the call of Mr. Speight, taken by ayes and noes, and carried, 107 to 77.

The main question on the passage of the bill was then put by ayes and noes, and carried. Ayes 98, noes 93.

[We cannot give the yeas and nays until next week.]

The bill from the senate declaring the assent of congress to an act of the general assembly of Ohio; upon the subject of the preservation of the Cumberland road, was twice read, and referred to the committee on internal improvement.

The bill allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places, was called up.

After further debate, the bill was passed.

Mr. McDuffie moved to suspend the rule to enable him to make a motion to go into committee of the whole, (on the resolution to amend the constitution relative to the election of president, it was understood), but there were not quite two-thirds in the affirmative, and the motion was lost.

Adjourned.

Monday, Feb. 28. After the presentation of about fifty petitions, notice was received from the senate of the decease of Mr. Noble—whereupon Mr. Test offered the usual resolutions of respect to his memory. The house adjourned until 3 o'clock, for the purpose of attending the funeral.

At 3 o'clock, the house resumed the consideration of the memorial from Massachusetts, presented on the 7th instant, by Mr. E. Everett, and the motion made by Mr. E. on the 14th instant, that the said memorial be referred to the committee on Indian affairs, "with instructions to report a bill making further provision for executing the laws of the United States on the subject of intercourse with the Indian tribes; and also, for the faithful observance of the treaties between the United States, and the said tribes."

For want of time to discuss the resolution, &c. Mr. Sutherland moved to lay it on the table—which was agreed to by a large majority.

An act to provide for the punishment of offences in cutting, destroying, and removing live oak and other timber for naval purposes; were severally read the third time passed, and sent to the senate for concurrence.

The bill giving the assent of congress to a certain act of the general assembly of Ohio, being reported by Mr. Vinton, was, after various motions, ordered to a third reading.

The following message in writing was received from the president of the U. States, by Mr. Donelson, his private secretary, viz:

To the speaker of the house of representatives of the United States.

I lay before the house of representatives a treaty, recently concluded with the Choctaw tribe of Indians, that provision may be made for carrying the same into effect, agreeably to the estimate heretofore presented by the secretary of war to the committee of ways and means. It is a printed copy, as it passed the senate; no amendment having been made, except to strike out the preamble. I also communicate a letter from the secretary of war on this subject. ANDREW JACKSON.

February 28, 1831.

This message was read, and laid on the table.

Sundry papers were submitted from different departments.

The house proceeded to consider the bill reported from the committee of the whole, to carry into effect certain Indian treaties.

Mr. McDuffie moved to insert an appropriation of $80,000, for carrying into effect the Choctaw treaty lately ratified by the senate.

This produced an animated debate—the amendment was modified, and the bill, so amended, finally passed.

Mr. Drayton moved that the house take up the bill making appropriations for the engineer and ordnance departments, &c.

Mr. McDuffie opposed the bill because of certain items contained in it—and the motion to take it up was rejected.

Propositions to take up certain other bills failed.

An engrossed bill "declaratory of the law concerning contempts of court," was read the third time and passed.

The bill concerning light houses, light boats, &c. was, after being opposed by Mr. Yancey, passed.

The house proceeded to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the indian department for the year 1831, and the amendments reported thereto from the committee of the whole house on the 17th inst. were read and concurred in by the house.

A motion was made by Mr. Bates, of Mass. further to amend the said bill by adding thereto the following, as an additional section, viz:

"And be it further enacted, That the annuities to the Indian nations or tribes, shall be paid hereafter, in the way and manner they have usually been paid since the grant thereof, or until the said nations or tribes, respectively shall, in general council, otherwise direct."

Mr. Bates followed his motion by a speech of an hour's length, on the subject of Indian affairs, and the policy of the executive towards the Indian tribes.

Mr. Potter replied. Mr. Buchanan opposed the amendment—he approved the act of the last session, and called for the previous question. It was sustained, and the bill, at length passed—without the proposed amendment.

The bill making an appropriation for a new custom house at New York was passed—so was the bill for the improvement of certain harbors and providing for surveys. The latter 87 to 75—after much debate. It includes an appropriation for Back Creek, at the western end of the Chesapeake and Delaware canal. The house adjourned at half past 10 o'clock at night.

☞ We have no account of Tuesday's proceedings.

Wednesday, March 2. Mr. White proceeded with his speech on the sugar bill till he was arrested by the expiration of the allotted hour, and an additional half hour allowed by a vote of the house.

Mr. Irwin, of Penn. moved to amend the Cumberland road bill by adding a section appropriating $100,000 for the repair of the road east of Wheeling. He supported his motion by a short speech explaining the facts of the case, and adverting to the new policy adopted by Ohio and Pennsylvania for the preservation of the road by the erection of toll gates.

He was opposed by Mr. Crawford—such demands for repairs went to destroy the entire system of internal improvement, &c. Mr. Letcher said that unless the road was to be abandoned, the amendment must prevail—because of the wretched state of the road; but the amendment was rejected, ayes 53, noes 94. The bill was ordered to a third reading 89 to 66.

On motion of Mr. Verplanck, the house agreed to the request of the senate for a conference on the general appropriation bills—and Messrs. Verplanck, White of Florida, Spencer, of N. Y. Wayne and Drayton, were appointed a committee on the part of the house.

The senate's amendments to the act declaratory of the powers of courts of the United States on the subject of contempts; adding a second section for punishing all attempts to corrupt or intimidate jurors, &c. was amended, on the suggestion of Mr. Buchanan, and then agreed to.

The military appropriation bill was next considered in committee of the whole, Mr. Condict in the chair.

The amendment which went to appropriate $80,000 for the expenses of the Choctaw treaty out of the treasury, and not out of the sum of $500,000 appropriated by the Indian bill of last year, being read—

Mr. Bell explained, and strenuously advocated the amendment, answering several queries of Mr. Vinton in relation to the expenditure of part of the appropriation of last year.

Mr. Ellsworth opposed the amendment, insisting that the 500,000 of the last year was intended to cover the expenses included in this sum.

Mr. Storrs took similar ground, and quoted the Indian bill in support of his position—comparing the treatment of the house by the executive to the child's play of "shut your eyes and open your mouth."

Mr. Polk replied—contending that the house had abundant light, and insisting that the objects of this appropriation never were contemplated when the 500,000 were granted by the bill of last year.

Mr. Huntington further quoted the law, and argued to show that the objects now proposed might be paid for out of the sum in that law; and, whether or not the house might now so direct.

Mr. Burges earnestly argued on the same side.

Mr. Wickliffe advised that no reply be made—as the speeches would avail nothing, save for political effect.

Mr. Bell replied—insisting on the distinct character of the objects now asked for; arguing with great warmth to show that the president would have violated the act of last session if he had applied the money then given him to the objects of education, farming utensils, rifles, councils' houses, &c. comprised in the present appropriation, and then the gentleman would have taken opposite ground, and cried out autocracy, &c., and repelling the idea suggested by Mr. Burges that the fund in the hands of the president was to be reserved as a treasure for bribery.

Mr. Storrs replied and explained.

Mr. Whitlesey remonstrated against the consumption of time in this debate.

Mr. Wilde demanded the question, and threatened a full discussion should the debate be further pursued.

The question was taken accordingly, and decided in the affirmative, ayes 93—so the house concurred, and the clause was stricken out which takes the 80,000 dollars out of the 500,000 dollars of last year.

The next bill considered in committee of the whole was that for fortifications. The senate's amendment which gives 200,000 dollars instead of 100,000 dollars, towards arming the forts, was advocated by Mr. Drayton.

Mr. Yancey and Mr. Reed opposed the amendment—the latter said there was a monopoly in the contracts. Mr. Drayton replied. The amendment was rejected.

Other bills were passed through the committee of the whole, and reported to the house. The yeas and nays were called on the disputed amendments to the Indian appropriation bill—for them 92, against them 72. So the clause remained stricken out.

Mr. Verplanck, from the committee of conference, reported an unanimous agreement of that committee in the following compromise: to strike out all the specifications of items of expense of the negotiation with the Ottoman Porte, and insert the following in lieu thereof:" for the contingent expenses of foreign intercourse, in addition to the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars hereinafter appropriated, the sum of fifteen thousand dollars." This report was agreed to.

After other business, the house adjourned to ½ past 6 o'clock.

In the evening session the house, as usual, was occupied in consummating a vast mass of business which had been matured by its previous action during this session.

Some debate was excited by the bill remitting certain duties on imported salt under bond, which resulted in laying the bill on the table. A similar fate belel the bill extending the right of pre-emption to certain settlers in Florida and Arkansas. A bill passed, authorising a survey of the boundary lines between Florida and Alabama, and of the northern boundary of Illinois. An attempt was made by Mr. Wilde to engraft upon it a provision for settling the long disputed line between Florida and Georgia, but as it threatened long discussion the motion failed. Numerous private bills were considered in committee, read a third time, and passed.

Thursday, March 3. The house sat till a late hour, but we have not the particulars of the proceedings.

☞ The "National Intelligencer" says—The president approved and signed all the bills which were presented to him, although a rumor prevailed, in the afternoon, that one or two, embracing internal improvements, would not be approved.

☞ A great mass of matter is deferred—and the very late arrival of the mail last evening, because of the state of the roads, has prevented the insertion of some things presenting themselves, pushed as we have been by extra exertion this week: but we hope to get all well posted up in our next paper. The matters concerning the general post office, are highly interesting.

RUSSIA AGAINST POLAND.

The emperor and king has addressed to the Poles the following proclamation:

"The odious attempt of which your capital has been the theatre has disturbed the repose of your country. The intelligence has excited my just indignation, and filled me with the deepest grief.

"Men who dishonor the name of Pole have conspired against the life of the brother of your monarch; have seduced a part of your army to forget their oaths, and deceived the people upon the dearest interest of your country.

"It is still time, however, to remedy the past, and you may yet save yourselves from greater evils. I will not confound those who abjure the error of a moment with those who presist in crime.

"Poles! listen to the counsels of a father; obey the commands of your king.

"That you may be fully aware of our intentions, we ordain:—

"1. That all our Russian subjects detained as prisoners be immediately set at liberty:—2d. The council of administration shall resume its primitive functions, and the authority with which we invested it by our decree of the 12th August, 1826.—3. All civil authorities of the capital and of the Waywodies shall render strict obedience to the decrees issued in our name by the council of administration, organised, as we have before said, and shall not acknowledge any power illegally constituted.

4. Immediately on the receipt of these presents, all the chiefs of our Polish army shall be bound to assemble their troops, and march without delay to Plock, the point we have fixed upon for the assembling of our royal army.

5. All chiefs are to send us without delay, returns of the state of their troops.—6. Every armament formed in consequence of the disturbances at Warsaw, and not in accordance with the organization of our army is dissolved from this moment.

"Consequently the local authorities are charged to take care that all persons found with arms illegally obtained do instantly give them up, and that these arms be placed under the veterans and police officers of each district.

"Soldiers of the Polish army! In all times your motto has been 'Honor and Fidelity.' Our brave regiment of Chasseurs ot the horse guards have furnished a proof which will be ever memorable. Soldiers, follow this example and answer the expectations of your sovereign who has received your oaths.

"Poles! this proclamation will assure those who have remained faithful to me that I know how to rely upon their devotedness, and confide in their courage.

"Those among you who have abandoned themselves to a momentary error will equally learn that I do not repel them if they but hasten to return to their duty.

"But never shall the words of your king be addressed to men without honor and without fidelity, who have conspired against the repose of their country. Should they have dared to flatter themselves, that by taking up arms they would obtain concessions as a reward for their crimes, their hopes shall be vain. They have betrayed their country. The misery they prepared for it shall fall upon their own heads.

"Given at St. Petersburg, this 17th December, A. D. 1830, and the 6th of our reign.

(Signed) NICOLAS.

The minister secretary of state,

COUNT STEPHEN GRANOWSKI."

RUSSIAN MANIFESTO AGAINST POLAND.

From a Brussels paper.

The following manifesto has just been published:—

"We, Nicolas, by the grace of God, emperor and autocrat of all the Russias. &c. to all our faithful subjects greeting.

"A terrible treason has convulsed the kingdom of Poland, which is united to Russia. Evil minded men, whom the benefits of the emperor Alexander, the magnanimous restorer of their country, had not disarmed, and who, under the protection of the constitution which he had granted them, enjoyed the fruits of his solicitude, plotted the overthrow of the order of things introduced by him, and marked the outset of their crimes, on the 17th, (29th) of November, by rebellion, bloodshed, and criminal attempts on the life of our beloved brother, the Cesarowitsch and grand duke Constantine Paulowitsch. Taking advantage of the darkness of the night, a furious multitude, instigated by them, attacked the palace of the Cesarowitsch, and at the same time, spread in several quarters of the city false reports that the Russian troops were massacreing the peaceable citizens, enraging the people, and filling the city with all the horrors of anarchy. The Cesarowitsch then resolved to take up a position in the environs of Warsaw with the Russian troops that he had with him, and the Polish troops that remained faithful to their duty, and not act offensively, in order to avoid all occasions for the effusion of blood, to show clearly the absurdity and the falsehood of the reports that were spread, to give the authorities of the city time and means, with the aid of the well disposed citizens, to recall to their duty those who had been led astray, and to keep the evil minded in check: but this expectation was not fulfilled.

The council of administration could not succeed in restoring order, incessantly menaced by the rebels, who had formed illegal meetings, and who had changed its composition by removing the members named by us, and establishing others forced on it by the chiefs of the conspirators. There was nothing left for it to do but earnestly to entreat the Cesarowitsch to send back the Polish troops who had left Warsaw with him, in order to preserve public and private property from further pillage. Soon this council was totally dissolved, and the whole power placed in the hands of a general. At the same time a report spread of a similar insurrection in all the provinces of the kingdom of Poland. The same means were every where employed—seduction, menaces, falsehoods, the object of which was to subject the peaceable citizens to the power of some rebels. In these serious and deplorable circumstances, the Cesarowitch thought it necessary to follow the advice of the council of state, and he permitted the small number of Polish troops who had remained faithful to return to Warsaw, in order, if possible, to protect persons and property. He himself, with the Russian troops, quitted the kingdom of Poland, and on the 1st (13th) of December arrived at the village of Wlodaw, in Volhynia. In this manner a crime, which had been long meditated was consummated. After so many calamities, the Polish nation was enjoying peace and prosperity, under the protection of our government; again it precipitates itself into an abyss of revolt and misery, and troops of these credulous men, though struck with fear of approaching chastisement, dare to propose conditions to us, their legitimate master.

"Russians! you know that we reject them with indignation. Your hearts, burning with zeal for the throne, comprehend what our's feels. At the first news of the treason your answer was a new oath of unalterable fidelity, and at this moment we see in the whole extent of our vast empire only one impulse, in the hearts of all only one sentiment—the desire of sparing no effort for the honor of their sovereign, the inviolability of the empire and to sacrifice to it their riches, prosperity, and even their lives. We have contemplated with emotion this generous transport of the love of the people to our person and to the country, and we consider it as a sacred duty to answer to it by the words of moderation.

"New sacrifices, new efforts, will not be necessary.—God, the defender of the legitimate cause, is with us, and powerful Russia is able in a single decisive battle to reduce to obedience those who have dared to disturb the peace. Our faithful troops, who have very recently distinguished themselves by numerous victories, are already assembling on the western frontier of the empire. We are ready to punish the treason, but at the same time we will distinguish between the innocent and the guilty, and pardon the weak, who, through inability to resist, or through fear, followed the torrent of rebellion.

"No, all the subjects of our kingdom of Poland, all the inhabitants of Warsaw, have not taken part in the conspiracy and its deplorable consequences. Several have shown, by dying gloriously, that they knew their duty; others, as we have seen by the reports of the grand duke, were obliged to return with tears of despair to the places occupied by the rebels; they form, with the victims of fraud and seduction, the greater part of the army, and of the kingdom of Poland. We addressed them in a proclamation of the 5th (17th) of this month (already published), in which, expressing our just displeasure at the violation of faith, we gave orders to put an end to all usurpations of power, illicit armaments, and to replace every thing on its former footing. By doing this, they may still repair the fault of their countrymen, and save the kingdom of Poland from the disastrous consequence of a criminal infatuation. In pointing out this as the only means of safety, we made known to all our faithful subjects this effect of our clemency; they will see in it our resolution to maintain untouched the rights of the throne, and to protect the country, as well as the equally firm resolution to excuse those who have been led astray.

"Russians, the example of your emperor will serve you as a guide. Justice and not vengeance, unshaken firmness in the combat for the honor and welfare of the state, without hatred towards infatuated adversaries—love and respect for those subjects of our kingdom of Poland who have remained faithful to the oath taken to us—a prompt reconciliation with all those who return to their duty. You will fulfil our hopes as you have already done. Persevere in your peace and tranquility, in firm reliance upon God, the eternal benefactor of Russia, and in a monarch who knows the greatness and the sacredness of his vocation, and will know how to maintain unimpaired the dignity of his empire, and the glory of his Russian name.

(Signed), NICOLAS.

"St. Petersburgh, Dec. 12, (24) in the 6th year of our reign."

BELGIUM.

Brussels, Jan. 4. In the congress yesterday M. Vilain XIV. announced that he was about to communicate a diplomatic note. The hon. member then read the following documents:

No. 1—The provisional government of Belgium to the president of the national congress.

"Brussels, January 3, 1831.

"Sir—We have the honor to transmit to you the protocol of December 20, which was delivered to the committee for foreign affairs on Friday last, at midnight, after the sitting of the congress. We annex the answer of the committee, dated the 3d inst. Believe us, etc.

"VANDERLINDEN."

No. 2—To lord Ponsonby and M. Bresson, Brussels.

"London, December 30, 1830.

"Gentlemen—We have the honor to transmit to you a protocol, which consecrates an important determination formed in the name of the five powers. Our wish is, that this document should be communicated to the provisional government of Belgium, and that you, gentlemen, should urge the prompt departure of commissioners with whom we wish to confer. Accept, etc.

"ESTERHAZY,
WEISSEMBERG,
TALLEYRAND,
PALMERSTON,
BULOW,
LIEWEN MATUSEVICZ."

No. 3—Protocol of the conference held at the foreign office on the 20th of December, 1830.

Present, the plenipotentiaries of Austria, France, Great Britain, Prussia and Russia:—

The plenipotentiaries of the five courts having received the formal concurrence of the Belgian government in the Armistice which had been proposed to it, and the king of the Netherlands having also acceded to it, and the conference having thus, by stopping the effusion of blood, accomplished its first task, the plenipotentiaries assembled to deliberate upon the ulterior measures to be taken, with a view to remedy the derangements which the disturbances that have arisen in Belgium had introduced into the system of the treaties of 1814 and 1815.

In forming, by the treaties in question, the union of Belgium with Holland, the powers who signed the said treaties, and whose plenipotentiaries are at this moment assembled, had for their object to found a just equilibrium in Europe, and secure the general peace.

The events of the last four months have unfortunately demonstrated that the perfect and complete amalgamation which the powers wished to effect between these two countries had not been obtained, that henceforward it would be impossible to effect it, that thus the union of Belgium with Holland is destroyed, and that therefore it becomes indispensable to have recourse to other arrangements to accomplish the intentions for the execution of which this union was to have secured the means.

United to Holland, and forming an integral part of the kingdom of the Netherlands, Belgium had to fulfil her part of the European duties of that kingdom, and of the obligations that the treaties had made her contract towards the other powers. Her separation from Holland cannot liberate her from that part of these obligations.

The conference consequently will occupy itself with the discussion and combination of new arrangements, best calculated to combine the future independence of Belgium with the stipulations of the treaties, with the interests and security of the other power, and with the maintainance of the balance of Europe. To this end, the conference, whilst combining its negotiations with the plenipotentiaries of his majesty the king of the Netherlands, will urge the provisional government of Belgium to send to London, as soon as possible, commissioners furnished with instructions and powers sufficiently ample, to be consulted and heard upon all that may facilitate the definitive adoption of the arrangements mentioned above.

These arrangements can in nowise effect the rights which the king of the Netherlands and the Germanic confederation exercise over the grand duchy of Luxemburg.

The plenipotentiaries of the five great powers have agreed that the present protocol shall be communicated to the plenipotentiary of his majesty the king of the Netherlands, and a copy of it be sent to lord Ponsonby and M. Bresson, who shall communicate it to the provisional government of Belgium.

(Signed as the above letter.)

No. 4—Verbal note of December 31, 1830.

Lord Ponsonby and M. Bresson have the honor of communicating herewith to the president and members of the committee for foreign affairs certified copies of the protocol of a conference, held at London on the 28th inst. by their excellencies the plenipotentiaries of the five great powers, and a letter by which it is accompanied. They beg the president to inform them whether the Belgian commissioners sent to London are furnished with powers sufficiently ample to treat upon the divers points enumerated in the protocol. If these powers are not sufficient, the provisional government of Belgium will feel the necessity of dispatching them new powers without delay.

Lord Ponsonby and M. Bresson embrace this opportunity to renew to the president of the committee for foreign affairs the assurance that their excellencies the plenipotentiaries have spared no efforts to convince the cabinet of the Hague that the measures of precaution which impede the navigation of the Scheldt must be revoked within the shortest delay possible.

On the 29th inst. their excellencies formed the resolution anew to demand again of the government of his majesty king William to put an end, at the same time with hostilities, to every act that might be regarded as hostile; and their excellencies the ambassadors and ministers charges d'affairs of the five courts at the Hague received from their excellencies the plenipotentiaries the invitation to urge his majesty to comply as soon as possible with the wishes which they again formally expressed to him.

The provisional government of Belgium cannot fail to appreciate properly this eagerness of their excellencies the plenipotentiaries to support the claims it has set up, and, without doubt, will wait with confidence for the steps, the effect of which the five powers will take care to secure, which shall have led to the result which Belgium expects.

On this occasion lord Ponsonby and M. Bresson think it right to observe, that the protocol of the 17th of November, not having been accepted by the provisional government till the 15th inst. no time has been lost by their excellencies in adopting decisive measures.

The disquietude and impatience manifested by the country are, without doubt, perfectly natural in its present state of suffering; but it cannot but make allowances for circumstances of time and distance, and would not approve of affairs of such high importance being treated with precipitation.

Lord Ponsonby and M. Bresson present to the president and members of the committee assurances of their high consideration.

No. 5—Verbal note of Jan. 3, 1831.

The president and members of the committee for foreign affairs having had the honor to receive from lord Ponsonby and M. Bresson, by a verbal note of December 31, 1830, a certified copy of the protocol of a conference held at London on the 20th of December, by their excellencies the plenipotentiaries of the five great powers, and of a letter which accompanies it, of the same date, deem it their duty to give the following reply:—

It has appeared to them that the rising of the blockade, and the free navigation of the Scheldt, being the principal condition of the armistice, and even of the suspension of arms, already executed on the 21st of November, the first task which the five great powers had taken upon themselves, has not yet been accomplished.

The balance of Europe may yet be ensured, and the general peace maintained, by rendering Belgium independent, strong and happy. If Belgium should remain without strength and happiness, the new arrangement, to which recourse may be had, would be threatened with the fate of the political combination of 1815.

Independent Belgium has no doubt her part of the European duties to fulfil, but it is difficult to conceive what obligations would result from her treaties to which she has remained a stranger.

The commissioners sent to London are provided with the necessary instructions to be heard upon every thing that concerns Belgium, and cannot but acquaint the conference, that under the present circumstances of the Belgic people, it will appear impossible for Belgium to form an independent state, without the immediate guarantee of the free navigation of the Scheldt, of the possession of the left bank of that river, the whole province of Limburg, and the grand duchy of Luxembourg except its relations with the Germanic confederation.

Their excellencies the plenipotentiaries of the five great powers will easily conceive, by the reports which lord Ponsonby and M. Bresson may have sent them, the critical situation of the country, and the impossibility of protracting this state of uncertainty.

The president and members of the committee for foreign affairs beg lord Ponsonby and M. Bresson to accept the expression of the highest respect.

This communication was followed by a long and important discussion, in which a deputy, (M. de Robaulx), complained of the insufficiency of the communications, and of the conduct of the committee for foreign affairs.

This speech was answered in a very energetic manner by Messrs. Le Hon Lebeau, Destiveaux, Joltrand, and Forgeur, who fully justified the conduct of the committee.

After this discussion, M. Canstantin Rodenbach proposed that the congress should immediately proceed to the choice of a sovereign. The proposition was adopted, and referred to the sections.

Brussels, Jan. 16. Yesterday there were two sittings of congress. That of the morning presented no matter of general interest—in the evening the following grants were voted for the public service:—To the senate, 6,000 florins—to the chamber of representatives, 90,250 florins—to the provisional government, for office charges and travelling expenses, 25,000 florins—to the court of accounts, 24,500 florins—to the department of foreign affairs, 150,000 florins—to the department of justice, 553,000 florins—to the department of the interior, 4,250,000 florins—to the war department, 12,000,000 florins—to the department of the finances, 3,500,000 florins—to the department of public safety, 343,590 florins—to the marine department, 250,000 florins. On proceeding to vote on the ensemble of the law making these grants, the number were 114 for, and 7 against.

M. Le Hon then rose and read the following protocol, dated London, Jan. 9:—

"Present, the plenipotentiaries of Austria, France, Great Britain, Prussia, and Russia.

"The plenipotentiaries of the five courts have assembled for the purpose of examining the remonstrances which the court of London has received on the part of the provisional government of Belgium against the continuance of the measures which still paralyse the navigation of the Netherlands against the acts of hostility committed by the Belgian troops.

"Considering that the protocol No. 1, of November, 1830, contains the following—'On both sides hostilities shall cease entirely:'

"Considering that by the document annexed under the letter B. to the protocol No. 2, 'the provisional government of Belgium has pledged itself to give orders and take the necessary measures for all hostilities to cease against Holland on the part of the Belgians:'

"Considering further, that by the document annexed under the letter A, to the protocol No. 3, dated Nov. 17, 1830, 'his majesty the king of the Netherlands has declared that he accepts the proposition above mentioned (that relative to the entire cessation of hostilities on both sides), after the tenor of the protocol No. 1, of the conference:'

"Considering, that the protocol No. 2, of November 17 states, that 'the armistice having been agreed upon by both parties, it constitutes an engagement entered into with the five powers, and that, on both sides, they shall retain the power of communicating freely by land and sea with the territories, places and points, occupied by the respective troops, beyond the limits which separated Belgium from the United Provinces of the Netherlands before the treaty of Paris of May 30, 1814:'

"Considering also, that by the protocol No. 3 of November 17, the powers have regarded the armistice contracted as an engagement entered into with them, the execution of which it is their duty to look to in future:

"Considering that, in the subsequent protocol No. 4, of Nov. 30, 'the plenipotentiary of his majesty the king of the Netherlands informed those of the five powers of the entire concurrence of the king, his master, in their protocols of Nov. 16, 1830:'

"That, consequently, it was understood that the hostilities in question should cease entirely, by land and sea, and that they should not be resumed in any case, the armistice having been declared indefinite by the protocol of Nov. 17, and the cessation of hostilities having been placed under the immediate guarantee of the five powers, by the protocols, No. 4, of Nov. 30, and No. 5, of Dec. 10, 1830:

"That the nature and value of these engagements were explained to the provisional government of Belgium as early as the 6th of December, by a verbal note of lord Ponsonby and M. Bresson, in consequence of which the provisional government of Belgium declared that it agreed to the protocol of Nov. 17.

"Considering, finally, that upon the faith of this concurrence, an application has been made by the five powers in common to the king of the Netherlands, for the purpose of obtaining the complete repeal of the measures which still impede the navigation of the Scheldt.

"The plenipotentiaries have unanimously come to the opinion that it was the duty of the five powers to enforce the faithful, prompt, and entire execution of the engagements which they declared to have been entered into with themselves.

"Consequently, the plenipotentiaries have resolved to state to the plenipotentiary of his majesty the king of the Netherlands, that the five powers, having taken under their guarantee the complete cessation of hostilities, cannot allow on the part of his majesty the continuation of any measure bearing a hostile character, and that this character being that of the measures which obstruct the navigation of the Scheldt, the five powers are obliged, for the last time, to demand their repeal.

The plenipotentiaries observe that this repeal must be entire, so as to restore the free navigation of the Scheldt, without any right of duties or search, except those which were established in 1814, before the reunion of Belgium with Holland, in favor of neutral vessels, and of such as belong to Belgian ports, his majesty the king of the Netherlands having declared, through the medium of his plenipotentiary, that the vessel belonging to the Belgian ports, had not been, nor should be, molested, so long as the Belgians should not molest the vessels or property of the northern provinces of the Netherlands.

"Convinced that although the king, in his good faith and wisdom, will not fail to accede to all the points of their demand, yet the plenipotentiaries are obliged to declare hereby, that the rejection of this demand would be considered by the five powers as an act of hostility against them; and that if, on the 20th, of January, the measures which impede the navigation of the Scheldt should not cease, conformably to the promises of his majesty himself, the five powers would reserve to themselves the adoption of such measures as they might consider necessary for the prompt execution of their engagements."

"By a just reciprocity, the plenipotentiaries having been informed that acts of hostility had been resumed, chiefly in the environs of Maestricht; that the movements of the Belgian troops seem to indicate an intention of investing that fortress, and that the troops have quitted the positions which they were to occupy until the definitive line of the armistice should be fixed, in virtue of the enclosed declaration of the provisional government of Belgium, dated, November 21, 1830, have resolved to authorise their delegates at Brussels to inform the provisional government of Belgium, that the acts of hostility just mentioned are to cease without the least delay, and that the Belgian troops are to return immediately, agreeably to the declaration above mentioned, to the positions which they occupied on the 21st of November, 1830."

"The delegates shall add, that if the Belgian troops have not returned to the said positions by the 20th of January, the five powers will regard the rejection of their demand on this point as an act of hostility against them, and reserve to themselves the adoption of such measures as they shall deem proper to cause the engagements entered into with them to be respected and executed. The plenipotentiaries, moreover, renew, in the present protocol, the formal declaration, that the entire and reciprocal cessation of hostilities is placed under the guarantee of the five powers, that they will not allow the renewal of them on any supposition, and that they have formed the unchangeable resolution to obtain the accomplishment of their decisions, founded upon justice, and their wish to preserve to Europe the blessings of a general peace.

(Signed) ESTERHAZY,
WEISSENBERG,
TALLEYRAND,
PALMERSTON, BULOW, LIEVEN.

M. de Robaulx rose, and said—You answered nobly to the former protocol, let this also be treated consistently with the dignity of the nation, and repelled—There is no longer any independence for Belgium—we are no longer free.

M. le Hon said it became a question of peace or war, which must be decided within five days. That decision should not entail responsibility upon any one, not even upon congress. The protocol required mature deliberation, and therefore it had been at once communicated. It could not be answered without being well considered, and for this time was necessary.

The protocol was ordered to be printed.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GEN. ANDREW JACKSON AND JOHN C. CALHOUN,

President and vice-president of the United States, on the subject of the course of the latter, in the deliberations of the cabinet of Mr. Monroe, on the occurrences in the Seminole war.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

I come before you as my constituents, to give an account of my conduct in an important political transaction, which has been called in question, and so erroneously represented, that neither justice to myself nor respect for you will permit me any longer to remain silent; I allude to my course, in the deliberations of the cabinet of Mr. Monroe, on the Seminole question. I know not how I can place more fully before you all the facts and circumstances of the case, than by putting you in possession of the correspondence between general Jackson and myself, which will show the difference between the views that we have respectively taken, and by what means, and through whose agency, this long gone-by affair has been revived.

I have not taken this step, strictly defensive as it is, without mature deliberation, and a calm and careful estimate of all the obligations under which I act. That there are strong reasons against it, I feel and acknowledge; but I also feel the most thorough conviction that the sacred obligation to vindicate my character, impeached, as it has been, in one of the most important incidents of my life, and to prove myself not unworthy of the high station to which you have elevated me, far outweigh all other considerations. Should my vindication have any political or personal bearing, I can only say that it will not be because I have either willed or desired it. It is my intention simply to place my own conduct in its proper light, and not to assault others. Nor ought I to be held responsible should any such consequence follow; as I am free from all agency in resuscitating this old subject, or bringing it to the knowledge of the public. Previous to my arrival here, I had confined the knowledge of the existence of the correspondence to a few confidential friends, who were politically attached both to general Jackson and myself; not that I had any thing to apprehend from its disclosure, but because I was unwilling to increase the existing excitement in the present highly critical state of our public affairs. But when I arrived here, late in December, I found my caution had been of no avail, and that the correspondence was a subject of conversation in every circle, and soon became a topic of free comment in most of the public journals. The accounts of the affair, as is usually the case on such occasions, were, for the most part, grossly distorted, and were, in many instances, highly injurious to my character. Still I deemed it my duty to take no hasty step, being determined to afford time for justice to be done me without appeal to you; and, if it should be, to remain silent, as my only object was the vindication of my conduct and character. Believing that further delay would be useless, I can see no adequate motive to postpone, any longer, the submission of all the facts of the case to your deliberate and final decision.

I am not ignorant of the trying position in which I am placed—standing unsustained, except by the force of truth and justice; yet I cannot but look with confidence to your decision The question presented for your consideration is not that of a controversy of two individuals, between whom you are to decide: viewed in that light, it would bear the aspect of a mere personal difference, involving no principle, and unworthy of your notice; but regarded in a different light, as involving the character of an officer, occupying by your suffrage a distinguished official station, whose conduct in an interesting public transaction had been impeached, it assumes a far more important bearing, and presents a question of deep import for your consideration. The most sacred of all political relations is that between the representative and the constituent. When your suffrage places an individual in a high official station, a most solemn obligation is imposed on you and him, on the faithful discharge of which the existence of our free and happy institutions mainly depends; on him, so to act as to merit your confidence, and on you, not to withdraw that confidence without just cause. It is under a profound regard for this mutual and sacred obligation that I submit the whole affair to your determination, conscious that in this, as well as every other public transaction of my life, I have been actuated by a solemn sense of duty to you, uninfluenced by fear, favor, or affection. I cannot but look forward to your entire approbation.

I owe it to myself to state, that I come before you under circumstances very painful to me, and a reluctance which nothing but a sense of duty to you and myself could overcome. Among these circumstances, is the necessity of being instrumental in disclosing, in any degree, what I deem so highly confidential as the proceedings of the cabinet, and for which I feel myself justified only by absolute necessity. Acting under this impression, I have not felt myself at liberty to go, even in self defence, beyond strict necessity, and have, accordingly, carefully avoided speaking of the course of my associates in the administration, and even of my own, beyond what appeared to be indispensable. I have not put even Mr. Crawford's statement of his course in the cabinet at issue, except only incidentally, as bearing on his statement of mine. It is no concern of mine, except in this incidental way, what representation he may choose to give of his course, as to this subject, now or formerly, or whether his representation be correct or erroneous.

Before I conclude these prefatory observations, I deem it proper to make a few additional remarks, as to the commencement and motive of this movement against me.

The origin goes far back, beyond the date of the present correspondence, and had for its object, not the advantage of general Jackson, but my political destruction, with motives which I leave you to interpret. The enmity of Mr. Crawford to me, growing out of political controversies long since passed, afforded a ready and powerful instrument by which to operate; and it was early directed against me, with the view of placing general Jackson and myself in our present relations. With that motive, in the midst of the severe political struggle which ended in elevating him to the presidential chair, and in which I took a part so early and decided in his favor, a correspondence was opened at Nashville, unknown to, and unsuspected by me, in December, 1827, which commenced that chain of artful operations, that has terminated by involving general Jackson and myself in the present correspondence. A copy of the letter which opened this operation has been placed in my possession. It was written by Mr. Crawford to Alfred Balch, esq. of Nashville, and is dated the 14th December, 1827. That the nature and objects of the operations against me may be fully understood by you, I hereto annex the copy of Mr. Crawford's letter to Mr. Balch, and a copy of a letter from the honorable Wilson Lumpkin, a representative in congress from the state of Georgia, to me, dated the 27th January, 1829, in which it was enclosed, with an extract from the letter of the honorable Daniel Newnan, member of congress elect from the same state. I submit them without comment.

The movement thus commenced did not terminate with this letter. It was followed by other attacks from the same and other quarters, some of which are indicated in the correspondence now laid before you.

It may be proper to state, that I remained ignorant and unsuspicious of these secret movements against me, till the spring of 1828, when vague rumors reached me that some attempts were making at Nashville to injure me; but I treated them with silent neglect, relying confidently for protection on the friendly relation which had so long existed between general Jackson and myself, and the uniform and decided course which I had taken in his favor, in the political struggle then pending. My support of him rested on a principle that I believe to be fundamental in our political system, and the hope that his deep rooted popularity would afford the most effectual means of arresting the course of events, which, I could not but foresee, if not arrested, would bring the great interests of the country into a deep and dangerous conflict. JOHN C. CALHOUN.

—

No. 1.

Copy of a letter from hon. Wilson Lumpkin, enclosing extract of a letter from general D. Newnan to him, covering a copy of William H. Crawford's letter to Alfred Balch, esq. of Nashville, Tennessee.

Washington, 27th January, 1829.

Dear sir: I herewith enclose you the copy of a letter received from my friend general Daniel Newnan, in whom I have great confidence. I also give you an extract from my friend's letter.

The great confidence and friendship which I have long entertained, and still entertain, for general Jackson, as well as yourself, induce me to take the liberty of making this communication to you. I am confident the best interest of our common country requires, not only the harmonious and patriotic union of the two first officers of the government, but of every patriotic citizen of the whole country, to frown indignantly upon all intriguers, managers, political jugglers, and selfish politicians, of every description, who are disposed to divide and conquer.

I feel the more at liberty and authorised to make this communication, because I know, of my own knowledge, you and your friends are misrepresented upon this subject. However, general Jackson, himself, must see and know the object of these shallow efforts.

I do not know one conspicuous friend of yours, but what has constantly, zealously, and uniformly supported general Jackson, from the day that Pennsylvania declared in his favor to the present time. How, then, can it be possible that general Jackson can suspect the friendship, constancy, or sincerity of you or your friends? No; he cannot—he will not—he does not. I have quite too much confidence in the general to believe such idle tales.

Nevertheless, it is proper for you and him both to be apprized of the machinations of the mischievous.

You are at liberty to use this communication in any way you please. With respect and esteem, your obedient servant,

WILSON LUMPKIN.

Hon. J. C. Calhoun.

—

No. 2.

Extract of a letter from the hon. Daniel Newnan to the hon. Wilson Lumpkin, dated near Nashville, Tennessee, 8th January, 1829, enclosing copy of a letter of W. H. Crawford to Alfred Balch.

"W. H. C. has done Mr. Calhoun a great deal of injury, as well by his private machinations as his extensive correspondence. In addition to the letter which he wrote to Mr. Balch, a copy of which I now enclose you, (and which has been seen by general Jackson), he, a short time since, wrote a letter to G. W. Campbell, proposing that Tennessee should vote for a third person for the vice-presidency, and requested Mr. Campbell to show the letter to general Jackson.

"I hope Mr. Calhoun will take the earliest opportunity of seeing general J., and putting all things straight; for I cannot believe for one moment the allegations of W. H. C."

—

No. 3.

Copy of a letter from Wm. H. Crawford to Alfred Balch, esq.

Woodlawn 14th December, 1827.

My dear sir: By the last mail I had the pleasure of receiving a letter from you. If I understand your letter, you appear to think a public expression of my opinion on the approaching election to be proper. I cannot think a measure of this nature necessary or proper. In other words, it appears to me highly improper, and could hardly fail to stamp the charge of intolerable arrogance upon me in indelible characters. But few men can ever expect to arrive at that height that would justify a step of that kind, much less an individual who lives in the most absolute retirement, and who has no ambition to emerge from it. I am perfectly reconciled to my situation, and would not willingly exchange it with Mr. Adams. But my opinions upon the next presidential election are generally known. When Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Cambreleng made me a visit last April, I authorised them upon every proper occasion to make those opinions known. The vote of the state of Georgia will, as certainly as that of Tennessee, be given to general Jackson, in opposition to Mr. Adams. The only difficulty that this state has upon that subject, is that, if Jackson should be elected, Calhoun will come into power. I confess I am not apprehensive of such a result. For ——— ——— writes to me, "Jackson ought to know, and, if he does not, he shall know, that, at the Calhoun caucus in Columbia, the term "military chieftain" was bandied about more flippantly than by H. Clay, and that the family friends of Mr. Calhoun were most active in giving it currency;" and I know personally that Mr. Calhoun favored Mr. Adams' pretensions until Mr. Clay declared for him.* He well knew that Clay would not have declared for Adams, without it was well understood that he, Calhoun, was to be put down if Adams' influence could effect it. If he was not friendly to his election, why did he suffer his paper to be purchased up by Adams' printers, without making some stipulation in favor of Jackson? If you can ascertain that Calhoun will not be benefitted by Jackson's election, you will do him a benefit by communicating the information to me. Make what use you please of this letter, and show it to whom you please. I am, dear sir, your friend and most obedient servant, WM. H. CRAWFORD.

Alfred Balch, esq.

A true and exact copy. [Noted in the handwriting of general Newnan.]

—

May 13, 1830.

Sir: That frankness, which, I trust, has always characterised me through life, towards those with whom I have been in the habits of friendship, induces me to lay before you the enclosed copy of a letter from William H. Crawford, esq., which was placed in my hands on yesterday. The submission, you will perceive, is authorised by the writer. The statements and facts it presents being so different from what I had heretofore understood to be correct, requires that it should be brought to your consideration. They are different from your letter to governor Bibb, of Alabama, of the 13th May, 1818, where you state "general Jackson is vested with full power to conduct the war in the manner he may judge best," and different, too, from your letters to me at that time, which breathe throughout a spirit of approbation and friendship, and particularly the one in which you say, "I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th ultimo, and to acquaint you with the entire approbation of the president of all the measures you have adopted to terminate the rupture with the Indians." My object in making this communication is to announce to you the great surprise which is felt, and to learn of you whether it be possible that the information given is correct; whether it can be, under all the circumstances of which you and I are both informed, that any attempt seriously to affect me was moved and sustained by you in the cabinet council, when, as is known to you, I was but executing the wishes of the government, and clothed with the authority to "conduct the war in the manner I might judge best."

You can, if you please, take a copy: the one enclosed you will please return to me. I am, sir, very respectfully, your humble servant, ANDREW JACKSON.

The hon. J. C. Calhoun.

—

Copy of Mr. Crawford's letter to Mr. Forsyth, enclosed in the above.

Woodlawn, 30th April, 1830.

My dear sir: Your letter of the 16th was received by Sunday's mail, together with its enclosure. I recollect having conversed with you at the time and place, and upon the subject, in that enclosure stated, but I have not a distinct recollection of what I said to you, but I am certain there is one error in your statement of that conversation to Mr. ———. I recollect distinctly what has passed in the cabinet meeting, referred to in your letter to Mr. ———.

Mr. Calhoun's proposition in the cabinet was, that general Jackson should be punished in some form, or represented in some form; I am not positively certain which. As Mr. Calhoun did not propose to arrest general Jackson, I feel confident that I could not have made use of that word in my relation to you of the circumstances which transpired in the cabinet, as I have no recollection of ever having

---

* Mr. Crawford's assertion, that he knew personally what he here affirms, renders it proper to make a few remarks. How he could have had any personal knowledge of what he states, I am at a loss to understand. Our political intercourse had ceased for years. We had none subsequent to the fall of 1821, and in fact none of any kind after that, beyond the mere ordinary civilities of life.

My course in relation to the point in question was very different from what he states. When my name was withdrawn from the list of presidential candidates, I assumed a perfectly neutral position between general Jackson and Mr. Adams. I was decidedly opposed to a congressional caucus; as both these gentlemen were also, and as I bore very friendly personal and political relations to both, I would have been very well satisfied with the election of either. When they were both returned to the house of representatives, I found myself placed in a new relation to them. I was elected vice-president by the people, and a sense of propriety forbade my interference in the election in the house; yet I could not avoid forming an opinion as to the principles that ought to govern the choice of the house. This opinion was early formed, long before I had the least intimation of the course of the prominent individual referred to by Mr. Crawford, and was wholly independent of what might be his course, or that of any other individual. What the principle is that in my opinion ought to govern the house of representatives in the case of a contested election, I leave to be inferred from my subsequent course. So completely did my opinion depend on what I considered a sound principle in the abstract, that, had the position of the two leading candidates before the house been reversed, it would not have influenced my course in the least degree.

As to the reason by which Mr. Crawford endeavors to sustain what he affirms he personally knew, I deem them wholly unworthy of notice.

designedly misstated any transaction in my life, and most sincerely believe I never did. My apology for having disclosed what passed in a cabinet meeting is this: In the summer after that meeting, an extract of a letter from Washington was published in a Nashville paper, in which it was stated that I had proposed to arrest general Jackson, but that he was triumphantly defended by Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Adams. This letter, I always believed, was written by Mr. Calhoun, or by his directions. It had the desired effect. General Jackson became extremely inimical to me, and friendly to Mr. Calhoun. In stating the arguments of Mr. Adams to induce Mr. Monroe to support general Jackson's conduct throughout, adverting to Mr. Monroe's apparent admission, that if a young officer had acted so he might be safely punished. Mr. Adams said, that if general Jackson had acted so, that if he was a subaltern officer, shooting was too good for him. This, however, was said with a view of driving Mr. Monroe to an unlimited support of what general Jackson had done, and not with an unfriendly view to the general. Indeed, my own views on the subject had undergone a material change after the cabinet had been convened. Mr. Calhoun made some allusion to a letter the general had written to the president, who had forgotten that he had received such a letter, but said, if he had received such an one, he could find it; and went directly to his cabinet, and brought the letter out. In it general Jackson approved of the determination of the government to break up Amelia island and Galveztown, and gave it also as his opinion that the Floridas ought to be taken by the United States. He added, it might be a delicate matter for the executive to decide; but if the president approved of it, he had only to give a hint to some confidential member of congress, say Johnny Ray, and he would do it, and take the responsibility of it on himself. I asked the president if the letter had been answered. He replied, no; for that he had no recollection of having received it. I then said that I had no doubt that general Jackson, in taking Pensacola, believed he was doing what the executive wished. After that letter was produced, unanswered, I should have opposed the infliction of punishment upon the general, who had considered the silence of the president as a tacit consent; yet it was after this letter was produced and read, that Mr. Calhoun made his proposition to the cabinet for punishing the general. You may show this letter to Mr. Calhoun, if you please. With the foregoing corrections of what passed in the cabinet, your account of it to Mr. ——— is correct. Indeed, there is but one inaccuracy in it, and one omission. What I have written beyond them is a mere amplification of what passed in the cabinet. I do not know that I ever hinted at the letter of the general to the president; yet that letter had a most important bearing upon the deliberations of the cabinet, at least in my mind, and possibly in the minds of Mr. Adams and the president; but neither expressed any opinion upon the subject. It seems it had none upon the mind of Mr. Calhoun, for it made no change in his conduct. I am, dear sir, your friend, and most obedient servant, WM. H. CRAWFORD.

Hon. John Forsyth.

A true copy of the original in my possession.

May 12, 1830. JOHN FORSYTH.

Mr. Calhoun to gen. Jackson.

Washington, 13th May, 1830.

Sir: Agreeably to your request, I herewith return the copy of a letter signed William H. Crawford, which I received under cover of your note of this instant, handed to me this morning by Mr. Donelson, of which I have retained a copy, in conformity with your permission.

As soon as my leisure will permit, you shall receive a communication from me on the subject to which it refers. In the mean time, I cannot repress the expression of my indignation at the affair; while at the same time, I cannot but express my gratification that the secret and mysterious attempts which have been making, by false insinuations, for years, for political purposes, to injure my character are at length brought to light.

J. C. CALHOUN.

To the president of the United States.

Mr. Calhoun to general Jackson.

Washington, 29th May, 1830.

Sir: In answering your letter of the 13th instant, I wish to be distinctly understood, that however high my respect is for your personal character, and the exalted station which you occupy, I cannot recognise the right on your part to call in question my conduct on the interesting occasion to which your letter refers. I acted, on that occasion, in the discharge of a high official duty, and under responsibility to my conscience and my country only. In replying, then, to your letter, I do not place myself in the attitude of apologising for the part I may have acted, or of palliating my conduct on the accusation of Mr. Crawford. My course, I trust, requires no apology; and if it did, I have too much self respect to make it to any one in a case touching the discharge of my official conduct. I stand on very different ground. I embrace the opportunity which your letter offers, not for the purpose of making excuses, but as a suitable occasion to place my conduct in relation to an interesting public transaction in its proper light; and I am gratified that Mr. Crawford, though far from intending me a kindness, has afforded me such an opportunity.

In undertaking to place my conduct in its proper light, I deem it proper to premise that it is very far from my intention to defend mine by impeaching yours. Where we have differed, I have no doubt that we differed honestly; and in claiming to act on honorable and patriotic motives myself, I cheerfully accord the same to you.

I know not that I correctly understood your meaning; but after a careful perusal, I would infer from your letter that you had learned for the first time, by Mr. Crawford's letter, that you and I placed different constructions on the orders under which you acted in the Seminole war; and that you had been led to believe, previously, by my letters to yourself and governor Bibb, that I concurred with you in thinking that your orders were intended to authorise your attack on the Spanish posts in Florida. Under these impressions, you would seem to impute to me some degree of duplicity, or at least concealment, which required on my part explanation. I hope that my conception of your meaning is erroneous; but if it be not, and your meaning be such as I suppose, I must be permitted to express my surprise at the misapprehension, which, I feel confident, it will be in my power to correct by the most decisive proof, drawn from the public documents,* and the correspondence between Mr. Monroe and yourself, growing out of the decision of the cabinet on the Seminole affair, which passed through my hands at the time, and which I now have his permission to use, as explanatory of my opinion, as well as his, and the other members of his administration. To save you the trouble of turning to the file of your correspondence, I have enclosed extracts from the letters, which clearly prove that the decision of the cabinet on the point that your orders did not authorise the occupation of St. Mark's and Pensacola, was early and fully made known to you and that I, in particular, concurred in the decision.

Mr. Monroe's letter of the 19th July, 1818, the first of the series, and written immediately after the decision of the cabinet, and from which I have given a copious extract, enters fully into the views taken by the executive of the whole subject. In your reply of the 10th of August, 1818, you object to the construction which the administration had placed on your orders, and you assign your reasons at large, why you conceived that the orders under which you acted authorised your operations in Florida. Mr. Monroe replied on the 20th October, 1818; and, after expressing his regret that you had placed a construction on your orders different from what was intended, he invited you to open a correspondence with me, that your conception of the meaning of your orders, and that of the administration, might be placed, with the reasons on both sides, on the files of the war department. Your letter of the 15th of November, in answer, agrees to the correspondence as proposed, but declines commencing it; to which Mr. Monroe replied by a letter of the 21st December, stating his reasons for suggesting the correspondence, and why he thought that it ought to commence with you. To these, I have added an extract from your letter of the 7th December, approving of Mr. Monroe's message at the opening of congress, which, though not constituting a part of the correspondence from which I have extracted so copiously, is intimately connected with the subject under consideration.

But it was not by private correspondence only, that the view which the executive took of your orders was made known. In his message to the house of representatives of the 25th March, 1818, long before information of the result of your operation in Florida was received, Mr. Monroe states, "orders had been given to the general in command not to enter Florida, unless it be in pursuit of the enemy, and, in that case, to respect the Spanish authority, wherever it may be maintained; and he will be instructed to withdraw his forces from the province as soon as he has reduced that tribe, (the Seminoles), to order, and secured our fellow-citizens in that quarter, by satisfactory arrangements, against its unprovoked and savage hostilities in future." In his annual message at the opening of congress, in November of the same year, the president, speaking of your entering Florida, says: "On authorising major general Jackson to enter Florida, in pursuit of the Seminoles, care was taken not to encroach on the rights of Spain." Again: "In entering Florida to suppress this combination, no idea was entertained of hostility to Spain, and, however justifiable the commanding general was, in consequence of the misconduct of the Spanish officers, in entering St. Mark's and Pensacola, to terminate it, by proving to the savages, and their associates, that they could not be protected, even there, yet the amicable relation between the United States and Spain could not be altered by that act alone. By ordering the restitution of those posts, those relations were preserved. To a change of them the power of the executive is deemed incompetent. It is vested in congress alone." The view taken of this subject met your entire approbation, as appears from the extract of your letter, of 7th December, 1818, above referred to.

After such full and decisive proof, as it seems to me, of the view of the executive, I had a right, as I supposed, to conclude that you long since knew that the administration, and myself in particular, were of the opinion that the orders under which you acted did not authorise you to occupy the Spanish posts; but I now infer from your letter, to which this is in answer, that such conclusion was erroneous, and that you were of the impression, till you received Mr. Crawford's letter, that I concurred in the opposite construction, which you gave to your orders, that they were intended to authorise you to occupy the posts. You rely for this impression, as I understand you, on certain general expressions in my letter to governor Bibb, of Alabama of the 13th of May, 1818, in which I stated that "general Jackson is vested with full powers to conduct the war in the manner he shall judge best," and also in my letter of the 6th February, 1818, in answer to yours of the 20th January of the same year, in which I acquainted you "with the entire approbation of the president of all the measures you had adopted to terminate the rupture with the Seminole Indians."

I will not reason the point, that a letter to gov. Bibb, which was not communicated to you, which bears date long after you had occupied St. Mark's, and subsequent to the time you had determined to occupy Pensacola, (see your letter of June 2d, 1818, to me, published with the Seminole documents), to give you authority to occupy those posts. I know, that, in quoting the letters, you could not intend such absurdity, to authorise such an inference; and I must therefore conclude that it was your intention by the extract to show, that, at the time of writing the letter, it was my opinion that the orders under which you did act were intended to authorise the occupation of the Spanish posts. Nothing could have been more remote from my intention in writing the letter. It would have been in opposition to the view which I have always taken of your orders, and in direct contradiction to the president's message of the 25th March, 1818, communicated but a few weeks before to the house of representatives, (already referred to), and which gives a directly opposite construction to your orders. In fact, the letter on its face, proves that it was not the intention of the government to occupy the Spanish posts. By referring to it, you will see that I enclosed to the governor a copy of orders to general Gaines, of the 16th December, 1817, authorising him to cross the Spanish line, and attack the Indians within the limits of Florida, unless they should take shelter under a Spanish post, in which event, he was directed to report immediately to the department, which order governor Bibb was directed to consider as his authority for carrying the war into Florida, thus clearly establishing the fact that the order was considered still in force, and not superseded by that to you, directing you to assume the command in the Seminole war.

*See appendix from A, to F, inclusive, being an extract, from a private correspondence between Mr. Monroe and gen. Jackson in the Seminole campaign.

Nor can my letter of the 6th of February be, by any sound rule of construction, interpreted into an authority to occupy the Spanish posts, or as countenancing, on my part, such an interpretation of the orders previously given to you. Your letter of the 20th January, to which mine is an answer, bears date at Nashville, before you set out on the expedition, and consists of a narrative of the measures adopted by you, in order to bring your forces into the field, where they were directed to rendezvous, the time intended for marching, the orders for supplies given to the contractors, with other details of the same kind, without the slightest indication of your intention to act against the Spanish posts; and the approbation of the president of the measures you had adopted could be intended to apply to those detailed in your letter. I do not think that your letter of the 13th instant presents the question, whether the executive or yourself placed the true construction, considered as a military question, on the orders under which you acted. But I must be permitted to say, that the construction of the former is in strict conformity with my intention in drawing up the orders; and that, if they be susceptible of a different construction, it was far from being my intention they should be. I did not then suppose, nor have I ever, that it was in the power of the president, under the constitution, to order the occupation of the posts of a nation with whom we were not at war; (whatever might be the right of the general, under the law of nations, to attack an enemy sheltered under the posts of a neutral power;) and had I been directed by the president to issue such order, I should have been restrained from complying by the higher authority of the constitution, which I had sworn to support. Nor will I discuss the question, whether the order to general Gaines, prohibiting him from attacking the Spanish posts, (a copy of which was sent to you), was in fact, and according to military usage, an order to you, and of course obligatory until rescinded. Such, certainly, was my opinion. I know that yours was different. You acted on your construction, believing it to be right; and, in pursuing the course which I have done, I claim an equal right to act on the construction which I conceived to be correct, knowing it to conform to my intentions in issuing the orders. But, in waving now the question of the true construction of the orders, I wish it however to be understood, it is only because I do not think it presented by your letter, and not because I have now, or ever had, the least doubt of the correctness of the opinion which I entertain. I have always been prepared to discuss it on friendly terms with you, as appears by the extracts from Mr. Monroe's correspondence, and more recently by my letter to you of the 30th of April, 1828, covering a copy of a letter of major H. Lee, in which I declined a correspondence that he had requested on the subject of a construction of your orders. In my letter to major Lee I stated, that, "as you refer to the public documents only for the construction which the executive gave to the orders, I infer that on this subject you have not had access to the general's (Jackson's) private papers; but if I be in an error, and if the construction which the administration gave to the orders be not stated with sufficient distinctness in the then president's correspondence with him, I will cheerfully give, as one of the members of the administration, my own views fully in relation to the orders, if it be desired by general Jackson; but it is only with him, and at his desire, that, under existing circumstances, I should feel myself justified in corresponding on this or any other subject connected with his public conduct:" to which I added, in my letter to you, covering a copy of the letter from which the above is an extract, "with you I cannot have the slightest objection to correspond on the subject, if additional information be desirable." You expressed no desire for further information, and I took it for granted that Mr. Monroe's correspondence with you, and the public documents, furnished you a full and clear conception of the construction which the executive gave to your orders; under which impression I remained till I received your letter of the 13th instant.

Connected with the subject of your orders, there are certain expressions in your letter, which, though I am at a loss to understand I cannot pass over in silence. After announcing your surprise at the contents of Mr. Crawford's letter, you ask whether the information be correct, "under all of the circumstances, of which you and I are both informed, that any attempt seriously to effect me was moved and sustained by you in cabinet council, when, as is known to you, I was executing the wishes of the government." If by wishes, which you have underscored, it be meant that there was any intimation given by myself, directly or indirectly, of the desire of the government that you should occupy the Spanish posts, so far from being "informed," I had not the slightest knowledge of any such intimation, nor did I ever hear a whisper of any such before. But I cannot imagine that it is your intention to make a distinction between the wishes and the public orders of the government, as I find no such distinction in your correspondence with the president, nor in any of the public documents; but, on the contrary, it is strongly rebutted by your relying for your justification constantly and exclusively on your public orders. Taking, then, the "wishes of the government" to be but another expression for its orders, I must refer to the proof already offered, to show that the wishes of the government, in relation to the Spanish posts, were not such as you assume them to be.

Having, I trust, satisfactorily established that there has not been the least disguise as to the construction of your orders, I will now proceed to state the part which I took in the deliberations of the cabinet. My statement will be confined strictly to myself, as I do not feel myself justified to speak of the course of the other members of the administration; and, in fact, only of my own in self-defence, under the extraordinary circumstances connected with this correspondence.

And here I must premise that the object of a cabinet council is not to bring together opinions already formed, but to form opinions on the course which the government ought to pursue, after full and mature deliberation. Meeting in this spirit, the first object is a free exchange of sentiment, in which doubts and objections are freely presented and discussed. It is, I conceive, the duty of the members thus to present their doubts and objections, and to support them by offering fully all of the arguments in their power, but at the same time to take care not to form an opinion till all the facts and views are fully brought out, and every doubt and objection carefully weighed. In this spirit I came into the meeting. The questions involved were numerous and important: whether you had transcended your orders; if so, what course ought to be adopted; what was the conduct of Spain and her officers in Florida; what was the state of our relations with Spain, and, through her, with the other European powers—a question, at that time, of uncommon complication and difficulty. These questions had all to be carefully examined and weighed, both separately and in connexion, before a final opinion could be wisely formed; and never did I see a deliberation in which every point was more carefully examined, or a greater solicitude displayed to arrive at a correct decision. I was the junior member of the cabinet, and had been but a few months in the administration. As secretary of war, I was more immediately connected with the questions whether you had transcended your orders, and, if so, what course ought to be pursued. I was of the impression that you had exceeded your orders, and had acted on your own responsibility; but I neither questioned your patriotism nor your motives. Believing that where orders were transcended, investigation, as a matter of course, ought to follow, as due in justice to the government and the officer, unless there be strong reasons to the contrary, I came to the meeting under the impression that the usual course ought to be pursued in this case, which I supported by presenting fully and freely all the arguments that occurred to me. They were met by other arguments, growing out of a more enlarged view of the subject, as connected with the conduct of Spain and her officers, and the course of policy which honor and interest dictated to be pursued towards her, with which some of the members of the cabinet were more familiar than myself, and whose duty it was to present that aspect of the subject, as it was mine to present that more immediately connected with the military operations. After deliberately weighing every question, when the members of the cabinet came to form their final opinion; on a view of the whole ground, it was unanimously determined,* as I understood, in favor of the course adopted, and which was fully made known to you by Mr. Monroe's letter of the 19th of July, 1818. I gave it my assent and support, as being that which, under all the circumstances, the public interest required to be adopted.

I shall now turn to the examination of the version which Mr. Crawford has given of my course in this important deliberation, beginning with his "apology for having disclosed what took place in a cabinet meeting." He says; "In the summer after the meeting, an extract of a letter from Washington was published in a Nashville paper, in which it was stated that I (Mr. Crawford) had proposed to arrest general Jackson, but that he was triumphantly defended by Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Adams. This letter, I always believed, was written by Mr. Calhoun, or by his direction. It had the desired effect; general Jackson became inimical to me, and friendly to Mr. Calhoun."

I am not at all surprised that Mr. Crawford should feel that he stands in need of an apology for betraying the deliberations of the cabinet. It is, I believe, not only the first instance in our country, but one of a very few instances to be found in any country, or any age, that an individual has felt absolved from the high obligation which honor and duty impose on one situated as he was. It is not, however, my intention to comment on the morality of his disclosure; that more immediately concerns himself; and I leave him undisturbed to establish his own rules of honor and fidelity, in order to proceed to the examination of a question in which I am more immediately concerned—the truth of his apology.

I desired not to speak harshly of Mr. Crawford. I sincerely commiserate his misfortune. I may be warm in political contests, but it is not in me to retain enmity, particularly towards the unsuccessful. In the political contest which ended in 1825,

*Acquiesced would probably be more correct, at least as applicable to one member of the cabinet.

Mr. Crawford and myself took opposite sides; but whatever feelings of unkindness it gave rise to, have long since passed away on my part. The contest ended in an entire change of the political elements of the country; and, in the new state of things which followed, I found myself acting with many of the friends of Mr. Crawford, to whom I had been recently opposed, and opposed to many of my friends, with whom I had, till then, been associated. In this new state of things, my inclination, my regard for his friends who were acting with me, and the success of the cause for which we were jointly contending,—all contributes to remove from my bosom every feeling towards him, save that of pity for his misfortune. I would not speak a harsh word, if I could avoid it; and it is a cause of pain to me that the extraordinary position in which he has placed me, compels me, in self-defence, to say any thing which must, in its consequence, bear on his character.

I speak in this spirit when I assert, as I do, that his apology has no foundation in truth. He offers no reason for charging me with so dishonorable an act as that of betraying the proceedings of the cabinet, and that for the purpose of injuring one of my associates in the administration. The charge rests wholly on his suspicion, to which I oppose my positive assertion that it is wholly unfounded. I had no knowledge of the letter, or connexion with it; nor do I recollect that I ever saw the extract. But why charge me, and not Mr. Adams?* I had then been but a few months in the administration, and Mr. Crawford and myself were on the best terms, without a feeling, certainly on my part, of rivalry or jealousy. In assigning the motive that he does for the letters, he forgets the relation which existed then between you and himself. He says it had the desired effect; that you became friendly to me, and extremely inimical to him. He does not remember that your hostility to him long preceded this period, and had a very different origin. He certainly could not have anticipated that a copy of his letter would be placed in your hand.

These are not the only difficulties accompanying his apology: there are others still more formidable, and which must compel him to assign some other reason for disclosing the proceedings of the cabinet.

Mr. McDuffie's letter† to me, of the 14th instant, of which I enclose a copy, proves that Mr. Crawford spoke freely of the proceedings of the cabinet on his way to Georgia, in the summer of 1818; and dates will show that he could not at that time have seen the extract from the Nashville paper, on which he now rests his apology. The deliberation of the cabinet took place between the 14th and 25th July, 1818. On the former day, Mr. Monroe returned to Washington from Loudon, and on the latter a general exposition of the views of the government in relation to the operations in Florida appeared in the Intelligencer. The letter of Mr. Monroe to you, of the 19th July, 1818, fixes probably the day of the final decision of the cabinet. Mr. Crawford passed through Augusta on the 11th August, as announced in the papers of that city, on which day, or the preceding, his conversation, to which Mr. McDuffie's letter relates, must have taken place. On a comparison of these dates, you will see that it was impossible that Mr. Crawford could have seen the extract from the Nashville paper when he was in Edgefield, and he must consequently find some other apology for his disclosures. This was not the only instance of his making the disclosures before he saw the extract. He was at Milledgeville on the 16th of August, 1818, a few days after he passed through Augusta; and, a little after, there appeared a statement in the Georgia Journal, somewhat varied from that made in Edgefield, but agreeing with it in most of the particulars. I cannot lay my hand on the article, but have a distinct recollection of it. You no doubt remember it. Circumstances fixed it on Mr. Crawford, and it has not, to my knowledge, been denied.

With such evidence of inaccuracy, either from want of memory, or some other cause, in what relates to his own motives and actions, it would be unreasonable to suppose that Mr. Crawford's statements will prove more correct in what relates to me. I will now proceed to examine them. He first states that I proposed that you should "be punished in some form, or reprimanded in some form;" and to make my course more odious, as I suppose, he adds, that "Mr. Calhoun did not propose to arrest general Jackson." I will not dwell on a statement which, on its face, is so absurd. How could an officer under our law be punished without arrest and trial? And to suppose that I proposed such a course, would indeed be to rate my understanding very low.

The next allegation requires much more attention. He says: "Indeed, my own views on the subject had undergone a material change after the cabinet had been convened. Mr. Calhoun made some allusion to a letter that general Jackson had written to the president, who had forgotten that he had received such a letter, but said if he had received such a one, he would find it, and went directly to his cabinet, and brought it out. In it general Jackson approves of the determination of the government to break up Amelia island and Galveztown; and gave it also as his opinion that Florida ought to be taken by the United States. He added, it might be a delicate matter for the executive to decide, but if the president approved of it, he had only to give a hint to some confidential member of congress, say Johnny Ray, and he would do it, and take the responsibility on himself. I asked the president if the letter had been answered: he replied, no; for that he had no recollection of receiving it. I then said that I had no doubt that general Jackson, in taking Pensacola, believed he was doing what the executive wished. After that letter was produced, unanswered, I should have opposed the infliction of punishment on general Jackson, who had considered the silence of the president as a tacit consent; yet it was after the letter was produced and read, that Mr. Calhoun made the proposition to the cabinet for punishing the general." Again: "I do not know that I ever hinted at the letter to the president, yet that letter had a most important bearing on the deliberations of the cabinet, at least in my mind, and possibly on the minds of Mr. Adams and the president, but neither expressed any opinion on the subject. It seems it had none on the mind of Mr. Calhoun, for it made no change in his conduct."

It will be no easy matter for Mr. Crawford to reconcile the statement which he has thus circumstantially made, with his conduct in relation to the Seminole affair, from the time of the decision of the cabinet till the subject ceased to be agitated.

How will he, in the first instance, reconcile it with his Edgefield statement, of which Mr. McDuffie's letter gives an account? The contrast between that and the president is most striking: to illustrate which, I will give an extract from Mr. McDuffie's letter. Mr. McDuffie's letter says, that "he" (Mr. Crawford) "stated that you" (Mr. Calhoun) "had been in favor of an inquiry into the conduct of general Jackson, and that he was the only member of the cabinet that concurred with you. He spoke in strong terms of disapprobation of the course pursued by general Jackson, not only in his military proceedings, but in prematurely bringing the grounds of his defence before the country, and forestalling public opinion; thus anticipating the administration. On this point, he remarked, that, if the administration could not give direction to public opinion, but permitted a military officer, who had violated his orders, to anticipate them, they had no business to be at Washington, and had better return home." Such was the language then held, and such his tone of feeling at that time. We hear not one word of the letter which makes so conspicuous a figure in his present statement; not one word of the change it effected in his mind in relation to your conduct; not a word of his taking a course different from me: but, on the contrary, he then stated, directly, that he concurred with me in favoring an inquiry, and indicated no difference on any other point; and so far from exempting you from the charge of breach of orders, as he now attempts to do, he asserted, positively, that you had violated your orders. Shall we find the explanation of the contrast in the two statements in the difference of his motives then and now? Is his motive now to injure me, and was it then to attack another member of the administration? Or must it be attributed, as the more charitable interpretation, to the decay of memory? Whatever may be the true explanation, all will agree that a statement, when events were fresh in the memory, is to be trusted in preference to one made twelve years after the transaction, particularly if the former accords with after events, and the latter does not, as is the case in this instance. At the next session of congress, your conduct in the Seminole war was severely attacked in both branches of the legislature. Let us see if the course pursued by Mr. Crawford and his personal and confidential friends can be reconciled to the statement which he now gives of his course in the cabinet. Mr. Cobb of Georgia, now no more, was then a prominent member of the house of representatives. He was the particular, personal, and confidential friend of Mr. Crawford, his near neighbor, and formerly a law student under him. What part did he take? He led the attack; he moved the resolution against you; he accused you expressly of the violation of your orders, and sustained the accusation with all his powers.* All this accords with Mr. Crawford's statement of his sentiment and his course at the time; but how can it be reconciled to his present statement? How could he, on any principle of justice, stand by and hear you thus falsely accused, in the face of the world, when he, according to his showing now, knew that it was all false? And how can he reconcile his silence then, when you stood so much in need of his assistance, with his disclosures now, when the agitation has long since passed away, and his aid no longer required? But let us turn to the other branch of the legislature, and see whether any occurrence there can explain this apparent mystery. General Lacock, of Pennsylvania, the particular friend of Mr. Crawford, and in the habit of constant intercourse with him, was the chairman of the committee in that body to whom the part of the message which related to the Seminole war was referred. Mr. Forsyth, then and now a senator from Georgia, and who now acts a prominent part in the transaction which has given rise to the present correspondence, was also a member, and was then, as he is now, an intimate, personal, and political friend of Mr. Crawford. With two such able and influential friends on the committee, he had the most favorable opportunity that could be offered to do you justice. According to his own statement, he felt no obligation to observe silence in relation to the proceedings of the cabinet. Why, then, did he not interpose with his friends on the committee to do you justice? That he did not, I need not offer you arguments to prove. The report of the committee is sufficient testimony. Should he say that he was restrained by feelings of delicacy from interfering with his friends on the committee, how will he reconcile, on the principles of justice and honor, his silence after the report so severely assailing your motives and conduct was made, when, admitting his present statement, it was completely in his power to shield you from censure?

But why should I waste time and words to prove that Mr. Crawford's whole course is in direct conflict with his present statement of the proceedings of the cabinet, when there remains an objection that cannot be surmounted? The statement is entirely destitute of foundation. It is not true. Strange as it may appear, after an account so minute and circumstantial, no such letter as he refers to, was ever before the cabinet, or alluded to in its deliberations. My memory is distinct and clear, and is confirmed by the no less distinct recollection of Mr. Monroe and Mr. Wirt, as will fully appear by copies of their statements, herewith enclosed. Feelings of delicacy, growing out of the political relation of Mr. Adams and Mr. Crowninshield, the other members of the then administration, both towards you and myself, have restrained me from applying for their statements, but I have not the least apprehension that they would vary from Mr. Monroe's or Mr. Wirt's.*

*I wish not to be understood as intimating that Mr. Adams had the least connexion with the affair. I believe him to be utterly incapable of such baseness.

† The letter of the hon. George McDuffie, appendix marked G.

*See appendix H—letters from hon. Robert Garnett.

Comment is useless, I will not attempt to explain so gross a misstatement of the proceedings of the cabinet, but will leave it to those friends of Mr. Crawford who have placed him in this dilemma to determine whether his false statement is to be attributed to an entire decay of memory, or to some other cause; and if the former, to exempt themselves from the responsibility of thus cruelly exposing a weakness which it was their duty to conceal.

It now becomes necessary to say something of your letter of the 6th January, to which Mr. Crawford has given, in his statement, so much prominence. My recollection in relation to it accords with Mr. Monroe's statement. I came into his room when he had apparently just received the letter. He was indisposed at the time. I think he opened the letter in my presence, and, finding that it was from you, he gave me the letter to read. I cast my eyes over it, and remarked that it related to the Seminole affair, and would require his attention, or something to that effect: I thought no more of it. Long after, I think it was at the commencement of the next session of congress, I heard some allusion which brought the letter to my recollection. It was from a quarter which induced me to believe that it came from Mr. Crawford. I called, and mentioned it to Mr. Monroe, and found that he had entirely forgotten the letter. After searching some time, he found it among some other papers, and read it, as he told me, for the first time.

Having stated these facts, I should be wanting in candor were I not also to state, that, if the facts had been otherwise; had Mr. Monroe read your letter, and intentionally omitted to answer it, and had it been brought before the cabinet, in my opinion it would not have had the least influence on its deliberation. The letter was not received till several weeks after the orders to you were issued, and could not, therefore, as you know, have had any influence in drawing them up; and such, I conceive, was your opinion, as I do not find any allusion to the letter in your public or private correspondence at the time, which would not have been the case, had it, in your opinion, formed a part of your justification. You rested your defence on what I conceive to be much more elevated ground—on the true construction, as you supposed, of your orders, and the necessity of the measures which you adopted to terminate the war, and not on any supposed secret wish of the executive in opposition to the public orders under which you acted. Mr. Crawford, in placing your justification now on such grounds, not only exposes your motives to be questioned, but, as far as his acts can, greatly weakens your defence.

On a review of this subject, it is impossible not to be struck with the time and mode of bringing on this correspondence. It is now twelve years since the termination of the Seminole war. Few events in our history have caused so much excitement, or been so fully discussed, both in and out of congress. During a greater part of this long period, Mr. Crawford was a prominent actor on the public stage, seeing and hearing all that occurred, and without restraint, according to his own statement, to disclose freely all he knew; yet not a word is uttered by him in your behalf; but now, when you have triumphed over all difficulties, when you no longer require defence, he, for the first time, breaks silence, not to defend you but to accuse one who gave you every support in your hour of trial in his power, when you were fiercely attacked, if not by Mr. Crawford himself, at least by some of his most confidential and influential friends. Nor is the manner less remarkable than the time. Mr. Forsyth, a senator from Georgia, here in his place, writes to Mr. Crawford, his letter covering certain enclosures, and referring to certain correspondence and conversations in relation to my conduct in the cabinet deliberation on the Seminole question. Mr. Crawford answers, correcting the statements alluded to in some instances, and confirming and amplifying in others; which answer he authorizes Mr. Forsyth to show me, if he pleased. Of all this, Mr. Forsyth gives me not the slightest intimation, though in the habit of almost daily intercourse in the senate; and instead of showing me Mr. Crawford's letter, as he was authorized to do, I hear of it, for the first time, by having a copy put into my hand under cover of your letter of the 13th instant—a copy with important blanks, and unaccompanied with Mr. Forsyth's letter, with its enclosures, to which Mr. Crawford's is an answer.

Why is this so? Why did not Mr. Forsyth himself show the letter—the original letter? By what authority did he place a copy in your hands? None is given by the writer. Why is your name interposed? Was it to bring me into conflict with the president of the United States? If the object of the correspondence between Mr. Crawford and Mr. Forsyth be to impeach my conduct, as it would seem to be, by what rule of justice am I deprived of evidence material to my defence, and which is in the hands of my accusers—of a copy of Mr. Forsyth's letter, with the enclosures; of a statement of the conversation and correspondence of the two individuals whose names are in blank in the copy of Mr. Crawford's letter furnished me? Why not inform me who they are? Their testimony might be highly important, and even their names alone might throw much light on this mysterious affair.

I must be frank. I feel that I am deprived of important rights by the interposition of your name, of which I have just cause to complain. It deprives me of important advantages, which would otherwise belong to my position. By the interposition of your name, the communication which would exist between Mr. Forsyth and myself, had he placed Mr. Crawford's letter in my hands, as he was authorized to do, is prevented, and I am thus deprived of the right which would have belonged to me in that case, and which be could not in justice withhold, of being placed in possession of all the material facts and circumstances connected with this affair. In thus complaining, it is not my intention to attribute to you any design to deprive me of so important an advantage. I know the extent of your public duties, and how completely they engross your attention. They have not allowed you sufficient time for reflection in this case, of which evidence is afforded by the ground that you assume in placing the copy of Mr. Crawford's letter in my hand, which you state was submitted by his authority. I do not so understand him, the authority was, as I conceive, to Mr. Forsyth, and not to yourself, and applied to the original letter, and not to the copy, both of which, as I have shown, are very important in this case, and not mere matters of form. I have asked the question, Why is this affair brought up at this late period, and in this remarkable manner? It merits consideration, at least from myself. I am in the habit of speaking my sentiments and opinions freely, and I see no cause which ought to restrain me on the present occasion. I should be blind not to see that this whole affair is a political manœuvre, in which the design is that you should be the instrument, and myself the victim, but in which the real actors are carefully concealed by an artful movement. A naked copy, with the names referred to in blank, affords slender means of detection; while, on the contrary, had I been placed, as I ought to have been, in possession of all the facts which I was entitled to be, but little penetration would probably have been required to see through the whole affair. The names which are in blank might of themselves, through their political associations, point directly to the contrivers of this scheme. I wish not to be misunderstood. I have too much respect for your character to suppose you capable of participating in the slightest degree in a political intrigue. Your character is of too high and generous a cast to resort to such means, either for your own advantage or that of others. This the contrivers of the plot well knew; but they hoped through your generous attributes, through your lofty and jealous regard for your character, to excite feelings through which they expected to consummate their designs. Several indications forewarned me, long since, that a blow was meditated against me: I will not say from the quarter from which this comes; but in relation to this subject, more than two years since, I had a correspondence with the district attorney for the southern district of New York, on the subject of the proceedings of the cabinet on the Seminole war, which, though it did not then excite particular attention, has since, in connexion with other circumstances, served to direct my eye to what was going on.

Of Mr. Crawford I speak with pain, and only in self-defence; but, that you may more fully realize the spirit which actuates him, and how little scrupulous he is of the means that he uses where I am concerned, I would refer you for illustration to facts in the possession of one who stands to you in the relation of a constitutional adviser, and who from his character is entitled to your entire confidence; I mean the postmaster general. No one knows better than yourself how sacred the electoral college for the choice of president and vice-president should be considered in our system of government. The electors are the trustees of the high sovereign power of the people of the states, as it relates to the choice of those magistrates; and on the degree of fidelity with which the trust may be discharged depends, in a great degree, the successful operation of our system. In order to prevent, as far as practicable, political intrigue, or the operation of extraneous influence on the choice of the electoral college, it is provided that they shall meet in their respective states, and that they shall vote, throughout the union, on the same day, and be selected within thirty-four days of the time designated for the election; thus excluding with the greatest care all other influence on the choice of the electors, except the will of their constituents; but where the object was to injure me, the sacred character of the college was an insufficient restraint. Mr. Crawford wrote to Major Barry in October, 1828, (a copy of whose letter he has furnished me at my request), requesting him earnestly to use his influence with the electors not to vote for me as vice-president, though he could not be ignorant that I had been nominated for that office, on the preceding 8th January, when your friends nominated you, in a state convention, for the high station which you now hold, and that the electors were pledged to vote for you as president, and myself as vice-president. This is not the only instance of his interference. He pursued the same course in Tennessee and Louisiana, as I am informed on the highest authority.

At an earlier period, he resorted to means not much less objectionable to injure my standing, and to influence, as far as I was concerned, the election. I am not ignorant of his correspondence with that view, and which, I feel confident, has not escaped your observation. But I will not dwell on this disagreeable subject. I have no resentment towards Mr. Crawford

* See my letter to Mr. Monroe and Mr. Wirt, and their answers; also, letter to Mr. Adams and his answer, written since the date of this letter. Mr. Crowninshield, the other member of the cabinet, was absent: see his letter. See appendix, J, K, L, M, N, O, P.

I have looked on in silence, without resorting to any means to counteract the injury which he intended me; and I now depart from the rule which I have carefully observed ever since the termination of the presidential election in 1825, because his present attack comes through a channel, my high respect for which would not permit me to be silent. I have, however, in noticing what I could not pass over, situated as I now am, endeavored to limit myself, by the line of self-defence, and if I have apparently gone beyond in making any remarks on his conduct, which his letter did not naturally suggest, my apology will be found in the necessity of showing the state of his feelings towards me, so that the motive which influenced him in the course which has caused this correspondence may be fully understood. I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

President Jackson.

—

No. 4.

General Jackson to Mr. Calhoun.

May 30, 1830.

Sir: Your communication of the 29th instant was handed me this morning just as I was going to church, and of course was not read until I returned.

I regret to find that you have entirely mistaken my note of the 13th instant. There is no part of it which calls in question either your conduct or your motives in the case alluded so. Motives are to be inferred from actions, and judged of by our God. It has sbeen intimated to me many years ago, that it was you, and not Mr. Crawford, who had been secretly endeavoring to destroy my reputation. These insinuations I indignantly repelled, upon the ground that you, in all your letters to me, professed to be my personal friend, and approved entirely my conduct in relation to the Seminole campaign. I had too exalted an opinion of your honor and frankness, to believe for one moment that you could be capable of such deception. Under the influence of these friendly feelings, (which I always entertained for you), when I was presented with a copy of Mr. Crawford's letter, with that frankness which ever has, and I hope ever will characterise my conduct, I considered it due to you, and the friendly relations which had always existed between us, to lay it forthwith before you, and ask if the statements contained in that letter could be true. I repeat, I had a right to believe that you were my sincere friend, and, until now, never expected to have occasion to say to you, in the language of Cæsar, Et tu Brute. The evidence which bas brought me to this conclusion is abundantly contained in your letter now before me. In your and Mr. Crawford's dispute I have no interest whatever; but it may become necessary for me hereafter, when I shall have more leisure, and the documents at hand, to place the subject in its proper light; to notice the historical facts and references in your communication, which will give a very different view of this subject.

It is due to myself, however, to state that the knowledge of the executive documents and orders in my possession will show conclusively that I had authority for all I did, and that your explanation of my powers, as declared to gov. Bibb, shows your own understanding of them. Your letter to me of the 29th, handed today, and now before me, is the first intimation to me that you ever entertained any other opinion or view of them. Your conduct, words, actions and letters, I have ever thought, show this. Understanding you now, no further communication with you on this subject is necessary. I have the hunor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant, ANDREW JACKSON.

To the hon. J. C. Calhoun.

—

No. 5.

Mr. Calhoun to gen. Jackson.

Steamboat Potomac, 1st June, 1830.

Sir: Though you intimate, in your letter of yesterday, that no further communication with me is necessary on the subject to which it refers, I feel myself impelled to notice some of your remarks, lest my silence should be construed into an acquiescence in their truth or justness. I shall be as brief as possible.

You say that I have entirely mistaken your letter of the 13th May, in supposing that it questioned either my motives or conduct. I am not aware that I have imputed to you an impeachment of my motives; but I certainly did understand that you had questioned the sincerity and frankness of my conduct; and I must add that your present letter, notwithstanding the most demonstrative proof which I had offered to the contrary, shows clearly that I understood you correctly, and of course was not, as you suppose, mistaken.

I have no doubt that there are those who, actuated by enmity to me, and not friendship to you, have, in the most artful manner, for years intimated that I have been secretly endeavoring to injure you, however absurd the idea; but I must express my surprise that you should have permitted insinuations, as base as they are false, to operate on you, when every word and act of mine gave to them the lie direct. I feel conscious that I have honorably and fully performed towards you every duty that friendship imposed, and that any imputation to the contrary is wholly unmerited.

You mistake in supposing that I have any dispute with Mr. Crawford. That he bears me ill will is certain; but whatever feeling of unkindness I ever had towards him has long since passed away; so much so, that, instead of returning his attacks on me, the line of conduct which I had prescribed to myself, was, to bear patiently and silently all that he might do or say, leaving it to time and truth to vindicate my conduct. If I have apparently departed from the rule that I had prescribed in this case, it was not because there was any disposition on my part to alter the line of my conduct; but when you interposed your name, by placing in my hands a copy of his letter, addressed to Mr. Forsyth, I was compelled by an act of yours, in order that my silence might not be interpreted into an acknowledgment of the truth of Mr. Crawford's statement, to correct his misstatements, and to expose the motives of enmity which actuated him, and which sought to use you as an instrument of its gratification.

You intimate, that, at some future time, when you may have more leisure, you will place the subject of this correspondence in a different light. I wish you to be assured, I feel every confidence, that, whenever you may be disposed to controvert the correctness of either my statement or conduct in this affair, I shall be prepared on my part to maintain the truth of the one, and frankness, honor, and patriotism of the other, throughout this whole transaction.

That you honestly thought that your orders authorised you to do what you did, I have never questioned; but that you can show by any document, public or private, that they were intended to give you the authority which you assumed, or that any such construction was placed on them, at any time, by the administration, or myself in particular, I believe to be impossible.

You remark that my letter of the 29th inst. is the first intimation you had that I had taken a different view from yourself of your orders. That you should conceive that you had no intimation before, is to me unaccountable. I had supposed that the invitation of Mr. Monroe, in his letter to you of the 20th October, 1818, with the intention that the different views taken by you and myself of the orders should be placed on the files of the department, and my letter to you of the 13th April, 1828, covering a copy of my letter to major Lee, in which I refer to the public documents, and private correspondence between you and Mr. Monroe, as containing the views taken of your orders, and the offer which I made to present my views more fully, if not given sufficiently explicit in the documents referred to, were at least an intimation that we differed in the construction of the orders; and I feel assured that neither "my conduct, words, actions or letters," afford the slightest proof to the contrary.

The charge which you have made against me, of secret hostility and opposition, which, if true, would so vitally affect my character for sincerity and honor, and which has caused a rupture in our long continued friendship, has no other foundation but that of a difference between us in the construction of your orders—orders issued by myself, the intention of which I, of course, could not mistake, whatever may be their true construction in a military point of view, and the right and duty of interpreting which belonged especially to me, as the head of the war department. The mere statement of these facts must give rise to a train of reflections, the expression of which I cannot suppress.

Your course, as I understand it, assumes for its basis that I, who, as secretary of war, issued the orders, have some motive to conceal my construction, of them, as if I had no right to form an opinion whether the officers to whom they were given had transcended them or not, while the officer was at perfect liberty to express and maintain his construction. My right, as secretary of war, was at least as perfect as yours, as commanding officer, to judge of the true intent and limits of your orders; and I had no more motive to conceal my construction of them than you had to conceal yours. The idea of concealment never entered my conception; and to suppose it, is to suppose that I was utterly unworthy of the office which I occupied. Why should I conceal? I owed no responsibility to you; and if you were not afraid to place your construction on your orders, why should I be afraid to place mine? It was an affair of mere official duty, involving no question of private enmity or friendship, and I so treated it.

In conclusion, I must remark, that I had supposed that the want of sincerity and frankness would be the last charge that would be brought against me. Coming from a quarter from which I had reason to expect far different treatment, and destitute, as I know it to be, of the slightest foundation, it could not fail to excite feelings too warm to be expressed, with a due regard to the official relation which I bear to you. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

J. C. CALHOUN.

Gen. A. Jackson.

—

No. 6.

Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Calhoun.

Georgetown, District of Columbia, May 31, 1830.

Sir: Having, at the request of the president to be informed what took place in the cabinet of Mr. Monroe on the subject of the Seminole campaign, laid before him a copy (except the omission of a name) of a letter from Mr. Crawford, which has since been communicated to you, the president has thought it just to permit me to read your answer of the 29th inst. to his letter enclosing it. Between you and the president, or between you and Mr. Crawford, or between you and the friends of Mr. Crawford, when spoken of in general, it is not my design to intervene. There are, however, circumstances in your letter, of a personal character, that require to be placed in their true light, in justice to you and to myself. As to the first, you complain that the interposition of the name of the president deprives you of important rights: among these is enumerated "the right of being placed (by me) in possession of all the facts and circumstances connected with this affair." So far as I understand the point on which the president desired information, there is no circumstance or fact within my knowledge that can throw any additional light upon it. There is certainly no fact or circumstance within my knowledge, directly or collaterally connected with it, that is not at your service.

If desirable to you, you shall be furnished with a copy of my letter (a copy of it is in the president's hands) referred to in Mr. C.'s letter to me, and with the name of the gentleman to whom it was written, known also to the president. I cannot promise a copy of the letter from Savannah, to which my first was an answer, as I am not sure that it is in being; if it is, and can be found on my return to Georgia, you can have a copy of it. Having thus offered justice, according to your view of it, you will not be surprised that I should expect justice in return. Your answer to the president seems to be founded upon the presumption that there is some conspiracy secretly at work to do injury to your character, and to destroy your political consequence. With this presumption I have no concern; but the circumstances under which my name is introduced by you, render it proper that I should be distinctly informed if this charge of conspiracy against you is intended to apply to me.

In justice to Mr. C., and for his use, I shall apply to the president for a copy of your letter of the 29th inst. If you have any objection, you will state it. I shall take it for granted that you acquiesce, unless otherwise informed. I am, sir, your obedient servant, JOHN FORSYTH.

Hon. John C. Calhoun.

—

No. 7.

Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Forsyth.

Steamboat Potomac, 1st June, 1830.

Sir,—I have just received your letter of the 31st ultimo, which was handed me by Mr. Archer. It gives me the first intimation that I have had, that the president applied to you to obtain information of what took place in the cabinet of Mr. Monroe on the subject of the Seminole campaign; and, of course, as I suppose, that you were acting for him, and not for yourself, in your correspondence with Mr. Crawford. Neither the copy of his letter to you, placed in my hands by the president, nor his note covering the copy, gave me the slightest intimation of this fact; but, on the contrary, I had a right to presume, from Mr. Crawford giving you authority to show me his letter if you pleased, that the correspondence originated with yourself, and was under your entire control, and not, as I now infer, "at the request of the president, and for his use." The view in which I regarded the correspondence, and which I was justified to do, judging by the facts before me, fully explains my remarks in my letter to the president, as far as you were concerned with them.

In the direction which this affair has taken, it is not for me to determine whether you ought to furnish me any information, or what it ought to be. Had I supposed, that, under the circumstances in which I was placed, such a right belonged to me, I would have claimed it previously to my answer to the president's letter, so as to have had the advantage, before I made my reply, of whatever light might be furnished from the sources I therein indicated. That there are those who intend that this affair shall operate against me politically, by causing a rupture between myself and the president, and thereby affect, if possible, my standing with the nation, I cannot doubt, for reasons which I have stated in my answer to the president; but I must be permitted to express my surprise that you should suppose that my remarks comprehended you, when they expressly referred to those whose names did not appear in the transaction, and consequently excluded you.

My answer to the president is his property, and not mine; and consequently it belongs to him and not to me, to determine to whom he shall, or shall not, give copies.

I am, very respectfully, &c.

J. C. CALHOUN.

Hon. John Forsyth.

—

No. 8.

Mr. Calhoun to general Jackson.

Pendleton, June 22, 1830.

Sir,—I embrace the first leisure moment since my return home to enclose to you a copy of a letter from Mr. Forsyth, the original of which was handed to me on my passage from Washington to Norfolk, on board the steamboat, and also a copy of my answer.

You will learn, by a perusal of Mr. Forsyth's letter, that it refers to the correspondence between us, and that it places the subject of that correspondence in a light in some respects different from what I had previously regarded it. I had supposed, from the complexion of your letters to me, that the copy of Mr. Crawford's letter to Mr. Forsyth had been placed by the latter in your hands, without any previous act or agency on your part; but, by Mr. Forsyth's letter to me, I am informed that such is not the fact. It seems that he acted as your agent in the affair. He states that you applied to him to be informed of what took place in the cabinet of Mr. Monroe on the subject of the Seminole campaign; and I infer, as the information could be obtained only from some one of the members of the cabinet, and as Mr. Forsyth was not one, and, as far as I am informed, not particularly intimate with any of its members, except Mr. Crawford, that the object of your request was to obtain the information through Mr. Forsyth from Mr. Crawford, and that, consequently, in writing to him, and in placing the copy of his letter in your hands, he can be regarded in no other light but that of your agent.

Under this new aspect of this affair, I conceive that I have the right to claim of you to be put in possession of all the additional information, which I might fairly have demanded of Mr. Forsyth, had the correspondence been originally between him and myself, on the supposition on which I acted previously to the receipt of his letter. He avows himself ready, if desired by me, to furnish me with the additional information; but a sense of propriety would not permit me to make the request of him. Considered as your agent in this affair, it is not for me to make the request of information of him. What additional information I conceive myself to be entitled to, my letter to you of the 29th May will sufficiently indicate. A part of the information, it seems from Mr. Forsyth's letter, is already in your possession, and there can be no doubt but the whole would be furnished at your request.

I make this application solely from the desire of obtaining the means of enabling me to unravel this mysterious affair. Facts and circumstances, light of themselves, may, when viewed in connexion, afford important light as to the origin and object of what I firmly believe to be a base political intrigue, got up by those who regard your reputation and the public interest much less than their own personal advancement.

I must remark, in conclusion, that the letter of Mr. Forsyth affords to my mind conclusive proof that the intimations to my prejudice, to which you refer in your letter of the 30th ultimo, and which you seem to think made no impression on your mind, have not been without their intended effect. On no other supposition can I explain the fact, that, without giving me any intimation of the step, you should apply for information, as to my course in the cabinet, to one whom you knew to be hostile to me as Mr. Crawford is, and who could not, as you know, make the disclosure consistently with the principles of honor and fidelity, when my previous correspondence with you ought to have satisfied you that I was prepared to give you, frankly and fully, any information which you might desire, in relation to my course on the occasion. J. C. CALHOUN.

To president Jackson.

—

No. 9.

General Jackson to Mr. Forsyth.

Washington, June 7, 1830.

Sir,—I have received your letter of the 2d instant, enclosing a copy of your letter to Mr. Calhoun, of the 31st ultimo, and his reply thereto, all which I have duly noted.

You have requested a copy of Mr. Calhoun's letter to me of the 29th of May last, for the purpose of its being shown to Mr. Crawford. Mr. Calhoun, in his reply to you, does not consent, nor yet object, to your being furnished with a copy, but refers the matter to my discretion.

A copy of the original letter of Mr. Crawford to you having been submitted to me, it occurred as being proper and correct that you should be apprised of Mr. Calhoun's answer, and therefore it was shown to you. I cannot, on reflection, perceive any impropriety in now according to you the request you have made, particularly as, on your referring this matter to Mr. Calhoun, he does not object. I accordingly send it, with this injunction, that it be used for no other purpose but the one you have stated, to be shown to Mr. Crawford.

In the letter which you have addressed to Mr. Calhoun, you state as follows, to wit: "Having, at the request of the president to be informed what took place in the cabinet of Mr. Monroe on the subject of the Seminole campaign, laid before him a copy (except the omission of a name) of a letter from Mr. Crawford," &c. &c. This is construed by Mr. Calhoun into a declaration that I requested you to furnish me with the information. I am satisfied it was not by you so intended, and I would be glad you would so explain it to him. I never conversed with you upon this subject previous to the time when you sent me Mr. Crawford's letter. The facts are these: I had been informed that Mr. Crawford had made a statement concerning this business, which had come to the knowledge of col. James A. Hamilton, of New York. On meeting with col. Hamilton, I enquired of him, and received for answer that he had, but remarked that he did not think it proper to communicate without the consent of the writer. I answered, that, being informed that the marshal of this district had, to a friend of mine, made a similar statement to that said to have been made by Mr. Crawford, I would be glad to see Mr. Crawford's statement, and desired he would write and obtain his consent. My reasons were, that I had, from the uniform friendly professions of Mr. Calhoun, always believed him my friend in all this Seminole business; and I had a desire to know if in this I had been mistaken, and whether it was possible for Mr. Calhoun to have acted with such insincerity and duplicity towards me.

I have enclosed Mr. Calhoun a copy of this letter.

And am, sir, with respectful regard, your most obedient servant, ANDREW JACKSON.

The hon John Forsyth, Senator in Congress.

—

No. 9.—(Continued.)

Mr. Forsyth to general Jackson.

Augusta, June 17*th*, 1830.

Sir,—I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 7th instant, and the copy papers enclosed with it. The papers will be shown to Mr. Crawford, and no other use made of them by me.

I did not intend to convey to Mr. Calhoun the idea that any personal communication ever took place between us, prior to the date of Mr. Crawford's letter, relative to the occurrences in Mr. Monroe's cabinet on the question of the Seminole war. What I intended he should know, and I suppose will now understand, if I have inadvertently misled him, is, that I did not volunteer to procure the information contained in Mr. Crawford's letter, but that it was obtained for your use in compliance with your request. Major Hamilton requested me, in your name, to give to you what I had previously given to him—Mr. Crawford's account of the transaction. With this request I complied, after having first obtained Mr. Crawford's consent, and received from him his correction of a mistake I had made in repeating his verbal statement. I have the honor to be, &c.

JOHN FORSYTH.

Gen. Andrew Jackson, President of the United States.

Augusta, June 17, 1830.

Sir,—Gen. Jackson having sent to you, a copy of his letter to me of the 8th instant, it is proper that you should see the answer to it; you will find a copy on the opposite page.

I am, sir, with respect.

JOHN FORSYTH.

Hon. John C. Calhoun.

No. 9.—(Continued.)

General Jackson to Mr. Calhoun.

Washington, June 7, 1830.

Sir,—On the 5th inst. I received a letter from Mr. Forsyth of the senate, requesting a copy of your letter to me of the 29th of May last. I have not been able to perceive any objections to comply with his request. A copy of my letter to him on this subject, I have thought it proper, should be sent to you; it is therefore enclosed. I am, sir, very respectfully,

Your most obedient servant,

ANDREW JACKSON.

The hon. J. C. Calhoun, Vice-President of the U. States.

No. 10.

General Jackson to Mr. Calhoun.

Hermitage, June 19,* 1830.

Sir,—Your letter of the 22d June last has just been received, via Washington city. I regret that mine to you of the 7th of May, covering a copy of one to Mr. Forsyth from me of the same date, had not reached you, as it would have prevented you from falling into the gross errors you have, from the unfounded inferences you have drawn from Mr. Forsyth's letter to me, and would have informed you that I had no conversation or communication with Mr. Forsyth on the subject alluded to, before the receipt of the copy of Mr. Crawford's letter, which I so promptly laid before you. To correct the errors into which the inferences you have drawn from Mr. Forsyth's letter have led you, I herewith again enclose you a copy of my letter to Mr. Forsyth of the 7th of May, and his answer thereto of the 17th June last, which I received on the 8th instant, and I have to regret that any interruption of the mail prevented your receipt of mine of the 7th of May, which was mailed the same time mine to Mr. Forsyth was.

Mr. Forsyth having promised, in his letter to me of the 17th June, that he would explain, and by letter, correct you in the unjust and unfounded inferences which you had drawn from his letter; and I must add here, for your information, that, if I understood your other allusions, they are as equally unfounded. I have never heard it even intimated, except in your letter, that the individual to whom I suppose you allude had the slightest knowledge on the subject, or the most remote agency in the matter. In conclusion, I repeat, I have always met the intimations of your having made before the cabinet, in secret council, against me, injurious movements, with flat and positive denial, and brought into view, by way of rebutter, your uniform and full approval of my whole conduct on the Seminole campaign, so far as I, or any of my friends, had heard you on the subject; and the high character you sustained for fair, open, and honorable conduct in all things was entirely opposed to the secret, uncandid, and unmanly course ascribed to you by those intimations, and I banished from my mind what I conceived to be unjust imputations upon your honor, by ascribing duplicity to you, and never, until after the intimations were communicated to me of the suggestions of the marshal, as stated in my letter to Mr. Forsyth, (a copy of which was enclosed to you,) It was then that I had a desire to see the statement said to have been made by Mr. Crawford, and, when information [informed] by colonel Hamilton that such statements had been seen in writing, that I made the request to see it, with the object of laying it before you, which I then supposed would meet your prompt and positive negative. But I regret that instead of a negative, which I had a right to expect, I had the poignant mortification to see in your letter an admission of its truth. Understanding the matter now, I feel no interest in this altercation, and leave you and Mr. Crawford, and all concerned, to settle the affair in your own way, and now close this correspondence for ever.

I am, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

ANDREW JACKSON.

Hon. J. C. Calhoun, Vice-President of the U. States.

No. 11.

Mr. Calhoun to general Jackson.

Fort Hill, 25th August, 1830.

Sir,—I received, on the 6th instant, your letter dated the 19th June, but which, I suppose, was intended for the 19th July, with its enclosures. On the 24th of June I received the note of Mr. Forsyth, covering a copy of his letter to you of the 17th same month; but, owing to some delay in the conveyance, for which I am unable to account, I did not receive your letter of the 7th June, covering a copy of your letter to Mr. Forsyth, till the 14th July.

You regret that I did not receive your letter of the 7th June before I wrote mine of the 28th of the same month, on the ground, to use your own language, that it would have prevented me "from falling into the gross errors you have from the unfounded inferences you have drawn from Mr. Forsyth's letter to me." You cannot more sincerely regret than I do, that any delay in the mail deprived me of the advantage of the statement in your letter to Mr. Forsyth, seeing that you deemed it material to a correct understanding of the facts, but I must say, after a careful perusal of your letter to him, as well as yours to myself, I am utterly at a loss to perceive the "gross errors" of which you accuse me. As far as I can understand you, they seem to consist in the supposition, that I inferred from Mr. Forsyth's letter that you applied to him personally to obtain the information from Mr. Crawford, of what took place in the cabinet on the Seminole question; whereas, in fact you applied not to him, but to Mr. James Hamilton, of New York; and that it was he, and not you, who applied to Mr. Forsyth to obtain the information. If there be a difference in principle between the two statements, I can only say that I am not responsible for it. The charge of "error" ought to be made against Mr. Forsyth and not me. His words are: "Having, at the request of the president to be informed what took place in the cabinet of Mr. Monroe, on the subject of the Seminole campaign, laid before him a copy (except the omission of a name) of a letter from Mr. Crawford, which has been since communicated to you," &c. &c. Now, sir, if I had inferred from these words, as you suppose I did, that you had personally applied to Mr. Forsyth to obtain the information for you, I would have done no more than what I fairly might, without the imputation of "gross errors." But I made no such inference; on the contrary, I have used almost the very words of Mr. Forsyth. My language is: "I had supposed, from the complexion of your letters to me, that the copy of Mr. Crawford's letter to Mr. Forsyth had been placed by the latter in your hands, without any previous act or agency on your part; but, by Mr. Forsyth's letter to me, I am informed that such is not the fact. It seems that he acted as your agent in the affair. He states that you applied to him to be informed of what took place in the cabinet of Mr. Monroe on the subject of the Seminole campaign." In my letter to Mr. Forsyth, I use almost verbatim the same language. As far as I am capable of understanding the force of words, my language does not vary, in the smallest degree, in its sense, from that used by Mr. Forsyth in his letter to me, and most certainly does not more strongly imply than his does that you applied to him personally for the information. But, suppose I had fallen into the "gross errors" of inferring from Mr. Forsyth's letter that you had personally applied to him, when, in fact, it was not you, but your agent, James Hamilton, (of New York,) who applied for you in your name, as Mr. Forsyth informed you in his letter of 17th June, it requires more penetration than I possess to discover how the difference can, in the slightest degree, affect the only material question, whether he acted as a mere volunteer, or as your agent. Mr. Forsyth himself decides this question. He tells you expressly, that he did not act as a volunteer; and it is on the ground that he acted for you, and not for himself, that I claimed of you to be put in possession of certain facts connected with the subject of our correspondence, which were in the possession of Mr. Forsyth, and which I deemed important to the full development of this affair; but, instead of complying with so reasonable a request, you reply, not by denying the justice of the request, nor that he acted for you, and not for himself, but by accusing me of "gross errors," an assumption on your part at once gratuitous and immaterial, that I had inferred that you had applied to Mr. Forsyth personally, when, in fact, the application had been made for you, in your own name, by Mr. Hamilton. I must say, that I cannot see in your statement the least excuse for withholding from me the information requested; and I am constrained to add, that I have loooked in vain in the course which you have pursued for the evidence of that frankness which you assured me, in submitting the copy of Mr. Crawford's letter to me, has ever characterized your conduct towards those with whom you had been in habits of friendship. As connected with this point, let me call your attention to a fact which has not been explained, though in my opinion it ought to be. It now appears, that when Mr. Forsyth placed the copy of Mr. Crawford's letter in your hands, he also placed with it a copy of his letter referred to by Mr. Crawford. Why was it that a copy of this letter of Mr. Forsyth did not accompany Mr. Crawford's, when you placed a copy of the letter in my hands? Calling upon me in the spirit of frankness and friendship, as you informed me you did, I had a right to infer that every document connected with the charge, and in your possession, calculated to afford light, would be placed in my possession; and such, in fact, was my impression, but which I now find to be erroneous. It is with regret that I feel myself bound to state that Mr. Forsyth's letter, with the subsequent correspondence, has given an aspect to the affair very different from what I received from your first letter.

You have stated some suggestions of the marshal of the district which were communicated to you, as the reason why you have agitated this old affair at this time. You have not stated what they were, to whom made, or by whom communicated, which, of course, leaves me in the dark as to their nature or character. But whatever they may be, the course you adopted, considering the friendly relation which I had reason to suppose existed between us, is well calculated to excite surprise. Instead of applying to the marshal, in order to ascertain what he did say, and from whom he derived his information, and then submitting his statement to me, which course friendship, and the high opinion which you say you entertained for my character "for fair, open, and honorable conduct in all things," manifestly dictated, you applied for information, as to my conduct, to the man who, you knew, felt towards me the strongest enmity. I wish not to be understood that you had mere general information of his ill-will towards me. Your information was of the most specific character, and was of such a nature as ought to have made you distrust any statement of his, calculated to affect my reputation.

Knowing the political machinations that were carrying on against me, and wishing to place me on my guard, a friend of mine placed in my hands, some time since, a copy of a letter written by Mr. Crawford to a Nashville correspondent of his in 1827. It constitutes one of the many means resorted to in order to excite your suspicion against me. In it Mr. Crawford makes an abusive attack upon me; but, not content with thus assailing my character in the dark, he offers to bring into the market the influence which Georgia might have on the presidential election, as a means whereby to depress my political prospects. To avoid the possibility of mistakes, I will give extracts from the letter itself, in full confirmation of what I have stated.

* Intended probably for the 19th July.

Speaking of the presidential election, Mr. Crawford says that, "the only difficulty that this state (Georgia) has upon the subject, (your election,) is, that, if Jackson should be elected, Calhoun will come into power."

Again:

"If you can ascertain that Calhoun will not be benefited by Jackson's election, you will do him a benefit by communicating the information to me. Make what use you please of this letter, and show it to whom you please."

That the letter was clearly intended for your inspection, cannot be doubted. The authority to his correspondent to make what use he pleased, and to show it to whom he pleased, with the nature of the information sought, whether I was to be benefited by your election, which could only be derived from yourself, leaves no doubt on that point; and I am accordingly informed that you saw the letter.

A proposition of the kind, at that particular period, when the presidential election was most doubtful, and most warmly contested, needs no comment as to its object. To say nothing of its moral and political character, stronger proof could not be offered of the deepest enmity towards me on the part of the writer, which at least ought to have placed you on your guard against all attacks on me from that quarter. The letter will not be denied; but if, contrary to expectation, it should, I stand ready, by highly respectable authority, to maintain its authenticity.

You well know the disinterested, open, and fearless course which myself and my friends were pursuing at this very period, and the weight of enmity which it drew down upon us from your opponents. Little did I then suspect that these secret machinations were carrying on against me at Nashville, or that such propositions could be ventured to be made to you, or, if ventured, without being instantly disclosed to me. Of this, however, I complain not, nor do I intend to recriminate; but I must repeat the expression of my surprise, that you should apply to an individual who you knew, from such decisive proof, to be actuated by the most inveterate hostility towards me, for information of my course in Mr. Monroe's cabinet. It affords to my mind conclusive proof that you had permitted your feelings to be alienated by the artful movements of those who have made you the victim of their intrigue, long before the commencement of this correspondence.

Instead of furnishing me with the information which I claimed, in order to a full understanding of this extraordinary affair, and which you could not justly withhold, you kindly undertake to excuse the individual to whom you supposed some allusion of mine to be made. I know not to whom you refer. I made no allusion to any one particular individual. But, be that as it may, you must excuse me if, on subjects which concern me, I should prefer my judgment to yours, and, of course, if I should not be satisfied with your opinion, as a substitute for the facts by which I might be able to form my own.

After I had so fully demonstrated the candor and sincerity with which I have acted throughout this affair, I did not suppose that you would reiterate your former charges; but having done so, it only remains for me to repeat, in the most positive manner, the contradiction. I never for a moment disguised my sentiment on this or any other political subject. Why should I in this instance? I had violated no duty—no rule of honor, nor obligation of friendship. I did your motives full justice in every stage of the cabinet deliberation, and, after a full investigation, I entirely approved and heartily supported the final decision. In this course I was guided, it is true, not by feelings of friendship, but solely by a sense of duty. When our country is concerned, there ought to be room neither for friendship nor enmity.

You conclude your letter by saying that you understand the matter now, that you feel no interest in this altercation, and that you would leave me and Mr. Crawford, and all concerned, to settle this affair in our own way, and that you now close the correspondence for ever.

It is not for me to object to the manner you may choose to close the correspondence on your part. On my part, I have no desire to prolong it. The spectacle of the first and second officers of this great republic engaged in a correspondence of this nature, has no attraction for me at any time, and is very far from being agreeable at this critical juncture of our affairs. My consolation is, that it was not of my seeking; and, as I am not responsible for its commencement, I feel no disposition to incur any responsibility for its continuance. Forced into it, to repel unjust and base imputations upon my character, I could not retire in honor while they continued to be reiterated.

Having now fully vindicated my conduct, I will conclude the correspondence also, with a single remark, that I too well know what is due to my rights and self-respect, in this unpleasant affair, to permit myself to be diverted into an altercation with Mr. Crawford, or any other individual, whom you may choose to consider as concerned in this affair.* J. C. CALHOUN.

President Jackson.

* Mr. Crawford attempted to open a correspondence with me on this subject. I returned his letter, declining all correspondence with him, except through Gen. Jackson. See Appendix Q.

APPENDIX.

Extracts from the private correspondence between Mr. Monroe and gen. Jackson, on the Seminole affair, referred to in the letter of the 29th May.

A.

Mr. Monroe to general Jackson.

Washington, July 19, 1818.

Dear Sir,—I received, lately, your letter of June 2d, by Mr. Hambly, at my farm in Loudoun, to which I had retired to await your report, and the return of your commissioners from Buenos Ayres. In reply to your letter, I shall express myself with the freedom and candor which I have invariably used in my communications with you. I shall withhold nothing in regard to your attack of the Spanish posts, and occupancy of them, particularly Pensacola, which you ought to know, it being an occurrence of the most delicate and interesting nature, and which, without a circumspect and cautious policy, looking to all the objects which claim attention, may produce the most serious and unfavorable consequences. It is by a knowledge of all the circumstances, and a comprehensive view of the whole subject, that the danger to which this measure is exposed may be avoided, and all the good which you have contemplated by it, as I trust, be fully realised.

In calling you into active service against the Seminoles, and communicating to you the orders which had been given just before to gen. Gaines, the views and intentions of the government were fully disclosed in respect to the operations in Florida. In transcending the limit prescribed by those orders, you acted on your own responsibility, on facts and circumstances which were unknown to the government when the orders were given, many of which, indeed, occurred afterwards, and which you thought imposed on you the measure, as an act of patriotism, essential to the honor and interests of your country.

The United States stand justified in ordering their troops into Florida in pursuit of their enemy. They have this right by the law of nations, if the Seminoles were inhabitants of another country, and had entered Florida to elude our pursuit. Being inhabitants of Florida, with a species of sovereignty over that part of the territory, and a right to the soil, our right to give such an order is the more complete and unquestionable. It is not an act of hostility to Spain. It is the less so, because her government is bound by treaty to restrain by force of arms, if necessary, the Indians there from committing hostilities against the United States.

But an order by the government to attack a Spanish post would assume another character. It would authorize war, to which, by the principles of our constitution, the executive is incompetent. Congress alone possess the power. I am aware that cases may occur, where the commanding general, acting on his own responsibility, may with safety pass this limit, and with essential advantage to his country. The officers and troops of the neutral power forget the obligations incident to their neutral character; they stimulated the enemy to make war; they furnished them with arms and munitions of war to carry it on; they take an active part in other respects in their favor; they afford them an asylum on their retreat. The general obtaining victory pursues them to this post, the gates of which are shut against him; he attacks and carries it, and rests on those acts for his justification. The affair is then brought before his government by the power whose post has been thus attacked and carried. If the government whose officer made the attack had given an order for it, the officer would have no merit in it. He exercised no discretion, nor did he act on his own responsibility. The merit of the service, if there be any in it, would not be his. This is the ground on which this occurrence rests, as to his part. I will now look to the future.

The foreign government demands—was this your act? or did you authorize it? I did not: it was the act of the general. He performed it for reasons deemed sufficient himself, and on his own responsibility. I demand, then, the surrender of the posts, and his punishment. The evidence justifying the conduct of the American general, and proving the misconduct of those officers, will be embodied, to be laid before the sovereign, as the ground on which their punishment will be expected

If the executive refused to evacuate the posts, especially Pensacola, it would amount to a declaration of war, to which it is incompetent. It would be accused with usurping the authority of congress, and giving a deep and fatal wound to the constitution. By charging the offence on the officers of Spain, we take the ground which you have presented, and we look to you to support it. You must aid in procuring the documents necessary for this purpose. Those which you sent by Mr. Hambly were prepared in too much haste, and do not, I am satisfied, do justice to the cause. This must be attended to without delay.

Should we hold the posts, it is impossible to calculate all the consequences likely to result from it. It is not improbable that war would immediately follow. Spain would be stimulated to declare it; and, once declared, the adventurers of Britain and other countries would, under the Spanish flag, privateer on our commerce. The immense revenue which we now receive would be much diminished, as would be the profits of our valuable productions. The war would probably soon become general; and we do not foresee that we should have a single power in Europe on our side. Why risk these consequences? The events which have occurred, in both the Floridas, show the incompetency of Spain to maintain her authority; and the progress of the revolutions in South America will require all her forces there. There is much reason to presume, that this act will furnish a strong inducement to Spain to cede the territory, provided we do not wound too deeply her pride by holding it. If we hold the posts, her government cannot treat with honor, which, by withdrawing the troops, we afford her an opportunity to do. The manner in which we propose to act, will exculpate you from censure, and promises to obtain all the advantages which you contemplated from the measure, and possibly very soon. From a different course no advantage would be likely to result, and there would be great danger of extensive and serious injuries.

I shall communicate to you, in the confidence in which I write this letter, a copy of the answer which will be given to the Spanish minister, that you may see distinctly the ground on which we rest, in the expectation that you will give it all the support in your power. The answer will be drawn on a view, and with attention to the general interests of our country, and its relations with other powers.

A charge, no doubt, will be made of a breach of the constitution; and, to such a charge, the public feeling will be alive. It will be said that you have taken all the power into your own hands, not from the executive alone, but likewise from congress. The distinction which I have made above, between the act of the government, refutes that charge. This act, as to the general, will be right, if the facts on which he rests made it a measure of necessity, and they be well proved. There is no war, or breach of the constitution, unless the government should refuse to give up the posts; in which event, should Spain embargo our vessels, and war follow, the charge of such breach would be laid against the government with great force. The last imputation to which I would consent justly to expose myself, is that of infringing a constitution, to the support of which, on pure principles, my public life has been devoted. In this sentiment, I am satisfied, you fully concur.

Your letters to the department were written in haste, under the pressure of fatigue and infirmity, in a spirit of conscious rectitude; and, in consequence, with less attention to some parts of their contents than would otherwise have been bestowed on them. The passage to which I particularly allude, from memory, for I have not the letter before me, is that in which you speak of incompetency of an imaginary boundary to protect us against the enemy, being the ground on which you bottom all your measures. This is liable to the imputation, that you took the Spanish posts for that reason, as a measure of expedience, and not on account of the misconduct of the Spanish officers. The effect of this and such passages, besides other objections to them, would be to invalidate the ground on which you stand, and furnish weapons to adversaries who would be glad to seize them. If you think proper to authorize the secretary, or myself, to correct those passages, it will be done with care; though, should you have copies, as I presume you have, you had better do it yourself.

The policy of Europe respecting South America is not yet settled. A congress of the allied powers is to be held this year, (November is spoken of,) to decide that question. England proposes to restore the colonies to Spain with free trade and colonial governments. Russia is less favorable, as are all the others. We have a Russian document, written by order of the emperor, as the basis of instructions to his ministers at the several courts, speaking of the British proposition favorably, but stating that it must be considered and decided on by the allies, and the result published, to produce a moral effect on the colonies, on the failure of which, force is spoken of. The settlement of the dispute between Spain and Portugal is made a preliminary. We partake in no councils whose object is not their complete independence. Intimations have been given us that Spain is not unwilling, and is even preparing for war with the United States, in the hope of making it general, and uniting Europe against us and her colonies, on the principle that she has no hope of saving them. Her pertinacious refusal to cede the Floridas to us heretofore, though evidently her interest to do it, gives some coloring to the suggestions. If we engage in a war, it is of the greatest importance that our people be united, and, with that view, that Spain commence it; and, above all, that the government be free from the charge of committing a breach of the constitution.

I hope that you have recovered your health. You see that the state of the world is unsettled, and that any future movement is likely to be directed against us. There may be very important occasions for your services, which will be relied on. You must have the object in view, and be prepared to render them.

—

B.

Gen. Andrew Jackson to Mr. Monroe.

Nashville, August 19, 1818.

Sir,—Your letter of the 19th July, apprizing me of the course to be pursued in relation to the Floridas, has been received. In a future communication, it is my intention to submit my views of all the questions springing from the subject, with the fulness and candor which the importance of the topic, and the part I have acted in it, demand. At present, I will confine myself to the consideration of a part of your letter, which has a particular bearing on myself, and which seems to have originated in a misconception of the import of the order under which I have commenced the Seminole campaign. In making this examination, I will make use of all the freedom which is courted by your letter, and which I deem necessary to afford you a clear view of the construction which was given to the order, and the motives under which I proceeded to execute its intentions.

It is stated in the second paragraph of your letter, that I transcended the limits of my order, and that I acted on my own responsibility.

To these two points I mean at present to confine myself. But, before entering on a proof of their applicability to my acts in Florida, allow me fairly to state, that the assumption of responsibility will never be shrunk from when the public can thereby be promoted. I have passed through difficulties and exposures for the honor and benefit of my country; and whenever still, for this purpose, it shall become necessary to assume a further liability, no scruple will be urged or felt. But when it shall be required of me to do so, and the result be danger and injury to that country, the inducement will be lost, and my consent will be wanting.

This principle is held to be incontrovertible, that an order, generally, to perform a certain service, or effect a certain object, without any specification of the means to be adopted, or limits to govern the executive officer, leaves an entire discretion with the officer as to the choice and application of means, but preserves the responsibility for his acts on the authority from which the order emanated. Under such an order all the acts of the inferior are acts of the superior; and in no way can the subordinate officer be impeached for his measures, except on the score of deficiency in judgment and skill. It is also a grammatical truth, that the limits of such an order cannot be transcended without an entire desertion of the objects it contemplated; for as long as the main legitimate design is kept in view, the policy of the measures adopted to accomplish it is alone to be considered. If these be adopted as the proper rules of construction, and we apply them to my order of December 26, 1817, it will be at once seen, that, both in description and operative principle, they embrace that order exactly. The requisitions of the order are for the commanding general to assume the immediate command at fort Scott, to concentrate all the contiguous and disposable force of the division on that quarter, to call on the executives of adjacent states for an auxiliary militia force, and concludes with this comprehensive command: "With this view you may be prepared to concentrate your forces, and adopt the necessary measures to terminate a conflict, which it has ever been the desire of the president, from motives of humanity, to avoid, but which is now made necessary by their settled hostility."

In no part of this document is there a reference to any previous order, either to myself or another officer, with a view to point to me the measures thought advisable, or the limits of my power in choosing and effecting them. It states that Gen. Gaines has been ordered to Amelia island, and then proceeds to inform me that "subsequent orders have been given to general Gaines, (of which copies will be furnished you,) that you would be directed to take the command, and directing him to reassume, should he deem the public interest to require it, the command at fort Scott, until you should arrive there." Lastly, it mentions that "he was instructed to penetrate the Seminole towns through the Floridas, provided the strength of his command at Amelia would justify his engaging in offensive operations." The principle determining the weight of references, in subsequent orders, to instructions previously given, is well settled. Such references are usually made with one of these two intentions—either the order is given to a second officer, to effect a certain purpose which was intended to be effected by another officer, and the instructions of the first are referred to as the guide of the second; or the order contains and is designed for an extension of authority, and only refers to anterior communications to give a full view of what has been previously attempted and performed. In the first case it is always necessary to connect the different orders by a specific provision, that no doubt may exist as to the extent of the command; and thus the several requisitions and instructions are amalgamated, and the limits of the agent plainly and securely established. In the second, no such provision is necessary; for an entire discretion in the choice and use of means being previously vested, the reference, if there be any, is only descriptive of the powers antecedently given, and the results of measures attempted under such specifical limitation. But admitting, that, in my order of December 26, 1817, there is such a reference as I contemplated in the first case, allow me to examine its character and amount. It is stated that "orders have been given to general Gaines, (copies of which will be furnished you,)" but without affirming that they are to be considered as binding on me, or in any way connected with the comprehensive command that I should terminate the Seminole conflict. On the contrary, so far are they from being designated as my guide and limits in entering Florida, that, in stating their substance in the ensuing sentence, no allusion whatever is made either to means or limitation.

How, then, can it be said with propriety that I have transcended the limits of my orders, or acted on my own responsibility? My order was as comprehensive as it could be, and contained neither the minute original instructions, or a reference to others previously given, to guide and govern me. The fullest discretion was left with me in the selection and application of means to effect the specifical legitimate objects of the campaign; and for the exercise of a sound discretion, on principles of policy, am I alone responsible. But allow me to repeat, that responsibility is not feared by me, if the general good requires its assumption. I never have shrunk from it, and never will; but against its imposition on me, contrary to principle, and without the prospect of any politic result, I must contend with all the feelings of a soldier and a citizen. Being advised that you are at your country seat in Loudoun, where I expect this will reach you, I enclose you a copy of the order to me of the 26th December, 1817, and copies of the orders of general Gaines therein referred to; from a perusal of which you will perceive that the order to me has no reference to those prohibitory orders to general Gaines that you have referred to.

It will afford me pleasure to aid the government in procuring any testimony that may be necessary to prove the hostility of the officers of Spain to the United States. I had supposed that the evidence furnished had established that fact—that the officers of Spain had identified themselves with our enemy, and that St. Mark's and Pensacola were under the complete control of the Indians, although the governor of Pensacola at least had force sufficient to have controlled the Indians, had he chosen to have used it in that way. For the purpose of procuring the necessary evidence of the hostile acts of the governor of Pensacola, I despatched captain Young, topographical engineer, and as soon as obtained will be furnished you. I trust, on a view of all my communications, (copies of which have been forwarded by capt. Gadsden,) you will find that they do not bear the construction you have given them. They were written under bad health, great fatigue, and in haste. My bad health continues: I labor under great bodily debility.

Accept assurances of my sincere regard and esteem, and am, respectfully, your most obedient servant,

ANDREW JACKSON.

James Monroe, President U. S.

—

C.

James Monroe to gen. Andrew Jackson.

Washington, October 20, 1818.

Dear Sir,—I received your letter of the 19th of August, while I was at home, on my farm in Albemarle; and there appearing to be no necessity for giving it an immediate answer, I delayed it until my return here.

I was sorry to find that you understood your instructions relative to operations in Florida differently from what we intended. I was satisfied, however, that you had good reason for your conduct, and have acted in all things on that principle. By supposing that you understood them as we did, I concluded that you proceeded on your own responsibility alone, in which, knowing the purity of your motives, I have done all that I could to justify the measure. I well knew, also, the misconduct of the Spanish authorities in that quarter, not of recent date only.

Finding that you had a different view of your power, it remains only to do justice to you on that ground. Nothing can be further from my intention than to expose you to a responsibility in any sense, which you did not contemplate.

The best course to be pursued, seems to me, to be for you to write a letter to the department, in which you will state, that, having reason to think that a difference of opinion existed between you and the executive, relative to the extent of your powers, you thought it due to yourself to state your view of them, and on which you acted: This will be answered, so as to explain ours, in a friendly manner by Mr. Calhoun, who has very just and liberal sentiments on the subject. This will be necessary in the case of a call for papers by congress, or may be. Thus we shall at all stand on the ground of honor, each doing justice to the other, which is the ground on which we wish to place each other.

I hope that your health is improved, and Mrs. Monroe unites in her best respects to Mrs. Jackson.

With great respect and sincere regard, I am, dear sir, yours,

JAMES MONROE.

Major gen. A. Jackson, Nashville, Tennessee.

—

D.

Extract from general Jackson's letter of November 15, 1818, to Mr. Monroe.

"Dear Sir,—On my return from the Chickasaw treaty, I found it necessary to pass by Milton's Bluff, where I had established some lands for the culture of cotton, hearing it had been laid out for a town and the lots sold, to have as much of my crop preserved as existing circumstances would permit. From thence I took Huntsville in my route, and did not reach the Hermitage until the 12th instant, and on the 13th received your letter of the 20th ult.; from an attentive perusal of which, I have concluded that you have not yet seen my despatches from Fort Gadsden, of the 5th of May last, which it is reported reached the department of war by due course of mail, and owing to the negligence of the clerks was thrown aside as a bundle of revolutionary and pension claims. This I sincerely regret, as it would have brought to your view the light in which I viewed my orders. The closing paragraph of that despatch is in the following words:

"I trust, therefore, that the measures which have been adopted in pursuance of your instructions, under a firm conviction that they alone are calculated to ensure peace and security to the southern frontier of Georgia."

The moment, therefore, that you assume the ground that I transcend my power, the letter referred to above will, at once, unfold to your mind the view I had taken of them, and make manifest the difference of opinion that exists. Indeed there are no data at present upon which such a letter as you wish written to the secretary of war can be bottomed. I have no ground that a difference of opinion exists between the government and myself, relative to the powers given me in my orders, unless I advert either to your private and confidential letters, or the public prints, neither of which can be made the basis of an official communication to the secretary of war. Had I ever, or were I now to receive an official letter from the secretary of war, explanatory of the light in which it was intended by the government that my orders should be viewed, I would with pleasure give my understanding of them."

—

E.

General Jackson to James Monroe.

Hermitage, near Nashville, December 7, 1818.

Dear Sir,—I have just received your message to both houses of congress, forwarded by you, and have read it with great attention and satisfaction. The Florida question being now fairly before congress, I hope that body will take measures to secure our southern frontier from a repetition of massacre and murder.

From the report of col. King, received and forwarded to the department of war, you will discover that the Indians had concentrated their forces on the Choctaw Hotchy, which gave rise to the affair between them and captain Boyles, which col. King reports.

The collection of the Indians is said to have taken place at this point on their hearing that Pensacola was to be restored to Spain, and that the Indians have declared they will never submit to the United States. If this be the fact, and as to myself I have no doubt, as soon as Spain is in possession of Pensacola, we may expect to hear of a renewal of all the horrid scenes of massacre on our frontier that existed before the campaign, unless captain Boyles, on his second visit, may be fortunate enough to destroy this operation, which you may rely springs from foreign excitement.

Col. Sherburne, Chickasaw agent, requested me to name to you, that he was wearied with his situation, of which I have no doubt: his age and former habits of life but little calculated him for happiness amidst a savage nation. But being dependent for the support of himself and sister on the perquisites of his office, he cannot resign; but it would be a great accommodation to him to be transferred to Newport, should a vacancy in any office occur that he was competent to fill. I have no doubt but he is an amiable old man; and from his revolutionary services, I sincerely feel for him. He is unacquainted with Indians, and all business that relates to them; but at the treaty, as soon as he did understand our wishes and that of the government, he aided us with all his might. The colonel never can be happy amidst the Indians. It would afford me great pleasure to hear that the colonel was comfortably seated in an office in Newport, where he could spend his declining years in peace and happiness with his own countrymen and friends.

Accept assurances of my high respect and esteem, and believe me to be, respectfully, your most obedient servant,

ANDREW JACKSON.

James Monroe, president of the United States.

—

F.

Mr. Monroe to general Jackson.

Washington, December 21, 1830.

Dear Sir,—I received your letter of November 13 some time past, and should have answered it sooner but for the great pressure of business on me, proceeding from duties connected with the measures of Congress.

The step suggested in mine to you of October 20 will, I am inclined to believe, be unnecessary. My sole object in it was to enable you to place your view of the authority under which you acted in Florida on the strongest ground possible, so as to do complete justice to yourself. I was persuaded that you had not done yourself justice in that respect, in your correspondence with the department, and thought that it would be better that the explanation should commence with you, than be invited by the department. It appeared to me that that would be the most delicate course in regard to yourself. There is, it is true, nothing in the department to indicate a difference of opinion between you and the executive, respecting the import of your instructions, and for that reason, that it would have been difficult to have expressed that sentiment without implying by it a censure on your conduct, than which nothing could be more remote from our disposition or intention.

On reviewing your communication by captain Gadsden, there were three objects pre-eminently in view: the first, to preserve the constitution from injury; the second, to deprive Spain and the allied powers of any just cause of war; and the third, to improve the occurrence to the best advantage of the country, and of the honor of those engaged in it. In every step which I have since taken, I have pursued those objects with the utmost zeal, and according to my best judgment. In what concerns you personally, I have omitted nothing in my power to do you justice, nor shall I in the sequel.

The decision in the three great points above stated, respecting the course to be pursued by the administration, was unanimously concurred in; and I have good reason to believe that it has been maintained since, in every particular, by all, with perfect integrity. It will be gratifying to you to know that a letter of instructions has been drawn by the secretary of state to our minister at Madrid, in reply to a letter of Mr. Pizzaro, which has been published, in which all the proceedings in Florida, and in regard to it, have been freely reviewed, and placed in a light which will, I think, be satisfactory to all. This letter will be reported to congress in a few days, and published of course.

On one circumstance it seems proper that I should now give you an explanation. Your letter of January 6 was received while I was seriously indisposed. Observing that it was from you, I handed it to Mr. Calhoun to read, after reading one or two lines, only, myself. The order to you to take the command in that quarter had before then been issued. He remarked, after perusing the letter, that it was a confidential one, relating to Florida, which I must answer. I asked him if he had forwarded to you the orders of gen. Gaines on that subject. He replied that he had. Your letter to me, with many others from friends, was put aside, in consequence of my indisposition and the great pressure on me at the time, and never recurred to until after my return from Loudoun, on the receipt of yours by Mr. Hambly, and then on the suggestion of Mr. Calhoun.

G.

George McDuffie to Mr. Calhoun.

Washington, May 14th, 1830.

Dear Sir,—In answer to the inquiries contained in your note of this morning, I submit the following statement. I very distinctly recollect to have heard Mr. Crawford (I think in the summer of 1818) in conversation with Eldred Simpkins, esq. relative to the proceedings of gen. Jackson in the Seminole war, and to the course pursued by the cabinet, touching those proceedings. Mr. Crawford spoke without any kind of reserve as to the respective parts taken by the different members of the cabinet while the subject was under deliberation. He stated that you had been in favor of an inquiry into the conduct of gen. Jackson, and that he was the only member of the cabinet that had concurred with you. He spoke in strong terms of disapprobation of the course pursued by gen. Jackson, not only in his military proceedings, but in prematurely bringing the grounds of his defence before the country, and forestalling public opinion, thus anticipating the administration. On this point he remarked, that if the administration could not give direction to public opinion, but permitted a military officer, who had violated his orders, to anticipate them, they had no business to be at Washington, and had better return home. I also remember that the National Intelligencer, which was lying on the sofa where Mr. Crawford was sitting, contained an article explanatory of the grounds upon which the administration had proceeded in regard to gen. Jackson's military movements. Mr. Crawford adverted to some part of the article, which laid down a principle of the law of nations, if I mistake not, which went to show that a neutral territory could only be invaded in fresh pursuit of an enemy, and added, "Mr. Adams denies all that." He represented Mr. Adams as going much further in justifying gen. Jackson than even Mr. Monroe, stating that the latter was induced to pass over the conduct of gen. Jackson without public censure, not from a belief that he had not violated his orders and exceeded his power, but from political considerations connected with our relations with Spain.

Your obedient servant, GEO. McDUFFIE.

—

H.

Extract of a letter from the honourable Robert S. Garnett, formerly a member of congress from the state of Virginia, dated Toppahannock, January 12, 1831.

"My dear sir.—A very extraordinary letter I have seen in the Constitutional Whig, purporting to give a correct account of the part which the several members of Mr. Monroe's cabinet took when the conduct of gen. Jackson was before them, has induced me to offer you the following statement.

"Soon after colonel Taylor's election to the senate, and arrival at the seat of government, we paid a visit to Mr. Monroe, and, in the course of the day, col. T. desired Mr. M. to give him some account of the course that had been pursued towards gen. Jackson in regard to the Seminole war, &c. In this conversation, Mr. M. declared that there had been no division in his cabinet, as to the course which should be pursued towards the general. This excited my astonishment, because, in a conversation with Mr. Crawford, either before the debate commenced, or while it was pending, Mr. Crawford had used this expression to me—'general Jackson ought to be condemned.' I noted this expression down in a journal I kept, and subsequently repeated it frequently. Mr. C. Beverly told me that he had mentioned it to general Jackson, when he was at his house in Tennessee, and, I think, said that the general expressed much surprise.

"Hon. J. C. Calhoun."

—

Extract from Mr. Garnett's diary for the 1st February, 1819, referred to above.

"The night before last, colonel Taylor proposed we should go up and see the president, as Everett said he frequently complained of our not going, though we lived so near. Newton would not go, because he had to shave and put on a clean shirt. We found him in the drawing room, with Hay, Everett, Moore, and Findlay. M. and F. and E. soon went out, and so did Hay, who was going to secretary Thompson's. The president then talked very freely about public affairs—gave us an account of the proceedings of the government in relation to the Seminole war. He stated what I have frequently heard before, that the whole cabinet were perfectly agreed that he should not censure general Jackson. It is, however, well understood that Mr. Crawford, out of the cabinet, used his endeavor to have Cobb's resolutions passed; and I could not forbear telling the president, that, in conversation with me about Cobb's resolutions, while they were pending, Mr. Crawford said Jackson ought to be censured. He expressed surprise, and seemed to look regret. He says the members of the cabinet are still in harmony among themselves, apparently.

—

J.

John C. Calhoun to Mr. Monroe.

Washington, May 17, 1830.

Dear Sir,—It has become important to me, in consequence of a recent circumstance, to ascertain whether gen. Jackson's letter to you of the 6th January, 1818—I mean the one in which allusion is made to Mr. J Rhea—was seen, when received, by any one except myself, and, if it was, by whom. I will thank you to inform me by the return mail; and, also, whether the letter above alluded to was before the cabinet, or was alluded to by any of its members, during the deliberation on the Seminole affair.

With sincere regard, I am, &c. &c.

J. C. CALHOUN.

J. Monroe, esq.

K.

James Monroe to John C. Calhoun.

Oak Hill, May 19, 1830.

Dear Sir,—I have received your letter of the 17th, and hasten to answer it. I well remember, that, when I received the letter from general Jackson, to which you allude, of the 16th of January, 1818, I was sick in bed, and could not read it. You were either present, or came in immediately afterwards, and I handed it to you for perusal. After reading it, you replaced it, with a remark that it required my attention, or would require an answer; but without any notice of its contents. Mr. Crawford came in soon afterwards, and I handed it also to him for perusal. He read it, and returned it in like manner, without making any comment on its contents, further than that it related to the Seminole war, or something to that effect. I never showed it to any other person, and I am not certain whether it was he or you who observed that it related to the Seminole war. Having made all the arrangements respecting that war, and being some time confined by indisposition, the letter was laid aside and forgotten by me, and I never read it until after the conclusion of the war, and then I did it on an intimation from you that it required my attention. You ask whether that letter was before the cabinet in the deliberation on the despatches received from the general, communicating the result of that war, or alluded to by any member in the administration. My impression decidedly is, that it was not before the cabinet, nor do I recollect or think that it was alluded to in the deliberation on the subject. Had it been, I could not, I presume, have forgotten it. I received the despatches referred to here, and had made up my mind before I left home as to the part I ought to take in reference to its management, especially if I should be supported in the opinion formed by the administration. That support was afforded it, and I pursued the course which my judgment dictated, with a view to the honor and interest of my country, and the honor of the general who commanded.

With sincere regard, I am, dear sir, yours,

JAMES MONROE.

Hon. J. C. Calhoun.

—

L.

John C. Calhoun to Mr. Wirt.

Washington, May 28, 1830.

Dear Sir,—Circumstances which I need not explain render it necessary for me, in self-defence, to call on you for a statement of my course in the meeting of the cabinet, in the summer of 1818, on the Seminole war. I wish you also to state, whether a private letter from gen. Jackson to Mr. Monroe, such as discovered in the enclosed extract of a letter from Mr. Crawford to Mr. Forsyth, was before the cabinet during the deliberation, or whether any allusion was made to any letter of that description.

With sincere regard, I am, &c. &c.

J. C. CALHOUN.

Hon. Mr. Wirt.

—

M.

Mr. Wirt to Mr. Calhoun.

Washington, May 28, 1830.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of yesterday relates to a meeting of the cabinet in the summer of 1818, relative to the Seminole war. I should not feel myself at liberty to disclose the proceedings of any cabinet meeting without the concurrence of the president and of all the members who attended it; but as your inquiry relates to your own course only, and I can speak of that without involving any one else, I see no impropriety in doing so at your request. Among other ideas thrown out for consideration, according to the usual course of cabinet consultations, I think that, at the first meeting, you suggested the propriety of an inquiry into the conduct of the commanding general; but I remember that the course ultimately adopted had your hearty concurrence; and I remember it the more distinctly because you mentioned it repeatedly to me afterwards, as a striking evidence of the practical wisdom of the president, who suggested it. Thus much I feel myself authorized by the call to say of those deliberations. The circumstances mentioned in the extract you enclose, purporting to be an "extract of a letter from W. H. Crawford, esq. to John Forsyth, esq., dated April 30, 1830," have no place in my recollection. The letter from general Jackson to president Monroe, therein mentioned, is entirely new to me. According to the description of the letter, given of it in the extract, it is one of so singular a character, that, if it had been exhibited at any meeting at which I was present, I think that I could not have forgotten it. The occurrence is said to have taken place twelve years ago. I kept no notes in writing of any of those deliberations, and am speaking merely from memory. But still I think, that if such a letter had been produced and read in my presence, I should have retained some recollection of it; whereas it strikes me, in the description, as a thing perfectly new, and of which I never heard before. In the close of the extract, the writer says: "After that letter was produced, I should have opposed the infliction of punishment upon the general, who had considered the silence of the president as a tacit consent." I have no recollection that punishment had been proposed by any one, unless an inquiry into the official conduct of the general can be regarded as punishment. It strikes me, too, that if that letter had been produced, and Mr. Crawford had placed his implied change of opinion on the inference of acquiescence which he supposed the general to be authorized to draw from the president's silence, it could not have escaped observation, and such a discussion as would have tended to have fixed the occurrence on my memory, that the general had not asked the president for an acquiescence to be inferred from silence, but for a positive hint of his approbation through "some confidential member of congress, say Johnny Ray." Upon the whole, sir, if these things did really occur in my presence, I can only say that they have left not the slightest trace on my memory.

I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. WIRT.

The hon. John C. Calhoun, Vice-President U. S.

—

N.

Copy of a letter to Mr. Adams, 12th January, 1831.

Washington, 12th Jan. 1831.

Sir,—A short time before the last adjournment of congress, a copy of a letter from Mr. Crawford to Mr. Forsyth, in relation to the deliberation of the cabinet on the Seminole question, was placed in the hands of general Jackson, and became the subject of a correspondence between him and myself. In the course of that correspondence, it became necessary, in order to ascertain the truth or error of some of the statements made by Mr. Crawford, to refer to some of the other members of the cabinet, and I accordingly addressed notes to Mr. Monroe and Mr. Wirt, from both of whom I obtained statements. In selecting those gentlemen, instead of yourself and Mr. Crowninshield, I was not in the least degree influenced by any want of confidence in either of you, but simply by feelings of delicacy growing out of political relations, and which I trust to corresponding feelings on your part properly to appreciate.

I learn by a letter from Mr. Crawford, addressed to me subsequent to the close of my correspondence with Gen. Jackson, that he has written to you, and obtained your answer on the subject to which it refers, though he has not furnished me with a copy of his letter to you, nor that of your answer.

This step on his part has, of course, removed the delicacy which I at first felt, and which then prevented me from addressing you.

The part I took in the cabinet deliberation was dictated by a sense of duty, uninfluenced by either the feelings of friendship or enmity. That Gen. Jackson transcended his orders in taking St. Mark's and Pensacola, I have never doubted, then or since. In my opinion, the executive neither did or could constitutionally give orders to take either of those places, or any other Spanish post. Under this impression, I was decidedly in favor, in the early stage of the deliberation, of bringing the subject before a court of inquiry, but finally yielded my opinion to considerations growing out of the political aspect of the question, as connected with Spain, which were presented by you and Mr. Monroe; but, in yielding to them, I still believed, and do now, that, apart from them, and considered under the military aspect of the subject, as at first view, my opinion was correct.

Having thus concurred in the final decision of the cabinet, I gave it a faithful support, without, however, abandoning the correctness of my first conceptions. I make this preliminary statement, in order that you may perceive why my inquiry should be directed only to what might seem a mere collateral circumstance, whether the letter of Gen. Jackson to Mr. Monroe, in which allusion is made to John Ray, was before the cabinet, which, though not calculated to affect the question of the correctness of my course, however decided, from the prominence that Mr. Crawford has given it, has assumed no small degree of importance in the correspondence. He, in his letter to Mr. Forsyth, says: "Indeed, my own views on the subject had undergone a material change after the cabinet had been convened. Mr. Calhoun made some allusion to a letter the general had written the president, who had forgotten that he had received such a letter, but said, if he had received such an one, he could find it, and went directly to his cabinet, and brought the letter out. In it Gen. Jackson approved of the determination of the president to break up Amelia island and Galveztown, and gave it also as his opinion, that the Floridas ought to be taken by the United States. He added, that it might be a delicate matter for the executive to decide, but, if the president approved of it, he had only to give a hint to some confidential member of congress, say Johnny Ray, and he would do it, and take the responsibility of it on himself."

The object of my addressing you is, to obtain a statement from you, whether such a letter was, or was not, before the cabinet during its deliberation.

As connected with the subject of my inquiry, I must ask of you the favor to furnish me, if you can with propriety, with a copy of Mr. Crawford's letter to you, and a copy of your answer. I make the request on the assumption, that the correspondence can contain nothing that would render it improper that a copy should be placed in my possession. I would make the request of Mr. Crawford himself, instead of you, had I not declined all communication with him in relation to the subject of the correspondence between Gen. Jackson and myself, except through the general, through which channel no opportunity to make the request has been afforded me.

—

O.

John Q. Adams to J. C. Calhoun.

Washington, 14th January, 1831.

Sir,—I received this morning your letter of the 12th instant, and, in giving to it an immediate and explicit answer, I trust you will perceive the propriety of my confining myself to the direct object of your enquiries.

In the course of the last summer, I received a letter from Mr. Crawford, referring to the consultations of Mr. Monroe with the heads of the departments, in the summer of 1818, upon the proceedings of general Jackson in Florida, on the occasion of the Seminole war, and alluding to a letter from general Jackson to Mr. Monroe, which he stated to have been produced at one of those meetings, and to which his own letter appeared to attach some importance.

Mr. Crawford did not state to me the purpose of his enquiries, nor was I aware that any previous correspondence in relation to the subject had taken place But as the contents of his letter appeared to me to be of peculiar interest to the character of Mr. Monroe, I answered him that I had no recollection of the production of such a letter as that to which he referred, and requested his permission to communicate his letter to Mr. Monroe himself. To this answer I have received no reply.

Neither the letter of Mr. Crawford, nor the letter book containing the copy of my answer to it, are at this moment in my possession, having left them both at my residence in Quincy. The letter from Mr. Crawford did not purport to be confidential; but, as it related to transactions sacredly confidential in the cabinet of Mr. Monroe, I have not thought myself at liberty to furnish a copy of it without his permission, even to Mr. Monroe: the same principle applies to your request for a copy; but I will immediate write and direct a copy of my answer to be made, which, when received, shall be cheerfully communicated to you.

I am, with respectful consideration, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

John C. Calhoun, esq.

—

P.

Mr. Crowninshield to Mr. Calhoun.

Washington, January 30, 1830.

Dear Sir,—My recollection having been called to a letter received from the hon. W. H. Crawford in July, 1830, wherein he asks my attention to "circumstances that transpired during the cabinet deliberations on the events of the Seminole war," and my reply thereto: It is proper for me to state, that I answered Mr. Crawford as though he alluded to transactions which took place while I was in Mr. Monroe's cabinet; but, since my arrival here this session, I learn, for the first time, that the cabinet meeting alluded to by Mr. Crawford, was held after I retired from the cabinet.* I left Washington, in company with president Monroe and yourself, for Norfolk, by the way of Annapolis, on the 28th May 1818. Now, sir, I do not pretend to know one word of what was said or done at any subsequent meeting; and I do therefore disclaim and say that my letter in answer to Mr. Crawford must not be interpreted so as to affirm or deny any cabinet transactions which took place after I left the cabinet.

It is difficult for me to account how I could have blended other things, so as to connect them with events of which I could know nothing. It is a long time since those things occurred, and memory is treacherous; and that, I beg you to believe, is the only reason of the misapprehension on my part.

I am with high consideration, your obedient servant,

B. W. CROWNINSHIELD.

Hon. J. C. Calhoun, vice president.

—

Q.

Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Crawford, returning his letter of 2d Oct. 1830.

Fort Hill, October 30, 1830.

Sir,—The last mail brought me your letter of the 2d instant but post marked the 23d, which I herewith return.

I cannot consent to correspond with you on the subject to which it refers. The controversy is not with you, but general Jackson. You, from the first, voluntarily assumed the character of the informer. Under that character only can I know you, which of course precludes all communication between us in relation to the controversy, except through general Jackson. Regarding you in the light I do, you may rest assured that no abuse on your part, however coarse, nor charges against me, however false, can possibly provoke me to raise you to the level of a principal, by substituting you in the place of general Jackson in the correspondence. Should you, however, submit to the degradation of the position which you have thus voluntarily taken, and will send this or any other statement to general Jackson, and induce him to make it the subject of any further communication to me, as confirming in his opinion your former statement, or weakening my refutation, I will be prepared, by the most demonstrative proof, drawn from the paper itself, to show such palpable errors in your present statement as to destroy all confidence in your assertions; leaving it, however, to those who have the best means of judging to determine whether the want of truth be owing to a decayed memory or some other cause.

Having been taught by the past the necessity of taking all possible precaution where I have any thing to do with you, I deem it prudent not to deprive myself of the advantage which your paper affords me, and have accordingly taken a copy, as a precautionary measure. I am, &c. J. C. CALHOUN.

W. H. Crawford, esq.

* Mr. Crowninshield could not have been present at any cabinet counsel on the Seminole affair. The first meeting on that subject took place on the 15th or 16th of July, 1818; Mr. Monroe having returned on the 14th, from his residence in Loudoun. The National Inteligencer of the 7th of July announced the arrival of Mr. Crowninshield at his residence in Massachusetts, on the 9th. He resigned in October following, without having returned to Washington. Nor could he have been present at any meeting of the cabinet on the subject of the capture of St. Mark's or Pensacola, in which I was. The Intelligencer of the 29th of of May, 1818, announces the departure of the president, (Mr. Monroe,) Mr. Crowninshield, and myself for Norfolk, before information was received at Washington of either St. Mark's or Pensacola. The two former returned to Washington. I proceeded to my residence in Carolina, and did not return to Washington until the 9th of July, subsequent to Mr. Crowninshield's arrival in Massachusetts.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 2—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, MARCH 12, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1016

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞ We have the pleasure to bring up the lee-way of the journals of congress and give a list of the acts passed, at the late session; but many reports and speeches remain for insertion, as leisure serves. After another week, we hope to feel a little at our ease, and to have some room that "we can call our own." At any rate, we shall give a greater variety of matter than we have latterly been permitted to do.

The effort made last week to get-in the whole of Mr. Calhoun's pamphlet, has had effect in delaying the publication of the index for the last volume until next week.

☞ THE "CALHOUN CORRESPONDENCE." We continue the publication of this correspondence in the last pages of the present sheet, and the first of the next will contain the remainder of the regular papers, so far as published, in an unbroken mass, when the volume is bound. We shall then record some of the essays that have appeared in the belligerent newspapers, especially the "Telegraph" and "Globe"—some of which have more than an editorial character. An impartial account of these things shall be preserved.

☞ Those who feel a particular interest in the points at issue between the president and vice president of the United States—or, rather in the cause set forth as the origin of them—by referring to the 14th volume of the REGISTER, page 383, will find a matter of important bearing on the subject, being an article from the "National Intelligencer" of July 27, 1818, as to the decision of the government with respect to general Jackson's conduct in the Seminole war, which is to be regarded as official.

GENERAL POST OFFICE. The memorial of Abraham Bradley, presented to the senate, and the proceedings had in that body concerning the affairs of the general post office, have excited no ordinary interest. We publish them so far as received, without remark, except to say—that editorial articles have appeared both in the "United States' Telegraph" and "Globe"—(the discordant "organs"), softening down the facts, and rejecting the inferences which seem attached to them. What the post-master general, (or any other proper officer in the department), shall affix his name to, shall be inserted by us;—but we never place newspaper assertions in opposition to such official proceedings.

OMINOUS. A resolution has passed the senate of Pennsylvania, 19 to 14, asking the aid of congress in favor of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, by the subscription of an additional million of dollars. Some regard this as a protest against veto.

MR. VAUGHAN, the British minister at Washington, about to return home, was invited to and attended a public ball and supper, given by the members of congress and citizens of the metropolis, on the 1st instant. This mark of respect was well due to the worthy gentleman, whose unfeigned goodness of heart and generous hospitality endeared him to all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. We wish him a safe and happy arrival in his native land, which he has faithfully served, in all courtesy to the government and people to whom he was sent.

WOOL. The Vermont Chronicle states that the agents for some unknown persons have recently been employed in some towns in the vicinity of Windsor, in buying up all the wool on the backs of the sheep, to be delivered after shearing. They advance the cash for it at from 48 to 55 cts. per lb.—One town has received and will receive about $25,000 for wool.

The middle quality wools have lately risen about 15 per cent. in England.

The New Hampshire Statesman of the 19th Feb. says —"We understand that wool to the amount of more than 200,000 dollars was purchased and paid for soon after sheep-shearing the last year, by agents residing in a single town upon the Connecticut river—affording a handsome profit to the farmer, and making money quite plenty in that section of the state. This, however, was the purchase of but a single neighborhood in New Hampshire. Equally large ones were made at other places upon the Connecticut."

Dr. Jarvis, of New Hampshire, has lately sold 15,000 lbs. of his own wool, for 70 cents per lb.—or 10,500 dollars. A good business this for one farmer. But probably, the amount of several shearings was on hand.

A Buffalo paper says that great prices have been paid for very large numbers of live sheep, which are at once slaughtered for their hides and tallow, the flesh being boiled and fed to swine. There appears to be several establishments for carrying on this new business, at each of which an hundred sheep are thus disposed of daily.

[Mr. Randolph would have a hard job, if compelled to "kick every sheep" in the northern states—however fitting the employment might be.*]

VIRGINIA. The great system of internal improvement in this state, after long debates, has been defeated in the house of delegates 66 to 57—some of the members seemingly to prefer that no improvement should be made, unless their own immediate neighborhood had a part in it. The same disposition has much distracted Pennsylvania, and embarrassed her finances, in causing too many praise-worthy undertakings to be started at once. The happy location of New York, in a great degree, enabled her to avoid this mighty difficulty.

Thus it would generally be, should the scheme of dividing the surplus revenue among the states ever be carried into effect. Sectional jealousies, if they did not wholly waste the money, would render it nearly useless.

NULLIFICATION. The following letter from Washington, with its introduction, is copied from the Columbia Times of the 19th ult.

"We publish the following letter from Washington, at the request of the gentleman to whom it was addressed. It speaks for itself, and comment on our part is unnecessary. General Jackson mistakes the Carolinian character, if he believes that acts like this will not arouse a spirit that will crush him and his myrmidons. South Carolina placed him where he is, and her generous sons have refused to take office at his hands; lest it might be construed into compensation for services rendered to their country—as they thought. They are not now to be coerced by his power—nor will they bear to be menaced and denounced longer than they can with becoming dignity smile at his imbecile threats, and treat his proscription with contempt and scorn.

"Washington, Feb. 4, 1831.

"DEAR SIR—I have just learned from our friend, that col. Drayton submitted the name of Mr. Findlay, of Charleston, to the president, with a recommendation signed by Hayne, Nuckolls, Martin, McDuffie, Barnwell, and others, for the office vacated by the lamented death of John Gadsden; and that the appointment was refused on the avowed ground, that he had been in favor of a "state convention, and was a reputed nullifier." This information, he said, he received from Blair, and

*The extraordinary minister magnificently said, in his place in congress, that he would go "twenty rods out of his way to kick a sheep." How edifying to his hearers, and how chaste and beautiful, and sublime!

I believe he added, judge Smith. You will see from this, that  means, through the patronage of the federal government, to regulate your state elections."

☞ It is said that there has been a sharp correspondence between Mr. Hayne and the president, on this subject. "Jacksun and state rights" was the late battle-cry of the nullifiers. What next?

INDIAN MEDALS. Three thousand dollars were inserted in the appropriation bill, on the motion of Mr. McDuffie, to procure medals for Indians, in the current year—but nine hundred dollars paid for the same purpose, three or four years ago, filled a large space in the silly report of the famous "committee on retrenchment"—the printing of which probably cost more than was saved by their long labors; if indeed, the saving of one cent was effected by them. We rather think that the whole resulted in "making a book."

"THE MORGAN AFFAIR." The New York Commercial Advertiser, speaking of the trial of Adams, at Lockport, on an indictment as one of the Morgan conspirators, says—"A flood of light has at length blazed upon this dark transaction, so long in its essential particulars concealed, but which, it has at last been made to appear clear as the noon-day sun, ended in the foulest murder. A mass of new evidence has been brought to light, and the horrid mystery is disclosed. The relation of Giddings, bearing the impress of truth on every feature, is a narrative which, like the tale of the ghost in Hamlet, whose lightest word

> "Would harrow up thy soul; freeze thy young blood;
> Make thy two eyes like stars, start from their spheres;
> Thy knotted and combined locks to part,
> Like quills upon the fretful porcupine."

And adds—"But notwithstanding the fact, that the testimony against Adams, was as clear as though written with a sunbeam, yet the jury has been discharged—not being able to agree. There were eleven for convicting the prisoner, and one resolutely against it.—This one man, we are sorry to be obliged to add, is a mason."

SAFETY FUND. The sum of $26,983 67 is to the credit of the (Bank), Safety Fund in New York, paid by 29 banks, having a capital of $6,294,000. The New York, (city), banks are now paying into this fund, and the receipts for the current year are estimated at $81,079—total 1st Jan. 1832—$108,062. Thus the banks are compelled to assure each others solvency.

APPOINTMENTS by the president and senate. George W. Erving, (several years ago American minister to Spain) to be charge des affaires to Constantinople.

Wm. J. Duane, to be commissioner (with Messrs. Winchester and Hoyt) to adjust the claims under the Danish treaty, in the place of Stephen Simpson, rejected by the senate.

Lemuel T. Lloyd, to be collector of the customs for the district of Miami, and inspector of the revenue for the port of Maumee, in the state of Ohio.

Basil Shaw, to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue for the port of Nashville, in the state of Tennessee.

Charles Larrabee, to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue for the port of Cincinnati, in the state of Ohio.

Edward Jones, to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue for the port of Pittsburg, in the state of Pennsylvania.

James W. Moss, to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue for the port of St. Louis, in the state of Missouri.

John W. Bingy, to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue for the port of Ponchartrain, in the state of Louisiana.

Andrew Elliott, to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue for the port of Wheeling, in the state of Virginia.

John Biddle, to be register of the land office for the district of lands subject to sale at Detroit, in the territory of Michigan, from the 10th of January, 1831, when his commission expired.

Thomas C. Shelden, to be receiver of public moneys for the district of lands subject to sale at Monroe, in the territory of Michigan, when the commission of Charles James Lanman expired.

Joshua Baker, to be surveyor of public lands for the state of Louisiana.

[The nomination of S. C. Stambaugh, as an Indian agent, was not approved by the senate.]

The following appointments were made some time ago—

Edward Pescud, to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue, for the port of Petersburg and City point, in the state of Virginia, vice John H. Peterson, deceased.

William Linn, to be receiver of public moneys, for the district of lands subject to sale at Vandalia, in the state of Illinois, vice Wm. L. De Ewing, removed.

John Randolph Clay, of Pennsylvania, to be secretary of legation of the United States, at St. Petersburg.

Thomas Finley, of Maryland, to be marshal of the United States, for the district of Maryland, whose commission has expired.

William P. McKee, to be register of the land office for the district of lands subject to sale at Edwardsville, in the state of Illinois, from the 13th day of January, 1831, when his commission expired.

Shadrach Bond, to be register of the land Office for the district of lands subject to sale at Kaskaskia, in the state of Illinois, from the 28th day of January, 1831, when his commission expired.

Ingoldsby W. Crawford, to be collector of the customs for the district of New London, in the state of Connecticut, vice Thomas Mussey, rejected by the senate.

Benjamin J. Harrison to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue for the port of Louisville, in the state of Kentucky, vice James Madison Campbell, resigned.

William H. Wickes, to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue for the port of Chester, in the state of Maryland, from the 5th day of January, 1831, when the commission of George Vickers expired.

Joseph Sands, to be collector of the customs for the district, and inspector of the revenue for the port of Annapolis, in the state of Maryland, from the 19th of December, 1830, when the commission of Alexander Randall expired.

Abraham Edwards, to be register of the land office for the district of lands subject to sale at Munroe, in the territory of Michigan, from the 3d day of March, 1831, when the commission of Robert Clarke will expire.

James G. Reed, to be receiver of public moneys for the district of lands subject to sale at Jeffersonville, in the state of Indiana, vice William H. Hurst, removed.

John Coffee, of Alabama, to be surveyor of public lands in Alabama, to take effect after the expiration of his present commission.

Gideon Fitz, to be surveyor of public lands south of Tennessee, vice Joseph Dunbar, resigned.

George B. Porter to be marshal of the eastern district of Pennsylvania, vice John Conard, whose commission had expired.

Henry Ashton to be marshal of the District of Columbia, vice Tench Ringgold.

Among the rejections by the senate was the nomination of Thomas Mussey, as collector at the port of New Haven, Conn. in place of Richard Law, a soldier of the revolution and one of the surviving inmates of the famous Jersey prison ship; also of Frederick List, who lately arrived in the United States from Germany, as consul at Hamburg, in place of Mr. Cuthbert, removed.

NAVY PROMOTIONS.

To be post captains—Masters comd't Finch, Shubrick, Morgan and Clackson—4.

To be masters commandant—Lieutenants—Wm. D. Slater, Charles S. McCauley, Thomas M. Newell, Elie A. F. Valette, Wm. A. Spencer, John H. Aulick, Wm. V. Taylor, Mervin P. Mix, Bladen Dulany, Silas H. Stringham—10.

To be lieutenants—Passed midshimen, J. H. Ward, H. Hoff, J. Ingersoll, Grey Skipwith, Mason Murray,

C. H. Davis, Stephen Johnson, J. D. Swift, Jerome Callan, Pedro C. Valdes, C. M. Armstrong, E. Farran, H. H. Bell, P. S. Stockton, W. Smith, Hamilton E. V. Robinson.

We learn than lieut. Edmund P. Byrne, of the navy, has been reinstated. [Norfolk Herald.

CAMPAIGN IN GEORGIA!

The following, from the Georgia Journal of the 10th of Feb. presents us with a fine specimen of "nullification.' The "gold diggers," for resisting the laws of Georgia, are considered such bad men, that "the punishments of this world are inadequate to their crimes;" so, that justice may be rendered, they are piously consigned to "Auld Cloutie"—the first "nullificator,"—"might constituting right," in all cases whatsoever! We may see what these men will say, if they themselves shall be so treated and denounced, for "only just" resisting the law of the land—a matter of small importance, in the opinion of certain foreign politicians who have located themselves in the south, to count up the value of the union!

Col. Sanford to gov. Gilmer.

Agency, at Scudder's, Jan. 22, 1831.

His excellency George R. Gilmer:

SIR—In my letter of the 15th inst. to your excellency, I mentioned that col. Nelson was charged with an expedition to the upper mines. On Monday the 17th inst. he returned to head quarters, having successfully accomplished the object of his march. I regret, however, to add, that in the performance of that duty, he has had to encounter difficulties of the most serious and embarrassing nature. I regret it the more, inasmuch, as I may have induced the belief that the law in relation to this territory would be readily submitted to, and would itself, thus become a sufficient safe-guard of the interest it was designed to protect. I must confess, however, that I have been mistaken: not, indeed, in the character of those from whom the opposition has arisen, but from the daring and outrageous manner of their resistance. Col. Nelson, in his enterprise upon Daniel's (upper mines), having succeeded in arresting several persons, guilty of working the mines since the 1st, their friends and former associates became apprised by some means of their capture, and from their subsequent conduct, no doubt, resolved upon their release. For this purpose, they assembled in force (between 50 and 60) early in the morning of the 16th, at Leather's ford, having ascertained that the command with the prisoners, would cross the Chastatee at that place. The first act of their hostility was indicated by their having caused a number of obstructions in the passage of the river, with a view of harrassing the detachment and otherwise perplexing and retarding its movements. These were, however, avoided without any great difficulty, and the opposite shore having been reached in safety, the van escorting the prisoners, resumed its line of march. It had proceeded but a short distance, when the sergeant commanding the rear, brought intelligence of its being attacked, to col. Nelson. Having secured the prisoners (11 in number) with a sufficient guard, he hastened immediately to the scene of engagement. Upon his approach, the assailants desisted from their attack, with the exception of three, who continued the assault with great fury, until checked by the bayonet. One of these, the vilest of the vile, received a couple of severe wounds, believed at the time, to have been mortal; but upon examination, it was found that he was not likely to experience the fate so richly merited by his infamous life, and still more infamous conduct in this affray. Previously to the rencounter, he had, I learn, professed the utmost contempt of Georgia, her laws, her officers, denied her jurisdiction over this territory, and encouraged those who were inclined, to violate her recent enactments in relation thereto, with the protection of his valorous arm. In the practical demonstration of his prowess, he has learnt a lesson, which may hereafter be serviceable to himself, and a hint to all others who may be disposed to invade our rights or infringe our laws. Its good effects have already been experienced, for I understood, that no less than 70 of these desperate and abandoned wretches have suddenly disappeared from their former haunts in the settlements. Even before the occurrence of the affair at the Ford, individual members of the guard, when alone, had been insulted, and menaced in a manner that evidenced the most inveterate and rancorous feeling. Aware of their hostility, from what he too had seen, col. Nelson advised his men to a cautious and circumspect deportment whilst passing them, and to refrain from any expression or observations, in the most remote degree calculated to enrage or provoke them. In obedience to this order, the command were proceeding quietly and peaceably, when the outrageous abuse of this horde, elicited a reply from one of his men. In an instant, as if by pre-concert, the whole clan commenced gathering stones, billets of wood, and every species of missile, discharging them at the guard. It was with the utmost difficulty that they were restrained from returning this unexpected salutation with a volley of musketry—Again and again were their pieces levelled, whilst the often repeated, order "reserve your fires," alone prevented their discharge. Your excellency will discover in this attack, a plan previously arranged and digested with considerable military tact. They calculated that by engaging with the rear, that the front having charge of the prisoners, would be necessarily called to its relief, and that an opportunity would thus be presented of effecting their escape in the confusion which would ensue. The precaution of the commanding officer prevented the accomplishment of this design. Having failed in their attempt, they next sought his arrest by legal process, and accordingly a warrant was obtained, demanding the surrender of himself and command. Seeing the very improper purpose for which this writ was issued, he determined that it should not prevent him from doing his duty, and accordingly marched to Gainesville with his prisoners, where eight of them were committed for trial at the next court. Having thus gotten rid of his charge, he declared that it was neither his wish nor intention, whilst apprehending others for violating the law, to oppose any resistance to it himself; that the course he had pursued, was founded in a sense of duty; if in its discharge, he had done wrong, he was willing to submit himself to any tribunal having cognizance of his offence. The hue and cry against the guard for its conduct in this transaction, has spread far and wide, through the country. Falsehoods, accusing them of crimes of the most atrocious and aggravated character, are daily fabricated and circulated for the purpose of rendering them odious to the public. The motive for this is too palpable to be mistaken for a single moment. The mines under the protection given them, are no longer a source of profit and employment. Misrepresentation and calumny have busied themselves in exciting clamor; and clamor it is thought will effect the removal of the troops. The mines will then be left defenceless, and an opportunity again afforded them of renewing their depredations whilst impunity is secured them by their numbers. These are the calculations of the idle and the dissolute. These are their avowed objects, and really, sir, they have set at work systematically for their accomplishment. In my former letter, I said something about this class of people. I cannot now dismiss them, without expressing to your excellency my conviction, that there does not exist on earth, elsewhere, beings so vicious and so depraved. To me they seem to be predestinated and incorrigible, and that the punishments of this world are inadequate to their crimes. Yet, even, with these miscreants, when compelled to an intercourse, I have uniformly inculcated a respectful deportment, and I hope your excellency will believe that nothing has been done which the good of the country did not imperiously demand. This has been my constant aim, and every thing will be done having a tendency in the least degree towards its promotion.

The guard, notwithstanding their exposure, retain fine health. Twenty of them, under command of col. Nelson, left this on the 19th, for the lower mines, Sixes, Alatoona, &c. Daniel's will be again visited upon his return.

—

Col. Sanford to gov. Gilmer.

Agency at Scudder's, Jan. 29, 1831.

His excellency George R. Gilmer,

SIR—It is with feelings of the most unfeigned satisfaction, that I communicate to your excellency that the command dispatched to the lower mines has returned to the encampment, without encountering any obstacle in its progress, or having had occasion, in any instance, for the exercise of its authority. The country through which their route lay was all quietness and submission, and their reception, if not welcome, has been, at least, friendly and respectful. I doubt not, but intelligence of the decisive and energetic conduct at the ford, has contributed mainly to this desirable result; and I hope its recollection, will still continue them in a course thus conducive to their happiness, and their welfare. I am aware, however, that whatever may be appearances, there is at this time, an extreme repugnance to our jurisdiction, and nothing, in my opinion, prevents its violent manifestation, but the paucity of their number, and the imbecility of their power.—Conscious of their own impotency, they look forward with hope and confidence to the supreme court, for an arrest of our proceedings upon these premises. They are still deluded with the belief of the success of their application, and that Georgia will be compelled to recede from the position she has assumed. Should, however, its decree be averse to their pretensions, the agony is over, "aye and forever." Their chieftains, rather than longer submit to our dominion, will look to a region, where they can without trouble or molestation exercise their own. This event will probably take place, happen what will, if Georgia be only true to herself. The operation of her laws is attended with daily increasing disquietude in their ranks, and with utter dismay in those of their counsellors.

PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS, &c.

In the legislature of New Jersey.

A majority of the committee to whom was referred certain resolutions of the legislature of Alabama, in relation to their confidence in the present administration of the general government, beg leave to report the following resolutions:—

Resolved by the council and general assembly of the state of New Jersey. That we remember with sentiments of gratitude, the distinguished services of general Andrew Jackson for his country, in the second struggle for the rights of liberty and independence; that we applaud the intelligence of the people who raised him to the highest office in the gift of a free nation; that upon a fair and full view of his official conduct, since he has been president of the U. States, we pronounce him to have answered our best expectations, and to have administered the government in accordance with the true republican principles of the national constitution; the rights of the several states of the union, and the liberties of the people. The policy of the nation we view at the present moment as established upon a firm and safe basis—prosperous at home, respected abroad—our agriculture is cherished—our manufacturers are protected—our commerce is extending—our national debt is rapidly approaching towards extinguishment. We have nothing to hope, and every thing to fear from a change of the present national administration. Our duty, our interest, our honor, and our affections, are alike united in the re-election of our present chief magistrate.

Resolved therefore, That we approve of the recommendations made by the republican members of the legislatures of New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Alabama and Illinois, of gen. Andrew Jackson, to fill the office of chief magistrate of the United States, for the next presidential term.

The minority of the committee to whom were referred the resolutions of the legislature of Alabama, beg leave to express their dissent from the report of the majority of that committee, and to offer the following resolutions, viz:

Resolved, That it is no part of the duty of the legislature to express any opinion with regard to the merits of presidential candidates—that the duty prescribed and the power given to the legislature by the constitution is simply "to make laws," and not presidents; and that if the latter had been the object contemplated in the election of members of the legislature, instead of the former, it is manifest from the opinion of the people of New Jersey, as expressed on the 28th and 29th of December last, that the language of the majority of this house would have been very different from what it now is.

Resolved, That the course of policy pursued by the present executive, has served but to confirm the opinion which we have always entertained of his total incapacity to administer the affairs of the government.

Resolved, That we disapprove of the unnecessary and extravagant expenditure by the executive of more than $100,000 of the public money by recalling able and accomplished foreign ministers, for the purpose of supplying their places with political partizans, some of whom were totally unfit for the stations they were appointed to fill.

Resolved, That the dismission from office of honest and faithful officers, and particularly of revolutionary veterans, for no other reason, than that they preferred another candidate for the presidency, is an exercise of arbitrary power, destructive of the elective franchise, repugnant to the genius of our republican institutions, and utterly unworthy of the ruler of a free people.

Resolved, That we cordially concur in the sentiment expressed by general Jackson in his letter to the Tennessee legislature, that the appointment of members of congress to important offices, tended to give to the executive an undue influence over the national legislature, which, if continued, will make corruption the order of the day, and cannot therefore but disapprove of his appointment, within the short period of twelve months, of more members of congress to office, than had ever before been appointed by any president during his whole term.

Resolved, That we disapprove of the appointment of an unprecedented and inordinate number of editors of newspapers, to important offices, as tending to gag the free expression of public opinion.

Resolved, That we disapprove of the wanton and gratuitous attack made by the president upon the bank of the United States, which has done so much for the country by restoring a sound currency and preventing the circulation of depreciated paper and notes of insolvent institutions.

Resolved, That we disapprove of the usurpation by the executive of the powers of the federal judiciary, by undertaking to determine, not only upon the construction of treaties, but upon their validity, and the withdrawal of that protection from the Indian tribes, which the United States, by her laws and treaties, was bound to give.

Resolved, That the public debt has not been extinguished as rapidly as it ought and might have been, had proper care and economy been used; for during the last year of the preceding administration, though the income of the national treasury was $66,000 less, the amount of national debt paid exceeds by $808,000, the amount paid during the 1st year of the present administration.

Resolved, that we concur in the opinion expressed by gen. Jackson previous to his election, "that rotation in office is essential to the preservation of the purity of republican principles," and we see no reason why he should be excepted from the operation of his own rule.

Resolved, Therefore, that the duty, the interest and the honor of the state of New Jersey, call loudly for the change of the present chief magistrate, and the election of a president more favorable to internal improvements and domestic manufactures, and to the preservation of our national faith with the Indian tribes.

—

From the Annapolis Republican, Feb. 19.

At a meeting of the members of both branches of the legislature of Maryland, opposed to the policy of the present administration, convened by appointment in the hall of the house of delegates, on Thursday the 17th of February, 1831, gen. James Thomas, of the senate, was called to the chair, and gen. Solomon Dickinson, of the house of delegates, was appointed secretary: whereupon the following resolutions were submitted, considered and adopted nem. con.

Resolved, That it is the duty of all who love their country, to unite in strong endeavor, at the next presidential election, to deliver it from the hands of men who have threatened, assailed, and greatly endangered all that is valuable and venerable in our institutions.

Resolved, That it is expedient that a national convention be held, to which the people of all the states shall be invited to send delegates, in which their will can be authentically ascertained, and that concert of action produced, which is essential to the success of our cause.

Resolved, That it be, and it is hereby recommended to all persons in this state, opposed to the re-election of Andrew Jackson, to elect, in such manner and at such time as they may deem convenient, one delegate from each congressional district, to meet in general convention in the city of Baltimore, on the second Monday of December next—and that this meeting will appoint two delegates—one from the eastern and one from the western shore, to attend the said convention.

Resolved, That our brethren of other states, who with us deprecate the re-election of Andrew Jackson, be, and they are hereby invited to meet in general convention, at Baltimore, on the second Monday of December next by delegates equal in number to the electors of president to which their states are respectively entitled, in order that after full consultation, the convention may present as candidates for the presidency and vice presidency, statesmen the best established in public confidence, and calculated to promote our common object, the safety and welfare of the country.

Joseph J. Merrick, esq. for the western, and general Solomon Dickinson, for the eastern shore, were then appointed delegates to the national convention.

And having ordered that the foregoing resolutions and proceedings be published in the Maryland Republican, and other friendly prints, the meeting adjourned.

JAMES THOMAS, chairman.
SOLOMON DICKINSON, secretary.

TWENTY-FIRST CONGRESS—2d SESSION.

SENATE.

February 25. On motion of Mr. Poindexter, it was Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to inform the senate whether the appropriations of money heretofore made for the improvement of the navigation of the rivers Ohio and Mississippi, commencing at Louisville, in the state of Kentucky, have been faithfully and beneficially applied to those objects, whether the obstructions to the passage of steamboats and other craft on said rivers have been removed, and if so, at what places, to what extent, and what sum has been expended on such works of improvement, respectively; and also, whether the superintendent employed to expend said appropriations for the purposes aforesaid, has discharged his duties to the satisfaction of the department, from which he received his appointment. [Referred on the 28th.]

Mr. Benton laid before the senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That the powers conferred on congress by the states to lay and collect duties, and to regulate commerce, are distinct and inconvertible powers, aiming at different objects, and requiring different forms of legislative action; the levying power being confined to imports, and chiefly intended to raise revenue; the regulating power being directed to exports, and solely intended to procure favorable terms for the admission of the ships and products of the states.

2. That the power to lay and collect duties on imports was solicited by the founders of the present federal government, and granted by the states, for the express purpose of paying the public debt, and with the solemn and reiterated assurance that the duties levied for that purpose should cease the moment the debt was paid; which assurance was given in answer to objections from the states, and to quiet the apprehensions expressed by some of them, that the grant of power to congress to raise revenue from the commerce of the states, without limitation of time, or quantity, and without accountability to them for its expenditure, might render congress independent of the states, and endanger their liberties and prosperity.

3. That the public debt will, (probably), be paid off in the year 1834, and the amount of about twelve millions of dollars of revenue will then be subject to abolition, and ought to be abolished, according to the agreement of the parties at the establishment of the present federal government, and in conformity to the present actual condition and interest of the states.

4. That an abolition of twelve millions of duties will be a relief to the people of from about sixteen millions of taxes, (estimating the retail merchants' advance upon the duties of one-third), and that the said abolition may be made without diminishing the protection due to any essential branch or pursuit of domestic industry, and with manifest advantage to most of them.

5. That for the purpose of enabling congress to determine with entire safety to every interest, and with full satisfaction to the public mind, what branches and pursuits of domestic industry may be entitled to protection and ought to be guarded from the injurious effects of foreign competition, a joint committee of the senate and house of representatives ought to be appointed to take the examinations of practical men, (producers, consumers and importers), in all doubtful cases, and to report their evidence to the two houses of congress.

6. That the said committee ought to be appointed at the commencement of the next stated session.

7. That the power to regulate foreign commerce was granted to congress by the states, for the express and sole purpose of enabling congress to obtain and secure, favorable markets abroad for the exports of their states, and favorable terms for the admission of their ships; and, to effect these objects by establishing an equitable system of commercial reciprocity, discrimination and relation, which should measure back to every foreign nation the same degree of favor, or dislavor, which itself measured out to the commerce and navigation of the United States.

8. That the power to regulate foreign commerce, although one of the first of the enumerated powers of the constitution, and the enduring cause of its adoption, has never yet been exercised by congress.

9. That the approaching extinction of the public debt, and consequent obligation to abolish, and advantage in abolishing, about twelve millions of annual revenue, will enable the United States to receive a large portion of her foreign commerce, say, the one-half thereof, free of duty; and that the fair principles of a just reciprocity, the dictates of obvious policy, justice to the states, and the constitutional duty of the federal government, already too long deferred, will require this government to demand equivalents from all nations which may wish to be admitted to a participation in the enjoyment of this great amount of free and unrestricted trade.

10. That the free importation of the following articles, (among others), may be admitted into the United States without compromising the prosperity of any branch, or pursuit of domestic industry, and with manifest advantage to most of them, namely: linens, silks, wines, coffee, cocoa, worsted stuff goods, several descriptions of woollens; several qualities of fine cottons, several kinds of spirits, &c. &c.

11. That the free importation of the said articles ought to be offered to all nations which shall grant equivalent advantages to the commerce and navigation of the United States, and will receive the products of their industry, namely, fish, furs, lumber, naval stores, beef, bacon, pork, grain, flour, rice, cotton, tobacco, live stock, manufactures of cotton, leather, wool and silk, butter and cheese, soap and candles, hats, glass and gunpowder, lead, shot and sugar, spirits made of grain and molasses, &c. &c. or some adequate proportion thereof, either free of duty, or upon payment of moderate and reasonable duties to be agreed upon in treaties, and to continue for a term of years; and to no other nations whatever.

12. That there is nothing in existing treaty stipulations with foreign powers to prevent the regulation of our commerce upon the foregoing principles.

13. That all commercial nations will find it to their advantage to regulate their commerce with the United States on these principles, as, in doing so, they will substitute a fair and liberal trade for a trade of vexations, oppressions, restrictions, and smuggling; will obtain provisions for subsistence and materials for manufactures on cheaper terms and more abundantly; will promote their own exports; will increase their revenue, by increasing consumption and diminishing smuggling; and in refusing to do so, will draw great injury upon themselves in the loss which will ensue of several great branches of their trade with the United States.

14. That the agriculture, manufactures, commerce, and navigation of the United States would be greatly benefited by regulating foreign trade on the foregoing principles; first, by getting rid of oppressive duties upon the staple productions of the U. States in foreign markets; secondly, by lowering at home the price of many articles of comfort or necessity, imported from abroad.

15. That the safest and most satisfactory mode of regulating foreign commerce on these principles, would be by combining the action of the legislative and treaty making powers, congress fixing, by law or joint resolution, the articles on which duties may be abolished, and the executive negotiating with foreign nations for the grant of equivalents.

16. That, to be in readiness to carry this system of regulating foreign commerce into effect at the extinction of the public debt, it be necessary for congress to designate the articles for abolition of duty at the next stated session.

February 28. The senate being called to order—

Mr. Hendricks rose and said, it becomes, Mr. President, my painful duty to announce to the senate the death of my respected colleague. He departed this life on Saturday evening last at 10 o'clock. His services in this body have been faithful and uninterrupted for the last fifteen years. They have been honorable to himself, and useful to his country, but man go'th to his long home, and with him these services have terminated in the meridian of life. He had indeed lived to see his early associates in the business of this house, retire to other spheres of life, or like himself, pass silently into the grave; yet his friends might reasonably have hoped and expected for him, a longer period of usefulness and distinction. On an occurrence like the present, and especially standing as I do in the midst of a circle so intimately acquainted with the deceased, it will not be expected of me to pronounce his eulogy; but I can speak, and I may be permitted to speak in the language of early and well-tried personal friendship of one highly prized, not only by myself but by the state he has so long had the honor to represent, of an individual idolized by almost every circle in which he ever moved. He was a bold and fearless politician, warm and generous in his feelings. He had a heart that responded to every advance of sympathy and benevolence; a heart formed for the most ardent attachments. Open and undisguised, the prominent traits of his character were always before the world; but a long period of familiar acquaintance, could only develope the ardor, the devotion, and the value of his friendship. For such an associate, it may well be permitted us to mourn, and well assured am I, that in paying these last honors to his memory, we are but giving expression to the feelings of every member of the senate. His society I have enjoyed when he was in health. In sickness I have frequently been near him, and endeavored to sooth his hours of anguish and distress, and I had an opportunity of watching with intense anxiety, and great solicitude, the last moments of his life.

Mr. Burnet then submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, unanimously, That a committee be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral of the hon. JAMES NOBLE, deceased, which will take place at half past 11 o'clock this day, and that the senate will attend the same; and that notice of this event be given to the house of representatives.

The chair stated that, under the circumstances of the case, upon being yesterday informed of the death of the late senator from Indiana, he had appointed a committee of arrangement, and pall bearers; and hoped the course he had pursued would not be disapproved of.

Mr. Burnet then submitted the following resolutions; which were adopted.

Resolved, unanimously, That the members of the senate, from a sincere desire of showing every mark of respect due to the memory of the hon. James Noble, deceased, their late associate, will go into mourning for him for one month, by the usual mode of wearing crape round the left arm.

Resolved, unanimously That as an additional mark of respect for the memory of the hon. James Noble, the senate do now adjourn.

[The body of the deceased was then brought into the chamber of the senate, and placed in front of the secretary's desk. Soon after which, the house of representatives, preceded by their speaker and clerk, together with their sergeant at arms, entered the chamber and were immediately followed by the president of the United States, the heads of departments, and the judges of the supreme court, who respectively took the seats prepared for them. The chaplain to the senate, (the rev. Mr. Johns), then rose and delivered an eloquent and very impressive address, which was followed by a fervent prayer by the rev. Mr. Gurley, the chaplain to the house. A procession was then formed, and proceeded to the East Branch burial ground, where the remains of the deceased were solemnly interred.]

March 2. The following resolutions, yesterday submitted by Mr. Benton, were considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to communicate to the senate, at the commencement of the next stated session of congress, the annual amounts of money paid for drawbacks, premiums, or bounties, on the exportation of fish, beef, and pork, and for allowances to fishing vessels, since the year 1789; also the annual amounts of fish, beef, bacon and pork, exported; with a report of the cases, if any, in which frauds have been detected in drawing money from the treasury on account of said drawbacks, premiums, bounties and allowances.

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to report to the senate, at the commencement of the next stated session of congress, a detailed and classified statement of all the articles of foreign growth or manufacture, which were imported into the U. States for the last commercial year preceding the statement, so as to show the amount, in value, of each article imported, the rate of duty, if any, to which it is subject, and the amount and quantity of nett revenue derived from each.

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to cause to be collected and reported to the senate, at the commencement of the next stated session of congress, the most authentic information which can be obtained of the number and names of the American citizens who have been killed and robbed while engaged in the fur trade, or the inland trade to Mexico, since the late war with Great Britain; the amount of the robberies committed, and at what places, and by what tribes. Also, the number of persons who annually engage in the fur trade, and inland trade to Mexico; the amount of capital employed, and the annual amount of the proceeds in furs, robes, peltries, money, &c. Also, the disadvantages, if any, which these branches of trade labor under, and the means for their relief and protection.

March 3. Mr. Livingston, of Louisiana, said, it would be remembered that on the last day of the last session, he had laid on the table a bill to establish a system of penal law, with the avowed intention of submitting it to the consideration of the senate at this session. The time occupied by the trial of the impeachment, during the beginning, and the extraordinary press of business during the remainder of the session, concurred with other circumstances in preventing him from bringing it up.—Among them was a proposition for appointing commissioners to frame a code of laws for the district of Columbia; for that part of which relating to penal law this system forms an important point. That proposition having, within a few days, failed, Mr. Livingston said he would now, in pursuance of notice given on a former day, move for leave to bring in his bill. It was his intention, had time permitted, to have developed the principles of the bill, some of which would be found extremely important. Under present circumstances, he would confine himself to saying that it laid down general principles applicable to the subject, provided for the cases of those general acts which ought to be punished under the powers vested in the general government, in whatever part of the United States they may be committed, and those which may be committed in places under the exclusive jurisdition of the United States, including of course the District of Columbia—that it accurately defined all offences, provided as well for their prevention as their punishment—includes a complete system of procedure—a code of prison discipline, and a book of definitions explaining all the technical words, used in every part of the system. He would mention two important features in the plan—the one was, providing by positive law for defining and punishing offences against the laws of nations, and among them some which had hitherto been left without any sanction; such as offences against that law which regulated in modern times, the conduct of civilized nations with respect to each other in time of war as well as of peace. As these were entirely new, Mr. L. said he wished, when the document was put in the hands of the senators, they would pay particular attention to its provisions, as well to one most important principle which pervades the whole—THE TOTAL ABOLITION OF THE PUNISHMENT OF DEATH. To this he invited the senators to give a most serious reflection, that they might be prepared to meet the discussion which he should think it a duty to invite at the next session.

Having been prevented by the reasons which he had mentioned, from explaining the provisions of the system in an address to the senate, he would supply it by an introductory report which would be delivered to the members of both houses, together with the system. Mr. L. then moved for leave to bring in the bill, which was granted.

Mr. Robbins said that he held a document on the subject of the abolition of the punishment of death, which he thought would be very useful to the senate in forming an opinion on that subject. It consisted of extracts from reports made to the legislature of Louisiana by the senator from that state, which had been lately published in Pennsylvania. He moved that it might be printed, which was ordered.

On motion of Mr. Woodbury, the senate then went into executive business, and sat with closed doors till 4 o'clock, when they took a recess till six.

In the evening session, except in the consideration of executive business, nothing was done, except to interchange messages with the house of representatives and the president, as usual—and to adjourn sine die.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, Feb. 26. The following were the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill authorising a subscription to certain old documents proposed to be published by Messrs. Gales and Seaton. They will be required for reference.

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arnold, Bailey, Barber, Barbour, Barringer, Bartley, Bates, Baylor, Beekman, Buchanan, Burges, Butman, Cahoon, Chilton, Clark, Condict, Cooper, Coulter, Cowles, Craig, Crane, Crockett, Creighton, Crowninshield, John Davis, Denny, Dickinson, Doddridge, Drayton, Dudley, Duncan, Dwight, Eager, Ellsworth, George Evans, Joshua Evans, E. Everett, H. Everett, Finch, Forward, Gilmore, Grennell, Gurley, Hawkins, Hemphill, Hodges, Hughes, Hunt, Huntington, Ingersoll Johns, R. M. Johnson, Kendall, Kincaid, Leiper, Letcher, Martindale, Mercer, Mitchell, Muhlenburg, Pearce, Pierson, Ramsay, Randolph, Reed, Richardson, Rose, Wm. B. Shepard, Semmes, Sill, Ambrose Spencer, Stanberry, Sterigere, Henry R. Storrs, Wm. L. Storrs, Strong, Sutherland, Swann, Swift, Taliaferro, Taylor, Test, Tracy, Vance, Varnum, Verplanck, Vinton, Washington, Wayne, Whittlesey, Camp. P. White, E. D. White, Wilde, Williams, Wilson, Wingate, Young—98.

NAYS—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Alston, Anderson, Angel, Armstrong, Barnwell, James Blair, John Blair, Bockee, Boon, Borst, Broadhead, Brown, Cambreleng, Carson, Chandler, Claiborne, Clay, Coke, Coleman, Conner, Crawford, Crocheron, Daniel, Davenport, W. R. Davis, Desha, De Witt, Draper, Earll, Findlay, Ford, Foster, Fry, Gaither, Gordon, Hall, Halsey, Hammons, Harvey, Haynes, Hinds, Holland, Hoffman, Howard, Hubbard, Ihrie, W. W. Irvin, Isacks, Jarvis, Cave Johnson, Kennon, Perkins King, Adam King, Lamar, Lea, Leavitt, Lecompte, Lent, Lewis, Loyall, Lumpkin, Magee, Thomas Maxwell, McCreery, McCoy, McDuffie, McIntire, Miller, Nuckolls, Overton, Patton, Pettis, Polk, Potter, Rencher, Roane, Russel, Sanford, A H. Shepperd, Shields, Speight, Richard Spencer, Standefer, Stephens, Wiley Thompson, J. Thomson, Trezvant, Tucker, Weeks, Wickliffe, Yancey—92.

The following is a copy of the bill as it passed both houses—

Be it enacted, &c. That the clerk of the house of representatives be, and he hereby is, authorised and directed to subscribe for seven hundred and fifty copies of the compilation of congressional documents, proposed to be published by Gales and Seaton: Provided, That the documents shall be selected under the direction of the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house of representatives: And provided also, That the price paid for the printing of the said copies shall be at a rate not exceeding that of the price paid to the printer of congress for printing the documents of the houses.

Having in page 470, of the last volume, copied the sketch of the debate referred to in the following note—it is inserted in justice to Mr. Carson.

House of representatives, March 1, 1831.

Messrs. Gales & Seaton: In the report of the debate upon the "bill making additional appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors, and removing obstructions at the mouths of certain rivers," &c. published in your country paper of Thursday last, and previously in your daily paper, my colleague [Mr. Barringer] is made to say, "he had voted with his colleague (meaning myself) on these appropriations heretofore; they were for objects annually provided for by congress, his colleague had voted for them, &c." It is due to myself to state, that my colleague did not say so in his speech delivered, nor could he say so, because I never did vote for such a bill. Upon seeing the first report of the debate, I went to my colleague, and he perfectly concurred with me in my recollection of what he said, and he intended to have corrected the report before it was transferred to your country paper. As my colleague has not done so (owing no doubt to the press of business, which caused it to escape his memory) I hope that you will insert this in your paper, because, as the report now stands, it places me in a very unfair position before the public. Respectfully,

SAMUEL P. CARSON.

Thursday, March 3. Among the proceedings of this day were the following:

Mr. Mercer moved the following resolution:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to renew and to prosecute, from time to time, such negotiations with the several maritime powers of Europe and America, as he may deem expedient, for the effectual abolition of the African slave trade, and its ultimate denunciation, as piracy, under the law of nations, by the consent of the civilized world.

The house having consented to entertain the motion by the requisite number of votes (two-thirds) necessary to suspend a rule;

The question was then taken on agreeing to the said resolution, and decided as follows:

[The yeas were 118—it is hardly worth while to repeat them. The nays were—

Messrs. Alexander, Barbour, Barnwell, James Blair, Bouldin, Carson, Daniel, W. R. Davis, Desha, Dudley, Foster, Gaither, Hall, Haynes, Hinds, C. Johnson, Lamar, Lea, Loyall, Nuckolls, Overton, Patton, Polk, Potter, Rencher, Roane, Speight, Wiley Thompson, Trezvant, Wickliffe, Wilde, Yancey—32.

So the resolve was agreed to.

Mr. McDuffie being temporarily in the chair—

Mr. Carson rose and said—Mr. Speaker: The house of representatives of the twenty-first congress, have met for the last time, and when we separate to-day, many of us will have parted to meet no more forever. My heart admonishes me that this is a fit occasion for us to offer up all our animosities upon the altar of peace, kindness, and good will. In rising, sir, to perform a last act of legislative duty upon this occasion, I do it the more willingly, and with the more pleasure, because, while it is an act of justice, it is an act of friendship.

I ask leave to introduce the following resolution, which I hope will be unanimously received and adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this house be presented to the honorable Andrew Stevenson, speaker, for the dignity, impartiality, promptitude, and ability, with which he has discharged the duties of the chair, during the present session.

In the evening session, after the business had been concluded, and the motion for final adjournment carried,

Mr. Speaker rose, and addressed the house as follows:

GENTLEMEN: I receive with sentiments of profound respect and grateful feeling the renewed expression of your approbation and confidence in my administration of the arduous duties of this high office. The character and power of this house; the rank which it holds in the eyes of the world; the deep and abiding confidence of the nation in the intelligence, virtue, and patriotism of its representatives, must ever render the approbation or censure of this house a matter of no ordinary importance to those who fill high places of public trust and confidence. This station, justly esteemed among the first in distinction and honor, has always been regarded not only as one of elevated character, but of severe responsibility and labor, and of extreme delicacy. In discharging its arduous and multifarious duties, no man can hope to free himself from error, or to give unqualified or universal satisfaction. In times, even, of profound tranquility and repose, to please every one cannot, and ought not, to be expected. Amid the storms of political and party excitements, it would be idle and vain to expect it. My path here for the last four years, has not been strewed with roses. I have had, as you well know, my full share of responsibility, embarrassment, and toil. I can say, however, with truth, that I have endeavored to meet your expectations by a zealous devotion of my time, and even my health, to your service, and by a faithful and independent discharge of my public duty. This, gentlemen, was all that I promised when I received this high appointment at your hands; and in laying it down I feel a proud consciousness that I have redeemed my pledge; and if the trust has not been ably, it has, at least, been honestly discharged. During the entire period of my service, and under all the agitations of the times, it has been my peculiar good fortune and pleasure to receive, in an almost unexampled manner, the kindness and support of the members of this house; and in proof of it I may be permitted to remark, I hope without vanity, that in all the numerous and important decisions which I have been called upon to pronounce from this chair, but one has ever been reversed by the judgment of the house, and that under circumstances which can cause me no regret. Can I, then, feel otherwise than gratified and flattered cheered and consoled, by this renewed and distinguished evidence of your confidence and favor? I receive it, gentlemen, in the spirit in which it has been offered; I cherish it in my heart. It is the highest and the only reward that I either sought or expected; and I shall cherish it through life with feelings of the deepest respect, and the most affectionate gratitude. God grant that you may long live to serve and benefit your country, and enjoy its undiminished confidence, and, in bidding you an affectionate, and, perhaps, last farewell, accept, I pray you, my cordial and best wishes for your individual health, prosperity, and happiness.

He then declared the house to be adjourned sine die.

A very crowded auditory, both of ladies and gentlemen, filled the hall, in addition to the members of the house, but the profoundest stillness prevailed during the delivery of the valedictory, which, added to the effect of the speaker's very strong emotion, rendered his eloquent address exceedingly impressive.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

IN SENATE MARCH 3, 1831.

On motion of Mr. Chambers, the 17th joint rule was suspended for this day, so far as respects those bills which have passed both houses, or require for their final passage an assent only to amendment.

Post office department.

Mr. Clayton, from the select committee appointed on the 15th December last, to inquire into the present state of the post office department, made a report, enumerating certain papers, which the committee were instructed to have printed, but making no comments upon them; the printing was ordered.

Mr. Chambers presented the following memorial from Abraham Bradley, late assistant postmaster general.

To the honorable the senate of the United States.

The memorial of Abraham Bradley, late assistant post master general, most respectfully represents—

That after his removal from office, he, as is well known to the senate, presented to the president of the United States a letter, in which, among other things, he stated that Mr. Barry, the present post master general, had made an extra allowance to Mr. Harrall, a mail contractor, and to others, as this memorialist conceived without warrant of law.

A copy of this letter having been called for, was presented by this memorialist to the present select committee of the senate, on the post office department.

During the last session of congress, a call was made on that department, at the instance of one of the senators from Ohio, for information relative to the extra allowances which had been made to mail contractors.

The response of the department to that call was submitted to the view of this memorialist as containing matters in which he was deeply concerned. Upon examining it to ascertain if his recollection of Harrall's case was correct, he was unmeasurably astonished to find that the extra allowance was there charged to have been made by him, acting as post master general. It was evident that the documents had been originally different, that an erasure had been made, and the name of this memorialist inserted. Induced by this to examine further, he found that forty-nine cases of extra allowance were in that document charged to have been made by him. Thirty-six of these were similar to the case of Harrall: the original document had been mutilated, and the name of A. Bradley, jr. acting as post master general, carefully inserted.

This memorialist called the attention of the committee to these circumstances, as evidence of an attempt to impeach his testimony, and to load his official conduct with opprobrium, being public documentary proof from the books of the department, that he had squandered the public funds during the few days he had acted as post master general, between the 10th of March, when Mr. McLean left the office, and the 5th of April, when Mr. Barry came into it, and that, in order to screen himself, he had charged these things on the latter gentleman. The committee kindly authorised a sub-committee to accompany this memorialist to the department yesterday, the 28th instant, to ascertain whether his statements were correct. Your memorialist confidently appeals to those gentlemen, in support of the fact, that it satisfactorily appeared to them, that in this case of Harrall's as well as in every other case but one in which an erasure had been made, Mr. Barry was originally and properly charged; and that it was there asserted that these erasures had been made by mistake, and his name inserted by mistake. The gentlemen had not time to pursue their inquiry, and no examination was made into those cases originally charged to your memorialist.

In whatever manner these mutilations of the original document may have occurred, and these false amendments to it made by mistake or not, the effect may be, if it goes to the world, to injure, if not to destroy a reputation upon which your memorialist, after nearly forty years public service, must mainly rely for support. The senate has, as he has been informed, directed this report to be printed.

If this should be done, and it should with all its falsehoods and injurious tendency be spread before the people under the sanction of the senate of the United States, your memorialist submits that great injustice must necessarily follow to him. He therefore prays that such order may be taken by the senate as will secure his right, and especially preserve the reputation which documents published by the authority of the senate should always possess. And your memorialist, as in duty bound, &c.

ABRAHAM BRADLEY.

March 1, 1831.

Mr. Chambers moved that the order for the printing of the report referred to be rescinded.

Mr. Grundy thought the better course would be—the right way to do justice—to print the report, and subjoin to it the memorial of Mr. Bradley, and the testimony of Messrs. Brown, Suter, et al.

Mr. Clayton, chairman of the select committee to whom those documents had been referred, rose and observed that they were very voluminous, purporting to be answers to the resolution of the senate of the 14th April last, which directed the postmaster general to report "copies of all existing contracts made by him or his pre-"decessors in office, on which allowances have been "made for additional services; designating in each case, "how much and what additional service has been per-"formed, and by whom it was required, and designating "also what sum has been allowed in each case for such "additional service, and by whom it was allowed." The answer to this call was kept back until about the 10th of last month. During the debate which occurred here on the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee, among other things then said, I complained of this delay as an evidence of a design to baffle inquiry into the concerns of the department; and after that, the report called for in April, 1830, came in. It was first referred to the standing committee on the post office, although I prayed for its reference to the select committee, to whom unquestionably, as we now see, it properly belonged.

The standing committee, without examination, as we must suppose, recommended it to be printed, and the senate ordered it to be printed. After this, and about a week since, it was referred to the select committee. They examined it, and have ascertained that in thirty-six cases of extra allowance to contractors scattered through these documents, embracing some of the grossest violations of the law in granting away the public money to mail contractors, the allowances have been falsely set down as having been made by Abraham Bradley, as acting, or assisting postmaster general, when, in these very cases, the allowances were actually made by the present postmaster general: and for the truth of this I refer to the deposition of Mr. Bradley, those of the clerks in the department, and the report itself of the postmaster general in answer to the call, all now on the table before you, as well as to the statements of the senators from Maine and Tennessee, (Messrs. Holmes and Grundy), who went to the department as a sub-committee, by our directions, to ascertain the facts. These documents in each of these cases, exhibit to your eye palpable erasures, where the name of "William T. Barry, postmaster general," has been rubbed out, and that of "Abraham Bradley, acting postmaster general," inserted. The result of the examination was, that Mr. Barry's name was originally written down on the documents as the person who made the allowances, according to the truth—that the name of Mr. Bradley was afterwards inserted, and now stands in each of these thirty-six cases, which, call them falsehoods, errors, or what you please, certainly misrepresent the fact. Then it is also necessary to state, that the letter of Abraham Bradley to the president, which was read in the debate here on the resolution of the senator from Tennessee, charging Mr. Barry with gross violation of the law in some of these cases (particularly in the case of the South Carolina contract) was written more than a year ago, and shortly after his removal from office; that this letter had been sworn to by Mr. Bradley in the committee, and that the tendency of this falsification of the documents, if undetected, was to convict Mr. Bradley of swearing falsely, who in saying, on his oath, that the postmaster general made the allowances, stated the exact truth. Sir, I have bestowed much attention on these papers, and I do not undertake to say, that these are all the misrepresentations contained in them. They are enough, however, to induce the senate, both in justice to its own character, and the reputation of an excellent citizen and an innocent man, to refuse to give any publicity to documents which all can see, and all now admit to be spurious and mutilated. If they be printed, even with the evidence which proves them false, still injustice may possibly result from it: for it will appear to the world, that the senate had some confidence in these papers; and it may happen that those who shall hereafter read the calumny will not, among such a mass of papers, also advert to the refutation of it. At the time these papers were sent in, Bradley was a witness against the department, and under examination before the committee. All here know what an effort was made in public discussion to impeach his veracity, and I trust all will now admit how entirely that effort failed. But I will not stop to inquire into the motives of those who directed those alterations to be made. With motives we have now nothing to do. But the fact is incontrovertible, that these documents are unworthy of credit. It is therefore unworthy of the senate to publish them, and I hope the order for their publication, made in an unguarded moment, may be rescinded.

Mr. Holmes said—Mr. President, having been selected by the committee as a sub-committee with the senator from Tennessee, (Mr. Grundy) to go to the department, examine the books, and ascertain what was the truth, we took with us the witness under examination, and proceeded to the general post office. We took also the abstract of allowances, now before the senate. This abstract was obtained by a call made on the 14th of April last, made by a senator from Ohio, (Mr. Burnet), requiring among other things, information on extra allowances made to contractors, and for what additional services, that the senate might compare the value of the service with the compensation. The answer to this call did not come to the senate until the 10th February of this session, near nine months. It was referred to the committee on the post office, &c. and by them returned to the senate on the 22d, and ordered to be printed; and was then referred to the committee of inquiry. It was voluminous and exceedingly confused; but some members of the committee discovered at once that it must be erroneous to say the least. The fact is, that Mr. McLean left the department about the 10th March, 1829—that Mr. A. Bradley, the senior assistant, was then the acting post master general, as locum tenens, from that time, until 7th April, less than four weeks. Still, within that time, additional allowances appeared by this "abstract" to have been made, of about $42,000. Upon examining this "abstract" it appeared, moreover, that there had been thirty-six erasures, and A. Bradly's name inserted. The allowance to Harrall appeared the most extraordinary. This was a case of erasure. It seems that Bradley had, on the 17th October, 1829, in a letter to the president, among other things charged Mr. Barry with prodigality, and had instanced this allowance to Harrall. Harrall's contract was for carrying the mail from Georgetown to Charleston, South Carolina, for 6,000 dollars, and the extra allowance was 1,992 dollars, about 33 per cent.; and the cause alleged was two hours expedition; the law allowing only a pro rata addition, which would have been about 8 per cent. if the two hours expedition had been required. But here was another error in the abstract, the expedition required being only one and a half hours.

This extravagance, which Bradley in his letter to the president, had charged upon Barry, and had before the committee verified by his oath, Barry had, in an official communication, charged back upon Bradley. The reputation of these two gentlemen seemed, therefore, to be so deeply involved, that it became the duty of the committee to ascertain how the fact was, and the sub-committee was accordingly appointed.

In pursuance of this appointment, we proceeded to the department; Mr. Barry was not there; we inquired of Mr. Gardner, the assistant and others, for the persons who made out the "abstracts," and Mr. Taylor and Mr. Dundas were introduced, and, after a preliminary examination, were sworn and testified. We recurred to the erasures, and asked what was erased to make the blanks which were filled by Mr. Bradley's name? They answered, Mr. Barry's and Mr. McLean's, but chiefly Mr. Barry's. Why were Messrs. McLean and Barry's names first inserted? Because they supposed it was right; but Mr. Brown, by order of the postmaster general, as he said, had determined otherwise, and directed this rule: to take the leger and look at the account of the contractor which was adjusted for each quarter, and if the credit of the allowance at the end of the quarter is carried into Bradley's time, charge the allowance to him. It appeared that the account with Harrall was adjusted and balanced to the end of the quarter, to wit: the first of April; and, as Bradley was then acting postmaster general, this allowance was consequently charged to him. I inquired if this quarter's account was adjusted and balanced at the time it bears date?—The answer was no; and not, probably, until June. Whether, if the allowance had been made between the first of April, (the end of the quarter), and June, the time of actul adjustment, it would have been carried to Harrall's credit in that quarter? The answer was that it would. Don't you, then, we asked, see the fallacy of your rule in proving who was the postmaster general who made the allowance? Your quarter closed on the first of April, and Bradley's functions ceased on the 7th, and your adjustment of the quarter was made on the first of June. If this allowance had been made any time between the 7th April and 1st of June, and you had carired it back to the 1st of April, don't you see that you fix on Bradley an allowance made by Barry? Bring your original entry; where, concerning this allowance, you first put pen to paper, no matter what is the name of the book or the document. They brought "the cash book;" there the allowance was stated, and the time for which it was made, but not when the decision was made. But I perceived, in a small note in red ink, "see letter of 13th April." I demanded the letter, and it was brought; and, behold, it was a letter of Phineas Bradley to Mr. Harrall, six days after Abraham's functions had ceased, stating that the postmaster general, (Barry) had examined his claim for extra compensation, and had directed him to pass the sum of $1,992 50, per ann. to his credit, as extra allowance. Here the thing was settled. The charge of Bradley to the president of Barry's extra allowance, was true; the attempt in Barry's official report to shoulder it off on Bradley was entirely defeated. The assistant postmaster general, Gardner, and chief clerk, Brown, were forced to admit the error, and that the rule which had fixed about $40,000 of allowances upon Bradley, took these allowances from McLean, but chiefly from Barry, where they in fact belonged, and charged them upon Bradley, where they did not belong. It was strange, indeed, that this abstract should have been, at first, made out correctly, and that McLean's and Barry's names should have been improperly erased and Bradley's improperly inserted. Now, it is not to be presumed that charges so grave as those presented by Bradley to the president of the United States in his letter of the 17th of October, were never communicated to the postmaster general. Mr. Bradley had been an assistant postmaster general full thirty years, and, in all that time, had maintained an irreproachable character. He had been removed without being permitted to know the cause. One of the charges, (to wit: prodigality), which he prefers against the postmaster general, Barry, is attempted to be shouldered off on him. This the witness declares on oath was the act of Barry himself, and proves it in the way I have stated.

"The depositions of Brown, Dundas, Taylor, Suter and Gardner, admit the misrepresentation in this "abstract;" but "it is an innocent mistake." It may be so, and we wish, in all charity, that we had better grouds to presume it. This abstract is neither an original record, nor a copy from any record. It states briefly in each case, the amount of the contract, the name of the contractor, the amount of the extra allowance, and for what time. It is neither an extract or abstract from any record or document. It is rather a compilation of these facts from the letters, the cash-book, and the ledger. It seems singular that there is no direct record of the time when these allowances were granted. But nevertheless, it happened in this case that the subordinate officers found no difficulty in ascertaining which postmaster general did make the allowances; and nothing but the rule promulgated by Mr. O. B. Brown, changed the right into a wrong. Now, it would seem that a rule so utterly fallacious as this, would operate sometimes for and sometimes against Mr. Bradley; but this, (strange to tell), operated in every case against him, and fixed upon him the most numerous and extravagant extra allowances, that were ever made in twice that distance of time. Considering, therefore, that Mr. Barry had been, long before this, presented to the president for extravagance in these allowances, that his answer to a call from the senate had been altered, by erasures, so as to remove this charge from him and to fix it on Bradley; that the falsity of the official document had been detected and acknowledged by the officers who have the chief management of the department, it is for the public to decide whether such errors in such a department, which combine to destroy the fair fame of a worthy and highly distinguished citizen, are to be ascribed to gross ignorance or base design.

From all the evidence which we obtained from the department, it would seem that in less than four weeks, Mr. Bradley is made to have given extra allowances in 47 cases, in thirty-six of which Mr. McLean and Barry were rightly charged, but their names were erased, and Bradley's wrongfully inserted. It appears further, that though the call as to these extra allowances, which was made nine months before it was answered, extended also to the reasons, or considerations for them, yet in a very few instances has the reason or consideration been given; and in some it is found that it has been erroneously given. In this very case of Harrall, all that is pretended to have been gained for this $1,992 per annum, is expediting two hours in twenty-four, which, upon inquiry, turns out to be but an hour and a half. In the short time that this mass of matter has been before us, we have discovered enough to convince me that this mutilated, mangled perverted document never ought to go to the public with the sanction of the senate. The senator from Tennessee suggests that the petition and this document may both be published But the committee know that the petition is true and the document is not. Shall we, then, give currency to official slander against a citizen who has served you near forty years with distinguished ability and stern integrity? If his faithful services could not save him from a relentless proscription, but that he must be cast upon the world in the evening of his days, pennyless, and without employ, surely we will not give currency to that which, if true, would consign him to infamy, but which we know to be a gross fabrication. If you will consent to adopt a resolution, directing the printer to enclose the erasures in brackets, and insert this resolution in a note at the bottom of each page which shall contain an erasure, the antidote would then go with the poison, and no harm would be done. But, as it is, I protest against such injustice.

Mr. Grundy remarked, that he should not oppose the adoption of the resolution. He never could see any public utility in either obtaining or printing the abstracts; and if any member supposed that injustice would be inflicted on any one, he should be still less inclined to have them printed. He was one of the members of the committee who examined this subject at the general post office, and believed no improper conclusion could be drawn. If the abstracts, the memorial of Mr. Bradley, and the depositions of Mr. Brown, Mr. Suter, Mr. Taylor and Mr. Dundas, were printed together, the whole truth of the case would then be presented, and no imputation would be thrown on any one. Mr. Bradley alleged that certain extra allowances, purported by the abstracts to have been made by him, which were not made by him, but it should be noticed, that there was no evidence that these allowances were not properly made. It was only material to investigate the matter, because Mr. Bradley had stated in his letter to the president that major Barry had made one or more of them. It was a matter touching Mr. Bradley's veracity, which it was deemed proper should be put upon the true ground. Mr. G. was desirous that full justice should be done to Mr. Bradley, but protested against the effort which seemed to have for its object the inculpation of the post office department in the transaction alluded to, and a reference to the depositions of the witnesses before named would entirely free the department from all censure.

It was required by the resolution, that the department should state, not only all extra allowances made, but the officers by whom made. The clerks, Mr. Taylor and Mr. Dundas, were directed by Mr. Brown, the chief clerk, to proceed with the work. Mr. Brown was detained from the office by sickness. In the execution of the business it was discovered that the books of the office, from its commencement, contained nothing showing by whom extra allowances had been made, but the dates of the entries; and Mr. Dundas had gone on to state the extra allowances as made by Mr. McLean up to the day of his resignation, and from that period as made wholly by major Barry. After he had proceeded in this way for some time, a question arose as to its correctness, and it was agreed by Mr. Taylor and Mr. Dundas to take the opinion of Mr. Brown upon the subject, on which they differed in opinion. They stated to him the principle of difference without reference to any particular case, (as sworn to by Mr. Taylor.) Mr. Brown was of opinion that the criterion would be, to take from the books the dates of the first entries for the payment of extra allowances, and charge the making of these to the postmaster general then in office; and to state all allowances made by postmaster general McLean up to the day of his resignation, and all allowances as made by Mr. Bradley, who was by law acting postmaster general, up to the day Mr. Barry was sworn into office, and to Mr. Barry all allowances made from that day subsequently. This was the rule adopted, and in conformity with it the name of Mr. Barry was erased in several instances, and Mr. Bradley's inserted, before the report was completed. This was the whole of the matter; the original books and documents all stand fair and unaltered, and he could see no ground of imputation against any one. That some of these alterations in the abstract which those clerks were making were erroneously made, no one doubted. Mr. Brown stated it in his deposition, and taking all the depositions mentioned, it is explained in the most satisfactory manner. It arose from the rule or principle on which the books have at all times been kept; and the abstracts were taken from the books as kept, and from the entries actually made under Mr. Bradley, and from no intention to do injustice to any one. Mr. Grundy was himself convinced that perfect accuracy could not be arrived at, as to the persons making the extra allowances, from an inspection of the books of the department. It might be done possibly by an examination of the correspondence in each case; but that would be almost endless labor, and five months would not have been sufficient to examine the necessary letters and documents. He would unite with gentlemen in voting to suspend the printing, but protested against any interference being drawn even to the prejudice of the department from the transactions which were called in question.

Mr. Clayton said, he wished the gentleman from Tennessee, when he expressed his opinion that others believed no fraud was intended by the erasures, had confined himself to what he knew or had better reason to believe, than he had condescended to name. The other members of the committee would think for themselves, and had not made that gentleman their organ to express any opinion on this subject. He said, he understood the gentleman to say, by way of excuse for these mutilated documents; that in some of the cases, Mr. McLean had made the allowances. Sir, an inspection of the evidence will show that, in nearly all, if not in every case, the reverse is the fact. The select committee this morning reported on the affairs of the department, and the depositions and papers to shew this which have all been ordered to be printed, are referred to in, and form a part of the report. Among these is a communication from Mr. McLean, in which he informs the committee that Mr. Bradley never made an allowance while he was in the office of postmaster general. But, sir, there is yet another reason why these documents should not be printed. They are entirely evasive of the resolution of the senate. In a majority of all the cases of extra compensation set forth in them, they do not state the "additional service" to be performed, and which was the consideration for the allowance. They are now spread on the secretary's table, and you may see that they do not constitute, without the contracts, even an appology for an answer to the requisition made by the senate. Generally, they do not give the length of the routes, or of the time in which they were to be performed—but leave you to refer to the contracts themselves, which it is not proposed to print. And in one case, where the excuse for the extra allowance is set down to be an increase of expedition, by carrying the mail through two hours sooner, the proof, as you will see by the depositions, is, that it was to be carried through only one hour and a half sooner than before the extra compensation was allowed. The law explicitly directs that the extra allowance shall be regulated by the original contract, and apportioned according to the increase of duty to be performed. To determine the propriety of the allowance, the additional service must be distinctly stated; and as this has not been done in most of the cases, the documents, without reference to the contracts, shewing nothing, are not worth the cost of printing. But it is enough now to say that the senate will not deliberately give publicity to what they know to be untrue.

Mr. Grundy hoped he had not mistaken the object of the motion now before the senate. He had thought it was with a view to do justice to Mr. Bradley; so far he was willing to go; but let it be understood that he did not acquiesce in any denunciation of the officers of the post office department. It was true Mr. Barry's name had been erased, and Mr. Bradley's substituted in its place; but the clerks tell us it was a mistake—that it was innocently done. He did not understand that the answer of the postmaster general to the resolution of the senate was evasive: he had not been able to give so full an answer as was desirable, perhaps, but at the next session it might be obtained. He knew that Mr. Bradley was charged with paying money, which he should not have been, but he also knew that it resulted from an innocent mistake of young clerks.

Mr. Chambers said, he had yielded the floor to afford other senators an opportunity to explain their views. It was now proper to explain the objects of the memorial. It was no part of his duty to go into the proofs upon the subject, to shew that the present postmaster general has wilfully and corruptly made an allegation injurious to the reputation of the memorialist; or that erasures of Mr. Barry's name, and interlineations of Mr. Bradley's, now admitted to have been made at the department, were made fraudulently and corruptly. His object required no such course, and therefore he did not pursue it.

Mr. Bradley has stated and sworn, that the extra allowances mentioned in the memorial, were made by Mr. Barry, and had made this fact the foundation of a charge prefered against Mr. Barry to the president of the U. S. Mr. Barry's report, bearing the authority of his official station and his signature, asserts that the extra allowances were made by Mr. Bradley. It therefore charges the statement and affidavit of the memorialist to be false. It is now admitted on all hands, and conclusively proved by an examination of the books of the department, that the allowances were made by the present postmaster general, Mr. Barry, and not by Mr. Bradley, and that the name of Mr. Barry, originally and properly inserted in the abstract alluded to, has been erased, and the name of Mr. Bradley substituted: and it is therefore conceded, that the representation given by Mr. Bradley is true, and that given by the report of Mr. Barry, the postmaster general, false. This false report has been ordered by the senate to be printed. The memorialist asks a suspension of this order. This, sir, said Mr. C. is the history of this singular affair. The question for consideration is, whether the senate will contribute their aid to circulate a falsehood, and thereby make itself auxiliary to the distribution of a charge, now admitted to be utterly untrue, deeply offensive to the character of a man who has grown grey in useful service to his country, and who has attained an honorable old age in the midst of active life without reproach to his integrity. As a citizen of the same state, he had asked his protection: it had cheerfully been accorded, and he was happy to believe no member of the senate would withhold a vote now become necessary to preserve an innocent man from an unmerited and unfounded imputation.

The question was then put on suspending the printing, and determined in the affirmative, nem. con.

LIST OF ACTS OF CONGRESS,

Passed at the second session of the twenty-first congress, which terminated on the 3d day of March, 1831.

An act to incorporate an insurance company of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia.

For the relief of certain insolvent debtors to the U. States.

For the punishment of crimes in the District of Columbia.

To regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern and northwestern frontiers of the United States, and for other purposes.

To ascertain and mark the line between the state of Alabama and the territory of Florida, and for other purposes.

To authorise the extension, construction, and use, of a lateral branch of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road into and within the District of Columbia.

For making appropriations for the support of government for the year 1831.

For making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the year 1831.

For making appropriations for the military service for the year 1831.

To authorise the secretary of war to purchase an additional quantity of land for the fortifications at fort Washington on the Potomac.

Making appropriations for certain fortifications during the year 1831.

Making additional appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors, and removing obstructions in the mouths of certain rivers.

For the relief of certain importers of foreign merchandise.

Making appropriations for the public buildings.

Making appropriations for carrying on certain roads and works of internal improvement, and providing for surveys

Making a provision for a subscription to a compilation of congressional documents.

To provide for the punishment of offences in cutting, destroying, or removing live oak, and other timber or trees, reserved for naval purposes.

Allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places.

For carrying into effect certain treaties.

Declaratory of the law concerning contempts of courts.

Making appropriations for the Indian department for the year 1831.

To establish a land office in the territory of Michigan, and for other purposes.

Making appropriations for the completion and support of the penitentiary in the District of Columbia.

For closing certain accounts and making appropriations for arrearages in the Indian department.

To provide hereafter for the payment of $6,000 annually to the Seneca Indians, and for other purposes.

To change the time of holding the rule term of the circuit court for the district of West Tennessee.

To authorise the construction of three schooners for the naval service of the United States.

To extend the act, entitled "an act for further extending the power of the judges of the superior court of the territory of Arkansas, under the act of the 26th of May, 1824," and for other purposes.

To alter the time of holding the district courts of the United States for the districts of Maine and Illinois, and the northern district of Alabama.

To authorise the secretary of state to issue a patent to John Powell.

To provide for the adjustment of claims of persons entitled to indemnification, under the convention between the United States and his majesty the king of Denmark, of the 28th March, 1830, and for the distribution among such claimants, of the sums to be paid by the Danish government to that of the United States, according to the stipulation of such convention.

To extend the time for entering certain donation claims to land in the territory of Arkansas.

To amend the act for taking the fifth census.

Making appropriations for revolutionary and invalid pensioners.

For the sale of lands in the state of Illinois, reserved for the use of salt springs on the Vermilion river, in that state.

To repeal the charges imposed on passports and clearances.

To amend and consolidate the acts concerning copy rights.

Making appropriations for building light houses, light boats, beacons, and monuments, and placing buoys.

For the further compensation of the marshal of the disirict of Rhode Island.

To authorise the state of Illinois to surrender a township of land, granting to said state for a seminary of learning, and to locate other lands in lieu thereof.

To rectify the mistake in the name of William Turney, an invalid pensioner.

Granting a pension to Martin Miller.

For the relief of certain holders of certificates, issued in lieu of lands injured by earthquakes in Missouri.

To authoriae the territory of Florida to open a canal through the public lands, between Chipola river and St. Andrew's bay, in West Florida.

To extend the patent of Samuel Browning for a further period of fourteen years.

To extend the patent of John Adamson for a further period of fourteen years.

Concerning vesaels employed in the whale fishery.

For the relief of John Culbertson, and to provide an Interpreter for the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana.

To create the office of surveyor of the public lands for the state of Louisiana.

Confirming the claim of John B. Toulmin to a lot in the city of Mobile.

Confirming the selections heretofore made of lands for the construction of the Michigan road, in the state of Indiana.

To authorise the executor of Stephen Tippett to locate a tract of land in the state of Louisiana.

For the continuation of the Cumberland road in the states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois.

To establish ports of delivery at Port Ponchartrain and Delaware city.

Making appropriations for carrying into effect certain Indian treaties (an annual bill for 1830.)

Granting a quantity of land to the territory of Arkansas, for the erection of a public building at the seat of government of said territory.

To repeal the act to establish the district of Blakely.

Declaring the assent of congress to an act of the general assembly of Ohio, hereinafter recited, (being "an act for the preservation and repair of the United States' Road.")

Authorising the sale of a tract of land therein mentioned, (in the Cincinnati district.)

Making appropriation for carrying into effect certain Indian treaties (an annual bill for 1831.)

To amend an act entitled "an act to provide for paying to the state of Illinois three per cent of the nett proceeds arising from the sale of the public lands within the same."

To authorise the transportation of merchandise by land, or by water, with the benefit of debenture.

For the benefit of schools in Lawrence county, Mass.

Concerning the town and village commons in Missouri.

Supplemental to an act passed on 31st March, 1830, entitled, "an act for the relief of purchasers of the public lands, and for the suppression of fraudulent practices at the public sales of lands of the U. States."

To amend the act, entitled "an act to quiet the titles of certain purchasers of lands between the lines of Ludlow and Roberts, in the state of Ohio," approved 26th May, 1830.

To authorise the secretary of the navy to make compensation to the heirs of Taliaferro Livingston and Francis W. Armstrong, for the maintenance of fifteen Africans illegally imported into the United States.

To amend an act, entitled "an act to provide for paying to the states of Missouri, Mississippi, and Alabama, three per centum of the nett proceeds arising from the sale of the public lands within the same."

To incorporate Saint Vincent asylum, within the District of Columbia.

To alter and amend "an act to set apart and dispose of certain public lands for the encouragement of the cultivation of the vine and the Olive.

Making provision for the compensation of witnesses and payment of other expenses attending the trial of the impeachment of James H. Peck.

To amend the act "granting certain relinquished and unappropriated lands to the state of Alabama, for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Tennessee, Coosa, Cahawba, and Black Warrior rivers," approved the 23d day of May, 1828.

To authorise the appointment of a sub-agent to the Winnebago Indians, on Rock river.

Respecting the jurisdiction of certain district courts (extending the jurisdiction of the courts for the northern district of New York, western district of Pennsylvania, districts of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama—so as to be the same with that of the circuit courts of the United States, in all cases, except appeals and writs of error.)

PRIVATE ACTS.

An act for the relief of the citizens of Shawneetown; of James Monroe; of William Clower; of Clarissa B. Harrison; of Ch. Bechtler; of Richard Smith and William Pearse the 2d, of Bristol, Rhode Island; of Daniel Jackson and Lucius M. Higgins, of Newbern, N. C.; of William T. Carroll, clerk of the supreme court of the United States; of the legal representatives of Edward Moore, deceased; of Matthias Roll; of Percis Lovely; of Simeon C. Whittier; of Lucien Harper; of George Johnston: of Joseph E. Sprague; of Ebenezer Robbins; of Beverly Chew, the heirs of William Emerson, deceased, and the heirs of Edward Lorraine, deceased; of Henry Becker; of Samuel Nowell; of Jonathan Crocker; of Jacob N. Cardoza; of Woodson Wren, of Mississippi; of Hugh Barnes; of Peters and Pond; of John Daly, late of Canada; of Antoine Dequindre, and the legal representatives of Louis Dequindre; of William B. Matthews, trustee; of the legal representatives of Daniel McIntire; of Benjamin S. Smoot, of Alabama; of Duval and Carnes; of brevet major Riley, and lieutenants Brook and Seawright; of Nathaniel Cheever and others; of William Delzell, of Ohio; of James Belger; of Peter Cleer, of Maryland; of John Nicholson; of the legal representatives of P. C. Walker and J. P. Walker, deceased, and of Joseph Walker, of the state of Mississippi; of Thomas Porter, of Indiana; of James Sprague; of Aaron Fitzgerald; of Thomas Fitzgerald; of William Burris, of Mississippi; of William Smith, administrator of John Taylor, deceased; of the legal representatives of general Moses Hazen; of James Thomas, late quartermaster general of the army of the United States; of Joseph S. Cannon; of Samuel Coburn, of the state of Mississippi: of George B. Dameron and William Houze, of Mississippi; of James Hogland; of John Gouch and other Canadian refugees; of John Nicks.

Resolution directing a subscription to seventy copies of Peters' Condensed Reports of decisions in the supreme court of the United States.

Authorising the transmission of papers, by mail, relating to the fifth census.

THE "CALHOUN CORRESPONDENCE."

To the editor of the U. S. Telegraph.

Sir: I enclose to you for publication, my letter to major Hamilton, referred to in Mr. Crawford's letter to me of the 30th April, 1830, which last forms so prominent a place in the recent address of the vice president to the people of the United States. Had I believed this letter of any importance to Mr. Calhoun, it would have been voluntarily communicated to him, after the receipt of his answer of the 1st of June to my letter to him of the 31st May. I give it to the public, not because my opinion of it is changed, but because Mr. Calhoun, in his letter to the president, of the 20th of August, 1830, after my offer to furnish him with a copy of it, if he desired it, reiterates the opinion that it ought to have been shown to him. This communication to major Hamilton was made without inquiry into his motives for asking it. Certainly no hostility to Mr. Calhoun was imagined, nor is it perceived how the facts stated could, of themselves, be in any way injurious to him. Major Hamilton's character was to me a sufficient guarantee that the information requested was not sought for any unworthy purpose.

A word or two of explanation, in the further agency I have had in this affair, is justly due to Mr. Crawford. I heard nothing of my correspondence with major Hamilton, and the subject was scarcely thought of until during last winter that gentleman came to the senate chamber, and requested me to give to the president, if not improper in my judgment, the information I had given to him. I asked if he had not my letter. He answered that he had. I then said, Mr. Crawford spoke to me, and speaks to every body, of this affair with the same indifference that he does of any other incident in his political life. I am sure he does not care what you do with the letter. You may give the president a copy of it.

Major Hamilton declined doing this from a motive of delicacy. He stated that he had conversed, or corresponded, I do not recollect which, with Mr. Calhoun on this subject, and that the statements of Mr. Crawford and Mr. Calhoun did not agree. He was, therefore, unwilling to interfere, further than to comply with the president's wish in asking of me the information.

On this statement, I was determined not to give the information without Mr. Crawford's express assent. The information was no longer a matter of indifference, and I did not choose to give it to the president without apprising Mr. Crawford that he and Mr. Calhoun differed in their account of the transaction, and without submitting to him my statement of our conversation for correction, if it was, in any respect, erroneous. I obtained for that purpose, and enclosed to him a copy of my letter to major Hamilton. His answer is before the public. I found, to my surprise, that I had erred in repeating what he had said, and to avoid the possibility of any other mistake, I deemed it safest to send to the president a copy of my letter to major H. and Mr. Crawford's letter to me. In making this communication, from respect to the personal delicacy of major H., his name was kept out of view.

Justice to Mr. Crawford demands the publication of his letter to Mr. Calhoun. Having received from him a copy of it, shortly after it was written, I have submitted it to the inspection of some of those in whose judgment I know he reposes implicit confidence; and as they coincide with me in the opinion I have expressed, I send it to you for immediate insertion in your paper. It is for Mr. Crawford, and for him only, to decide whether any thing more is necessary for his justification. I have found myself very unexpectedly compelled to say any thing about this transaction, and trust that none of those who are interested in it, will find it necessary to introduce my name into the further discussion of it.

JOHN FORSYTH.

Georgetown, Feb. 19, 1831.

From Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Hamilton.

Milledgeville, Feb. 8th, 1828.

Dear sir: Our friend Mr. Crawford was at this place a few hours yesterday on private business. I had very unexpectedly an opportunity to comply with the request made in your letter, dated Savannah, January 25th. I had a long conversation with Mr. Crawford, and afterwards read to him your letter. He regretted that your engagements did not permit you to pay him a passing visit. By his authority I stated in reply to your inquiry, that at a meeting of Mr. Monroe's cabinet to discuss the course to be pursued towards Spain in consequence of gen. Jackson's proceedings in Florida during the Seminole war, Mr. Calhoun, the secretary of the war department, submitted to, and urged upon the president the propriety and necessity of arresting and trying general Jackson. Mr. Monroe was very much annoyed by it; expressed a belief that such a step would not meet the public approbation; that gen. J. had performed too much public service to be treated as a younger or subaltern officer might, without shocking public opinion. Mr. Adams spoke with great violence against the proposed arrest, and justified the general throughout, vehemently urging the president to make the cause of the general that of the administration.

In consequence of the strong excitement produced by the president's obvious embarrassment, Mr. Crawford interposed in the discussion, and suggested that there was no necessity for deciding upon the course to be pursued towards the general, as the question for which the cabinet was convened did not require it. They were called to determine how Spain was to be treated in relation to the Florida affair; the conduct of the general was a matter exclusively between the general and his own government, in which, however, Spain might feel interested, she had no right to meddle. The subject was then disposed of and was not renewed.

Mr. Calhoun had previously communicated to Mr. Crawford his intention to present the question to Mr. Monroe; an intention Mr. Crawford approved, although not believing as he stated to Mr. Calhoun, that gen. J. would be either arrested or censured by the president. With great respect, I am, dear sir, yours,

JOHN FORSYTH.

Maj. James Hamilton, New York.

Mr. Crawford to Mr. Calhoun.

Woodlawn, 2nd Oct. 1830.

Sir: Since the adjournment of congress, the copy of a letter from you to the president containing eleven sheets, has been placed in my hands. The object of this labored essay is to prove that a statement contained in a letter from me to the hon. John Forsyth, of the senate of the United States, is incorrect. If there was no evidence but that which is contained in that essay, I should not be afraid of convincing every rational and unprejudiced mind that my statement to Mr. Forsyth is substantially correct.

In the brief comment which I intend to make upon your essay of eleven sheets, I propose to avoid the example you have set them in three things, viz: I shall not begin by depreciating the official dignity and weight of character of the person I address; when I meet with a fact that I cannot frankly and distinctly deny, I will not attempt to prove a negative by argument; and I shall not falsely and hypocritically profess a forbearance which I do not feel.

I shall first notice your observations upon the disclosure of the secrets of the cabinet, which you say is the first that has occurred, at least in this country. Do you really believe this assertion, Mr. Calhoun? How did the written opinions of Messrs. Jefferson and Hamilton, on the first bank bill, ever see the light? How were the facts and circumstances which preceded and accompanied the removal of Edmund Randolph from the state department, by general Washington, disclosed and made known to the public? If your assertion be true, those facts and circumstances would, at this moment, be buried in Egyptian darkness. While a cabinet is in existence and its usefulness liable to be impaired, reason and common sense point out the propriety of keeping its proceedings secret. But after the cabinet no longer exists, when its usefulness cannot be impaired by the disclosure of its proceedings, neither reason, common sense, nor patriotism, requires that those proceedings should be shrouded in impenetrable darkness. The acts of such a cabinet become history, and the nation has the same right to a knowledge of them, that it has to any other historical fact. It is presumed that all nations have entertained this opinion and have acted upon it. Whence the secret history of cabinets, the most despotic in Europe. Hence the history of the house of Stuart, by Charles James Fox, which discloses the most secret intercourse between Charles the II, and the French minister, by which it was proven that Charles was a pensioner of Louis the XIV. king of France, and had secretly engaged to re-establish popery in England. Yet in the face of all these facts, you dare to presume upon the ignorance of the distinguished person you were addressing, so far as to insinuate that such disclosures had never been made in any country, but certainly not in the republic.

The next thing which I shall observe is, the manner in which you attempt to obtain evidence to controvert my statement to Mr. Forsyth. That statement contained one prominent and distinct fact; every thing else in that statement was secondary and collateral to that fact. It was reasonable, in controverting that statement, that you should have sought to obtain evidence to controvert that fact. You apply to Mr. Monroe and Mr. Wirt for evidence. But of what? Not of the principal fact, but of secondary collateral matter.—The omission to appeal to Mr. Monroe whether you made the proposition ascribed to you in my letter to Mr. Forsyth, is strong presumptive evidence that you believed his answer would confirm my statement. You remembered the excitement which your proposition produced in the mind and upon the feelings of the president, and did not dare to ask him any question tending to revive his recollection of that proposition. The different manner in which you approach the president and Mr. Wirt, even upon the collateral secondary fact upon which you do venture to interrogate them, proceeds from the same fact that made you avoid interrogating them upon the principal fact. When you make the inquiry of Mr. Wirt, you enclose him such an extract from my letter as informs him of the nature of the evidence you are in search of, because, I presume you believed, that extract would not tend to refresh his memory, or relied implicitly upon Mr. Wirt's disposition to give such evidence as you desired from him. But you were apprehensive that the same extract sent to Mr. Monroe might refresh his memory and enable him to give such an answer as would not suit your views. The extract of my letter sent to Mr. Wirt described facts and circumstances in which Mr. Monroe was a principal actor. It was therefore deemed unsafe to submit them to him. The excitement produced upon the president was so manifest that you did not believe it could have escaped the attention of Mr. Wirt; you therefore believed it unsafe to interrogate him as to your proposition personally affecting general Jackson. Mr. Monroe says not a word tending to show that the confidential letter was not produced and read in the cabinet, which was not suggested by Mr. Wirt. Every tyro in the science of law, will tell you that it is a rule of evidence that one affirmative witness outweighs many negatives; but although you were at the bar several years, it is possible your law learning never ascended so high. I might safely rest the case here; but I will produce one affirmative witness in support of the accuracy of the statement, opposed as it is by Mr. Wirt's negative statement. The hon. Benjamin W. Crowninshield, in a letter dated 26th July, 1830, says, "you ask if I recollect, while in the council of the cabinet, of a letter written by general Jackson to the president Monroe? I do recollect of a conversation about a private letter which Mr. Calhoun, I believe, asked for, and the president said he had not got it, but upon examination found he had it. This letter contained information and opinions respecting Spain and her colony, the Floridas; but the particulars I cannot now undertake to say or state correctly. I remember, I think, your stating that the circumstances then spoken of, did fully explain gen. Jackson's conduct during the campaign. I remember too, that Mr. Calhoun was severe upon the conduct of the general, but the words particularly spoken have slipped my recollection." Now, sir, what do you think of the negative statement of Mr. Wirt? Do you think it now so very certain that that letter was not produced and read in the cabinet upon which your memory is so distinct? Do you not, on the contrary, feel convinced of having attempted to pass off a falsehood upon the president of the United States?

The main fact contained in my statement is not denied directly or indirectly in your elaborate essay. But a negative is attempted by argument. And what kind of an argument is offered? Why, that "it would be to rate his (your) understanding very low to suppose that an officer under our laws could be punished without arrest and trial." Sir, I rate any man's understanding very low who acts with a total disregard to principle. It is true, that in addition to the argument you add, that to say you did not propose to arrest general Jackson, but that he should be punished or reprehended in some form or other, is absurd on its face. What need is there for arrest and trial preparatory to reprimand? But is it indeed true that a military officer cannot be punished without arrest and trial? Was not the disapprobation in the case of the Seminole war a punishment? I think general Jackson must have felt it to be such. I should have opposed it, if I had seen any way of placing the government in the right as to Spain; without disavowing the principal events of the Seminole war.

If you are not satisfied with the evidence of Mr. Crowninshield, Mr. Adams, in a letter dated 30th July, 1830, says: "The main point upon which it was urged that gen. Jackson should be brought to trial was, that he had violated his orders by taking St. Marks and Pensacola." It is true that Mr. Adams does not say by whom it was urged to bring general Jackson to trial; but you know well that there was no proposition made in the cabinet affecting general Jackson personally, but what was made by yourself. If you deny this, I will obtain the necessary explanation from Mr. Adams. It may be proper to state, that the two letters from Messrs. Adams and Crowninshield, are the only communications I have received from them since my departure from Washington, and they are in reply to the only letters I have written to them since the aforesaid period. There has been as little sympathy, either individual or political, between those gentlemen and me as between them and you, and in fact much less between Mr. Adams and myself than between him and you; at least before the coalition between him and Clay. In fact, before that event, my impression was, that from the time your name was put down for the presidency, you favored the cause of Mr. Adams. And the fact that all his electors voted for you as vice president,* and that you suffered his printer to become proprietor of the press you had established in Washington for the express purpose of vilifying my character and lauding yours, without stipulating that it should not be wielded against general Jackson, go far to establish the fact. I have now done with your argumentative denial and the negative evidence of Mr. Wirt, backed by your distinct recollection.

I shall now take some notice of your attacks upon me, which with the exception of Mr. McDuffie's letter, are all argumentative, and principally founded upon that letter.

For the present I shall say nothing about that letter or the reasoning founded upon it. You express much forbearance towards me, because you say I have been unfortunate. What do you mean by unfortunate? If you mean that I have much bodily affliction you are right, but, thank God, those afflictions are past, and I am now, and have been for more than three years, in the enjoyment of vigorous, uninterrupted health. But if by unfortunate, you mean that I was not elected president in 1824-5. I must beg leave to dissent from the truth of that assertion. I am conscious of being less unfortunate than you were. You, after obtruding your name upon the nation as a candidate for the presidency, in a manner until then unknown, and I trust will never be repeated, and conducted yourself in the same unprecedented manner while your name was permitted to be in, were put down by the state of Pennsylvania, upon which you affected to rely for success. My name was put up by my friends for the same office, and by them was kept up, notwithstanding my bodily afflictions, till the election was consummated in the house of representatives in February, 1825. No man in the nation was better pleased at my exclusion than I was; for I then verily believed, and I do now believe, that had I been elected, my remains would now be reposing in the national burying ground, near the eastern branch of the Potomac. I was therefore far from considering myself unfortunate in the result of the election in the house of representatives.

Your forbearance towards me has been affected, because you believed you could more effectually injure me. I request that hereafter, if you should have occasion to write or speak of me, you will not again feign a forbearance you do not feel.

You affect to lament that my friends did not interfere and prevent my meddling with this matter. I make no doubt that you would have been very glad to have been spared the trouble of making so elaborate a comment upon a letter of three pages. I make no doubt that you dislike the idea of being exposed and stripped of the covert you have been enjoying under the president's wings, by means of falsehood and misrepresentation. You assert that my suspicion that you wrote, or caused to be written, the letter which was published in a Nashville Gazette, is without foundation. A man who knows as well as I do, the small weight to which any assertion of yours is entitled, in a matter where your interest leads you to disregard the truth, must have other evidence than your assertion, to remove even a suspicion. You ask why not charge Mr. Adams with having written, or caused that letter to be written? The answer is easy and conclusive. That letter contained two falsehoods—one intended to injure me; the other intended to benefit you; and that which was for your benefit, taking from Mr. Adams half the credit of defending gen. Jackson, and giving it to you. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that Mr. Adams was disposed to injure me, no one will, I think, suppose that he would voluntarily ascribe half the merits of his own actions to the man who was the most strenuous opposer of his wishes. If the intrinsic evidence of the letter fixes it upon you and not upon Mr. Adams, subsequent events strongly corroborate the inference deducible from the contents of the published letter. During the whole of the presidential canvass of '23, '24, I have no recollection of any act of Mr. Adams tending to vilify me; but you know, that you set up the Washington Republican, in Washington, for the express purpose of vilifying my reputation, and had the effrontery and shamelessness to cause it to be published by a clerk in the department, whose tenure of office was your will. The facts which I have stated will exonerate Mr. Adams from the charge of having any concern with the Nashville letter, and fix that charge upon you in the estimation of reasonable men, your denial to the contrary notwithstanding.

You place great stress upon the conduct of gentlemen in congress, whom you assert to be my friends. This is what might be expected from a man of your loose principles, or rather no principles. My friends in congress were men who would have been insulted, had any man, however elevated, approached them in the language of entreaty and persuasion. I never did, and never would, if I were to live a thousand years, interfere with a man who was acting under the obligations of an oath, to persuade or entreat him to act contrary to the convictions of his own judgment; and if I were such member, and any man, however elevated he might be, were to interfere with me by way of entreaty or persuasion, I should feel myself insulted, and should certainly insult the person so interfering. The only conversation I recollect ever to have participated in with a members of congress, in reference to the foregoing subject, was with Mr. Cobb, at my own house in the presence of Mr. Macon, of N. C. In that conversation I supported general Jackson's right to put An-

*Mr. Crowninshield has since acknowledged that he was not present, and we hereto annex his letter—See page 50 of the published correspondence:

Washington, Jan. 30, 1831.

Dear sir—My recollection having been called to a letter received from the hon. W. H. Crawford in July, 1830, wherein he asks my attention to "circumstances that transpired during the cabinet deliberations on the events of the Seminole war," and my reply thereto: It is proper for me to state, that I answered Mr. Crawford as though he alluded to transactions which took place while I was in Mr. Monroe's cabinet; but since my arrival here this session, I learn, for the first time, that the cabinet meeting alluded to by Mr. Crawford, was held after I retired from the cabinet, I left Washington in company with president Monroe and yourself, for Norfolk, by the way of Annapolis, on the 28th May, 1818. Now, sir, I do not pretend to know one word of what was said or done at any subsequent meeting—and I do therefore disclaim and say that my letter in answer to Mr. Crawford must not be interpreted so as to affirm or deny any cabinet transactions which took place after I left the cabinet.

It is difficult for me to account how I could have blended other things, so as to connect them with events of which I could know nothing. It is a long time since those things occurred, and memory is treacherous; and that, I beg you to believe, is the only reason of the misapprehension on my part. I am, with high consideration, your obedient servant.

B. W. CROWNINSHIELD.

brister to death. Mr. Macon, I believe, was convinced; but I am not certain that Mr. Cobb was. That gentleman acted in concert with Mr. Clay in the part he acted in the discussion upon the Seminole war. Mr. Forsyth and Mr. Lacock were men of high character and experience, and leant upon no person. Mr. Eppes made a speech in favor of the report which was intended to be made, and was, in consequence, placed on the committee in place of Mr. Forsyth. I wonder you had not discovered, that he too was a particular friend of mine.

You say that, as it appears from Mr. McDuffie's letter, I had no scruples about disclosing the secrets of the cabinet, I had it in my power to change the opinions of my friends, by disclosing the contents of the confidential letter. No person who had a proper regard for the feelings or character of Mr. Monroe, could make use of that letter; for it was manifestly written under the impression that Mr. Monroe was capable of that duplicity which would connive at the execution of a measure, and disavow it after it was executed. I must confess, had I been president, I should not have been flattered by its reception. If I had, as you erroneously represent me, been little scrupulous about disclosing the secrets of the cabinet, which is positively denied, notwithstanding Mr. McDuffie's statement, I should have made no use of that letter, and this from respect to Mr. Monroe's feelings and character.

In the whole course of my life, I have been as much in the habit of uttering my opinions and stating facts, as they were known to me, when made proper by time and place, that when I am charged, after any lapse of time, with having uttered opinions or made statements of facts, I do not hesitate to admit such opinions were uttered, or statement of facts made, if the opinions correspond with those I entertained, or with the knowledge of facts I then possessed; but when I am charged with uttering opinions I never entertained, or with making statement of facts, inconsistent with my knowledge of them at the time they are alleged to have been made, or under circumstances not rendering the disclosure proper, I have as little hesitation in declaring the charge false. Applying this rule to Mr. McDuffie's letter, I have no hesitation in saying he is mistaken in every part of it. I can account for his mistake, in the first part of his statement. In my letter to Mr. Forsyth I state that, previous to Mr. Monroe's return to the city, you, in a private conversation with me, stated your determination to pursue the course in the cabinet you did, and that I approved of it. Mr. McDuffie has applied this conversation to the cabinet deliberations, and has made me a proof of your proposition unfriendly to general Jackson, which I aver is untrue, and you yourself know it to be untrue. At the time of this private conversation, I had never seen the orders under which general Jackson acted, nor any of his despatches, nor heard of the confidential letter. I relied upon the accuracy of your representations, and according to them general Jackson appeared clearly in the wrong, and I did not hesitate to tell you I thought you in the right. At the time I visited Georgia, I have no recollection that general Jackson had adopted any measures to forestal public opinion, and thereby to anticipate the decision of the administration; nor have I at this moment any recollection of the existence of any such measure. If none such existed, and I believe none existed, then it is utterly impossible that I should have expressed myself as Mr. McDuffie makes me. I have, therefore, no hesitation in saying, the whole of Mr. McDuffie's statement is a mistake. I say nothing of the motives of Mr. McDuffie in making the statement, because I do not know them; but this I will say, that Mr. McDuffie has, upon a former occasion, shown a willingness to injure and asperse me. It is somewhat doubtful for what purpose Mr. McDuffie's statement was obtained, as his statement has no direct bearing upon the facts stated in my letter to Mr. Forsyth. It appears to me on reflection, that the principal object in obtaining it, was to impeach my veracity. If that was the object, I have no fear of the result, where he and I are known. To give you a Rowland for your Oliver read the enclosed extract of the letter of captain Ross. I know nothing of the correctness of his statement, farther than that he made the statement to me in substance, before he left Washington, and further added, that he communicated his impression to a military officer residing in Washington, and attached to the war department who told him that was no matter of surprise; that the officers attached to the department had made that discovery before. I have left the name of the officer a blank, as I was unwilling to involve him in a controversy with you, without his consent.

You say that the decision of the cabinet was unanimously agreed to. This I believe to be untrue, and I believe you knew it to be untrue at the time you wrote it. My reasons are the following:—The cabinet deliberations commenced on Tuesday morning, and on Friday evening all the questions which had been discussed were, I thought, decided, and Mr. Adams directed to draft a note to the Spanish minister, conformable to those decisions. I intended to set off for Georgia on Sunday morning, and in order to prepare the department for my absence, I was busily employed in office, when about one or two o'clock, I received a note from the president, requiring my attendance. When I entered, the greatest part of Mr. Adams' note had been rejected, and the remainder was shortly after, and he was directed to draft another note pursuant to the decision which had been made.—The next morning I set off for Georgia. Mr. Adams' letter which is now before me contains a repetition of the arguments he used in the cabinet; and in the letter he informs me, that the exposition which appeared in the Intelligencer, was not written by him. From all these facts, I think it is fairly inferable, that Mr. Adams did not agree to the decision of the cabinet, and that you must have known it; for it is clear that he did not agree to it on Saturday; and it is highly improbable that any arguments should have been urged to convince him, after he had been twice directed to draft his note in conformity to the decisions which had been previously made.

You dwell with much stress upon the lapse of time since those deliberations, and seem to be unconscious that the same lapse of time applies to all your certificates, negative and affirmative.

You seem to repose full confidence on Mr. McDuffie's recollection, although it was of a casual conversation, not likely to make the same impression upon the mind as the facts contained in my letter to Mr. Forsyth. You even refer to your recollection of a very trivial fact which you say happened during the next session of congress. I have now a letter before me, dated in October, 1821, in which I state to you, that you had a short time before informed me, that your memory could not be relied upon as to facts.—You wrote me a letter the next day, in which you did not controvert that fact; yet, now after a lapse of twelve years, you rely upon your memory for a very trivial fact; viz: your application to see that private confidential letter, because you had received some hints about it, and you believed from some of my friends. Do you not perceive some inconsistency in your essay? You had just censured me for not using this letter, and then insinuate that I had used it, as you seem to think I ought to have used it. In truth I do not believe one word of your insinuation, nor do I believe you do, for the reasons I have already stated; I know I never made use of it. But you insinuate that I made disclosures of the secrets of the cabinet to the editor of a newspaper in Milledgeville, because general Clarke suspected it, and because I never denied it. I never knew that I was charged with it except in general Clarke's book, and there the evidence offered in support of it was so ridiculous, that no person, less ignorant and malignant than general Clarke, would have paid the least attention to it. Besides, if I had denied that charge, and not gone through his book, and denied every charge in it, however ridiculous, it would have been alleged by you and your co-laborers, that the charges not denied were admitted. But, sir, since you renew the charge, I give it the most unqualified denial. The editor of the paper alluded to, said in my presence, that he had been informed that it had been proposed in the cabinet to arrest general Jackson. I simply replied, that no such proposition had been made in the cabinet.

Let us apply your own rule to you, and see how you will stand the test of your own reasoning. A Charleston paper of last March stated, that you had been charged with participation in the Ninian Edward's plot against my reputation. Have you ever denied this charge?

Again; you have been charged in the South Carolina papers with being a nullifyer. Mr. Gales has denied this for you; but have you denied it yourself? Have you ever considered the ridiculous figure you may cut in the sequel, if this nullification advances much farther?

In 1816, you were among the foremost in avowing the expediency and right of protecting domestic manufactures. Now your disciples deny the right, and propose to nullify an act of congress, founded upon the principle of protection. You may depend upon it, if you and your friends should proceed so far as to incur the guilt, and suffer the punishment of treason and unsuccessful rebellion you will meet with no sympathy among the sister states.

I have said that Mr. Wirt's negative statement is the only evidence you have in support of your negative assertion, that the confidential letter was not produced and read in the cabinet.—For proof of this, read the enclosed extract of Mr. Monroe's letter, by which it will be seen that, having no reliance upon his own recollection, he applied to Mr. Wirt for information, and he candidly and very properly adds, "still, as the question turns on memory alone, Mr. Wirt, as well as I, may be mistaken, and in regard to me, as I was sick in bed when I received the letter, that presumption is the more probable."

You appear to boast of the services you rendered general Jackson in his utmost need. What those services were you have not condescended to state in your very elaborate essay. Nor have I heard them hinted at before. Perhaps your meritorious services were in entreating and persuading members of congress to approve acts that you deemed worthy of punishment when deliberating in the cabinet. I will, however, not dwell upon this topic. If you satisfy the president that you rendered him essential service, I have no objection that you should be rewarded for it.—What I object to is, you should be rewarded for ascribing to me your own acts.

You say that to place general Jackson's defence upon the confidential letter, is to do him an injury, and that he in his reports never rested it upon that ground. Whether this be true or not, I have no means of judging. But, in the course of the subsequent winter, I saw an essay in a Nashville paper, in which the writer asserted, that the administration knew before general Jackson entered Florida, that he intended to take the Spanish forts; and that knowing it, and not countermanding it, the administration had made his acts their own, and were not at liberty to disavow them. I carried this letter to the president, and requested him to read the essay, giving him my opinion that the essay was either written under general Jackson's immediate inspection, or by a person that had access to his private papers; for, that the confidential letter was evidently referred to. A short time after he returned the Gazette, saying, he entirely concurred with me in opinion. Extract No. 2, of his letter shows, that Mr. Monroe now recollects the circumstances, to which my letter to him called his attention.

I must take some further notice of Mr. Wirt's negative statement, before I close this commentary. Mr. Wirt commences his letter by expressing doubts about disclosing the secrets of the cabinet without the consent of the president, and every member of the cabinet present. I suppose the squeamishness of Mr. Wirt suggested to you the very wise declarations you have ventured upon the same subject. Mr. Wirt's squeamishness yields to the consideration that you only request information as to your own part, in the declarations of the cabinet. This be gravely assents to, and then states that you proposed an inquiry into general Jackson's conduct. He then proceeds with nearly two pages stating what he does not recollect. All that he does not recollect, I do distinctly recollect, and so does Mr. Crowninshield. But what he does not recollect, is arrayed by you as evidence against what I and Mr. Crowninshield do recollect.—And Mr. Wirt, from his manner of stating his non-recollections, seems disposed to countenance the use you have made of his negative statements. You are welcome to it, and to the reasoning with which he has supplied you. Since the dissolution of Mr. Monroe's cabinet, I have not felt myself restrained from disclosing any fact that transpired in it. While it existed, I disclosed none of its secrets, and whosoever says I did say what is not true. I know of no intrigues to injure you or any other person; either directly or indirectly. Had I been called on in the year 1825, after the 3d of March, as I was called on by Mr. Forsyth last spring, I should have made the same disclosures then, that I made to Mr. Forsyth. Whether Mr. Wirt remembers the facts contained in my statement, is perfectly indifferent to me, even if Mr. Crowninshield had not remembered them. But his recollection of the facts is almost as distinct as mine. Mr. Adams' recollection is, that it was proposed to bring general Jackson to trial, and Mr. Crowninshield's, that you were severe upon the conduct of the general.

I believe both of these gentlemen have given the impression that your arguments made upon their minds. Indeed neither of them have intended to give your express words. I am, therefore, notwithstanding their statements, of opinion, that the proposition ascribed to you in my letter to Mr. Forsyth is thereby correct, although "it may be to rate his (your) understanding very low, and may be absurd on its face." I believe I have now gone through your tedious essay, and have been much more tedious than I expected to be; but your insinuations have been so multifarious and various that I could not well be shorter, and I have not time to revise it and make it shorter. A few words more about conspiracies. General Noble informed me that for about two weeks before Ninian Edwards set off to the west, in 1823, he lodged in the same house with him, and that a person in going to Edwards' room, had to pass by his, and that during that time you paid a daily visit to his (Edwards') room, and spent from one to two hours with him. He sent his memorial back to Washington, while he was on his journey; it is therefore highly probable that the most of it was written in Washington and reviewed and revised by you during your daily visits to that compeer of yours.—Every person who knew Edwards was convinced he never would have ventured upon such a step without having received assurances from persons he deemed capable of protecting him. Your letter of the third of July to the managers of the 4th of July dinner in Washington, was considered at the time an act redeeming the pledge of protection you had given him. It is true Mr. Adams and Mr. McLean united with you in the letter. Mr. Adams' motive for signing it was apparent. Edwards was his political supporter. His son in-law held the vote of Illinois in his hands, without which, it appeared in the event, Mr. Adams could not have been elected. Mr. Adams, therefore, had an adequate political motive for doing the act. You could have had no such motive, nor could Mr. McLean I believe have had any other motive for his conduct than that of subserviency to your wishes, and a desire to enable you to fulfil your promise to Edwards. From the time general Noble gave me the information, and that you signed the letter of the 3d of July, I never doubted that the plot against my reputation was your handy-work, and originated in your brain so fertile in mischief. And yet you complain of intrigues and conspiracies. I have through my whole life been a plain, thorough going man.—When difficulties have arisen, I have honestly met them, and under the protection of the shield of integrity have vanquished them. I am now too old to adopt a new course of conduct. I am in retirement, and have no wish to emerge from that retirement.

I had like to have forgot your charge of infringing the purity of the electoral colleges. I wrote the letter to Mr. Barry of which you complain, and that was not the only letter. But at the time that letter was written, I had no information that the electors of Kentucky were pledged to vote for you as vice president; nor have I any other evidence now before me than your assertion, which every person as well acquainted with you as I am, will admit to be very slender evidence. I wrote no letter to any state where I knew the electors were pledged to vote for vice president.

You seem to think I am under the influence of resentment. You are mistaken. Resentment is only felt against equals or superiors, and never against inferiors. From the time you established the Washington Republican for the purpose of slandering and vilifying my reputation, I considered you a degraded, a disgraced man, for whom no man of honor and character could feel any other than the most sovereign contempt. Under this impression, I was anxious that you should be no longer vice president of the United States. I am, sir, your most obedient servant, (Signed), WM. H. CRAWFORD.

To the hon. J. C. Calhoun, vice president, U. S.

—

Extract of a letter from Benjamin W. Crowninshield to Wm. H. Crawford, dated 25th July, 1830.

"You ask me if I recollect while in the councils of the cabinet, of a letter written by general Jackson to the president Monroe? I do recollect of a conversation about a private letter, which Mr. Calhoun, I believe, asked for, and the president said he had not got it, but upon an examination found he had it. This letter contained information and opinions respecting Spain and her colony, the Floridas; but the particulars I cannot now undertake to say or state correctly. I remember, I think, your stating that the circumstances then spoken of, did fully explain general Jackson's conduct during the campaign. I remember, too, that Mr. Calhoun was severe upon the conduct of the general; but the words particularly spoken have slipped my recollection."

—

Extracts of letters from James Monroe to Wm. H. Crawford, dated 8th August, 1830.

1st Extract.—"I lay in bed more than a week, during which that letter was removed, and every thing relating to that war having been previously arranged, it was forgotten and never read by me until after the meeting of the administration, and the discussion as to the course to be pursued in reference to its management. My impression is, that I read it then on the suggestion of Mr. Calhoun that it required my attention.—Had I read it when I received it, I should have considered it as confidential, and never have shown it to any one, however great my confidence in them might be. As the question whether that letter was mentioned in the cabinet involved the correctness of my memory, I did not wish, in replying to Mr. Calhoun's letter, to rest on my memory alone, and in consequence made an appeal, through a friend, to Mr. Wirt, who declared that it was not mentioned in the cabinet, nor brought before it, and that he had never heard of it before."

From the foregoing extract, it will be seen that Mr. Monroe relied upon Mr. Wirt's memory.

2d Extract.—"I well recollect the confidential communication referred to in yours, which afterwards passed between us, and the inference respecting the publication in Tennessee, in which we both concurred."

—

Extract of a letter from Jack P. Ross, a captain in the late army, dated Tuscaloosa, 4th Sept. 1830.

"I reached Washington in April or May, 1823, as an applicant for the office of marshal for the Alabama district. At the time of my arrival the president, (Mr. Monroe), was at his plantation in the country. I did consult with you as my friend as to the most probable means of obtaining the office, and you did advise me to endeavor to interest Mr. Calhoun in my favor, alleging that you thought he exercised more influence with the president than any other member of the cabinet and perhaps than all the rest together. I accordingly called on him and presented my letters to him, and received from him such assurances as evidently induced me to think he was warmly (my) friend. Some days after this interview with Mr. Calhoun, Robert Crawford arrived at Washington, as an applicant for the office for my friend major Armstrong, who had applied, ignorant of the fact that I had applied. Mr. Crawford did not bring with him letters from general Jackson, recommending major Armstrong; but major Armstrong went on to Nashville, procured the letters and forwarded them to Washington; and I recollect distinctly taking from the post office one morning, a letter from major A. to Robt. Crawford, the contents of which Mr. Crawford shewed me, in which the major says, I have by this day's mail sent on letters from general Jackson to Mr. Monroe and Mr. Adams, or words to that effect. These letters, I am sure, came by the same mail that brought the one from major A. to Mr. Crawford, and must have been received that very morning, and with this knowledge of the fact, I again called on Mr. Calhoun to consult with him, but said nothing of these letters. He told me I should have met with no difficulty in obtaining the appointment, but that Mr. Monroe had received general Jackson's letter, recommending major A. while he (Mr. Monroe) was at his plantation in the country, and had pretty much made up his mind to appoint him before my application came before him; when in fact, I knew that general Jackson's letter had not been received three hours, and that a part of mine had been forwarded to the president while he was in the country. These facts I mentioned to you as a matter of astonishment that a man of Mr. Calhoun's standing should descend to such low subterfuges, particularly where such a course was so uncalled for. I think I also mentioned the matter to general —— who was my friend on this occasion; but what his reply was, I cannot at this distant period recollect. I can only say whatever I stated to you at the time was correct."

—

First extract of a letter from John Quincy Adams to William H. Crawford, dated, Quincy, 30th July, 1830.

"The main point on which it was urged that gen. Jackson should be brought to trial was, that he had violated his orders, by taking St. Marks and Pensacola."

Second extract.—"I thought his conduct (general Jackson's) so far as it was a subject of consideration at that time, needed no explanation other than a knowledge of the facts of the case. I urged a more decided and unequivocal approbation of this conduct than it received. I may add, that my opinion then, is my opinion now. It was formed on principles which have not changed."

Third extract.—"I was directed accordingly to answer the note of the Spanish minister, and an article was prepared by another hand, and published in the National Intelligencer, giving notice of the president's view and intentions in relation to the subject."

Note.—Mr. Crawford has suppressed a material fact in Mr. Adams' statement, viz:—That he (Mr. Adams) had no recollection that the confidential letter from gen. Jackson to Mr. Monroe, referred to and relied upon by Mr. Crawford, in his letter to Mr. Forsyth, was before the cabinet during its deliberation. See Mr. Adams' letter, page 50, of the pamphlet correspondence, and extracted in preceding note.

☞Here follows Mr. Calhoun's letter to Mr. Crawford, already inserted in page 24—which see.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 3—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, MARCH 19, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1017

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞We now conclude the regular "Calhoun correspondence," as it is called. For editorial and miscellaneous matters see page 45.

MR. HAMILTON'S STATEMENT.

From the N. Y. Evening Post.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Although it is rare that an individual of humble pretensions can attempt to arrest public attention, without seeming to arrogate to himself undue importance, yet the writer of this vindication is placed, by the publication of the recent correspondence between the president and vice-president of the United States, in such a situation as to compel him to hazard that imputation, rather than to submit in silence to the grave charges which, if not directly made, are by an inference insinuated against him.

Mr. Calhoun, in his address and letters, states that there was a "movement against him," "the origin of which went back beyond the date of this correspondence," which "had for its object his political destruction." He refers to Mr. Crawford's letter of December, 1827, as the commencement "of that chain of artful operations that has," &c. He speaks of this movement as "a political manœuvre" designed to make the president "an instrument," and the vice president "the victim." He refers to "a base political intrigue," and then adds—"Several indications forewarned me long since that a blow was meditated against me; I will not say from the quarter from which this comes; but in relation to this subject more than two years since I had a correspondence with the district attorney for the southern district of New York, on the subject of the proceedings of the cabinet on the Seminole war, which, though it did not excite particular attention at the time, has since, in connection with other circumstances, served to direct my eye to what was going on.

I have thus brought to view, in a distinct form, such parts of these letters and addresses as contain insinuations or charges of political manœuvres, plots, base intrigues, and as indicate directly or remotely their supposed contrivers or instruments, in order that I may meet all that can, by just implication, or the most forced construction, refer to me, by declaring most explicitly that I neither know of, nor do I believe, in the existence of any such practices; nor have I, if they did exist, participated in them in any respect whatever.

Mr. Calhoun considers himself deprived of important information by the blanks in Mr. Crawford's letter, and assumes that if they were filled up they might, "through their political association, point directly to the contrivers of this scheme." As the writer of this vindication has no motive for concealment, he has no hesitation in saying, that the "names referred to in blank," if written at length, would be but one name, and that his own.—Thus is removed at once all ground for the suspicions that seem to be so lightly indulged and so freely expressed, resulting from those political associations which these potential blanks are supposed to conceal. The following narrative will shew the origin of my connexion with that letter, and my correspondence with the vice president, to which he has referred.

On my voyage during the winter of 1827 and '28, from Nashville to New Orleans, in company with gen. Jackson and his suite, there was much conversation among the general's friends, in which I participated, and particularly with major Lewis, in relation to the various charges against gen. Jackson which the presidential canvass had originated or renewed, and particularly as to the unfriendly course Mr. Crawford was supposed to have taken towards the general in relation to the Seminole war. It being understood that I intended on my return to New York to pass through Georgia, to avail myself of that opportunity to visit Mr. Crawford, major Lewis desired me, or I offered, to ascertain truly what occurred in Mr. Monroe's cabinet deliberations in relation to a proposition supposed to have been made to arrest gen. Jackson for his conduct in that war, and to inform him of the result, in order, as I understood, that he might be prepared to repel an attack on gen. Jackson that was anticipated, connected with that subject; but above all, if possible, to produce a perfect reconciliation between those gentlemen and their respective friends.

On my arrival at Sparta, (Georgia), where I hoped to see Mr. Crawford, I ascertained that he lived so far out of my way, that to go to his house would delay me in my journey eight or ten days, and that it was probable I would not find him at home when I should arrive there; I therefore pushed on to Savannah, whence on the 25th January, 1828, I wrote to Mr. Forsyth the letter referred to by him in his letter to Mr. Calhoun, dated May 31st, 1830. As I did not retain a copy of that letter, I must speak of its contents from recollection. By it I informed him of my disappointment in not having been permitted by my arrangements to visit Mr. Crawford, the inquiry I wished to make of him as above stated, and requested him when he should meet Mr. Crawford, to shew him my letter, and communicate the result to me at New York.

On my arrival at Washington, in February, I resided, during the day or two I remained there, in the same house with the vice president; and being anxious to obtain the information before referred to, (having, as I feared, lost the opportunity to do so from Mr. Crawford), after advising with a very honorable and discreet friend, residing in the same house, as to the propriety of doing so, I requested an interview with Mr. Calhoun, which was granted. I may here be permitted to say, that I never saw or heard of the letter written by Mr. Crawford to Mr. Balch, until it was published; and that I had not the slightest knowledge of the course Mr. Calhoun had considered it his duty to pursue in the cabinet on the occasion referred to: on the contrary, the impression I had received from these conversations was, that Mr. Calhoun was in favor of, and Mr. Crawford was adverse to, gen. Jackson.) When we met, I asked Mr. Calhoun "whether, at any meeting of Mr. Monroe's cabinet, the propriety of arresting gen. Jackson, for any thing done by him during the Seminole war, had been at any time discussed?" To which he replied—"Never!—Such a measure was not thought of, much less discussed. The only point before the cabinet was the answer that was to be given to the Spanish government."

Our conversation was extended, and, on his part, embraced much that I have never felt myself at liberty to disclose. After he had gone over the whole ground, in order to avoid the possibility of mistake, I asked the vice president whether he considered his answer to my question, affording me the information to obtain which I had sought the interview, confidential or not. He replied that it was not.

When I retired from the vice president's room, I sought the gentleman with whom I had advised, and communicated to him with sincere pleasure the statement Mr. Calhoun had made. I think I also mentioned it to another gentleman who was of the same house, and the next morning, at an early hour, I left Washington for New York, where I arrived on the 17th of February; on the 19th I wrote a letter to major Lewis, of which the following extract is all that relates to the subject.

"I did not see Mr. Crawford, as I intended to do, because he was seventy miles out of my way; but the vice president, who you know, was that member of the cabinet best acquainted with the subject, told me gen. Jackson's arrest was never thought of, much less discussed."

To this letter I received a reply, dated the 19th of March, 1828, of which the following extract is all that relates to the subject.

"I regret that you did not see Mr. Crawford. I was desirous you should see him and converse with him on the subject of his former misunderstanding with the general. I have every reason to believe that the information given to you by Calhoun is correct, for Mr. Monroe assured me, nearly nine years ago, such was the fact. It follows then that Mr. Crawford must have been vilely slandered by those whose object it was to fan a flame their interest required should not be extinguished."

I have given these extracts, in order to sustain my statement of the origin of my connexion with this transaction—not, however, without feeling deep humiliation in doing so: and yet, in a contest where suspicion is substituted for proof, and the conduct and motives of all, however remotely or accidentally connected with the transaction, are subject to its blighting influence, it is a humiliation that cannot be avoided.

After I had written to major Lewis and had related to others Mr. Calhoun's very frank, explicit, and as I felt, most satisfactory answer to my inquiry, believing that it might be used by major Lewis at Nashville, where, at that time, almost each day produced a new charge against gen. Jackson, which was followed by his immediate vindication, I thought proper to seek to confirm major Lewis in the accuracy of my statement of the conversation with Mr. Calhoun by a letter from the latter, and to that end wrote to him on the 25th Feb. a letter, of which the following extract contains the whole that relates to this subject.

New York, Feb. 25, 1828.

Dear sir—To avoid mistake as to what passed between us at the conversation I had the honor to hold with you the evening before I left Washington, I submit to you the following as the import of that part which it was understood was not to be considered as confidential.

In reply to my inquiry, "whether at any meeting of Mr. Monroe's cabinet the propriety of arresting general Jackson, for any thing done by him during the Seminole war, had been at any time discussed?"—You answered "never—such a measure was not thought of, much less discussed; the only point before the cabinet was the answer that was to be given to the Spanish government."

I am thus particular in endeavoring to ascertain from you whether my recollection is faithful or not in regard to this part of our conversation; because I wish to fulfil the object of my enquiry, by confirming major Lewis, a confidential friend of general Jackson, at Nashville, in the truth, not with a view to his making a publication on the subject at present, but to be prepared against an apprehended attack, founded on events connected with that campaign. I have the honor to be, your obedient servant, JAMES A HAMILTON.

On the 28th Feb. 1828, I received from Mr. Forsyth the following letter:

[Here follows a letter from Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Hamilton, a copy of which is contained in the preceding correspondence.]

To my letter of the 25th Feb. I received Mr. Calhoun's reply, dated March 2nd, of which I feel authorised to publish such parts at least as are in reply to my application. This right I conceive results, from Mr. Calhoun's having referred to this correspondence in connection with the "plots" and their "contrivers," without stating what its character was, and thus rendering it necessary for me, in vindication of myself to give it to the public. The information I had received in reply to my inquiry, was admitted by him not to be confidentially disclosed to me, and I had so treated it. He could not afterwards clothe it with that character; nor can so much of his communication as is in reply to my request to be informed whether I had correctly repeated his answer or not, be considered as confidential.

Washington, 2nd March, 1828.

Dear sir—I received, three days since, your letter of the 5th February, and have seized on the first leisure moment to answer it. In the conversation to which your letter alludes, I supposed, as you did not state the object, that your inquiry as to what had passed on a particular point in the cabinet deliberation on the Seminole question, was to obtain information, in order to meet mere general rumor, falsely put out, to influence the result of the presidential question. My answer was accordingly predicated on such supposition, and was intended to meet assertions unsupported by the authority of any name, in the same general manner without name, and was intended to be limited, even with that view, to the denial of what was falsely stated to have occurred on the occasion.

I now learn by your letter that your object is more specific. You state that you desire to obtain the information, "because I wish to fulfil the object of my inquiries, by confirming major Lewis, a confidential friend of general Jackson, at Nashville, in the truth, not with the view of his making a publication on the subject at present, but to be prepared against an apprehended attack founded on events connected with the campaign." I have under this aspect of the subject deliberately considered how far I could with propriety speak of the proceedings of the cabinet at all, which has resulted in a conviction that a duty of a very high and delicate character imposes on me silence.

Entertaining these views, you will see that I decline the introduction of my name in any shape as connected with what passed in the cabinet on the occasion to which you refer.—What I stated in conversation was negative in character, and intended, as above stated, to enable you to meet by a general contradiction, without the introduction of my name, what I suppose existed only in the shape of rumor; and I must request you to consider it as limited to that purpose only."

The residue of this letter, with the other parts of the correspondence, are not considered as important to this discussion. They will be published, however, if Mr. Calhoun wishes it. The letter from Mr. Forsyth to me was not seen by any person until the autumn of 1829, when it was read by major Lewis at my house.

The circumstances under which copies of the letters written by Mr. Crawford and by Mr. Forsyth, were communicated to the president, are so fully and frequently stated in the correspondence, as to render it unnecessary for me to repeat them.

When the president, who had, I presume, been informed of its import, expressed a wish to see Mr. Crawford's statement, I yielded to his request to communicate it to him, first obtaining the consent of the writer to do so, from the manifest propriety of the course he proposed to pursue, and the more readily as an opportunity would thus be afforded to Mr. Calhoun to disprove a statement so directly opposed to his own, or to explain his version of the same transaction.

I never saw Mr. Crawford's letter to Mr. Forsyth, until after it was sent to the president and to Mr. Calhoun.

In this effort to vindicate myself from groundless suspicion, I have confined myself to those topics which belong to that vindication alone.

JAMES A. HAMILTON.

New York, February 22d, 1831.

To the editor of the United States' Telegraph.

General Green: I herewith enclose a statement, which I wish to be published in your paper as supplemental to my correspondence with general Jackson, and which has been made necessary by the publication of Mr. Forsyth's letter to Mr. Hamilton.

J. C. CALHOUN.

24th February, 1831.

In my letter to general Jackson, of the 29th May, 1830, published in the correspondence, speaking of the plot to destroy my political standing, I stated, "that several indications forewarned me, long since, that a blow was meditated against me, I will not say from the quarter from which this comes; but in relation to this subject, more than two years since, I had a correspondence with the (present) district attorney for the southern district of New York, on the subject of the proceedings of the cabinet in the Seminole war, which, though it did not then excite particular attention, has since in connexion with other circumstances, served to direct my eye to what was going on. The letter of Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Hamilton, of New York, to whom I referred in the above extract, published by the former in the United States' Telegraph of the 22d instant, enables me to trace another link in this artful conspiracy against my character, which, I trust will form a sufficient apology for my again intruding myself on the public attention. If a copy of this letter, which it seems, was placed in the hands of the president, when Mr. Forsyth put him in possession of a copy of Mr. Crawford's letter to him of the 30th April, 1830, had been furnished me, as in justice it ought to have been, the remarks that I am now constrained to make, would have appeared in the body of the correspondence with general Jackson, and would have saved me the pain of again troubling the public.

I then conceived I had a right to be put in possession of all the facts and circumstances referred to in Mr. Crawford's letter to Mr. Forsyth, and that withholding of them was an act of injustice to me, calculated, whatever may have been the intention, to deprive me of the means of tracing out and exposing to the public, what I did not doubt to be a base political plot. The letter from Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Hamilton, now published, it seems, was the one referred to by Mr. Crawford in his letter to Mr. Forsyth, but with the name of Mr. Hamilton left blank in the copy of Mr. Crawford's letter which was furnished me. The facts disclosed by the publication of Mr. Forsyth's letter to Mr. Hamilton, taken in connexion with the correspondence alluded to with the present district attorney of the southern district of N. York, will prove, as I will presently shew, that I had just cause to complain that evidence, material to my vindication, was withheld, and I cannot but regret, that Mr. Forsyth's "respect to the personal delicacy of major Hamilton," has, in its effects, operated, though it may not have been so intended, unjustly towards me, by preventing me from tracing, in my correspondence with general Jackson, one of the earliest, and I must add, the foulest movements in the operations of this political conspiracy. What I could have done then in connexion with the general chain of my remarks, I am now constrained to do in this detached way, with great disadvantage to my vindication; the full force of which would have been more deeply felt by viewing all the circumstances in connexion.

This letter, by its date and other circumstances, clearly connects itself with Mr. Hamilton's correspondence with me, already alluded to; makes that correspondence a link to the chain of this corrupt political intrigue; thereby carrying back the movement to the early part of the year 1828, and, by its reference to an individual, (Major Lewis) then residing in Nashville, as will be seen in the copy of the correspondence with Mr. Hamilton, thereto annexed, shews it to be a part of the system of operations, which, as appears by Mr. Crawford's letter to Mr. Balch, had been commenced against me in December, 1827, and following so soon after, probably constitutes the second link in this foul plot against an individual, zealously co-operating at the same time in the same political course with those conspiring against him; and whom, from their political relation to him at the time, he had a right to consider his friends. I take no pleasure in exposing a transaction so disgraceful, but I feel myself compelled to do so in the discharge of a private and public duty. It must be painful and mortifying to the public to know, that the practice of such arts is possible under our system, but the knowledge that it is so, may guard against its recurrence in future.

In order to give a clear understanding of the affair, it will be necessary to make a few preliminary remarks.

It appears, from Mr. Forsyth's letter, that it was written in reply to a letter, dated at Savannah, the 25th Jan. 1828, from Mr. Hamilton, who was then on his return from New Orleans, where he had been, by the appointment of the Tammany society of New York, to represent them, as I understand, in the celebration of the 8th January, 1828. Gen. Jackson had been invited by the legislature of Louisiana, to attend the celebration. Mr. Hamilton on his way to New Orleans, passed through this city, in December, 1827, when congress was in session, and after remaining here some days he proceeded to Nashville, and accompanied the general and suite to New Orleans. From Savannah he returned to New York through this place, where he again remained some time, congress being still in session. Whether this letter of Mr. Hamilton to Mr. Forsyth was the commencement of the intrigue, or whether it originated at an earlier date, at this place on his way to Nashville, or while there, I am unable to say; but I cannot doubt that the arrangements for its accomplishment were made on his return from Savannah to this place. At the time I was decidedly, and I may add, zealously engaged in the support of gen. Jackson. I believed his election by congres was prevented by a departure from a most important fundamental principle in our system, and that he was the only individual in the country who united the popularity and firmness to arrest, if elected, what I then and now consider, a dangerous tendency in our affairs. Under this impression, I stood prepared to render every aid in my power, to secure his success. This strong feeling was seized on to extract from me, if possible, some hasty and unguarded expression respecting the course of the cabinet on the Seminole question, by which I might be entangled.

Mr. Hamilton, while here, requested to have some conversation with me, which on my part was carried on with the freedom that is usual between those engaged on the same side in a warm political contest. I viewed him in no other light than that of a warm supporter of general Jackson. In connexion with some remark of his, that there was a rumor of an attack on gen. Jackson for his conduct in the Seminole war, he inquired if any motion had been made in the cabinet to arrest him. To which I replied in the negative. It may be proper to remark here, that no such motion or any other was made. The discussion in reference to the course that might be pursued towards him, took place on a suggestion of the propriety of an inquiry into his conduct, and my answer was therefore in strict conformity to the facts. I accompanied the answer with some general remarks on the proceedings of the cabinet, such as I might with propriety make without any breach of confidence. I however feel, the most perfect confidence, that I did not use the expression, that "the only point before the cabinet was the answer to be given to the Spanish government," as Mr. Hamilton states that he understood me in his letter of the 25th of February.—I neither did nor could use the expression "only," as it would have been both inconsistent with facts and absurd, as the publications on the Seminole affair clearly indicate that other points were considered by the cabinet. If the statement be an error on the part of Mr. Hamilton, it probably originated in my using the word "main point, or real point," or some other expression of similar import, instead of the expression he imputes to me. The whole conversation was of a general character, such as might with propriety be held respecting the cabinet proceedings—and was by me considered in no way confidential, except the confidence that exists between gentlemen, that my name was not to be used before the public in connexion with any thing I said. I certainly did not suppose that my conduct, or that of any other individual, was put at issue, and could have no intention of making an erroneous impression as to the proceedings of the cabinet, nor the part I took. I suspected no sinister object.

On his return to New York, I received a letter from him dated the 25th of February, the object of which was, apparently, to know if he understood my conversation correctly.

He stated that his object in being thus particular in endeavouring to ascertain from me whether his recollection was faithful or not with regard to the conversation, was because he wished to fulfil the object of his inquiry by confirming major Lewis, a confidential friend of gen. Jackson, in the truth, not with a view to make the publication then, but to be prepared against an apprehended attack, founded on events connected with the Seminole campaign. This disclosure, particularly that the information was intended for major Lewis as a confidential friend of general Jackson, excited my suspicion. Circumstances, however, gave my eye a wrong direction, not towards myself, but Mr. Monroe. What they were it becomes necessary to state, with the view of understanding the correspondence which followed with Mr. Hamilton.

When Mr. Monroe received the letter of gen. Jackson of the 19th of August, 1818, in answer to his of the 19th of September, of the same year, both of which are published with my correspondence with gen. Jackson, he was at his farm in Albemarle. General Jackson, in his letter, objected to the construction which had been placed on his orders. Mr. Monroe addressed me a private letter of the 9th September, 1818, a copy of which is hereto annexed, marked A., stating the view which the general took of his orders, the tone of his letter, and with some other circumstances, his (Mr. Monroe's) reasons for thinking that there ought to be an official correspondence between the general and myself, so that the views which we respectively took of his orders might appear on record.

This letter passed out of my possession into that of general Jackson without my consent, but at what time or by what means, or through whose agency, I am to this day uninformed. In December 1827, I accidentally heard from a gentleman of this city, in a conversation turning on the subject of the feelings of Mr. Monroe towards general Jackson, (which I stated I knew to be friendly), that there was a letter of the former in the hands of the latter, which afforded conclusive proof of his hostility to the general. Having found some time before, that the letter of Mr. Monroe to me of the 9th of September, a copy of which is hereto annexed, was missing, I ascertained the fact by an examination of the letter to me, that it was missing, on a hint from a friend that there was a letter written by Mr. Monroe, as it was supposed to me, which was out of my possession, and was intended to be used for political purposes. My friend could not inform me in whose possession the letter was. On hearing that there was a letter of Mr. Monroe's in general Jackson's possession, I concluded it must be the same, though I was utterly at a loss to conjecture how it had passed into his hands, or how he could conceive that it indicated unfriendly feelings to him on the part of the writer.

I communicated what I had heard to the two senators, at that time, from Tennessee, judge White and major Eaton, and my belief that the letter in the possession of the general was Mr. Monroe's to me, and stated, if it was, it would be in my power to shew, that the letter, so far from being hostile, was directly of an opposite character. They wrote to the general to ascertain, if it was the one supposed; and I addressed a note to Mr. Monroe to apprise him of what I had heard, and to request him to send me a copy of his private correspondence with general Jackson, (the one published with the correspondence between general Jackson and myself), to be placed in the hands of the two senators, as explanatory of the letter in question, should it prove to be the one supposed. I have not been able to lay my hand on my note to Mr. Monroe, nor am I certain that I retained a copy, but I here to annex an extract from Mr. Monroe's answer of the 28th December, 1827, marked B.

It was in this stage of the affair, that I received Mr. Hamilton's letter of the 25th February, and very naturally suspected that his inqury might have reference to something connected with the same, and in my answer to it necessarily bore it in mind.

I could not answer his question whether his understanding of my conversation was correct or not, without going into explanations which would lead to details that I did not feel myself at liberty to state, and which, if I had, I could not prudently, not knowing the bearing that it might have in relation to the affair above referred to. I accordingly waived an answer, but in such terms as were intended to convey the idea that his understanding of my conversation was not correct.

Believing that an operation was carrying on against Mr. Monroe, at Nashville, as well from the fact of the letter being placed in gen. Jackson's hands, as other circumstances which about this time came to my knowledge, and suspecting that the object was to bring Mr. Monroe and general Jackson into conflict for purposes bearing on the pending election; but not knowing in what quarter it originated, I was at a loss to understand how it was to be effected, yet I could not doubt that the apprehended attack on general Jackson, was some how or other connected with this base object. These impressions will explain the character of my correspondence with Mr. Hamilton, a copy of which is hereto annexed, and marked C. The letter of Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Hamilton places his correspondence, and the conversation that preceded it, in a very different light from the one in which I then viewed it. It is impossible now to doubt that his correspondence with Mr. Forsyth, and his conversation and correspondence with me, formed parts of the same transaction. Mr. Hamilton proceeded from Savannah directly to this place, where he probably received the answer of Mr. Forsyth, dated at Milledgeville on the 8th of February, to his letter dated the 25th of January preceding. The very question which he put to me, as I must now say, so insidiously, whether there was a motion to arrest general Jackson, is explained by a reference to the letter of Mr. Forsyth, in which the motion to arrest makes a prominent part of what he represents as the statement of Mr. Crawford; of what occurred in the cabinet on the Seminole war. Mr. Crawford has since, however, stated in his letter to Mr. Forsyth, and the one to me, that the statement of Mr. Forsyth was erroneous on this point.

Viewing then this whole affair as one transaction, (it can be viewed in no other light), what a spectacle is presented! I am approached, as a zealous friend of general Jackson, by one, who, from his political relations with me at the time, I had a right to consider as friendly, for the purpose of extracting from me, under the pretext of defending general Jackson, some unguarded expression, which, at a future period after he might be raised, in part, by an exertion, to the highest office in the government, the power which I had thus contributed to confer, might be used to destroy forever the character and standing I had acquired by long, laborious, and faithful services to the country, and which was the only fund I had acquired in that service, to bequeath as a legacy to my children.

In order that the whole of this iniquitous transaction may be presented in one view, I annex a copy of the letter from Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Hamilton, of the 8th February. I cannot but regret, that Mr. Forsyth has thought proper to withhold from the public the letter of Mr. Hamilton, of Jan. 25, to which this is an answer. It is rare, that an answer can be fully understood without the letter to which it is a reply, and I do feel that justice to myself as well as to the country, and I will add, to Mr. Forsyth himself, requires its publication. In making these remarks I am not unminded of the hope, which he expresses, that his name may not be introduced in the further discussion of this subject. I feel every disposition to comply with his desire, and judging from my own feelings, I can well appreciate the pain which he must feel in being involved in the controversy: but he must pardon me for thinking that the claims of justice are paramount to those of delicacy, and that in insisting upon the performance of an act, on his part, which justice to me requires, I am not regardless of his sensibility. In coming before the public, he has voluntarily put himself in a position which gives me the right to make the request. I would also suggest, that this is not the only letter in his possession, connected with this correspondence, necessary to the full elucidation of this affair. His letter to Mr. Crawford, to which Mr. Crawford's letter, placed in the hands of general Jackson, was a reply, has not yet been put in the possession of the public. Until it be, the impression must necessarily remain that the evidence is not complete.

Whether the letter of Mr. Monroe, of the 9th of September, which was purloined from me, and passed into the hands of general Jackson, as has been stated, was intended as one of the means of placing us in our present relations, or was intended to excite hostility between him and Mr. Monroe, I am now unable to say. At first I supposed the latter, but subsequent events leave it doubtful. The letter was finally returned to me by general Jackson; but without explanation of the manner in which it came to his hands,

Having so long remained in the possession of the general, and been the subject of a correspondence, I might have adduced it in my correspondence with him, as conclusive proof that he ought to have known that my construction of his orders in the Seminole war, coincided with Mr. Monroe's and consequently differed from his own. I was restrained, however, from doing so, by considerations which may be easily conceived, but as the letter is necessarily connected with the immediate subject of this statement, I am now obliged to present it to the public as a part of my vindication.

I do not deem it necessary to make any remarks on Mr. Crawford's letter to me, published by Mr. Forsyth, as his friend. The argument of Mr. Crawford in support of his statement of the proceedings of the cabinet, rested almost exclusively on the statements of Mr. Crowninshield and Mr. Adams. A subsequent acknowledgement of the former that he was not present at the deliberation of the cabinet, and, consequently, that his statement to Mr. Crawford is unfounded, and the fact disclosed by the letter of Mr. Adams to me, published with the correspondence that Mr. Crawford has given in his letter a garbled extract of Mr. Adams' statement to him, omitting the material point, removed the foundation of his argument, and with it the superstructure, which he raised, fell to the ground.

With a knowledge of these facts, it is difficult to conceive why Mr. Crawford's letter should be presented to the public, and still more so, as it appears to reconcile its publication with justice, without an acknowledgement of uncontested errors.

I will conclude this statement by a single remark in relation to myself. As unpleasant as I find my present situation, I experience one consolation without which it would be quite intolerable. I have been placed in it by no fault of my own. Little did I suspect, more than 13 years ago, when daring to construe orders, which I myself had drawn, and to which I could give no other construction than what I did, consistently, with the constitution, acting as I was, under the obligation of an oath to abstain from the infraction of that sacred instrument; and in venturing to suggest the course, which I honestly supposed ought to be adopted on their infraction, I should be exposed, at this late day, to so much difficulty and danger. Yet this is my only offence.

—

A.

Copy of a letter from Mr. Monroe to Mr. Calhoun.

Highland, Sept. 9, 1818.

Dear sir: I have general Jackson's reply to my letter of July 19, from Washington, respecting his taking possession of St. Marks and Pensacola. He contends strenuously, that his orders left him free to adopt that course, if he found it necessary to terminate the Seminole war: that orders to general Gaines, an inferior officer, not referred to in the orders to him, of subsequent date, were inapplicable, and not obligatory on him, especially as his enlarged the sphere of his duties. His letter is on the whole conciliatory and friendly. He promises to write another. Our view of his powers is decidedly different from his, on which too we acted without entertaining a suspicion that he would misunderstand it. I am inclined to think that I had better answer this letter immediately. He may expect that his conception of his orders should appear by document in the department; and it seems to be proper that the sense in which they were given, and understood by the department, after what has passed, should be recorded there. A communication between you, on this head, and in this stage, seems to be the more necessary from the presumption that it may be my duty to state to congress that he transcended his orders on his own responsibility; or at least to state the sense in which they were understood by us. At present nothing to this effect exists in your correspondence with him. It is in mine only, which is private. A communication on this point may commence either with you or him: I will suggest it to him, thinking, as I do, that it had better begin with him. The affair may, I hope, be terminated to the satisfaction of all parties. I will send you in a few days his letter, (with a former one) with the answer, which I propose giving to it, which, if you see no objection to it, be so good as to forward to him. But if you do, return it with your objections to it. By coming from him, it will put you more at ease in your answer, and afford a better opportunity for the exercise of kindness and liberality. I shall attach no particular importance to the affair, in my letter, leaving the argument to you and him, so far as it becomes necessary to enter into it.

—

B.

Letter from Mr. Monroe to Mr. Calhoun.

Oak Hill, Dec. 28, 1827.

Dear sir: In my compliance with your request in the letter of the 22d, I now send you all the documents referred to in it, which you will find to correspond with the name enclosed. It would be very gratifying to me to know by whom, and from what quarter this attack on me has been meditated. I am far from wishing you to communicate to me any thing which you may not feel yourself at perfect liberty to communicate by the strictest rules of delicacy, but the hostility towards me is so marked and unjustifiable, that it may be useful to me to know in what quarter it exists. I have been much annoyed in this way ever since my retirement; which is the more extraordinary, because I am satisfied that I have given no just cause for it to any one.

—

C.

Copy of a letter from Mr. Hamilton, relating to the deliberations of the cabinet on the Seminole question.

New York, February 25, 1828.

Dear sir: To avoid mistake as to what passed between us at the conversation I had the honor to hold with you the evening before I left Washington, I submit to you the following, as the import of that part which, it was understood, was not to be considered as confidential.

In reply to my inquiry "whether at any meeting of Mr. Monroe's cabinet, the propriety of arresting gen. Jackson, for any thing done by him during the Seminole war, had been at any time discussed?" You answered: such a "measure was not thought of—much less discussed. The only point before the cabinet was the answer to be given to the Spanish government."

I am thus particular, in endeavoring to ascertain from you whether my recollection is faithful or not in regard to this part of our conversation, because I wish to fulfil the object of my inquiry by confirming major Lewis, a confidential friend of general Jackson's, at Nashville, in the truth; not with a view to his making a publication on the subject at present, but to be prepared against an apprehended attack, founded on events connected with that campaign.

—

Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Hamilton.

Washington, March 2, 1828.

Dear sir—I received, three days since, your letter of the 25th of February, and have seized the first leisure moment to answer it.

In the conversation, to which your letter alludes, I supposed, as you did not state the object, that your inquiry, as to what had passed on a particular point in the cabinet deliberation on the Seminole question, was to obtain information in order to meet mere general rumor, falsely put out to influence the result of the presidential election. My answer was accordingly predicated on such supposition, and was intended to meet assertions, unsupported by the authority of any name, in the same general manner, without a name; and was intended to be limited even with that view to the denial of what was falsely stated to have occurred. I now learn that your object is more specific. You state that you desire the information "because I wish to fulfil the object of my inquiry by confirming major Lewis, a confidential friend of general Jackson at Nashville, in the truth; not with the view of his making a publication on the subject at present, but to be prepared against an apprehended attack founded on events connected with that campaign." I have, under this aspect of the subject, deliberately considered how far I could, with propriety, speak of the proceedings of the cabinet at all, which has resulted in the conviction that a duty of a very high and delicate character imposes on me silence.

No relation can be more confidential than that between the president and members of the cabinet, as his constitutional advisers. Charged as he is, with the executive duties of the government, which were vested in a single person, to give energy and promptitude in execution, it is manifest, that to divulge the cabinet deliberations by any of its members, would introduce distrust and discord, and thereby tend to defeat, in this important particular, the object of the constitution. Nor, on a point so delicate, can a member of the cabinet, in my opinion, be justified by reference to the importance of the object intended to be effected by a disclosure of its proceedings. Deeply as any man of correct feelings must reprobate the foul attacks on general Jackson, and as important as every patriot must consider the defence of his character against such attacks in this great political struggle, involving, as I sincerely believe, the liberties of the country, yet I cannot reconcile it to my sense of duty, even for such an object, to do an act tending in any degree to weaken, by its example, the confidence which ought to exist between the chief magistrate and his constitutional advisers; and I am greatly mistaken if gen. Jackson would not be the last man to assent to be so defended. It is, however, a satisfaction, in pursuing a course that duty impels me to do, to reflect that the information, as I conceive, will never be needed for his defence.

I cannot believe that an attack so unfounded will ever be made—not but that he has enemiss atrocious enough to revert to the most diabolical falsehoods in order to wound his reputation; but it is manifest that an attack of the kind supposed cannot be made with the slightest prospect of success, without the countenance of some one of the members of Mr. Monroe's cabinet at the time; and I cannot admit the possibility that any one can be so lost to honor and duty as to be the agent or instrument in such an attack. But, if what seems to me impossible should prove otherwise, by there being found one base enough to lend himself to such a purpose, then would it become a question worthy of grave consideration on the part of the other members to determine whether, under all the circumstances of the case, duty would not impose any obligation, in order to counteract the injurious effect of a false, a partial statement of the cabinet proceedings, to demand of the then chief magistrate a release of the injunction of secrecy, or whether the chief magistrate himself would not be bound to disclose what was necessary to the vindication of the character of general Jackson, assailed in the manner supposed. Should such a case occur, though to me apparently impossible, I may, with confidence, appeal to the past to prove that I would not be wanting in zeal to go as far as duty would admit in defending the character of gen. Jackson; and in maintaining in his person the great cause of liberty and the constitution.

Entertaining these views, you will see that I decline the introduction of my name, in any shape, as connected with what passed in the cabinet on the occasion to which you refer. What I stated in conversation was negative in its character, and intended as above stated, to enable you to meet, by a general contradiction, without the introduction of any name, what I supposed existed only in the shape of rumor, and I must request you to consider it as limited to that purpose only.

—

Mr. Hamilton to Mr. Calhoun.

New York, March 10, 1828.

Dear sir—I have received your letter of the 2nd instant. Your reasoning as to the confidence which ought to be observed in regard to occurrences in the cabinet is so clear and conclusive, as to command universal assent.

I have written to major Lewis to-day that your name is not to be used in any manner in connexion with the denial, should a publication be called for at any time, which I do not believe will be the case.

The subject has acquired increasing interest by a communication I received after I wrote to you. With very great respect, your obedient servant, J. A. HAMILTON.

To the vice president of the United States, Washington.

—

Mr. Calhoun to Mr. Hamilton.

Washington, 15th March, 1828.

Dear sir—On reflection, it has appeared to me desirable on several accounts, that, if an attack on gen. Jackson is meditated in the manner supposed, I should be put in possession of the facts from which it is inferred. My knowledge of the facts, might enable me to ascertain from what quarter the blow might be expected, and to take measures to parry it.

If you should concur in this view, and should feel yourself at liberty to make a communication of what you know, it might prove ultimately serviceable to the cause. Whatever you may communicate, will be received in strict confidence. With great respect, &c. &c. &c. J. C. CALHOUN.

James A. Hamilton, esq.

Mr. Hamilton to Mr. Calhoun.

New York, March 20th, 1828.

Dear sir—In reply to your letter of the 15th inst. I regret to say that I am not permitted to disclose to you what I know of the matter to which it refers.

The information I received was not declared to be confidential, nor was it from its character necessarily so; and yet, as it was communicated to me only because I could be instrumental in obtaining the means of resistance, I feel that, having done so, I ought to consider myself as no longer possessed of the information.

I have great pleasure in assuring you that I believe the anticipation was groundless.

With great respect your obedient servant,

JAMES A. HAMILTON.

The vice president of the U. S. Washington.

From Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Hamilton.

Milledgeville, Feb. 8th, 1828.

Dear sir—Our friend, Wm. H. Crawford, was in this place a few hours yesterday on private business: I had very unexpectedly an opportunity to comply with the request made in your letter, dated Savannah, January 25th. I had a long conversation with Mr. C. and afterwards read to him your letter. He regretted that your engagements did not permit you to pay him a passing visit. By his authority I state in reply to your inquiry, that at a meeting of Mr. Monroe's cabinet to discuss the course to be pursued towards Spain in consequence of general Jackson's proceedings in Florida during the Seminole war, Mr. Calhoun, the secretary of the war department, submitted to, and urged upon the president, the propriety and necessity of arresting and trying gen. Jackson. Mr. Monroe was very much annoyed by it; expressed a belief that such a step would not meet the public approbation; that gen. Jackson had performed too much public service to be treated as a younger or subaltern officer might be, without shocking public opinion. Mr. Adams spoke with great violence against the proposed arrest, and justified the general throughout, vehemently urging the president to make the cause of the general that of the administration.

In consequence of the strong excitement produced by the president's obvious embarrassment, Mr. Crawford interposed in the discussion, and suggested that there was no necessity for deciding upon the course to be pursued towards the general, as the question for which the cabinet was convened did not require it; they were called to determine how Spain was to be treated in relation to the Florida affair. The conduct of the general was a matter exclusively between the general and his own government, in which, however Spain might feel interested, she had no right to meddle; the subject was then disposed of and was not renewed.

Mr. Calhoun had previously communicated to Mr. Crawford his intention to present the question to Mr. Monroe; an intention Mr. Crawford approved, although not believing, as he stated to Mr. Calhoun, that gen. Jackson would be either arrested or censured by the president. With great respect, I am, dear sir, yours,

JOHN FORSYTH.

Maj. James Hamilton, New York.

[From the U. States Telegraph, Feb. 26.]

Mr. Van Buren to the editor of the Telegraph.

Mr. Van Buren transmits the enclosed to the editor of the United States' Telegraph, for insertion in his paper of to-morrow.

February 25th, 1831.

Mr. Van Buren desires us, in relation to the correspondence between the vice president and various other persons, which has recently appeared, to make the following statement in his behalf.

He observes that an impression is attempted to be made upon the public mind, that certain applications by James A. Hamilton, esq. of New York, to Mr. Forsyth, the one in Feb. 7, 1828, and the other last winter, and a similar one to the vice president, for information in regard to certain cabinet transactions during the administration of Mr. Monroe, and which are referred to by the latter gentleman, were so made by Mr. Van Buren's advice or procurement. Leaving the motives and objects of those applications to those who may deem it necessary to notice them, Mr. Van Buren avers that they, and each of them, were not only made without agency of any description on his part, but also without his knowledge; and that he has, at no period, taken any part in the matters connected with them.—He desires us further to say, that every assertion, or insinuation, which has for its object to impute to him any participation in attempts, supposed to have been made in the years 1827 and 1828, to prejudice the vice president in the good opinion of gen. Jackson, or at any time, is alike unfounded and unjust. He had no motive or desire to create such an impression, and neither took, advised, nor countenanced, directly, or indirectly, any steps to effect that object. For the correctness of these declarations, he appeals with a confidence which defies contradiction, to all who have been actors in the admitted transactions referred to, or who possess any knowledge on the subject.

Washington, Feb. 25, 1831.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE AMERICAN SYSTEM. There is no rational and well-informed citizen of the United States, unless sacrificing his reason and intelligence to his prejudices or passions, who must not feel a high gratification in the present general prosperity of his country. Though rent and distracted by political factions and parties, by furious contests of persons and strange results of things—the march of population, power, wealth, is onward. That the business of the nation is in a healthy state, is demonstrated in the unparalleled abundance of specie that we have in possession—shewing a real "balance of trade" in our favor that cannot be mistaken—or explained away, by the "free trade philosophers." The best evidence of the success of domestic industry is substantially, solidly, present—and hence the currency is sound and wholesome, and the interest, or hire, of money reduced from twenty to twenty-five per cent. The hardy and virtuous growers of grain, meat and other articles for the food of man, or of wool, hemp, flax, &c. have a brisk market, at home, for all that they have to dispose of—and the perpetual transformations of the values produced by them, through the agency of manufacturers and mechanics, gives that circulation to money which renders it "plenty," and places a mighty number of worthy "working men" and women in comfort. Never before has the cry of distress been less frequently heard—never were there so few heavy bankruptcies as now happen. Not very many are rapidly accumulating large fortunes—but there is an unprecedented firmness in private credit, and the voice of gladness is heard in the cottages of the humble. The sober, industrious and discreet inhabitants of the United States, no matter what their condition in life may be, are doing well. We are the best fed and clothed and housed people in the world. The exceptions to this grateful, but confident remark, are only to be found in those parts of our country where labor is not honored, unless in those special cases which do not operate against a general proposition. Education too, is extending—light is going forth—strength is increasing—and every reflecting man must admit, (separated from the conflicts of political opinions and parties), that, at no former period, were the people of the United states so prosperous.

A careful examination will indubitably shew that these cheering results are produced, almost exclusively, by the increased employment and profit of the working classes. Hundreds of thousands, perhaps, of such as those who were consumers rather than producers, before the "American System" was established, now add many scores of millions annually to the national wealth. The rocks and the stones, the hitherto profitless forests and mines, have assumed an incalculable value; and the busy hum of industry is heard in lately desolate places. One branch of successful industry is continually begetting others, and all tend to benefit the farmers and landholders, the fountain or support of all. We have no hesitation in saying, that the supplies of our own fields, forests and mines received at the city of Boston, only, have a greater annual value than all our bread-stuffs, meats, lumber and minerals exported to foreign countries—and much larger is the demand for that great work-shop, Philadelphia, the various manufactures of which, and its neighborhood, cannot amount to less than from thirty-five to forty millions a year—new buildings and all other works for the convenience and comfort and business of man, being, of course, included. At New York, it is believed that nearly forty millions worth of domestic manufactures are sold, annually. How does the boasted foreign commerce "dwindle," as Dr. Cooper said in his better days, when compared with these things!

This happy state of the nation has not been brought about by chance. Almost as well might we suppose that the planetary system, in all its order and magnificence, was the result of fortuitous combinations of matter. The foundation of it was laid by the first congress of the U. States in 1790—and, by successive acts, the DOMESTIC INDUSTRY agricultural, manufacturing and commercial, has been nursed until it has almost reached a point at which it will be fully capable of protecting and defending itself—and so without reducing the laboring people to the miserable condition of such persons in the old world. But who would that a free citizen of this republic should be subjected to such reduction in the price of his labor, as to be unable to obtain a full supply even of oat-meal and potatoes—as in England and Ireland oftentimes happens; or to subsist as the poor East Indians do? We desire a plentifully fed, well clothed and "saucy populace," as the lords of Europe and Asia would call them. These are the men to be relied on. A majority, perhaps, of the privates who fought on Bunker's Hill, were "house-holders;" and, at one time, during the late war, "Old Iron Sides," the Constitution frigate, had more than two hundred free-holders in her crew. These men--the "salt" of the republic, must not be placed, (in the ordinary transactions of life), in competition with the wretched laborers that we have just spoken of. No friend of the human race can desire it—no one that honors honest labor would seek measures to bring it about—none but those who observe no other distinctions in society than exists in masters and slaves. But give to them fair play—let them go on in new and various applications of their genius and industry and acquisitions of capital and skill—and we shall soon be able to say to all nations as to manufactures, what we have said in respect to commerce and navigation—we are ready to meet you, "one and all," in generous competition, and real free trade! But while other nations restrict our intercourse with them, we must restrict their intercourse with us. It is well known that, even in regard to foreign bread-stuffs, the laws of England are prohibitory, unless actual scarcity ensues.

But this wholesome and sound condition of the free laboring citizens is about to be disturbed, if possible—and a mighty capital vested in lands and flocks and herds, factories and workshops, be dissipated, if within the power of certain numerous and influential classes of persons seeking political influence, urged on by the lust of dominion, and reckless of consequences if they can gratify it. It is the unhesitating opinion of every old and steady and resolute friend of the American System, that a grand and desperate attack is to be made upon it at the next session of congress—and it is in vain to disguise the fact, that the executive favors such measures as will destroy it. The modus operandi is not so clearly seen. But the whole concern of internal improvement being now laid aside, by the vetoes of the president and the doings of his friends in congress--we suppose the main attempts will be made to prostrate the makers and chief workers of iron, and the cultivators of sugar. By "DETACHING" the members of congress interested in these, it is thought that a majority may be obtained to break down the whole scheme of protection—which, indeed, can only exist as a system. THE PROTECTED MUST PROTECT—SUPPORT MUST BE GIVEN FOR SUPPORT RECEIVED. It is not within the range of human intellect to contrive a general system that shall bear equally upon all persons. A spirit of compromise, indeed, is indispensable to a peaceful and proper doing of the most common concerns of life; and the good of the majority must prevail, under a wise and just administration of public affairs. Taxation, whether direct or indirect, is specially fraught with wrongs to individuals---for it is not possible that it should be rendered really equal on all. We must take what some think evils, for what the greater number esteem benefits. Private interests---perhaps the preservation of the union itself, depends on the operation of the principle suggested. It is not to be expected, that every body should be pleased. But the sugar planter, protected as to his production---can afford to pay the iron maker, (if so it needs must be), a little more for the kettles which he uses,---and so on through the whole system. A common sense of danger should rally all under a common standard; and the friends of a protecting tariff must not permit one link in the chain of their union to be broken. The head may not say to the eye or the mouth, the hand or the foot, "I have no need of thee."

A great degree of indolence, or of lethargy, has prevailed among those most interested in a protecting tariff. When doing well—they have thought there was no need to look beyond their own immediate business; when doing ill—they have much wanted energy to take a broad view of the subject, and come unitedly forward to regain a better state, especially if the effort required a small expenditure of money. And thus, by neglect in prosperity and down-heartedness in adversity, we have sometimes almost wondered that the "system" was sustained at all. Another great misfortune has attended us--some heavy capitalists, also possessed of other peculiar advantages, have more regarded the domestic than the foreign competition, and held themselves back. But the great and the small, the strong and the weak, are now alike threatened, and must unite for mutual defence, or be destroyed in detail. And in the general sweep aimed at, the ruin of our prosperity will be completed in a single year. With all the present abundance of specie—this nation cannot stand an abandonment of the tariff for twelve months—but the south would be more quickly affected than the north, in the suddenly reduced price of cotton, because of its over-production, the sugar planters being ruined—and in the reduced value of lands and slaves.

The time for action has arrived. The policy and laws of the United States are supposed to rest on the people's will. Let the people, then, be apprized of the dangerous ground on which they stand—of the machinations that are going on to injure them—of the indispensable necessity of acting together. Let them be taught to understand and reflect upon the principles and operations of the American system—how it affects their fire-sides, how it acts upon their own subsistence! Many tens of thousands of persons, lately poor, have reached comfortable circumstances—without ever considering how it has happened. Farmers, located near factories, find a market for their heretofore almost useless vegetables, fuel, &c. and working-people obtain high wages, without looking into the causes of them. They well know that by labor performed at the factory, money is obtained to pay them—BUT THEY REFLECT NOT UPON WHAT ORIGINATED THE FACTORY, OR ENABLES IT TO GO ON. Let them be instructed as to these things—and we shall not find them, as is oftentimes the case, supporting men for public offices that would deprive them of their profits. We most decidedly oppose all attempts on the part of proprietors to influence laboring men, except in reasoning with them, as having a common stake in the success of domestic industry. But no sensible man, because of abstract political questions or personal preferences, will divest himself of his own individual support. Ten thousand of the loudest hurrahs ever made at an electioneering meeting, will not make one pot boil! If all understood this, the ballot box would become a place of solemn judgment, rather than the depository of excited feelings; and no fear could be entertained for a full accomplishment of all that has been predicted of the American system---now marching in triumph to its glorious destiny, if carefully guarded.

Standing as we do, before this nation—as the oldest advocate of protection, as one of its most zealous and faithful friends, though of inferior power to support it—and interested, even to our own living, in writing and publishing—it may not seem altogether decorous in us to urge upon landholders, and proprietors of factories, (equally concerned), the importance of inducing the laboring classes to read and reflect upon the subjects we have hinted at. But, while not devoid of self-interest, some will give us credit for a more lofty and noble motive. Whether we stand or fall, is a small matter.—Our profit is like a grain of sand on the sea-shore, if compared with the general accumulations. And, whether it profits us one cent, or injures us one thousand,—we entreat the friends of the American system to be on the alert, to invite and induce the people, one and all, to consider the vital principles which are at hazard, by placing in their hands proper tracts and publications, that they may act understandingly. A very small disbursement—a twentieth part of one per cent. of the gross annual production of the manufacturing establishments, if zealously used, would be amply sufficient for all the purposes contemplated, as well as afford the means of general improvement to those who most needs it.

We have thus performed an act of duty--though rather at the request of others than on our own suggestion, lest it might be construed into a petition "for relief." It is not so. Our stake is inconsiderable—we have no other than a general benefit in the success of manufactures—no dividends to receive, or lands to be enhanced in value; and, if the policy is abandoned, can get along as well as most others, through the slough of national adversity. We urge it again—a great battle is to be fought; another defeat of the enemy, and the contest, we trust, will be over forever!

APPOINTMENTS, by the executive of Maryland. Robert H. Goldsborough, of Talbot county, Samuel Sterett, of Baltimore, and John Mercer, of Anne Arundel county, esquires, have been appointed commissioners on the part of this state, to Pennsylvania, in regard to certain obstructions in the Susquehannah river.

☞ Here is another affair of "state rights." Pennsylvania, to supply her canals and cast the trade of the Susquehannah into the lap of her capital, has erected dams across that noble river, and rendered its descent difficult, or dangerous, to the arks and rafts proceeding to market. In furtherance of this leading idea of monopolizing the trade of the Susquehannah, the bill to incorporate the York and Maryland line rail road was recently rejected by a large majority in the house of representatives of Pennsylvania—but the merchants and others of Philadelphia lately petitioned congress that vessels navigating the Chesapeake bay, and its waters, might be compelled to display lights, for the more safe entrance into the Chesapeake and Delaware canal; and also to clear out the bed of our Back Creek, at the western end of the canal. Now, we intend, if our commissioners are unsuccessful at Harrisburg, to build a dam over the Susquehannah at its entrance into Maryland—with a passage, however, through which boats, arks and rafts may pass, on giving approved security that such boats, arks and rafts, and their cargoes, shall be sold at Baltimore, and at Baltimore only; and we may resolve to fill up Back creek, forbidding access to the canal from the waters of the Chesapeake bay, all the upper part of which is our own. Maryland, one of the "NATIONS of this confederacy," (as gov. Floyd said in his opening message to the legislature of Virginia), must have the same rights over her water that Pennsylvania can have over her land! "Sovereignty" has no limit—so we will shut up the Susquehannah, "nullificate" the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, and hurrah for "state rights!"—supposing that, if attacked, the grand army of South Carolina will march to our assistance and frighten the "Buck-skins" into submission, at once—though backed by the supreme court of the United States and the whole power of the federal government! But we shall mainly depend on the strength of our lungs—well knowing that those who bellow the most outrageously and bully the most abominably, have always the best of the argument in political matters, "in these our days!" Probatum est. We have an idea of getting Mr. Maelzel to make a large number of great machines to shout "hurrah!" They will also be of much use at the places of voting, to put down the enemies of "free trade" and "state rights."

To be serious—Baltimore is the natural market for certain of the counties of Pennsylvania, and the rejection of the bill to incorporate the rail road above spoken of, shews the prevalence of a spirit far different from that which prevailed, in Maryland, when the Chesapeake and Delaware canal company was incorporated. We are for opening all possible avenues through the country—as many as the people are pleased to make; and leave the market open to the fair and honest competition of all who shall enter it, to sell or buy. We have a common interest—much as knaves or fools may endeavor to separate it by "geographical lines." And those who ask freely—should give freely.

"WEST INDIA" TRADE. Just before the late election in New Hampshire, it was asserted in one of the papers of that state which ought to have some claims to veracity, that "pork brings a price of two cents higher in the pound this year, in consequence of the opening of the West India ports, than it did the two preceding years." It is just about as likely that the price of pork has advanced "in consequence" of Mr. Reynolds' discovery of a "hole in the earth," at the south pole, and a new demand for the supply of the inhabitants of the interior! Our pork is not admitted into the British West Indies—unless smuggled.

It is published as a great "compliment," that "Mr. Robinson of the house of commons, declares, that Mr. McLane has out-diplomatised the British ministers—and that his recent arrangements will have the effect of increasing the American tonnage by 200,000 to 300,000 tons!

The man who shall live long enough to see the American tonnage increased 300,000 tons, because of the "out-diplomatisement" of Mr. McLane—will wear out his throat with eating, and wear off his feet with walking—as the Indians say that their ancestors were accustomed to do, in old times. Every body in Baltimore* expects that the American tonnage employed in the West India trade will be diminished. So do the people of Barbadoes, as appears by the following article:

Bridgetown, Feb. 8. The Americans, it would seem, are already beginning to testify much dissatisfaction at the slender advantages conferred on them by the opening of the West India ports to their trade. They say, or rather it is said for them, that they experience the greatest difficulty in getting a market for their produce. So that Jonathan, after all, will not find the great boon so good a thing as he expected, under the existing restrictions.

And the Jamaica Royal Gazette thus tantalizes us—"In the liberal spirit of free trade reciprocity, the American government are resolved to outvie ours.—We only allow their vessels to bring to our ports the produce and manufactures† of the United States—they make their ports free to our commerce in every sense of the word."

"MODERN ANTIQUITIES." Overhauling a large parcel of scraps the other day, we were particularly struck with the brief articles given below, in their application to the present state of the feelings of some concerning the points involved.

Colonization of the free blacks. It is well known that this project came from the south—Virginia being specially anxious that the aid of the "national government" might be given in support of it. How stands the case now? But we shall not make any comments.

Extract of a letter from Thomas Jefferson, dated January 2nd, 1811. "You have asked my opinion on the proposition of Ann Mifflin, to take measures for procuring, on the coast of Africa, an establishment to which the people of color of these states might, from time to time, be colonized, under the auspices of different governments. Having long ago made up my mind on this subject, I have no hesitation in saying, that I have ever thought this the most desirable measure which could be adopted for gradually drawing off this part of our population, most advantageous for themselves as well as for us; going from a country possessing all the useful arts, they might be the means of transplanting them among the inhabitants of Africa; and would thus carry back to the country of their origin the seeds of civilization, which might render their sojournment here a blessing in the end, to that country."

"You inquired further, whether I would use my endeavors to procure for such an establishment security against violence from other powers, and particularly the French. Certainly I shall be willing to do any thing I can, to give it effect and safety.

"But I am but a private individual; and could only use endeavors with individuals. Whereas, the national government can address themselves at once to those of Europe to obtain the desired security, and will unquestionably be ready to exert its influence with those nations, to effect an object so benevolent in itself, and so important to a great portion of its constituents. Indeed, nothing is more to be wished than that the United States would themselves undertake TO MAKE SUCH AN ESTABLISHMENT ON THE COAST OF AFRICA.

"Exclusive of motives of humanity, the commercial advantages to be derived from it, might defray all its expenses," &c.

Mr. Doddridge, one of the Virginia delegation in congress, at the annual meeting of the American colonization society at Washington, held on the 19th January last, said—"twenty-three, twenty-five and twenty-seven years ago, resolutions were adopted by both

---

*There are now more British flags flying in the harbor of Baltimore than have been seen, at one time, for many years—and, to the extent of the British tonnage present, it directly interferes with the employment of our own vessels.

† What American manufactures are allowed an entry into the British West Indies? And how are other things allowed an entry? At an extra duty, in general half equal to the whole value of the freight!

houses of the general assembly of VIRGINIA, in secret session, which had for their object to call on the president of the United States, to use the treaty-making power for the acquisition of a territory in Africa, which might contain the black population of the United States." Again—"fifteen years ago, the power of the general government was invoked by Virginia for this object, with almost legislative unanimity." But—if within the last fifteen years the constitution of the United States has not been changed, the opinions of the hair-splitting political doctors of Virginia have tumbled "topsey-turvey," and on many important points. We know not where to find these folks. Right changes with them, as expediency leads—personal pride being the sun of their system.

War on the Indians. The late proceedings of Georgia, and the marching of state troops into the Indian country, gives force to the following:

Extract of a letter from general Jackson, to gov. Rabun of Georgia, dated the 7th May, 1818.

"That a governor of a state should assume the right to make war against an Indian tribe, in perfect peace with and under the protection of the United States, is assuming a responsibility that, I trust, you will be able to excuse to the government of the United States, to which you will have to answer, and through which I had so recently passed, promising the aged that remained at home my protection, and taking the warriors with me in the campaign, is as unaccountable as strange. But it is still more strange, that there could exist, within the United States, a cowardly monster in human shape, that should violate the sanctity of a flag, when borne by any person, but more particularly when in the hands of a superannuated Indian chief, worn down with age.—Such base cowardice and murderous conduct, as this transaction affords, has not its parallel in history, and shall meet with its merited punishment."

In his message to congress, 5th Feb. 1827, Mr. Adams said—"It is my duty to say, that if the legislative and executive authorities of the state of Georgia should persevere in acts of encroachment upon the territory secured by a solemn treaty to the Indians, and the laws of the union remain unaltered, a superadded obligation, even higher than that of human authority, will compel the executive of the United States to enforce the laws, and fulfil the duties of the nation, by all the force committed for that purpose to his charge.—That the arm of military force will be resorted to only in event of the failure of all other expedients provided by the law, a pledge has been given by the forbearance to employ it at this time. It is submitted to the wisdom of congress to determine, whether any further act of legislation may be necessary or expedient to meet the emergency which these transactions may produce."

The Seminole war. Extract from Mr. Clay's speech in the house of representatives—"Mr. C. begged leave further to premise, that the subject under consideration presented two distinct aspects, susceptible in his judgment of the most clear and precise discrimination. The one he would call its foreign, the other its domestic aspect. In regard to the first, he would say, that he approved entirely of his government, and that Spain had no cause of complaint. Having violated an important stipulation of the treaty of 1795, that power had justly subjected herself to all the consequences which ensued upon the entry into her dominions, and it belonged not to her to complain of those measures which resulted from her breach of contract; still less had she a right to examine into the considerations connected with the domestic aspect of the subject."

The manner in which Mr. Adams defended the general, is well known. Of his letter to Don Onis, dated 28th Nov. 1818, the Richmond Enquirer thus spoke:

"I cannot sufficiently express the profound sentiments of admiration and delight with which I have perused this state paper. It is written with an astonishing force of ingenuity, and adorned with the most captivating eloquence of all descriptions. It has the air of a man who feels most acutely for the wrongs of his country; who is indignant at the insults offered her by the aggressor pretending to demand redress, and who pours out those feelings in the most forcible strains. It is a monument of diplomatic genius. It is an ornament to my country. I feel proud of belonging to such a nation which has produced such a blaze of talents. It shivers the manifesto of the Spanish cabinet into dust and ashes. Into what utter insignificance does the redoubtable chevalier Onis sink! He seems like a pigmy in the hands of a giant.

State rights. The following we find marked from the Albany Advertiser, date not given, but probably in 1827.—"The singular manner in which some politicians can change their principles, though not new, is indeed paradoxical. I can recollect when in the senate of this state, the hon. Martin Van Buren proposed a plan for balloting for 12,000 of our militia, and giving them up to the United States for a term of years. A motion was made to limit them to the defence of this state. He opposed it, and it was rejected. Thus a law was passed, thro' Mr. Van Buren's influence, converting our citizens by ballot into regulars, and sending them without their consent, into Canada, and into distant states. This law passed the winter that peace was proclaimed, and on that account did not go into effect. I shall ever remember the noble stand then made by gen. Root. He openly declared upon the floor of the senate, that "Mr. Van B's project was worse than French conscription or British impressment. "The one," he said, "merely forced sailors, and the other young men; both of whom were generally destitute of families; whilst Mr. Van B's. law drew men from all classes, and compelled them to become soldiers."

Appointments to office. The following is related in a Philadelphia paper. It refers to a noble characteristic of the incomparable hero of our revolution:—

"We recollect an anecdote of Gen. WASHINGTON, when president of the United States, which exhibits that true magnanimity which ought to characterise every chief magistrate of a free and enlightened nation. There was a personal and devoted friend of Washington, whom he had treated with great kindness, and to whom he had given many proofs of his friendship. This man, presuming upon the intimacy and friendship that existed between them, applied for an office, for which it appears the president did not think him qualified. The public good, in his opinion, would not be promoted by his appointment. The answer of Washington ought to be inscribed in letters of gold, and hung up in the president's house, at the seat of government. "As George Washington, you may depend upon my friendship and willingness to serve you, BUT AS PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, I CAN DO NOTHING FOR YOU."

"THE MORGAN AFFAIR." We rather hastily adopted a paragraph from the New York "Commercial Advertiser," and published it in our last paper, concerning a matter about which, because of its prolixity and uncertainty, we had resolved to do no more than record results. We have read the trial of Adams, at Lockport. The testimony on behalf of the people was given by Richard Giddins and James A. Shed, accomplices in the false imprisonment and conspiracy against Morgan. The testimony is not of that direct character which the "Commercial" led us to expect, as to the murder of Morgan; for the judge, in his charge, said, "the defendant, if guilty at all, was guilty of assault and battery and false imprisonment of William Morgan, and of a conspiracy actually carried into effect. The punishment was imprisonment not exceeding two years, a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars." To these things Giddens and Shed were as much parties as Adams, the prisoner at the bar; and, relying on the testimony of the witnesses, it seems they understood that Morgan had been murdered, but how and when, and where, or by whom, they knew not—or did not tell. And though the probability of murder is so much strengthened as to inspire a belief that Morgan's life was surely taken, the dark transaction has not been cleared up by this trial, as we supposed that it had been, on reading the article in the "Commercial." Eleven of the jury agreed upon a verdict of guilty against Adams, for assault and battery, &c. as stated by the judge—but the twelfth man "would not believe the witnesses who were accomplices," and the jury, not being able to agree, was discharged.

SILK. The bill for promoting the culture of silk, lately before congress, was very important. Its leading object was the establishment of filatures—for preparing the silk from the cocoons, so that it might be rendered an article of commerce. In this state, being reeled, it is called raw silk, and its average price is about five dollars the pound.

Our imports of silk goods are worth eight millions of dollars a year. It will, probably, be a long time before we shall have extensive manufactories of such goods; but we have it in our power, in a very short period, to supply as much raw silk as will pay for all the goods that we consume, and thus add nearly eight millions annually to the general wealth of the country; for the feeding and management of the worms may be almost wholly accomplished by the labor and attention of aged and feeble persons, or quite young children, without injury to them, though now wholly unproductive for the want of suitable employments; and thus the great value stated may be obtained at little more than the cost of reeling the silk—a home-market for the cocoons being made by the establishment of filatures.

To the south, especially, this matter is interesting. It would afford occupation to aged slaves and small children—and, because of its production, enable their owners materially to improve their condition; and, as it relates to agriculture, we hope that it is not liable to those "constitutional scruples" which belong to manufactures!

It appears that in seven years, from 1821 to 1828, Great Britain imported 24,157,516 lbs. raw silk, at five dollars a pound, costing $120,787,580—or, $17,225,000 worth annually. There was exported of raw silk from Italy alone, (though large quantities are manufactured in that country), of the value of 59,881,233 dollars in these seven years, or at the rate of about 8,500,000 dollars a year—equal to the average value of our crops of tobacco and rice; and so much may be exported from the United States, without any diversion of the labor of the people which shall materially affect the production of any of our present staple commodities.

We were favored a short time ago, with a beautiful skein of sewing silk, being the first manufactured within the city of Troy, N. Y. by Mrs. E. Pawling in 1830—the lady of the first mayor of that city. It is excellent. Accompanying the specimen, was an account of the progress of the culture of silk at Troy. It shews the success that attended the patriotic efforts of Mrs. Pawling—a lady whose example must have much effect, (from her condition in life) to encourage those who are in a dependent state, to pursue this elegant branch of industry, so happily fitted for the attention of females—in whose welfare the public has a deep and lively interest. Many tens of thousands of these, now straightened for the means of respectable subsistence—if so situated that they could obtain supplies of mulberry leaves, might, at least, live comfortably, if not accumulate little fortunes for themselves, by rearing the worms and preparing the silk—a delicate employment, exactly suited to them, and in no wise interfering with that sort of retirement which is so commendable in young women and girls. It is added, that Dr. Corning, an enterprising merchant and manufacturer at Troy, has lately planted many mulberry trees, to encourage the culture of silk. We think that farmers adjacent to many of our cities and towns and almost all the villages and hamlets in the United States, cannot raise any crop that might be rendered more profitable than mulberry trees. A regular business could easily be made of it, in selling leaves by the pound, to females and children having charge of silk worms.

The silk manufactures of England are estimated to amount to £14,000,000 sterling per annum, or upwards of 62,000,000 of dollars.

Silk filature—adapted to family use.

This neat little apparatus (about the size of a lady's work table,) consists of eight spindles or winders, and the necessary appendages, complete for making organzine or warp for stuffs, of any size over five fibres of the cocoon, with any amount of twist per inch required, at one operation. It is also adapted to doubling and twisting; with an easy speed of the hand at the crank or winch, from two to three thousand yards of thread per hour may be produced as the quantity of twist required will admit. Practice has tested its utility, although not heretofore made public. The recent publications on the management of cocoons and culture of silk, by government, will instruct any person to prepare the cocoon for winding and in saving the raw or refuse silk for the market. For further information the public are referred to the editor of the American Farmer, published at Baltimore, or to Daniel Hack, Savage factory, near Baltimore.

☞ The machine above mentioned seems to be the only thing that was needed to promote the culture of silk, in the family way—by which much money is made in Connecticut; in some, enough by silk, only, to support the whole family.

Rail roads. Loads of seventy-five barrels of flour are now brought from Ellicott's mills to Baltimore, 13 miles, in two hours, by one horse, without more apparent labor than is caused by the drawing of a gig, with two persons, over a good common road.* Mr. Cooper's model locomotive engine is plying on a part of the road, for the gratification of those who wish to ride by steam, at the rate of 18 or 20 miles an hour.

Many rail roads are about to be made in different parts of the United States, the subscriptions for which have overflowed. The Liverpool and Manchester rail road will make unexpected dividends. The stock is at a great advance, though the road cost about 35,000*l.* a mile!

A late Liverpool paper says—On Saturday last the Majestic, a new engine which has just been put on the railway, travelled six times between Liverpool and Manchester, a distance of one hundred and eighty miles!—The total quantity of goods conveyed backwards and forwards amounted to one hundred and forty-two tons!—The same engine travelled on Monday one hundred and twenty miles, with loads similar to those taken on Saturday. There are now ten engines of Mr. Stephenson's employed on the rail-way.

[The expense of fuel, oil, and attendance on this engine, is said not to exceed $5 a day. At this rate of cost, 25,560 tons may be transported one mile for five dollars—or fifty tons one mile for one cent!

"State rights dance." The much talked of "state rights ball," was given at Charleston to his excellency gov. Hamilton, of South Carolina, on the 3d inst. in the theatre. We have a large account of it, in the nullificating Mercury. The governor was received with a flourish of trumpets and an immense concourse of spectators. The finale is thus given—

"When the company dispersed, every one retired, not only highly gratified with the splendor and gaiety of the scene, but carrying with him the animating conviction that the cause of state rights goes on triumphantly "conquering and to conquer," and that the flame of liberty yet burns as vividly in the hearts of Carolinians as when it was first kindled by their fathers upon the altar of patriotism—the Palmetto fort."

Among the decorations of the room were portraits of John Randolph, ("set in ever-green!")—and Mr. Calhoun. In regard to the latter, the Mercury says—

"Of these we should neither do justice to our own feelings, nor to the interesting occasion of which we are giving an account, if we did not distinctly record those of John C. Calhoun, the pride of Carolina—a statesman unsurpassed in genius, or experience, a patriot, whose spotless reputation calumny has indeed attempted but cannot taint—who is even now triumphantly treading under foot the despicable snares which were laid for his destruction, and who is yet destined to attain an eminence from which he will look down with pity on the impotent malice of his enemies."

---

*This appears a common load.—On the 15th instant, one horse drew four cars laden with one hundred barrels of flour, from the mills to the relay house, six miles, at the rate of seven miles an hour—another horse then drew the same load with equal speed to the depot in Baltimore. Neither horse appeared distressed. This result is the effect of the almost entire annihilation of friction in the machinery of Winans' improved cars.

But—Mr. Calhoun is not a nullifier. Will all this be taken "back again?"

THE WHALE FISHERY. A late Salem paper speaking of the whale fishery, says—within the last week, six ships have arrived at New-Bedford from whaling cruises to the Pacific and South Atlantic ocean—three of which have brought home 6,550 barrels of oil—the remaining three are reported with full cargoes, probably having not less than 2,500 barrels each, making an aggregate of 14,050 barrels. There are upwards of one hundred ships employed in the whaling business from that port, and the number is rapidly increasing. The benefits derived by that town from this productive business are immense. The tonnage of the port is considerably greater than that of Salem; and next, in New England, to Boston. Its population has nearly doubled, in the last ten years; and it bids fair in a short time to outstrip the other New England commercial towns in population, as it has already done in commerce. Its present population is 8,000. A great many new buildings are annually erected and numerous other improvements are actively and constantly going forward. This prosperity is the result alone of the successful pursuit of the whale fishery. Most heartily do we wish them continued and increased success.

MASSACHUSETTS CLAIMS. The governor of Massachusetts, in a message to the house of representatives, acknowledges the receipt of $419,748 26 from the secretary of the treasury, under the act of congress which provides for the settlement of the Massachusetts claims. The terms of the act by which Maine was separated from Massachusetts proper, give one-third of this money to that state. It will be observed, that for some reason or other, the accounting officers have cut short (a few thousand dollars) the appropriation allowed by congress—which was $430,748 26. The original claim was $843,601 34.

BLOCK ISLAND. The people who reside on this speck on the ocean, and belong to the state of Rhode Island, during the late severe weather, were forty-seven days without intercourse with the main land, and many of their little comforts were exhausted.

NEW YORK vs. NEW JERSEY. The editors of the New York Evening Post, have commenced the publication of documents which have been laid before the legislature relative to the controversy between that state and the state of New Jersey, as to territory and jurisdictional limits. It appears that New Jersey has commenced a suit in the supreme court of the United States, in which she sets forth that she is justly entitled to the exclusive jurisdiction and property of and over the waters of the Hudson river, from the 41st degree of latitude to the bay of New York, or midway of the said river, and to the midway of the channel of the said bay of New York, and the whole of Staten Island sound, together with the land covered by water of the said river, bay and sound, in the like extent. To bring the matter to an issue, she has filed her bill accordingly, and procured a subpœna to be served on the governor and attorney general of this state, to appear on behalf of the people of the state of New York, and answer thereto, under the penalty of five hundred dollars. The governor has informed the legislature, that, unless otherwise directed, he shall instruct the attorney general to protest against any evidence of right on the part of the state of New Jersey by appearing, and contesting the suit in its progress to its final result.

PENNSYLVANIA. The bill providing for the prosecution of the works of internal improvement now in progress in Pennsylvania, has at length received the sanction of both branches of the state legislature, and only wants the signature of the governor to become a law. It appropriates $600,000 to the rail-road from Philadelphia to Columbia; $116,170 to the canal from Columbia to Middletown; $125,000 to the western turnpikes; $700,000 to the canal or slackwater navigation between Huntingdon and Hollidaysburg, and the rail-road across the Alleghany mountains; $200,000 to the extension on the West Branch; $100,000 to the North Branch; $25,000 to the Lewistown cross-cut, to be paid out of the West Branch appropriation; $100,000 to the Big Beaver, and $60,000 to the French creek.

PATERSON. The people of this thrifty manufacturing town, having resolved to make a rail road to the Hudson river, opened a subscription for 250,000 dollars to effect the work,—20 per cent. to be paid on subscribing. But on the close of the books, the first day, it was found that $1,291,750 dollars had been subscribed—or five times the amount required! May speedy and complete success attend this noble display of public spirit at Paterson!

PROVIDENCE—cotton market. Because of the frost, the supply of cotton, at Providence, R. I. was only 1,488 bales, on the 11th Feb. ult.—but several ship-loads were lying at Newport, or daily expected to arrive there.

GEORGIA AND THE INDIANS. The legislature of Georgia, at its late session, passed the following act, which is denominated a law:

An act to declare void all contracts hereafter made with the Cherokee Indians, so far as the Indians are concerned.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the state of Georgia, in general assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That no Cherokee Indian shall be bound by any contract hereafter to be entered into with a white person or persons, nor shall any Indian be liable to be sued in any of the courts of law or equity in this state, on such contract.

[This, we suppose, is not considered a 'law impairing the obligation of contracts.' It only declares certain contracts void—deprives them of all obligation, but does not impair their obligation. It places the Cherokee Indians on the same footing with infants and slaves—renders them incapable of contracting at all, and exempts them from all liability to coercion for the performance of their voluntary obligations. Such a statute is indeed a strange one under our federal constitution. It shows how far passion and prejudice may carry intelligent and upright men. It furnishes a strong and impressive commentary on the salutary provisions and intended restrictions of the constitution of the United States.]

[Nashville Banner.

LOUISIANA AND THE MISSISSIPPI. Whereas it is of vital importance to the commercial interest, not only of Louisiana, but of the United States, that the obstructions at the entrance of the Mississippi be removed, and whereas the difficulties of entering the river are daily increasing, and immense losses have lately been sustained in consequence thereof:

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the state of Louisiana, in general assembly convened, That the senators of this state be instructed, and the representatives be requested, to represent to the general government the necessity of deepening the mouth of the Mississippi, and urge that a suitable appropriation for that purpose be made without delay.

Be it further resolved, That the governor be requested to have transmitted, as speedily as possible to the delegation in congress from Louisiana, a copy of this resolution.

A. MOUTON,
Speaker of the house of representatives.
ISAAC A. SMITH,
President of the senate.
A. B. ROMAN, governor of the state of Louisiana.

LOUISIANA. It is estimated that from 50 to 60,000 bales of cotton, and 6 to 7,000 hogsheads of sugar, will go out of the Red river the present season. Those interested will note the progress of production, though many cannot comprehend how it is that supply affects price!

INDIANA. Official dignity. [From the Journal of Commerce.] The close of the late session of the legislature presented a scene of rather novel interest in the history of legislation. The nomination of the judges of the supreme court by governor Ray gave great dissatis-tion to the senate, and alter various reports, resolutions and messages, the difference was blown into a perfect hurricane by a message from the governor impugning the motives of the members in some of their proceedings. Several of the senators rose in their places and charged the governor with using his official patronage for electioneering purposes, declaring that the state was disgraced by him, and praying that Providence would avert a similar calamity for the future. The governor, hearing these denunciations as he was sitting in the lobby, attempted to defend himself, but sat down in a few minutes, apparently overcome by the intensity of his emotions.

On the last day of the session, a committee of the senate waited upon him to ask if he had any further communications to make, to which he replied in the affirmative. On the return of the committee, it was unanimously resolved not to wait for his communications, and the senate adjourned sine die.

LIBERIA. This colony goes on prosperously. At a late meeting, a company was formed, with a capital of 20,000 dollars, for the purpose of exploring and improving the navigation of the St. Paul's river—which, it seems, penetrates the interior to a great distance, its shores abounding with camwood.

The police of the colony appears well settled—the people have peace, and many have become what may be considered wealthy. Those willing to labor easily obtain lands and the means of working them, and do well. The commerce of the colony is now very considerable.

PORTO RICO. The mystery in which Spain always endeavored to shroud the state of her colonies, and with much success, has yet concealed from us the real condition of this island, which we suppose is one of the richest and most fertile in the world—certain commercial letters, however, have been recently published, which shew rapid advances in prosperity, because of the progress of liberal principles, and population seems to be advancing in the "emancipation of foreigners," &c. The crops of last year were short because of a great drought; but yet the exports were valued at more than 2,500,000 dollars—and the imports at a little more than 2,000,000. The crop of sugar of the ensuing season is estimated at 45,000 hogsheads, of coffee at 125,000 quintals—the increased attention paid to sugar, has reduced the crops of tobacco and cotton. Three-fifths of the trade is yet carried on in Spanish vessels—and about one-fifth in American. Much of the business is transacted through the island of St. Thomas.

Until 1815, this island was an expense to Spain—but foreigners being then allowed to settle in it, it has been continually growing in importance.

POLAND. The present "kingdom of Poland," the heart and centre of its ancient sovereignty, is hereditary in the person of the Russian autocrat and his successors, and comprises a superfice of 6,340 square leagues, having a population of 3,850,000 souls. It is divided into eight waiwodeships—namely, Warsaw, Sandomir, Kalish, Lublin, Plotzk, Masovia, Podolachia, and Augustowo. The national revenues amount to £2,280,000 sterling, about the seventh part of which is assigned to the civil list. Its military force consists of 60,000 infantry and 20,000 cavalry. Warsaw, with 126,433 inhabitants, is its capital; and next stand in succession Sandomir, 50,000 inhabitants; Lublin, 12,000; and Kalish, 8,500. The immense tract of country comprehending Lithuania, Volhynia, and Podolia, containing 3,000,000 souls, is become part and parcel of the Russian territory. That part of Poland which is subject to Austria bears the designation of the kingdom of Galicia and Ludominia. Its population amounts to 4,379,000 souls. The grand duchy of Posen, the only part of Poland retained by Prussia, contains 538 geographical miles and 1,051,137 inhabitants. Its chief towns are Bromberg and Posen.

HESSE CASSEL. We give with pleasure the following extract of a letter from Hesse Cassel: Our readers are already advised that in this portion of Germany, the people rose up for liberty, and achieved it.

The allusion to the money paid by England, to the electorate, for troops sent to this country, to oppose us in our struggle for independence, and the appropriation of it, must be pleasing to all our readers. We have no room to-day for comments. Who does not know that the Hessians

"Were bought for seven and six pence every man?"*

Extract from a letter to a gentleman of this city, dated Hesse Cassel, Dec. 19, 1830.

I am happy to inform you, that the 21st inst. is fixed for the solemn ceremony of the elector's taking the oath to the constitution, drawn up by the deputies of the estates, who have been in session for that purpose since the 16th October last.

This constitution establishes a representative form of government on the most liberal principles. The elector has been obliged to separate his private fortune from the property of the state, acknowledging as such the capital acquired by his grandfather on the occasion of lending his troops to England, as subsidiaries during the war of the American Revolution. The annual interest of this sum amounts to 300,000 Rix-dollars, and taxes to this amount have immediately been abolished. Thus the money ingloriously earned in the attempt to suppress American independence, now serves to establish our own freedom! Instead of the arbitrary manner in which revenues of the country were squandered away, they are now under the management of the representatives of the people, and a civil list is allowed to the elector and his court. To show you how much the power of the prince is circumscribed, I may just mention that his request for a leave of absence for two weeks was peremptorily refused by the estates, on the plea that the situation of affairs required his presence.

A national guard has been established throughout the country, to whom the preservation of order is committed. [N. Y. Mercantile.

REPORTS OF COINS. Mr. White, of New York, from the select committee on coins, a few days before the rising of congress, made two very interesting reports, of each of which, upon the motion of Mr. Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, 3,000 additional copies, were ordered to be printed. The first relates to the relative value of gold and silver, which the committee propose to establish at 1 of gold to 15,625 of silver. The question of a single or double standard of value, is discussed, and the committee have arrived at the conclusion, that there can be but one standard of value and measure of contracts, and that should be, in our country, silver.

The second report recommends that certain foreign silver coins shall be made a legal tender in the payment of all debts and demands above the amount of one hundred dollars, by weight, when containing not less than 10 oz. 15 dwts. 12 grs. pure silver, in the troy pound of standard silver at 116 1-10 cents per ounce.

By this means the merchants will receive the full value of the coin imported, the mint be relieved from an oppressive duty, and the circulation of our national coin be eventually secured, to the exclusion of all foreign coins.

We are favored with copies of these reports and may notice them more fully hereafter.

SALT MANUFACTURE, in Massachusetts. The Boston Patriot says—Mr. Swift of Falmouth, whose speech in the house of representatives on Monday against a proposed alteration of the salt inspection law, has been imperfectly reported, desires us to state that there are 17,545,760 square feet of salt works in the state, of which 13,799,710 square feet are in the county of Barnstable, and cost $1,379,971. The annual cost of inspection is $1,100. The chief inspector receives $130 annually: his deputies on an average $17 50 each. They are entitled to receive 20 cts. for every 10,000 square feet of salt works, which amounts to about 2 mills on a bushel for inspection.

Mr. S. further stated that the effect of the inspection already had been to improve the quality of the salt manufactured.

*We think that the price was ten pounds for every hireling cut-throat that was killed, or died in America. [ED. REG.

CITIES ON THE OHIO. Nineteen or twenty steam boats, several of them of the first class, were at the wharves of Pittsburg on the 8th. inst. lading and unlading. Thirteen boats had arrived, and seven departed in the four preceding days. The river was then seventeen feet above low water mark.

Cincinnati was also full of business. About the 1st March, there were sixteen steam boats in port—eight large ones arrived from New Orleans in one day; and about a dozen stop daily, passing up or down the "beautiful river."

The Cincinnati American says—"We understand that there are twenty-five thousand barrels of flour at one point on the Miami canal, waiting for the opening of navigation."

"THE LEAK AND WATTS ORPHAN HOUSE" is about to be built at New York. John G. Leak died sometime since, leaving about 300,000 dollars to a young man named Watts, with the condition that if he died before he arrived at the age of 21 years, the property should be vested for the support of orphan children, of all denominations. Young Watts died after he was 21 years old, and the great property became vested in his father, John Watts; but the latter has resigned the whole of it for the purpose of founding such an establishment. It is a noble deed.

THE PIRATES. Sentence of death has been pronounced, at N. York, upon T. J. Wansley and Charles Gibbs, charged with piracy on board the brig Vineyard, and the murder of the captain and mate of the vessel, on her voyage from New Orleans, with a quantity of specie on board.

THE SLAVE TRADE. Late despatches from the British vessels of war employed on the coast of Africa for suppressing the slave trade, shew that this savage business is in full activity, under the Spanish, Portuguese, Brazillian and French flags. These are some of the vessels—ship Velos Passagena, 26 guns, 555 slaves, captured by the British sloop of war Primrose; San Jago de Cuba, 165 slaves, and four other vessels, captured by other British cruisers. A French slave-brig, the Duke of Bordeaux, with 561 slaves, for Guadaloupe, was also captured, but given up, conformable to the treaty with France. Six or seven others, all from Havana, were off the coast, or had just left it, laden with slaves; but the success of the British cruisers had much checked the traffic, and caused the breaking up of several establishments. The 561 slaves, on board the French brig, were "stowed in bulk" and naked, and in a most horrible condition.

It is stated that the king of Loango had brought 100 slaves to the coast for sale, but finding no slaver on the station, butchered them all in cold blood, as he thought it too expensive to feed them. The bleeched bones of the unfortunate victims were still to be seen on the shore.

"I tremble," said Jefferson; "when I think that God is just." Vengeance will be satisfied. A fearful and black belt will extend—its western end nearly touching Florida, its eastern resting on South America; the abode of pirates and murderers, retaliating the wrongs inflicted on themselves or their fathers, by pretended Christian white men.

☞Since the preceding was written we have official accounts of an insurrection among the negroes at Martinico. They had fired the town of St. Pierre, and consumed many houses, and ravaged and destroyed thirteen plantations, by fire—they resisted the military with fire-arms and cutlasses; but were put down, for the present, and 126 of them, male and female, arrested, a number of whom had been shot. The governor apprehending a continuance of such proceedings, had issued a decree to establish a military court, &c. for six months. The colony was, perhaps, saved only by the free people of color,—who, in most important respects, have the same rights and privileges as the white inhabitants, and hence form a strong party against the slaves.

OUR RIVERS. The Ohio river was lately twenty feet above low water mark—the Potomac fifteen, and the Susquehannah twelve and a half. What vast bodies of water must be discharged by these mighty rivers, when thus swollen—the rapidity of their descents being considered!

The coal trade on the Potomac is rapidly increasing.

DISTRESSING. We find in the Western Times, published in Centreville, Indiana, the following account:

"We were informed a few days since, by a gentleman traveller from the west, that during the severe weather, a man, about 45 years of age, his wife, six children, and four horses, were frozen to death on the great prairie in Illinois. When discovered—THE MOTHER LAY WITH A SMALL CHILD IN HER ARMS—five other children around her—the father, with an axe and flint in his hands, as if he had been trying to strike fire—a part of his wagon was cut into small pieces for kindling, and all the horses in a heap, stiff in their harness. The name of the unfortunate family, or where they were from, was not ascertained when our informant passed along."

MR. STAMBAUGH. Since the rejection by the senate of Mr. Stambaugh, as Indian agent at Green Bay, the president has appointed him sub-agent at the same place. [Penn. Inquirer.

WOLVES. Almost every winter, and especially in severe ones, we hear of the horrid death of men and women, in some parts of France and Spain, by wolves, who fearlessly attack and devour them. The United States have abounded with wolves—the western districts of Pennsylvania, &c. were as if filled with them—and a few, solitary and timid ones are still met with; but the deadly rifle has nearly exterminated them—and those which remain, no matter how much pressed by hunger, flee from the face of the destroyer—man. The character of the animal seems as if changed by the exterminating war that has been waged against him, by an armed people.

GOLD. Harris' mine, in Charlotte country, North Carolina, for some time past, was worked without much if any profit and abandoned for some months. But its working was resumed about the 10th of Feb. and in preparing for a new shaft, the vein was cut, which now, with much reason, excites high expectation on the part of the proprietors. The width of the vein is from four to eight and ten inches, and its inclination, so far as it appears, is about 80 degrees. In some parts it yields dust gold mixed with chrystals of magnetic iron; but what is most characteristic, are the masses of virgin gold which resemble moss, and occur in nests of several hundred dollars value each.

The examination is as yet very little progressed. From an opening of the vein however, of 10 feet long, 4 wide and 18 deep, there has been, as we are informed by the proprietors, extracted about five thousand dollars, and the vein is, to appearance, increasing in size, and not diminishing in richness. The minerals of the vein are quartz, oxides of iron, magnetic iron ore, &c. embraced in a calceous slate. [N. C. paper.

AN INDEPENDENT JUDICIARY. A state law nullificated by state judges. The Nashville (Tennessee) Banner of the 25th ult. says—"The judges appointed by act of the last legislature, to constitute a special court, for the express purpose of trying certain cases growing out of late defalcations to the bank of the state of Tennessee, on Monday delivered their opinions seriatim, sustaining the pleas to the jurisdiction of the court, and deciding the act by which they were appointed to discharge the duty, to be unconstitutional."

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

We have been compelled to omit our usual notices of events abroad, in the great demand for our room to attend to things at home. A very brief summary is all that is now needful to offer.

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

On or about the 16th of January, Mr. O'Connell was arrested on a charge of "conspiracy" to violate or avoid the effects of the proclamation of the lord-lieutenant, as to political meetings of the people. This caused a mighty excitement at Dublin; but O'Connell and his friends, arrested with him, gave bail, and so the matter rests for the present. Some excesses, however, had been committed on the lord lieut. the marquis of Anglesea, who was mobbed in the streets on the 25th of Jan. and pelted with mud. The infamously famous major Sirr, gibbited on remembrance by the eloquence of Curran, was a swearer against O'Connell. The grand jury had found "true bills" against him.

There had been a hard run on the bank of Ireland for gold—but all its notes offered were promptly met.

The British stocks remained pretty firm, at a small reduction in price.

Burnings and other acts of violence were still committed in England, though many had been sentenced to death, transportation, &c. for being engaged in them. But such exceses were less frequent than at the period of our former advices.

The poverty and distress of the people of Ireland seems about as great as human nature is capable of bearing. A famine is talked of. This, it is thought, renders the people so ready for any change. O'Connell has been exceedingly bold in his addresses to them, yet he professes great anxiety for the preservation of the peace of the country.

Parliament was to re-assemble on the 3d February. A stormy session was anticipated. There was much speculation as to the continuance of the present ministry.

Mr. Hunt, elected to parliament, has made a grand public entry into London—many thousand people, with banners, attending. He delivered a speech on the occasion, and was earnest for a repeal of the "accursed corn bill."

FRANCE.

All things appear quiet in France, except in "the busy note of preparation" for war. The means of France are gigantic.

Lafitte's pecuniary affairs have been much embarrassed, because of heavy losses on the loans, and the house of Lafitte and company is dissolved. It is said that there are effects enough to pay its debts. Lafitte, in his misfortunes, is reported of as an honest man.

Lafayette was taking an active part in the proceedings of the chamber of deputies. His speeches would indicate his belief of a speedy war—but he says that France has 500,000 regular troops and 1,500,000 national guards, ready for the combat.

The celebrated Madame de Genlis died at Paris early in January, at a very advanced age.

SPAIN.

Much military preparation was making in Spain. The country was filled with gloom—every sort of business being unsettled, or at a stand.

SWITZERLAND.

The city of Basle has conquered and reduced its peasantry to submission.

RUSSIA.

Large bodies of troops were in motion for Poland—in all not less than 150,000. The cholera morbus had appeared at St. Petersburg. All the property of the Poles in Russia, who had taken part in the revolution, has been sequestered—the Poles, on the contrary, have permitted the Russians to retire, with their property, whithersoever they pleased.

POLAND.

The enthusiasm of the Poles remained undiminished. They have published a heart-stirring manifesto, which we intend to re-publish and preserve. There are some accounts of divisions among them—the invasion of the Russians may, perhaps, unite them. Prussia had 80,000 men on the Polish frontier and Austria 50,000. Subscriptions for the benefit of the Poles, were making in London and Paris. Gen. Chlopicki had resigned the dictatorship. The French generals Lallamand, Regnier, and Pelletier, had arrived at Warsaw to join the Polish army.

A regiment of women had been formed to supply the troops with linen and provisions. Their uniform is a yellow robe, a white mantle, with a confederatka for a head dress, and a pair of pistols at the girdle!

BELGIUM.

The affairs of this country remained pretty much as they were, at our last notices of them. Many princes were spoken of for king; but nothing had been determined. Some military operations were going on. A large part of the Belgians desire an union with France—which the latter most positively rejects.

HOLLAND.

The king was making great exertions to strengthen his army, to act against Belgium. It is said that he would protest against the allied powers, or requiring him to open the Scheldt.

ITALY.

A pope had not yet been elected. It was thought that cardinal Weld, an Englishman, would be chosen, though strongly opposed by the Austrian interest.

Later news—Paris papers to 2d Feb.

There was a report that the Poles had surrendered without a contest—because of internal discords. This was not, however, believed at Paris, at which subscriptions were still making to assist them—Lafayette and other distinguished men taking the lead in them. The Russians have seized the funds of the bank of Warsaw that were at Odessa. A good many of the Polish monks had taken up arms, and placed themselves at the head of bodies of peasants, armed with scythes, &c. It is stated that Chlopicki resigned the dictatorship because that he insisted on a reconciliation with Russia, which was opposed by all the leading men; but some prospect of a reconciliation is held out.

Much is said of the affairs of Belgium, and we have reports of the speeches made in the national congress. The debates are ardent—sometimes very tumultuous; with loud applauses, or marks of disapprobation, from the galleries. A protocol of the ministers of the allied powers, dated London, 20th Jan. makes out a boundary between Belgium and Holland—as it stood in 1790. The selection of a king is a most difficult matter—the congress being much divided. The greatest number, perhaps, were in favor of the duke de Leuchtenburg, son of Beauharnois, step-son of Napoleon, but the following letter being read, the duke of Nemours (a son of the king of the French) was again thought of, though Louis Philipe had but lately refused his sanction to the choice—

Addressed to the French minister at Brussels—

"SIR:—I hasten to reply to your letter of the 24th. The king's council, which assembled to-day, were unanimous upon the necessity of declaring to the provisional government, that the French government would regard the choice of the duke de Leuchtenburg to fill the throne of Belgium, as an act of hostility towards France; in case the congress, notwithstanding this declaration, should proceed to such election, you will quit Brussels immediately. Accept, &c.

(Signed) HORACE SEBASTIANI.

Paris, Jan. 26. 1831."

Some think that France will now consent to the election of the duke of Nemours—and if so, that the placing of him on the throne must be followed by a general war—the other great powers being resolved to resist so intimate a connexion between France and Belgium.

The funds of France continue to decline. The king appears to be increasing his popularity. He wishes to preserve the peace of France with the rest of the world, and firmly expresses his resolution to keep down disorders at home.

The funeral services of the late pope took place at Rome on the 14th Dec. He had been a liberal patron of the fine arts, and all the professors, with their pupils, attended. Three times have these services now been performed by cardinals, and, on each occasion, five members of the conclave pronounced absolutions in behalf of the deceased.

Wool is in great demand in Europe, and at high prices. The stock is small. The military preparations have caused a great scarcity of coarse wools.

THE NORTH EASTERN BOUNDARY.

From the Baltimore Patriot.

"The editor of the Baltimore Patriot has been favored with the following letter from an intelligent merchant, formerly of Baltimore, but now a resident of Amsterdam. It gives the decision of the king of the Netherlands relative to the disputed boundary line between the United States and Great Britain, to whom both parties had referred the question, and whose decision is to be final. The letter says—

"The boundary line goes from the Monument, on the source of the river St. Croix, due north to the St. John, which it crosses three miles above the Great Falls, it then follows the St. John about 50 miles from thence it passes along the river St. Francis to its southernmost source, here it meets the American line, along which it follows to the St. Lawrence, and leaving only those waters that fall in the river St. Lawrence to the point where both lines (claims) unite, and to the Connecticut, where they combine to the British. This is the first and most important point.

2d. About the north-westermost head of Connecticut river. The king has taken that which maintains the name and excludes all tributary streams, that were already known in 1772, under different names.

3d. The 45th degree of north latitude has to be stipulated anew agreeable to the treaty of Ghent, or whether the old line which in 1772 was drawn between the provinces and the United States was to remain. Decision says, that the line must be drawn afresh. The Americans confiding on its correctness had built a fort on Rousse's point, and this fortress is to remain in their possession, with so much territory thereof as is usual, (say one Chilome rique.) The territory which is awarded to the United States by the 1st point is by far the best and most extensive, but England maintains a communication with her provinces. The territory which they will get will be of little value. The state of Maine gets the best and nearly all that they wish. Connecticut river is of no importance, and may be looked upon as to balance the scales. The British grounds were considered the best, but the Americans had such, which by no means become rejected. The parallel was always in favor of the British, but since the king had secured to England their political advantage, he did the same with the Americans by giving them the fortress, point Rousses', which breaks the parallel; and is of much importance to America. Two forts built to the southward, would not have been of as much value as this.

This decision of the king is a proof of his being a very able arbiter, for it is no trifle to read two large volumes of folio and compare the maps together, with the immense number of memorandums connected with this business, and his decision is a proof of his thorough acquaintance with the case. There is no victory no defeat on any side. Both have what they most feared to lose."

From the Albion—an English paper published at N. Y.

After describing the boundary as settled, the editor says—

It was to have been expected that the arbiter would have declared which party was right, and thus have laid down according to the opinion of a third disinterested party, the true boundary; but his Dutch majesty has not done so; he has pointed out a new route totally at variance with the spirit and wording of the treaty. He carries the line due north from Mars Hill to the river St. John, along that river to the St. Francis, along the St. Francis to the highlands laid down on the westerly portion of the America line—thereby cutting off a large portion of the Canada lands, carrying the boundary to within thirteen miles of the river St. Lawrence, and within forty or fifty of the city of Quebec, the capital of the North American colonies; and then, moreover, it is said, gives the military position of Rouses's point on lake Champlain—a place undoubtedly on the British side—to the United States into the bargain!

The arbiter should have decided which was the true line according to the words of the treaty and the maps and plans mutually laid before him. If he thought the American the true line, he has done the United States injustice by taking away any portion of their territory, of which we understand Mr. Preble complains. If the British was the true line, he has done England injustice, by taking away any portion of her territory, and hence she complains.

But it may be said, that from the complexity and uncertainty of the question, he could not come to any satisfactory conclusion, and therefore, made a compromise—and a compromise he must have intended, since he has substituted rivers for highlands. Granting for a moment his right to do this, let us examine in what manner he has made the division. In making the compromise, two paramount objects should have been kept in view, viz: an equal division of the territory, in dispute, and the establishment of a good natural boundary. Neither of these has been accomplished. Two-thirds of the land is given to the United States, and the boundary is a very imperfect one. If his majesty had thought proper to continue the line along the St. John to its source, or nearly so—since in ridicule of our disputes, it would almost seem, he substituted the heads of rivers for the tops of mountains—a good boundary would have been secured and the territory pretty equally divided. With such a settlement neither party could justly complain, but with the present settlement neither party is satisfied. England, however, must be the greatest sufferer since her loss is not only that of territory, but of a military position of great consequence to her in the event of future wars. A glance at the map will show how small an American force could intercept succors proceeding to Quebec over-land; in fact all communication between Great Britain and Canada would be seriously impeded during the winter months of the year. In any view of the case, or on whatever principle the king may have proceeded, we must deem his majesty's decision very erroneous.

The honor of England demands that she shall promptly acquiesce with the award of the arbiter, and she will not, it is needless to proclaim, hesitate a moment to redeem her pledge.—Still it has occurred to us that the king of the Netherlands had no right to make any division or compromise whatever. The convention between the two governments of the 29th of Sept. 1827, and published in our paper of the 24th of May 1828, agreeing to refer the matter in dispute to the arbiter, simply authorised him to decide on the points of difference only. The point of difference was simply this—which was the true line, the British or the American. We see no room or scope for compromising powers here. May not the silence of the Courier, which still affects to be the government journal, and other facts which we shall not stop to enumerate be connected with this view of the case?

The integrity of the arbiter must not be in the remotest degree impeached. Still we may be excused for adverting to the surmise of a London paper—that the king of the Netherlands gave in his award suddenly, and considering the state of his own affairs, rather unexpectedly—and that he probably acted from pique against the English whig ministry, who have shown so much inclination to side with the Belgians.

The British government should without loss of time seek to recover the lost territory by friendly negociation or purchase. It is of great value to her from its geographical position: but to the state of Maine it is of little use beyond the actual value of the lands.

A London paper the "United Kingdom," grumbles loudly at the king of the Netherlands, and, among other things, says—

"How there could be any question as to the claims of England with respect to a territory which originally belonged to herself—which she never conveyed away by treaty or assignment—we are at a loss to know, and it is the duty of the wretched ninnies who have been ministers of this country for so many years, to explain. The Americans, by this decision, have not only obtained possession of our territory, and the property of his majesty's subjects, but they have also got our roads in the direct route between Quebec, New Brunswick, Halifax and Nova Scotia. Other roads of equal importance are also decided to be within the boundary of the United States.

"But what are we to do with Canada? Must we yield and consign our lands, and pigs, and emigrants and roads, and river navigation to Jonathan? This must not be. We must nevertheless do justice to the defendant. We must offer compensation—assign lands elsewhere—give a slice out of the northwest—give Indians for English—and furs for freedom. If gen. Jackson should decline our terms, we of course must fight him; and leaving Washington in its wilderness unmolested, we must burn New York in order to bring him to his senses. This we can do easily; particularly as we are not at war with any other nation. We will be fools, if we listen to any further terms of negociation. "Settle it at once" is the word, and let there be no mistake!

—

The people of Maine appear equally dissatisfied with the compromise which the king of the Netherlands has willed—we say compromise, because he has rejected the statements of both parties. The "Portland Evening Advertiser" observes—

"In truth the British have obtained all they want, a military post in our rear, with opportunity to encroach upon our territory whenever circumstances require. The general government must be appealed to for relief from the decision of this uncrowned head, this wandering arbiter of the Netherlands."

The "Eastern Argus" observes—

"Had the most clear sighted and ambitious of the British statesmen drawn this new line, the interest of his majesty could not have been more carefully preserved. They have cut off the point of the ridge which separated the upper and lower provinces, and gained all they wanted, a commanding position in our rear, and a convenient route of communication between Canada and New Brunswick They cared nothing for a few square miles of land, of this they had enough, in America, already. No, England desired a commanding post in our rear, and an open route between her provinces. This she has secured by the supposed decision. To us, the territory lost might be of some value, as so much land, but as a military position it is absolutely invaluable. It is here that England can erect her fortresses, and if this decision should be acquiesced in—which it never will be—a few years would see the British ensign floating over a new Quebec, whose outworks would literally crowd upon our soil, and from whose impregnable walls the tiers of British ordnance would insult the eyes of freemen. It must not, it shall not be permitted.

"Miserable is the plea that the national honor is committed to abide such a result. It was the decision of an independent sovereign, confined himself to the question submitted, viz:—whether the line claimed by the United States or the line claimed by Great Britain, was the true one—to which the United States bound themselves to submit; not the decision of a sovereign nearly robbed of his dominion, and leaning on England for support—not a decision which should declare the pretensions of both parties ungrounded, and proceed with an authority at once arrogant and unlimited, to mark out as heretofore unthought of boundary. It was to no such decision that the United States bound themselves to submit."

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT,

By and with the advice and consent of the senate.

Joel Brown, of the District of Columbia, to be a justice of the peace for the county of Washington, in said district.

Robert M. Harrison, of Virginia, to be consul of the United States for the port of Kingston, in the island of Jamaica.

Alexander Adair, to be marshal for Middle Florida.

Daniel Le Roy, to be district attorney of the United States for the territory of Michigan.

John Nicholson, to be marshal for the eastern district of Louisiana.

Waters Smith, to be marshal of East Florida.

Thomas P. Eskridge, to be judge for the territory of Arkansas.

Nathaniel S. Benton to be attorney for the northern district of New York, vice Samuel Beardsley, elected to congress.

Ruben Harvey, to be consul of the United States for the port of Cork, Ireland, in the place of Ruben Harvey, deceased.

George Wise and George W. P. Custis, of the District of Columbia, to be justices of the peace for the county of Alexandria, in said district.

Nathaniel Luffborough, Enoch Reynolds, and Charles H. W. Wharton, of the District of Columbia, to be justices of the peace for the county of Washington, in said district.

Thomas Carberry, James Dunlap, and Wm. O'Neal, of the District of Columbia, to be inspectors of the penitentiary in said district; and Benjamin Williams, of said district, to be warden of said penitentiary.

John A. Cameron, of North Carolina, to be consul of the United States at La Vera Cruz, in Mexico, in the place of Wm. Taylor, resigned.

Joseph Saul, of Louisiana, to be consul of the United States at Tripoli, in the place of Charles D. Coxe, deceased.

David J. Baker, of Illinois, to be district attorney of the United States for the state of Illinois, vice Samuel Mc Roberts.

Elias Rector, of Arkansas, to be marshal of the United States for the territory of Arkansas, in the place of George W. Scott, removed.

George W. Crump, of Virginia, to be consul of the United States for the island of St. Bartholomew, in the place of Robert M. Harrison, appointed to the port of Kingston, Jamaica.

John Cuthbert, of Pensylvania, to be consul of the United States for the port of Hamburg, in the place of Fredrick List whose commission has expired. [Rather—whose nomination was rejected by the senate.]

Samuel Allison, of New Jersey, to be consul of the United States, at Lyons, in France, in the place of Cornelius Bradford, deceased.

Lemuel Wells, of New York, to be consul of the United States at St. Catharine's, Brazil.

Thomas E. Burfoot, of Virginia, to be district attorney of the United States, for the eastern district of Virginia, vice Robert Stannard, resigned.

Robert Fulton, of New York, to be secretary to the commission under the convention between the United States and the king of Denmark, of the 28th of March, 1830.

Lewis Shoemaker, of Pennsylvania, to be consul of the United States at Matanzas, in the island of Cuba.

John Holtzman, of Georgetown, to be a justice of the peace for the country of Washington, in the district of Columbia.

Joshua Lippincott, of Pennsylvania, to be a director of the bank of the United States, vice Nicholas Biddle, elected a director by the stockholders.

Nicholas Narvoni, of Constantinople, to be drogoman or interpreter of languages, to the legation of the United States at Constantinople.

Peter Desnoyers, of Detroit, to be marshal for the territory of Michigan.

☞The preceding list, we believe, takes in all the appointments published, up to this date—not heretofore given.

LATE SESSION OF CONGRESS.

From the National Intelligencer of March 11.

The public are hardly aware of the great number of bills, which had passed one or the other house of congress, which, for the want of time to act upon them, owing partly to the occupation of so great a portion of the session in the trial of judge Peck, and partly to the introduction, late in the session, of not very profitable debate, remained unfinished, and were therefore lost, at the adjournment. The number of bills which had passed the house of representatives, and were twice read in the senate, but finally left upon the table of that body, was just one hundred. The number of senate bills thus lost in the house of representatives was about thirty.

Among the house bills to which the go-by was given in this way, was the bill "for the improvement of certain harbors and providing for surveys." This bill embraced, among other things, an appropriation of 40,000 dollars for the improvement of the mouth of Back creek (the Chesapeake entrance to the Chesapeake and Delaware canal), and another of 20,000 dollars for deepening the harbor of Baltimore, with other appropriations of the same cast in different parts of the United States. This bill passed the house of representatives by a majority of fifty votes (107 to 57) and, had it been possible to act upon it, would probably have passed the senate by a majority of ten or fifteen votes. It is supposed by many, however, that, had it passed both houses, the president would have considered himself pledged, by the terms of his last annual message to congress, to put his veto upon it this session, as he did upon a corresponding bill at the last session.

Among the bills thus lost also was the beneficent bill providing for the support of the remaining participators in the fatigues, privations, and dangers of the war of the revolution. By a tied vote, 20 to 20, the senate refused, on Tuesday evening, to postpone the further orders of the day in order to act upon it. The remainder of the session was perhaps justly deemed too short for the deliberate consideration of it.

Among the bills thus lost at this session (and at the last session, and probably never will be otherwise in our day) was the bill for regulating the allowance of mileage to members of congress, and that also requiring deductions from the compensation of members for occasional absences from the house.

The bill so desirable to be passed, and so entirely due to the rapidly growing commerce of the city of New York, making an appropriation of 100,000 dollars for building a custom house in the city of New York, was also thus lost.

Though this great number of bills was left unfinished by the senate, it ought in justice to that body, to be added, that the period of the session at which the most of them passed the house of representatives, was so late as to make it impossible for the senate to pass upon them.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The subjoined resolutions were offered in the house of representatives of Pennsylvania, by Mr. Ingersoll, of Philadelphia, on the 24th ult.

Resolutions relative to the union.

Whereas the constitution of these United States, and some of their principal institutions, have been assailed of late by the local passions which interfere with great national measures, and a solemn declaration of the sense of the members of this house may tend to preserve unimpaired that union which is the rock of our safety and prosperity: Therefore,

1. Resolved, as the sense of the house of representatives of this commonwealth, that the constitution of these United States having proved itself, by near half a century's experience, a government beyond all others capable of promoting rational liberty and general welfare, a union of sovereign states, constructed by one and the same sovereign people, it must be preserved inviolate against all attempts to nullify, impair, or reduce it to a mere confederation.

2. Resolved, as the sense of this house, that the constitution of the United States authorises, and near half a century's experience sanctions, acts of congress to protect manufactures, and that the actual prosperity of the country attests the wisdom of such acts.

3. Resolved, as the sense of this house, that, as all manufactures, arts, and civilization flourish most wherever iron is cheapest and best, any diminution of the protection now afforded to that primary and universal article, would be a deplorable act.

4. Resolved, as the sense of this house, that the constitution of the United States authorises, and near half a century's experience sanctions, the twenty-fifth section of the act of congress of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, and all others empowering the federal judiciary to maintain the supreme laws.

5. Resolved, as the sense of this house, that the constitution of the United States authorizes, and near half a century's experience sanctions, a bank of the United States, as necessary and proper to regulate the value of money, and prevent paper currency of unequal and depreciated value.

6. Resolved, as the sense of this house, that the constitution of the United States authorizes the establishment of inland improvements by acts of congress, for the construction of post routes and military roads, and roads for facilitating commerce among the several states; and by appropriations of money for such purposes.

These resolutions came up for consideration on Friday.

The resolution affirming the necessity of preserving the union of the states, against all attempts at nullification was passed, without debate, yeas 87, nays 3.

The second of the series, affirming the constitutionality and expediency of protecting manufactures, by congressional enactments, occasioned some debate. Some of the members would fain have avoided a public committal on this question. The people of Pennsylvania and the "people's president" not seeing the subject in the same light. But, after an ineffectual attempt to introduce the words "by a judicious tariff" after the word manufactures, the question was taken on the resolution, and passed in the affirmative, yeas 87, nays 2.

The third resolution, against any diminution of the present duty on iron, was also the subject of some debate, but finally passed, yeas 83, nays 5.

The fourth resolution, affirming the constitutionality of the judiciary act of 1789, was opposed by general Frick of Northumberland, and advocated by Mr. Ingersoll, the mover. On the question being taken, the resolution passed, yeas 79, nays 7.

The house adjourned before the question was taken on the fifth resolution. It came up in order on the following day, and after a debate of four hours, the house again adjourned before taking the question.

[The subject was afterwards postponed without being finally acted upon.]

—

During the debate in the Pennsylvania house of representatives on the foregoing resolutions, Mr. Ingersoll read the following letter from Mr. Madison.

Montpelier, Feb. 2, 1831.

DEAR SIR:—I have received your letter of January 21, asking—

1. Is there any state power to make banks?

2. Is the federal power, as has been exercised, or as proposed to be exercised by president Jackson, preferable?

The evil which produced the prohibitory clause in the constitution of the United States, was the practice of the states in making bills of credit, and in some instances appraised property "a legal tender." If the notes of state banks, therefore, whether chartered or unchartered, be made a legal tender, they are prohibited; if not made a legal tender, they do not fall within the prohibitory clause. The number of the "Federalist" referred to was written with that view of the subject; and this, with probably other cotemporary expositions, and the uninterrupted practice of the states in creating and permitting banks without making their notes a legal tender, would seem to be a bar to the question, if it were not inexpedient now to agitate it.

A virtual and incidental enforcement of the depreciated notes of state banks, by their crowding out a sound medium, though a great evil, was not foreseen; and if it had been apprehended, it is questionable whether the constitution of the United States which had so many obstacles to encounter, would have ventured to guard against it by an additional provision. A virtual, and it is hoped, an adequate remedy, may hereafter be found in the refusal of state paper when debased, in any of the federal transactions, and in the control of the federal bank, this being itself controlled from suspending its specie payments by the public authority.

On the other question I readily decide against the project recommended by the president. Reasons more than sufficient appear to have been presented to the public, in the reviews and other comments which it has called forth. How far a hint for it may have been taken from Mr. Jefferson, I know not. The kindred ideas of the latter may be seen in his memoirs, &c. vol. 4, pages 196, 207, 526, and his view of the state banks, vol. 4, pages 199, 220.

There are sundry statutes of Virginia prohibiting the circulation of notes payable to bearer, whether issued by individuals or unchartered banks.

These observations, little new or important as they may be, would have been promptly furnished but for an indisposition in which your letter found me, and which has not yet entirely left me. I hope this will find you in good health, and you have my best wishes for its continuance, and the addition of every other blessing.

JAMES MADISON.

Charles J. Ingersoll, esq. Harrisburg, Pa.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 4—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, MARCH 26, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1018

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞ There will be no complaint of a want of variety, in the present sheet. The very long articles that lately presented themselves, caused a great accumulation of others that might be postponed.

OLD DOCUMENTS. It will be recollected that colonel Howard, the immediate representative of the city of Baltimore in the congress of the United States, made an unsuccessful effort, at the last session, to have certain old reports concerning a protecting tariff re-printed; that they might be spread among the people, and shew the opinions entertained on the subject long ago—before party had entered into its consideration, or some members of congress were as expert in dividing a hair "betwixt its north and north east side," as they are at present. Col. H. incurred the expense of having these documents transcribed, (for of some of them no copies, we believe, remain in print), and has presented them to us. We shall take an early opportunity to give them a place.

The following is a list of them—

1. Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures, on the memorials and petitions of sundry manufacturers, made 10th Feb. 1802.

2. Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures, on the petition of sundry inhabitants of Kentucky, made on the 18th Feb. 1802.

3. Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures, on the petitions of sundry manufacturers of starch, of paper and umbrellas, in the states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, made on the 8th March, 1802.

4. Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures, on the memorials of sundry manufacturers and merchants of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Massachusetts, Virginia and North Carolina, made 16th April, 1802.

5. Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures, on the memorials of various manufacturers of the United States, made on the 21st Feb. 1803.

6. Report of the secretary of the treasury, made to the house of representatives, January 24, 1804.

7. Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures, on various memorials from manufacturers, and others, of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Maryland, made January 25, 1804.

RAIL ROADS. The Baltimore and Washington rail road will be commenced, by the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, as soon as the surveys shall enable the directors to decide on the most proper route and location. It will, probably, be finished in two years—as it is intended to prosecute the work with a great deal of energy and force. When it shall be accomplished, a trip to Washington, or from thence to Baltimore, will be no more than a morning or evening excursion.

The laws in relation to this road, passed by the general assembly of Maryland and the congress of the United States, have been accepted by the company—though the former would appear to present undue advantages to the state. The company is to make the road at its own cost and risk; and, within two years after it is finished, the state has the right of taking three-fifths of the stock, on satisfaction made for such part of the expenditure. This does not seem fair. But, the chief part of the stock in the Baltimore and Ohio rail road is held in Baltimore, which already pays more than one-fourth of all the state revenues, and what shall appear as lost to the company, may, in part, be saved to the city; still, however, at the expense of the stockholders of the road. A desire to make an interest on the investment, was not the leading one. Because of the general increase of business, and more rapid circulation of money that will follow this improvement, poor "deserted and decayed" Baltimore, as Mr. Randolph said of our city, could well afford to give, and is able to give, the whole cost of the road. The interest will not exceed 50,000 dollars a year. The individual or private profits, on account of the road, will amount to a much greater sum, at once, and have a large annual increase—especially if Virginia shall be excited to do a little, as well as talk a great deal, about internal improvements.

The act of congress prevents the passage of the road into the district further than Seventh street, on which stands the general post office, with a due regard to the public or private property over which it shall pass, and regulates the price of transportations, &c. It also authorises the company to make contracts with the proper officers and agents of the United States for the transportation of persons and property for the use of the United States (including the mails), on any rail road which has been, or shall be, constructed by it.

Such is the confidence now entertained in England of steam power used on rail roads, that a project is entertained of rail-waying the isthmus of Suez, and carrying over it vessels, of the heaviest burthen, from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea! The ease with which vessels are now lifted out of the water, or restored again to their own proper element, by marine rail ways, patent slips and screw docks—and the power displayed on the Liverpool and Manchester road, divests the project of that wildness, or rather insanity, that would have been attached to it, had it been suggested only five or six years ago. It is said that the difficulties of the enterprize are not greater than those which have been encountered in the construction of the Manchester and Liverpool rail road—and that the pacha of Egypt has actually employed an engineer to inspect Morton's patent slip, for the lifting of vessels. Shall heavily laden ships cross the mountains of America, as well as the deserts of Africa, and pass from the Atlantic to the Pacific over the isthmus of Panama?

With such a rail way as is projected, the voyage from England to India may be made in about twenty days—or less.

On Saturday last, a grand experiment was made on the Baltimore and Ohio rail road—seventy five barrels, and one hundred barrels, of flour, had been transported, by means of a single horse, 13 miles, at the rate of seven miles an hour; but now two hundred barrels, weighing 20 tons, were placed on eight cars weighing 8 tons more, and these cars were mounted by some twenty or thirty people weighing 2 tons more, in all thirty tons. One horse conveyed this mighty load to the relay-house, 6½ miles, in 46 minutes; another horse was fixed to the train, and he brought it to the depot in Baltimore in 69 minutes, making 1 hour 55 m. for the whole stage of 13 miles, or at the rate of 6¾ miles an hour. Neither horse was distressed, though not selected because of peculiar powers for the draft, and each had performed the usual trip outward in the morning. Two of the miles (descending a little) were performed in six minutes each, but some one or two others, where there were ascents to carry off the water, (17 to 20 feet in a mile) required 12 minutes. At the ordinary rate of travel, on common roads with heavy wagons, it is thought that one horse is equal to the draft of more than sixty tons. We hope it will be tested what an ordinary wagon-horse is able to draw, at his usual travelling gait.*

*There was a very strong wind on Saturday against the cars—especially in the "deep cuts"—and the force required to move them thought to be nearly doubled. At 2½ to 3 miles an hour, we think that one of the prime wagon-horses of Pennsylvania, is equal to the traction of from 70 to 80 tons.

Those who have travelled through the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, cannot fail to have noticed the ex-

Though a large concourse of people expected a triumphant result of the experiment, as above stated, it was hard to realize the fact—and some could not easily believe what they plainly saw. They examined and felt and counted the barrels, and at last were satisfied that there was "no mistake."

We expect in the present year to transport passengers and goods from the city of Frederick to Baltimore. The celebrated Wernwag, and his worthy sons, are preparing to construct the viaduct over the river Monocosy, and the stone, &c. is nearly prepared for the tunnel under the turnpike road. When the way shall be opened to Frederick, the travel on the road will be very great. That city will become, at once, as it were, a starting place for the west.

It is now established, we think, that rail ways will supersede canals. They can be made for less money, and any where. They are not affected by floods, or droughts, or frosts. They engender no diseases. The travel on them will be about four times as rapid, steam being used as the moving power; and we see that the Majestic engine, on the Liverpool and Manchester way, moved 142 tons, 32 miles, (the distance between the places), in one day—travelling 180 miles, at the cost of 5 dollars for fuel, oil and superintendence of the engine!—that is, 50 tons were moved one mile at the cost of one cent.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT. From the Kentucky Olive Branch. We request the attention of our readers to the following extract from a pamphlet put forth by major T. P. Moore, and extensively circulated just before the last presidential election.

"It has been predicted also, that in case the friends of general Jackson got into power, internal improvements would be abandoned, and even the Cumberland road given up to decay and ruin. They have now a decided majority in both houses of congress, and what has been the result? Never was so much done for internal improvements at any preceding session.

No less than $175,000 has been appropriated to continue the Cumberland road, in the direction already indicated through the states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, to Missouri.

One million dollars has been appropriated to be invested in the stock of the Ohio and Chesapeake canal company, which canal is to unite the Chesapeake bay with the Ohio river. This improvement will be of immensely more importance to the western country than the Cumberland road itself, as it will open to our produce several eastern markets.

Near a million of acres of public land has been given to the state of Ohio, to aid her in the completion of her canals.

Many other objects of internal improvement have also received attention, but these are the most important.

These are the practical results of placing a majority of the friends of general Jackson in congress: the west has been peculiarly favored. Our interests both in relation to the tariff and internal improvements, never were so efficiently guarded, even when Mr. Clay was in the zenith of his glory. How could it be otherwise? Gen. Jackson himself is a western man, and those who support him, naturally have a friendly feeling for the western country."

St. Louis, Feb. 22. It is not generally known, we believe, for it did not come to our knowledge until within a few days past, that the general assembly of Missouri, at its late session, directly AFFIRMED THE POWER AND THE DUTY OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO CONSTRUCT WORKS OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT, in the most extended sense in which those terms are now used by politicians. This affirmation is embodied in a memorial to congress, praying for the continuation of the Cumberland road, and for an appropriation for the removal of obstructions in the Missouri and Mississippi rivers. The fact is important, as showing the opinions of a legislature, the majority of which were Jacksonians. The position assumed is so plainly stated, and was so deliberately acted upon, that not even the most ignorant of those who voted for it, could have mistaken it. Yet, the memorial in question was passed without opposition, and now stands upon record, speaking as intelligibly as words can speak, the sentiments of that legislature and of the state at large. [Republican.

We copy the following from the Richmond Enquirer of the 15th instant.

The bill to incorporate the Staunton and Potomac rail road company being before the senate, Mr. Dromgoole offered this proviso:

"And provided, also, that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to authorise the commissioners designated in the first section, or to empower the said "Staunton and Potomac rail road company," to receive any subscription of stock on the part of the government of the United States, and should the said company permit or receive any such subscription, all rights and privileges herein granted shall thereupon cease and determine."

The propriety of inserting this proviso was discussed by Messrs. Dromgoole and Mason in favor of the proviso—and by Messrs. Edgington and Patterson against it. The ayes and nays were called for by Mr. Dromgoole, seconded by Mr. Alexander, and were as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Holt, (speaker), Mason, Dromgoole, Alexander, Cabell, Booker, Campbell, Harvie, Armstead, Bernard, Cocke, Winston, Chinn, Gibson, Cowan and McComas, of Wythe—16.

Noes—Messrs. Wyatt, Joynes, McCarty, Beale, Patterson, Cravens, Pennybacker, Opie, Boyd, Beirne, McWhorter, Morgan and Edgington—13.

We understand, that this proposition produced much excitement. Several of the gentlemen, who took part in the debate, declared themselves opposed to this as an amendment to the bill, while they were of opinion that the federal government had not the constitutional power to make internal improvements: and they moreover declared, that they would incorporate the principle of the proposition, as a general provision, applicable to all corporate companies.

☞ The "Enquirer" however, is earnestly engaged in whipping-up the members of the legislature to action, concerning internal improvements, to be made by the state, or its citizens, for which he deserves much praise. And there has been as much talking about internal improvements in the legislature as would fill many folio volumes, if recorded. We shall see what will be done. The great and grand system proposed, was debated and amended to death, some time ago. Hogsheads of tobacco will yet be rolled to market—and, if it had been the practice in Virginia to make horses draw the plough by their tails, what a world of words should we have had before any change could be made in that respect!

It appears that a like provision, forbidding a subscription on the part of the United States—(sufficiently settled, for the present, we should think, by the vetoes of the president), was inserted in the Petersburg rail-way bill, by the senate. When this bill was returned to the house of delegates, a pretty warm debate ensued. Mr. Campbell, of Brooke, moved to strike out the "government of the United States." This was opposed, but carried 60 to 56. The question then came up generally on the amendment of the senate, which several, though professing a high regard for "state rights," thought was "uncalled for and unnecessary"—finally, the senate's amendment, or Mr. Dromgoole's proviso, was disagreed to by a large majority. After which the yeas and nays were called on the like amendment of the senate to the Staunton rail-way bill—and it was disagreed to, 89 to 33!

The amendment striking out the 29th section of the bill, authorising the extension of the rail road westerly, from Staunton to the Kenawha or Ohio, now coming up,

Mr. Summers offered an amendment replacing the 29th section, with a proviso requiring the commencement of the road, (westwardly of Staunton), within five years from the passage of the act, and finish it within treme distress of the four horses employed to draw a barge, (though less than five miles to each stage), and at a rate not much exceeding 5½ miles an hour. What is the weight of one of these barges, with its usual load of passengers? We should hardly think it exceeds sixty tons. Then, one horse on a rail road is equal to two dragging a canal boat, at nearly one-fourth less speed!

---

seven thereafter, and a further proviso, saving to the state the privilege of making the whole or any part of the road.

Mr. Summers supported it with much force, reprobating the principle upon which the senate had stricken out the 29th section—namely, that the road from Staunton might interfere with the interests and vested rights of the James river company. The justice and the expediency of this principle were combatted by Mr. Summers, and the attempt to control the people of the west in their choice of markets, indignantly denounced.

[Mr. Summers' proposition was defeated on the next day.]

☞We have a copy of Mr. Summers' speech on the loan bill, for the purposes of internal improvement in Virginia, delivered in the house of delegates. That gentleman always acts on bold and liberal principles. He is one of the ablest citizens of his state; and had the people adopted his views, regarding internal improvement and domestic industry, years ago,—we have no doubt that the real and personal property of Virginia would now have been worth 200 millions more than it is, and her population 300,000 freemen more. What value has been added to New York, by her canals?—Virginia is quite as well fitted by nature to profit by a liberal policy, as New York—but she has a superabundance of "let-us alone" politicians; very pious too—as much so as the council of Castile, which said, that "if GOD had intended a certain river to be navigable, he would himself have made it so!" "They would not fight against GOD!"—No, no!

We hope to present some extracts from Mr. Summers' speech; and also from a very sensible one, delivered by Mr. Caldwell, of Winchester, on the same occasion.

PLEASANT INTERCHANGE. A boat from Pattonsburg, Botetourt county, recently arrived in Richmond with a full load of Tennessee cotton! It had been transported to Pattonsburg in waggons, and there bartered, we understand, for Virginia iron, &c. [Richmond Whig.

"CIRCULATION OF VALUES." We copy the interesting paragraphs annexed from the Hagers-Town "Torch Light." The amount of saving is, no doubt, correctly stated—so much will be saved, either to producers or consumers, and a public benefit of 90,000 dollars must ensue, because of the reduced cost of transportation of flour only, from this single county, to its market on tide-water! Now, this saving is equal to the interest of two millions of dollars at 4½ per cent. and if we should add all the other products of Washington county that will be sent to market when the rail road or canal shall reach it, it cannot be deemed extravagant to say that—(after the payment of the tolls, which must be regarded as satisfaction for the capital vested in the road or canal), there will be an increased value of lands in Washington county, or more general benefit, (no matter which), equal to a capital of four millions of dollars, created.

We have ventured an opinion, that the New York canals had given an increased value to property in a sum not less than 200 million of dollars. With the facts developed as to Washington county, we are convinced that that estimate was a great deal too low. But there is hardly such a thing as a calculation of the effects of internal improvements, on the money and time saved in transportations. The first cost of roads and canals and bridges are as nothing, compared with the results that follow the making of them. It is in this light, alone, that all statesmen should view the subject. There will be an annual saving, equal to a capital of ten millions of dollars, by the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, with reference to the productions of Frederick and Washington counties, only, when this great work shall have reached the latter. Who then may put a veto on the progress of the road?

From the Hagers-Town Torch Light

Maryland—There are in Washington county, upwards of sixty-four flour mills: those of the first class, manufacturing 10,000, and those of the lowest, say 500 barrels per annum. We are told that the average of the whole would not be high at 3,000 barrels. In this estimate the grist work for the consumption of the county is not included, but the flour sold by the barrel in our towns and villages, is. With the latter deduction from the above statement, it is believed that we send annually to market 150,000 bbls. being about one fifth of all the flour inspected in Baltimore. The purchase of wheat in Hagers-town alone, disburses $1,000 per day during the whole year.

Our farmers are now paying from $1 to $1.50 per barrel, for carriage to Baltimore. The canal or rail road, will, it is believed, produce a saving of 70 cents per barrel in the price of transportation to market, which will be about $90,000 upon the whole crop, making that addition to the income of the county. But flour is but one item—the same result will take place in regard to our corn, beef, rye, pork, whiskey, lumber, lime, iron, fruit, vegetables, &c. The operation of these great works will, in a short time, be felt among us; when the rich lands of Washington county, already teeming with abundance, will be greatly improved in cultivation, and the annual sum of their productions increased beyond all former example.

The "Frederick Herald" observes—An effect of the approximation of the rail road has been already realized in Frederick, in the rapid increase of our population, and a correspondent rise in rents. There is, we are informed, a less number of houses for rent at this season of the year, than at any period for a long time past; and we almost daily hear of capitalists who intend to open stores. If the predictions of our friends are to be realized, and we have faith in them, we know not how capital could be more profitably employed, than in the erection of buildings that could be rented for 100 to 130 dollars per annum. We do not think the rail road will be one continuous "Howard street," from this city to the metropolis, but are satisfied the great flour market of the state will concentre in Frederick; and, as a consequence, the population will increase with great rapidity. In this increase there is no person more deeply interested than ourselves,—and hope the day is not far distant when our hebdomadal will be converted into a diurnal, and, after having had an existence of nearly thirty years, it will reach the full fruition of our hopes, and be presented to its numerous, long tried, and generous patrons, as the "The Daily Herald."

On the same subject, the "Winchester Virginian" has the following remarks—

Some of our citizens have taken up the project of a railway to Harper's ferry, with a degree of zeal and energy which, if seconded as it should be by others equally interested, cannot fail to command success. The entire cost of the work is estimated at $300,000—nearly $40,000 have been already subscribed in Winchester, and there is every reason to believe that the amount of subscriptions here will not fall short of $60,000. Our country friends may be expected to subscribe $40,000 more, which would make a total of 100,000 in the county; and the people of Jefferson will doubtless aid us with a subscription of forty or fifty thousand dollars more.

From estimates made, we have not the slightest doubt that a very moderate tollage would nett to the stockholders at least eight per cent. upon their investments. The saving in the expense of transporting produce to market would be immense. At present, not a barrel of flour can be conveyed from this place to Baltimore at less than $1 50 cents per barrel; whereas, if we had a rail road to intersect the Baltimore and Ohio rail road at Harper's ferry, at the outside, the cost of transportation would not exceed 40 cents per barrel, which would be a saving of $1 10 cents on every barrel.

APPOINTMENTS, &c. John A. Cameron, late editor of the North Carolina Journal, has been appointed by the president, with the consent of the senate, consul at Vera Cruz, Mexico, in place of Wm. Taylor, esq. of Virginia, resigned.

Mr. Irwin, late a member of congress, (superceeded by Mr. Andrew Stewart), and who joined Mr. Monell, of New York, in the anti-tariff report of the last session, has been appointed United States judge for the western district of Pennsylvania, by the president, in place of Mr. Wilkins, elected to the senate of the United States. Mr. Monell has also been appointed a state judge in New York, being also left out of congress.

Commodore Lewis Warrington has been appointed to the command of the navy yard and station at Philadelphia, in the place of commodore Brainbridge, removed. This proceeding has caused considerable excitement.

AMERICAN SYSTEM. "Father, what is that 'ere American system that they print so much about in the newspapers! 'Why it's a—a—a—something that goes on rails, kind o' somehow.' The man undoubtedly supposed it to be a railway.

☞We suppose this is meant as wit. But to compare the American system to a railway, is not so bad. By the latter, the Patapsco and Ohio rivers are about to be brought close together—the shores of each becoming places of deposit for the production or commerce of the other. So by the American system, the wheat, meats and potatoes of the farmers, become nails, window glass, cotton goods. The facility of transportations is closely a-kin to the facility of transformations—and together, make up the American system.

THE BRITISH SYSTEM. The queen of England expects—alias commands, that every lady appearing in her drawing rooms shall be dressed in British manufactures. This proceeding has set thousands of people to work to make splendid articles for those who can afford to pay for them, and which, otherwise, would have been obtained from foreign countries. Some of the new products are uncommonly magnificent. This fashion will keep hundreds of thousands of pounds in Great Britain, for the benefit of her laboring poor.

The queen appears to be a "very good sort of a woman." She receives friendly calls, and expects the ladies to bring "their work" with them—if not, she supplies those whose company she wishes, without ceremony. She lately gave a dashing woman, of great beauty and high fashion, an intimation—that a more becoming style of dress was expected, if hoping for admission into her presence.

SILK. Since our last publication, in which we made a few remarks on the cultivation of silk, we have been politely furnished with beautiful specimens of white and blue sewing silk, and very strong, but plain, ribbands, made at the Shakers establishment, near Harrodsburg, in Kentucky. The sewing silks are as smooth and even as any that we ever examined, and very soft and fine.

These neat and industrious and harmless people, however, cultivate and manufacture silk only for their own use; but the samples before us shew every desirable degree of perfection, and afford another indisputable evidence of the truth of the leading facts which we have so often endeavored to impress on the public.

THE TARIFF. A late writer in the Richmond Enquirer, said—

Now is the time for the anti-tariff portions of our community to be on the alert—to be strenuous in their exertions—and to disseminate, far and wide, the just principles of political economy, which form the basis of the liberal system. In the next congress, in all probability, the battle will be fought between the two parties, and the last act of the drama will terminate. Whether advantageous or ruinous to the agricultural and commercial interest, will, I think, depend greatly on their exertions. That certainly will be the most favorable occasion for a fair trial of the strength of parties which is likely ever again to occur. If we fail then, capital and labor will soon flow into the channels into which the wisdom of our national legislature has thought fit to direct them, and their influence will be so great as to be predominant in the councils of the nation. Or, should the policy of the government in relation to the tariff undergo a change at a more distant day, it would cause a revulsion in trade, which would inevitably produce much temporary distress. Now, then, is certainly the accepted time—the season when the greatest exertions should be made. I, therefore, once more, call upon all those who are against the policy which has been pursued by the general government for some time past, in relation to trade and wealth, to come forward and give their support in time to the paper which I have recommended.*

And in an editorial article, the Enquirer of the 15th inst. says—

"It is impossible that the people of the oppressed sections of the United States can submit much longer to so oppressive a system. They will not consent to become the hewers of wood and the drawers of water for other more favored classes—or more favored sections. The extinguishment of the public debt is rapidly approaching—we tell our tariff brethren of the north in the frankest and most friendly spirit—it is impossible to remain in this "durance vile" for many years longer. When that debt is sponged away, (and we go for that consummation even more anxiously than they do), the question must be settled—and we trust in heaven! with the mutual consent of all the partners to the compact. Union, harmony, the most cordial fellowship with our brethren, are objects dear, very dear, to our hearts. But we cannot tolerate oppression—a subjection to a system so absurd—so much at war with the very principles of our federal system, the unfettering institutions of a young and a free people—and the very spirit of the age itself."

☞The editors of the Enquirer, we suppose, will "tolerate" what a majority of free people of the United States shall deem to be rightful. The language used in the paragraph quoted, brought to recollection the following extract from the "Biography of the signers of the declaration of independence."

Mr. Rodney, of Delaware.

The vivacity of Mr. Rodney's domestic manners was carried into his private life, and those whose memory is stored with reminiscences of the old congress, and the revolutionary war, have many a tale, to illustrate the gaiety and humor of Cæsar Rodney. Among others the following one may be recorded, from an authentic source. The delegates from the southern states, but especially from Virginia, were remarkable, during the early period of the revolution, for indulging a sectional prepossession, not indeed, maliciously, but often sarcastically. When it broke out in high-wrought eulogies and preferences to Virginia, over all the other members of the confederacy, it was termed dominionism. Among the representatives of that ancient and really noble state, there was no one who more delighted or oftener indulged in this complacent but somewhat mortifying species of gratulation, than Mr. Harrison; he was, however, completely cured of it by an incident which occurred, when his state was threatened with an invasion by the enemy. He had frequently displayed the "abundant and powerful resources of that meritorious member of our union;" and although he had painted them in colors brighter than was correct, he no doubt believed them to be just. When, however, the danger was approaching, the picture was found too glaring. He introduced a demand for supplies of arms, munitions of war of every species, troops and assistance of every kind, and declared the state destitute in every point and circumstance. When he sat down there was a momentary silence, all being surprised that such a development should come from him. Cæsar Rodney rose from his seat, in a style peculiar to him. He was at that time an animated skeleton; decorated with a bandage, from which was suspended the green silk covering over one eye, to hide the ravages of his cancer—he was indeed all spirit, without corporeal tegument. He was thin, emaciated, and every way the antithesis of his friend Harrison; who was portly, inclining to corpulency, and of a mien commanding though without fierte. Both of the members were really representatives of their respective states. Rodney, who was endowed, as we have mentioned, with a natural and highly amusing vein of humor, began, with a crocodile sympathy, to deplore the melancholy and prostrate condition of his neighboring, extensive, and heretofore "powerful" state of Virginia! But, said he, in a voice elevated an octave higher than concert pitch, let her be of good cheer; she has a friend in need: Delaware will take

---

*Mr. Raguet's "free trade" paper, we believe, is the one alluded to. Great exertions have been made and are making to give it a large circulation.

her under its protection, and insure her safety." Harrison was astounded; but joined, (for he relished a good hit, for or against him), in the laugh; and the subject lay over to another day.

"THE SURPLUS FUNDS." A great anxiety prevails to amend the constitution of the United States, so that the surplus funds of the national government may be divided among the several states, according to their representation in congress. It might be as well to have these funds, before it is agreed to divide them! But, it is not at all probable that the constitution will ever be so altered, as to admit of such distribution. It might suit the large states very well, but the small ones will never agree to it;—and if the requisite number should, the money would be much wasted, local feelings preventing the most beneficial investments of it. When there shall be a surplus, the revenue may be reduced to meet the case, without interfering with a rightful, and indispensable, power to protect the national industry, and regulate our affairs with foreign nations. Let the whole duty, for examples, on coffee, tea, cocoa, and fifty other things that we do not produce or manufacture, be taken off—that on sugar, and many other articles, will soon stop of themselves, from the abundance of the domestic supply.

MR. CALHOUN. The vice president, on his way home, being detained a day by the breaking down of the stage, near Lawrenceville, Virginia, was invited to a public dinner, by Messrs. Robert Turnbull, Addison Powell, John Wyche and Diggs Poynox, a committee on behalf of the citizens—to whom he replied as follows:

Gentlemen: It is with great regret that I am compelled to decline the invitation to a dinner which you, in the name of the citizens of Lawrenceville, have given me.

Never was there a period of my public life at which the approbation of my fellow citizens was more welcome, than at the present; and I can assure you there is no portion of them for whose good opinion I have a more profound regard than for that of the highminded and patriotic citizens of this distinguished commonwealth.

With such feelings, had circumstances permitted, I would gladly have accepted your invitation, but I trust that you will find sufficient apology for declining it in my long absence from home, and consequent solicitude to return to my family, with as little delay as possible.

For the flattering terms in which you have made the invitation, permit me, gentlemen, to offer you my sincere acknowledgments.

With sincere regard, I am your obed't serv't,

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

THE "CALHOUN CORRESPONDENCE." For the amusement or instruction of our readers, we give a number of small articles from the United States "Telegraph," the Washington "Globe," the "Albany Argus," "Richmond Enquirer," &c. shewing the politics of the day.

The contest between the principals, we apprehend, has not nearly closed. Much curious matter may yet be expected—some of which will, most probably, "draw out" other persons.

The "Globe" of the 2d inst. contains an article in relation to certain remarks said to have been made by Mr. Southard, then secretary of the navy, in 1826, as to the relative merits of president Monroe and general Jackson, concerning the defence of New Orleans. It affects to give, in part, the substance of a correspondence that took place between general Jackson and Mr. Secretary Southard, on the subject. A writer in the "National Intelligencer," after quoting from the "Globe," says it "purports to have been written under the eye and by some one in the confidence of the president."——"There is truth enough in the statement to prove beyond question, that it is not exclusively the production of fancy—still, however, the misrepresentations of the case are so gross, as to render it equally clear that the writer drew a part of his materials from some other source than the correspondence itself. To what extent this departure from candor and fairness has gone, can be ascertained only by reference to the original documents. Grounds exist for believing, that an unfaithful and mutilated transcript of this correspondence has been exhibited, and a publication of it, as it occurred, is the only means of rectifying every error and misconception."

So we may expect a publication of this correspondence! We cannot see any possible connection which it has with the 'Calhoun correspondence;' or any necessity, on the part of the friends of general Jackson, of compelling Mr. Southard to enter the arena in his own defence. The whole affair had nearly passed to oblivion, being unpublished; and what good can arise from giving it to the people, we are totally at a loss to determine.

MR. JAMES BARBOUR. A great public dinner was given to Mr. J. Barbour, at Orange Court House, Virginia, on the 10th inst. The following is Mr. B's letter in reply to the invitation.

Barboursville, Feb. 26, 1831.

Dear sir: I accept with much pleasure the very flattering invitation of my fellow-citizens to dine with them at the tavern of Mr. Coon's on the 10th of March; and of which you, by order of the committee, have notified me in a manner so gratifying. I must be permitted to add, that this new instance of kindness on the part of my friends penetrates me with the profoundest gratitude.—In receiving the repeated evidences of their warm approbation—coming as it does from so many most highly respectable men, some of whom were companions of my youth and associates of my manhood—I am enabled to look across the false fire of the moment and the bitterness of public rancour, to a more propitious period, when devotion to an individual will no longer be the standard of the claims of an old servant on the confidence and consideration of his fellow-citizens.

I beg you to make my acknowledgment acceptable to those you represent, and accept for yourself due assurance of my respect. JAMES BARBOUR.

Wm. R. Robinson.

Mr. Madison was invited, but the state of his health prevented his attendance, else he would have joined in the "tribute" to be offered to a gentleman "whose private worth and social virtues are known to us all"—adding "I can only assure those who have that pleasure [of being present] that my feelings will be in sympathy with theirs on the occasion which brings them together."

Judge P. P. Barbour handsomely accepted the invitation to attend, and thanked the gentlemen for the kindness which they had also extended towards himself.

Mr. Robert Taylor also accepted the invitation, in an earnest and feeling manner.

THE VICE PRESIDENCY. A large meeting of the "Democratic Republicans" was held at Lancaster on the 16th inst. at which James Buchanan, esq. was named as a candidate for the vice presidency of the United States. Another like meeting has been held at Harrisburg, and many such may be expected.

The nomination, however, of Mr. Buchanan, by those who exclusively regard themselves as "Democratic Republicans," is among the political curiosities of the times. The names of democrat and federalist have long since lost all application to parties in the United States—and thousands of individuals, on either side, in the present divisions, have "to-ed the mark" in most resolute opposition to one another, but now sing "Firm united let us be," &c. It is mentioned only in illustration of this remark, that Mr. Buchanan was as decided a member of the federal party as ever lived in Pennsylvania, so long as that party existed in the state.

Judge Hemphill, of Philadelphia, has also been named in the "Democratic papers" for this high office.—He also, is of the old "federal school"—but among the most worthy and valued of our citizens, let him be called by what name that he may.

NEW HAMPSHIRE. The recent election in this state has resulted in the full success of the Jackson ticket, for governor, congress, and members of the state legislature, by about the same majority as it had last year.

The "New Hampshire Patriot" says—"The democracy of the state has again rallied and put down that party with a strong hand. The "American System" of Henry Clay is DEAD and buried in the state of New Hampshire."

BOSTON—March 11. The ship Mary and Harriet, which lately arrived at this port from Liverpool, was loaded in the space of 70 hours, with 670 tons of measurement goods, by 56 men. The cargo is estimated to be worth 750,000 dollars, the duties on which amount to upwards of 110,000 dollars.

In addition to the above, there have been within ten days three arrivals from London and two from Liverpool, which will probably increase the amount of duties at the custom house to near 400,000 dollars.

The number of arrivals at Boston from foreign ports since the first of January last, exceeds the number of arrivals during the same time, last year, by thirty.

[Thus the tariff is ruining Boston.]

THE CITY BANK, of New York, was opened by false keys, between the closing of the bank on Saturday last and the opening of it on Monday morning, and about two hundred and twelve thousand dollars, in bank notes, chiefly of the city banks—with 40,000 of the bank of Lansingburg, 20,000 of the Morris Canal and Banking company, and 200 Spanish doubloons, &c. were carried off. The doors were found closed, as usual, by the first teller. There was no evidence of violence having been used.

PENNSYLVANIA. There was a good deal of excitement in the house of representatives of this state, about two weeks ago. While Mr. Ingersoll was speaking, he was rudely called several times to order, by a Mr. Reed, of Susquehannah—and so often the speaker, (though it seems he was not altogether friendly towards Mr. I.) pronounced that that gentleman was in order. Mr. Reed, however, persisted in his calls; and there was much confusion and uproar in the general outery, of "order!"

The commotion was considerably increased when Mr. Ingersoll said, that he had just been informed that the secretary of the commonwealth had had the audacity to incite the member from Susquehannah to call him to order: and Mr. Laussat stood up, and added, that the statement was made on his authority. This attack upon gen. McKean produced a great sensation—for he is reported as the leader of the friends of governor Wolf. Mr. Reed denied that the secretary had made any suggestion. Mr. Laussat rose to speak, but a strong attempt was made to prevent him—he persisted, and said that after the positive denial of the gentleman from Susquehannah, it "was possible that he had been wrong." An adjournment, because of the excitement, was moved, and agreed to.

Immediately upon the adjournment, but before it had actually taken place—Mr. Petriken, speaking by authority, stated to the house, that general McKean had been remonstrating with Mr. Reed against calling Mr. Ingersoll to order. Mr. Laussat said, that Mr. Petriken knew nothing about it, of his own knowledge, and that he (Mr. L.) had stated the situation of the matter to the house. The members thereupon broke up in great confusion.

The interference of gen. McKean thus seems established, and the reproof will have its effect. The scene was uprorious.

[It may be necessary to add, that there is a strong party in Pennsylvania, though under the general name of the friends of gen. Jackson, which is decidedly opposed to gov. Wolf, and his policy, of whom Mr. Ingersoll is one. Hence the violence shewn on the occasion.]

"BALTIMORE CLIPPERS." The brig James Ramsey, capt. Drew, sailed from Baltimore, for Gibraltar, had a passage out of 17 days—she stood into the bay, made a stretch in the harbor, and immediately bore away for Mahon, where she was originally bound—had a passage to Mahon of three days—discharged her cargo, and immediately proceeded to Marseilles, and had but 18 hours to that port—from Marseilles down to Malaga of seven days—took in cargo at Malaga, and had 32 days to Baltimore from that port. The total number of days 59 and 18 hours, going to those different ports and returning to Baltimore. Beat this who can. [Pat.

MARYLAND AND PENNSYLVANIA. From the Baltimore Patriot. We learn that the Maryland commissioners, Messrs. Goldsborough, Sterett and Mercer, returned to this city on Saturday evening last from their mission to Harrisburg. As they have to make a report of their proceedings to the legislature of Maryland at their next session, we shall not get any thing authentic and formal from them—but we understand that the commissioners have stated in their conversation, that they relied chiefly in their negotiation upon the compact existing between the states in relation to the free navigation of the Susquehannah, and referred to the correspondence between the two state governments, subsequent to that time, to illustrate the views entertained by both states.

We hear that the committee of the Pennsylvania legislature have prepared a report, against which the commissioners intend a formal protest for reasons therein stated, and that the protest will, in all probability, accompany the report of the committee to the legislature of Pennsylvania.

The period at which the commissioners arrived at Harrisburg, being near the close of the session, was in some degree adverse to a full investigation of the subject, although it was hardly to be expected that there would have been an immediate acquiescence on the part of Pennsylvania, except in the acknowledgment of the existing compact, and of a disposition and determination faithfully to adhere to it. Pennsylvania is now in possession of the full views of Maryland upon this subject, and we hope, for the sake of her good fame, as well as for the interests of all concerned, that she will speedily afford the desired redress.

THE NASHVILLE BANK. Many of our readers must recollect the failure of this institution, in consequence of advances made by the cashier to unknown individuals, to the amount, we think, of some two or three hundred thousand dollars, to be found only in a private book, said to have been kept by the cashier, that he would not give up—in which many "distinguished persons" were thought to be interested. The subject is again stirred, and there is some prospect that the facts belonging to these mammoth frauds will yet be exposed. The transaction is among the most impudent on record. It reminded us, at the time, of the infamous Scotch lord Melville, who had "abducted" a large amount of public money, (in which transaction the late king of Great Britain was thought to be a partner) who admitted the plundering, but said his "private honor and personal convenience," would not permit him to go into particulars!

THE CHEROKEE PHOENIX. New Echota, Feb. 19. This week we present to our readers but half a sheet—the reasons is, one of our printers has left us, and we expect another (who is a white man) to quit us very soon, either to be dragged to the Georgia penitentiary for a term not less than four years, or, for his personal safety, to leave the nation, and let us shift for ourselves as well as we can. And, our friends will please to remember, we can not invite another white printer to our assistance, without subjecting him to the same punishment; and to have in our employ one who has taken the oath to support the laws of Georgia, which now oppress the Cherokees, is utterly out of the question. Thus is the liberty of the press guarantied by the constitution of Georgia.

But we will not give up the ship while it is afloat. We have intelligent youths in the nation, and we hope before long to make up our loss. In the mean time, our patrons will bear with us and have patience—let them bear in mind that we are in the woods, and, as it is said by some, in a savage country, where printers are not plenty, and a substitute not easly obtained when one of our hands leave us or become indisposed—our paper is therefore easily deranged. Our readers will please not expect to receive the Phœnix very regularly for a while. We shall do the best we can.

BANK OF THE U. STATES. The new official paper of the government, says—"that every friend of the president with whom he consulted, and every member of his cabinet, united in advising him against an avowal of his opposition to the renewal of the charter of the bank of the United States."

Flour, &c. Howard street at Baltimore, March 11—$6 62½ same quality, at New York $6 75; at Philadelphia $6 50, at Steubenville, O. $3 25 to $3 50; at Cincinnati $3 90 to $4 00; at Louisville, $4 00; at New Orleans $5 00. Wheat at Steubenville 54—at Massilon, O. on the canal, 73 to 76 cents per bushel. The latter for the New York market—thence to Canada, thence to the West Indies—free of duty; being carried in British vessels from Quebec.

Present of a horse. A correspondent of the New York "Journal of Commerce," under date of Washington, 14th March says—"We have been much amused to-day by the appearance among us of the well known Juba, of Roanoke, who brought with him a fine young horse, a present to the secretary of state from John Randolph.

The veto. Gov. Duval has given his veto against eight or ten acts passed by the legislative council of Florida—but all except one were afterwards passed by the requisite majority and became laws, the vetoes notwithstanding. The act which failed was to "repeal the act to prevent dueling."

Charge des affaires to Turkey. The New York Enquirer states, that G. W. Erving, esq. appointed by the president and senate to be our charge des affaires to Constantinople, has declined the acceptance of the office, and that the president has provisionally appointed commodore Porter in his place.

Encouragement to the young. The following forcible remarks are taken from the address of Mr. M. M. Jackson, at the late anniversary of the New-York Mercantile Library Association.

"Death is constantly invading the ranks of our merchants, and consigning to the tomb the opulent, and the honorable, the enlightened and the just. Who are to fill their places? Those who are just expanding into manhood. Those who have not completed their clerkships. Yes, gentleman, it will soon devolve upon you, to fulfil the various trusts committed to your charge, by those who have gone before you. It will soon become your duty, as it has been that of those in whose steps you are advancing, to guard the property—to improve the morals—to promote the virtue—to protect the rights—and to preserve the integrity of our free institutions. Who are our most eminent merchants? Who are the men that have honored and elevated the commercial character? They who were once obscure and unknown clerks. They whose advancement has been effected by their own perseverance, by their own industry, and by their own irrepressible energy. Who are the men throughout the world, the most brilliant in oratory—the most profound in legislation—the most renowned in war—and most celebrated in letters? Men who were the architects of their own fortunes.—Men whose ardor no adverse influences could repress: whose resolution no obstacles could enfeeble; whose industry no labors could overcome. If we look to our own happy country alone, what noble, what animating, what illustrious examples! The Franklins, the Henrys, the Shermans, and the Fultons, are names which will forever brighten history's page, and remain until the end of recorded time, beacon lights, to guide the footsteps of genius to usefulness, to greatness, and to fame. To industry, firmness, and perseverance like theirs does our country owe its liberties, its institutions and its laws."

Mexico, &c. Iturbide was deposed and shot—Pedraza deposed and banished—and now Guerrero, deposed, is shot, and Bustamente, at present in the chair of state, seems to be in the way of his predecessors! Thus was it in Buenos Ayres. The worthy men and sound patriots at the head of the revolution, have all disappeared—among them, Rivadavia was compelled to resign and left his country in disgust—Dorrego was shot—Lavalle deposed, and Rosas, the present military chief, is an usurper. So it has been in Colombia, Peru, Chili, Guatemala and Bolivia: so it will be, until the people shall really enjoy liberty, by putting down their military men and national priests.

Guerrero has been shot for high treason—that is, a resistance to the power of Bustamente, who had been chiefly instrumental in deposing him; but the acts of the latter, being successful, were not treason! It is now thought that deposed and banished Pedraza, will be set up against Bustamente—and so the chiefs hunt each other down like beasts of prey. It should be recolleeted that Guerrero was driven from the presidency of Mexico, by force of arms.

Oajaco, Feb. 15.—Yesterday gen. Guerrero was shot in the town of Cuilapan, two leagues distant from this city. He availed himself of the necessary helps and preparations for a good death, which in fact he experienced,—for with reagnation to his punishment, he only concerned himself to go into eternity as a true catholic, who, if he feared the tremendous judgment of a severe and infallible Judge, confided in his inexhaustible compassion, and was very far from saying like Cain, "my punishment is greater than I can bear."

☞Guerrero appears to have been invited to dine on board a Sardinian brig, lying at Acapulco, the captain of which sold him to the existing government for $50,000. He was rather murdered than executed. A violent reaction was expected.

Liberia. The advertisements in the Monrovia newspaper shew that much business is doing at some of the stores—the stocks of goods being very large. Among others we observe the following—

Notice—Mrs. C. M. A. M. Lundy intends opening a school on the first Monday in January 1831, at her residence, where she will teach young ladies reading, writing, marking and working. The number of pupils will be limitted to twelve.

She respectfully solicits the patronage of the public, and promises her best exertions to give satisfaction. For terms apply to Mr. Shiphard. C. M. A. M. Lundy.

Monrovia, December 6th, 1830.

Turkey and Egypt. The porte refuses to acknowledge the Armenian Catholic Archbishop, appointed by the pope—because supposed to acknowledge an authority not derived from himself. He proposes that a nomination shall be made of another person, for his ratification. This seems going very far for the sultan of Turkey.

A number of young Turks have been sent to France to be educated.

The first of the vessels of war constructing by order of the viceroy of Egypt, to carry 100 guns, was about to be launched, on which occasion a grand fete was to be given, to which all the European functionaries had been invited. Egypt is becoming very powerful, under the rule of this extraordinary man.

A new case! The American brig Comet, from Alexandria for New Orleans, with a cargo of one hundred and sixty four slaves, was wrecked on Abaco, on the 2nd January last—boarded by wrecking vessels, and the slaves and other persons carried safely to Nassau, New Providence. Another vessel was provided to carry the slaves to New Orleans, on account of the owners of them; but permission to ship them was refused at the custom-house, and they remained stowed in the little vessels that brought them from Abaco.

A great excitement prevailed, lest they might be let loose on the colony. The speaker of the house of assembly, dressed in his robes waited upon the governor with an address, praying that they should not be detained—a "general panic" prevailing among the people, because of a fear that they might be emancipated. The governor in his reply, said—

"What further measures it may be judged advisable to take with respect to the American slaves lately brought into this port, by three of our wrecking vessels, must depend upon the opinion of the law officers of the crown, founded upon the evidence which will be laid before them. I am confident that you will not ask, nor expect of me to act, in so important a matter, otherwise than with all the circumspection the case appears to me to require.

"Whatever may be the opinion of the crown lawyers; or whatever may be the decision of the tribunal to which the question concerning the slaves may ultimately be referred, the house may depend upon my unceasing efforts, for the preservation of the public tranquillity."

The latest account, (the 19th Jan.) says that the negroes had been taken out of the wrecking vessels, and deposited on Hog-island, to wait the determination of the court. The cargo is said to have belonged to Franklin and Ainfield, of Alexandria.

BRIEF NOTICES. The secretary of the navy left the seat of government a few days ago, on a visit to N. Carolina.

A public dinner was to have been given to Mr. Webster, at New York, on Thursday last. At the head of the list of managers was the name of James Kent, late chancellor. A like compliment was also to be paid to Mr. Burges, by the friends of the "American System," in that city.

Richard Rush, esq. has accepted the invitation of the Cliosophic society of the college of New Jersey, to deliver the next annual oration before the two literary societies of Nassau Hall.

Gabriel Moore, governor of the state of Alabama and United States senator elect, resigned on the 3d inst. his official duties into the hands of Samuel B. Moore, of Jackson county, president of the senate, who will constitutionally exercise the functions of executive officer until his successor is qualified at the next session of the general assembly.

The U. S. schooner Grampus run aground off the Moro, Havana, on the 3d inst. The boats of the Peacock were sent down, which brought up her cannon and stores. It was feared that the schooner would be lost.

The bill containing an amendment authorising the marriage of blacks with whites, which passed to a third reading in the Massachusetts house of representatives, has been finally rejected by that body.

The President, capt. R. S. Bunker, performed the passage from New York to Providence, on Tuesday last week, in fifteen hours and nine minutes. On the passage she consumed Sidney coal, which, by way of experiment, has thus far in the season been used. The result shows conclusively to the mind of captain Bunker, that coal will supercede entirely the use of wood for steamboat navigation.

Mr. Randolph, in a speech delivered some time ago, said—"He had not purchased a dollar's worth from northern factories, and so help him God he never would; and if southern gentlemen had one drop of the blood of their ancestors, they never would. He would neither eat, drink, nor wear any thing north of the Patapsco—there were two remedies for the south; the first, a rigid non-consumption of American fabrics, and the second he would not indicate, it was not to be resorted to until the other had first been tried and failed."

Wheat. The Waterloo (N. C.) paper states, that upwards of 400,000 bushels of wheat have been purchased in that county during the last six months, a great portion of which has been purchased in that village.

Norristown rail road. There was a great scuffle at Philadelphia and Norristown, to get stock in this road—much more being wanted by individuals than was required for the work.

Philadelphia and Westchester rail road. At the opening of the books in Philadelphia for subscription to the Westchester rail road, the whole number of shares was subscribed for in the course of half an hour.

Arms. There are at present in manufacture in England 500,000 stand of arms for France, 600,000 for Russia, and 300,000 for Prussia. At a moderate estimate, one million and a half sterling.

Locomotive engine. A Philadelphia paper says—We learn that the rotary engine, which we had occasion to mention a few weeks since, has been completed by Mr. Childs, of this city, and on experiment, is found to answer the highest expectations of its inventor. The engine will ascend an inclined plane at any elevation ever used in a rail road, and has the advantage of being remarkably compact. Our Baltimorean friends are interested in this engine.

Domestics. Nearly six hundred bales of American cottons were lately sent from Boston, in one vessel, for Chili and Peru, &c. The demand for these goods is on the increase, though British goods are so much cheaper———if the "free trade folks" are to be believed!

STATISTICAL ARTICLES.

BANK STATISTICS.

Table shewing the amount of capital in several of our principal cities—the amount of dividends—and the amount of notes discounted, during the last year.

Cities.	Capital.	Dividends.	Discounted.
New York	18,130,000	1,037,700	103,769,952
Brooklyn	300,000	21,000	2,099,968
Albany	1,576,600	301,248	9,792,801
Troy	1,018,000	61,840	6,183,596
Hartford	3,859,000	159,540	15,952,964
New London	247,687	15,452	1,545,964
Newport	595,000	19,400	1,939,964
Providence	4,324,950	276,692	27,572,184
Boston	13,900,000	703,500	70,349,968
Portland	1,850,000	36,000	3,919,968
Dist. of Columbia	3,895,350	186,702	18,670,184
Richmond	2,517,500	151,025	15,102,462
Norfolk	1,460,000	85,300	9,240,816
Charleston	4,975,000	371,000	34,341,632
Savannah	2,000,000	146,600	14,661,148
Augusta	1,400,000	60,000	5,999,968
Baltimore	6,888,691	362,118	36,211,864
Philadelphia	10,792,000	693,075	69,307,472
New Orleans	10,000,000	542,500	54,249,988
New Haven	840,000	27,200	2,720,016
Portsmouth	775,000	22,100	2,310,056
Salem	1,450,000	60,500	6,049,992
Total of capital	93,394,778
Total of dividends		5,340,492
Total of amount discount			511,992,927

INSPECTIONS OF FLOUR AND MEAL.

From the Philadelphia Price Current.

Inspections of wheat and rye flour, and corn meal, in the principal ports of the United States, for the year 1830, including the preceding nine years:

Places.	Wheat flour. Brls.	Rye flour. Brls.	Corn meal. Hhds.	Corn meal. Brls.
Albany, New York	43,215
New York	827,370	15,191	10,316	9,663
Philadelphia	473,876	21,712	7,498	19,949
Baltimore	597,804	4,436	558	5,458
Georgetown, D. C.	139,713
Alexandria, D. C.	187,432	12
Fredericksburg, Va.	79,336
Falmouth, Va.	46,406
Richmond, Va.	251,024
Petersburg, &c.	72,000
N. Orleans, year ending Sep. 30,	133,700
Total 1830	2,851,876	41,351	18,372	35,070
1829	2,255,132	77,945	17,891	51,666
1828	2,245,257	55,239	19,178	78,958
1827	2,061,459	34,487	16,869	51,192
1826	2,031,558	27,282	18,619	36,979
1825	1,882,611	57,419	14,781	51,297
1824	1,714,410	68,380	17,192	70,415
1823	1,557,724	75,640	14,705	36,863
1822	1,599,973	59,363	15,157	32,274
1821	1,707,350	43,976	17,449	40,693

Quantities of flour and grain exported from the United States, from October 1, 1821, to September 30, 1830, inclusive:

Years.	Wheat flour. Barrels.	Rye flour. Barrels.	Corn meal. barrels.	Wheat. Bushels.	Corn. Bushels.
1830	1,225,881	26,298	145,301	45,289	444,107
1829	837,385	34,191	173,775	4,007	897,656
1828	860,809	22,214	174,639	8,906	704,902
1827	865,491	13,345	131,041	22,182	978,664
1826	857,820	14,472	158,625	45,166	505,381
1825	813,906	29,545	187,285	17,960	869,644
1824	996,792	31,879	152,723	20,373	779,297
1823	756,702	25,665	141,501	4,272	749,034
1822	827,865	19,971	148,288	4,418	509,098
1821	1,056,119	23,523	131,669	25,812	607,277

BANKS OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Abstract of the official returns of banks in Massachusetts, shewing the state of said banks on the first Saturday of June, 1830. [Presented to the legislature at its present session.]

Due from the banks.

Capital stock paid in of 63 banks	$19,295,000 00
Bills in circulation	5,124,090 00
Net profits on hand	544,496 62
Balance due to other banks	2,128,576 35
Cash deposited, and not bearing interest	3,574,957 04
Cash deposited, bearing interest	2,804,868 29
Total amount due from the banks	33,323,793 44

Resources of the banks.

Gold, silver, &c. in banks	$1,258,444 05
Real estate	621,152 34
Bills of banks in this state	914,096 60
Bills of banks elsewhere	479,759 08
Balances due from other banks	2,191,087 62
Due to the banks, excepting balances	27,987,234 09
Total resources of the banks	33,366,142 61

Remarks.

Amount of last dividend, (6 months)	500,925 00
Amount of reserved profits	398,763 74
Debts secured by pledge of stock	901,823 53
Debts due, and considered doubtful	462,045 06
Rate of dividend on amount of capital of all the banks, as existing when dividend was made	2 52-100 pr. cent.
Average of 61 banks, making dividends	2 46-100 "

Several banks, whose capital has been reduced, return the rate and amount of dividend on their former capital.

—

PENNSYLVANIA BANKS.

The auditor general's report to the legislature contains the statements of the affairs of thirty-two banks within this commonwealth.

Capital stock paid in of thirty-two banks	$12,815,581 83
Notes in circulation	7,870,613 90
Due to other banks	2,343,223 54
Due to individual depositors	7,244,752 95
Contingent fund	1,170,068 02
Dividends unpaid	274,056 91
Due to the commonwealth	186,208 27
Bills discounted	18,454,213 50
Specie	3,013,383 84
Notes of other banks	1,926,257 00
Real estate, bridge, &c.	1,490,936 26
Loans to commonwealth	1,344,027 66
Bonds, mortgages, ground rents, &c.	953,375 85
Due by other banks	2,697,370 03
Drafts, bills of exchange, &c.	301,215 58
United States stocks	35,689 05
Sundry securities and personal accounts	76,545 56

[There are a considerable number of banks in Pennsylvania whose concerns are not included in the preceding aggregates.]

—

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BANKS.

The annual report from the treasury department of the state of the different banks in the District of Columbia, was lately transmitted to the house of representatives. The following statement, compiled from the whole, will shew the amount of specie and notes in circulation of each bank:

	Specie.	Notes in circ.
Bank of Washington	27,582 06	80,970 00
Bank of the Metropolis	13,250 12	54,410 00
Patriotic bank	21,356 00	109,578 85
Farmers' & Mechanics' bank	38,471 43	188,657 00
Union bank	23,813 22	126,625 00
Potomac bank	37,630 12	123,039 54
Bank of Alexandria	30,881 46	129,182 50
Farmer's bank of Alexandria	21,794 71	71,177 50
Mechanics' bank of do.	25,260 35	134,270 00
	$240,039 47	1,017,910 39

[The shew of specie is not large—but these banks hold much in what is regarded as specie-funds.]

INSPECTION OF GRAIN, AT NEW YORK—1830.

Wheat 900,442 bushels at an average price of 103 cents; 428,020 bushels of rye at 66 cents; 1,100,079 bushels of corn, at 52 cents; 798,134 bushels of oats at 35 cents; and 124,663 bushels of barley, at 65 cents—total 3,354,338 bushels, worth $2,146,214 62.

—

NEW YORK CANALS.

Erie and Champlain canals.

Total amount of expenditures, agreeable to report of 1821	$2,004,523 52
1822	1,184,468 73
1823	1,941,962 37
1824	1,785,447 84
1825	1,356,720 18
1826	833,146 97
1827	368,103 51
1828	162,130 10
1829	91,902 72
1830	49,107 55
Present report	21,340 69
	9,798,854 20
Oswego canal, from 1826 to date of the report (22d Feb. to 1831)	538,241 02
Cayuga and Seneca canal—the same	172,594 51
Chemung canal—total	96,324 75
Total expenditures in making the canals	$10,606,514 48

The repairs of the Erie and Champlain canals, have cost, from 1826 to 1830, inclusive of both, $1,076,380 90; the Oswego canal for 1828, 1829, 1830, and to Feb. 22, 1831—$34,250 85; the Cayuga and Seneca, 1828 and 1830—$13,947 00. Total cost of repairs $1,124,558 84.

—

DUTIES ON IMPORTS—AT NEW YORK.

About one-half of the whole revenue of the United States is collected at this port. The following table, reported official, is copied from the "Evening Journal."

In 1825 total amount	$15,752,100 41
In 1826	11,525,864 22
In 1827	13,217,695 89
In 1828	13,745,147 21
In 1829	13,052,676 36
In 1830 (estimated)	13,000,000 00

Being an average annual revenue collected at the port of New York alone (from 1825 to 1829 inclusive) of $13,458,696 41, or more than one half the duties collected in the whole union in each of the respective years. The duties on customs collected in the whole union were—

In 1825 total amount	$20,098,713 45
In 1826	23,341,331 77
In 1827	19,712,283 29
In 1828 (say)	21,500,000 00
In 1829	22,681,965 91
In 1830 (estimated)	21,756,707 37

—

BRITISH IMPORT, &c. OF AMERICAN COTTON.

From the N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

The following statement of the import of American cottons into Great Britain with the consumption and stocks for ten years, may not be uninteresting at this time.

Import into Great Britain of American cotton, and consumption, export and stocks, at the close of each year—Liverpool, Glasgow and London:

Year.	Imports.	Consumption and exports.	Stocks.	Weekly consump.	Average prices Uplands.
1820	303,964	246,318	79,360	4,737
1821	300,719	273,329	96 350	5,256
1822	328,888	311,434	97,854	5,989	6 1-2a8 1-4d.
1823	448,307	348 507	199,660	6,702	7 3-4a9 1 4d.
1824	282,500	418,100	64,000	8,040	8 3 4a10 1 2d.
1825	425,100	357,100	132,000	6,860	6 1 2a9 1 4d.
1826	395.100	408,000	119,000	7,650	6 3-4a7 1-2d.
1827	646 900	514,500	250,000	9,990	5 a6 3 4d.
1828	442,650	520,000	173,000	10,000	5 3-4a6 3-4d.
1829	461,000	526,700	107,300	10,123	5 a6 1-2d.
1830	620,000	598,000	129 300	11,508	Probable 5 3-4a7 1-4d.
1831	720,000	650,000	191,300	12,500	ble. 5 a6 1-2d.

For the year 1830, the estimates of course are as yet doubtful, as are those for 1831, and cannot be strictly relied on; but the fact when ascertained, it is believed, will not vary materially from the statement, especially for the last year. The supply and consumption for the present year in Great Britain, must depend on many contingencies. Our crop of cotton will be undoubtedly large, fully equal to 1,100,000 bales; and it is fair to conclude from past experience, that England will receive the greatest proportion of our excess over the growth of last year. The consumption (greater the last than any previous year) will, in all probability, continue to increase, unless intestine commotions should become alarming; but the low price of the raw material, and a constant good demand for manufactured goods, will tend much towards an augmented use of cotton. But after all, it seems strange that the probable price should be so low as many believe it will be. If we look at the statement, we find that at the close of 1823, the stock was 199,660 bales; the consumption 6,702 per week, and the average prices for Upland 7¾@9¼. The probable stock at the end of this year will be about the same, and the consumption during the year nearly double; why then, it may be asked, this great difference in price.

—

BRITISH WEST INDIA TRADE.

[The paper to which the credit is due for the following interesting statement, is unknown to us. It is copied from another paper, which gives no credit to the original publication.]

In the correspondence between Mr. McLane and lord Aberdeen, the import of corn and flour in the British West India islands is stated to be

	Corn and grain. 1825. bush.	1828. bush.
Total import into the British W. Indies	383,832	351,832
Of which there were—
From the United States	237,248	27
From the British colonies of N. Ame.	7,012	55,495
From the other West India islands	9,249	126,221
From Europe, except Great Britain	1,584	464
From the United Kingdom and the islands of Jersey and Guernsey	128,239	169,625
Total	383,332	351,832

	Flour. 1825.	1828.
Total import into the British W. Indies	207,737	206,653
Of which there were—
From the United States,	161,568	490
From the British colonies of N. Ame.	4,232	36,766
From the other West India islands	21,090	142,092
From Europe except Great Britain	400	1,135
From the United Kingdom and the islands of Jersey and Guernsey	15,447	26,179
Total	202,737	206,653

[In 1825, the British ports were open—in 1828, shut; but it will be remarked that the amount of flour and grain received in each year was very nearly the same, and had nearly the same origin—the United States. The chief part—or nearly the whole, or either, whether flour or grain, if received from the British colonies, the "other West India islands," or the United Kingdom, being American. The chief difference is in this—that, when the British West India ports are shut, the flour, &c. is carried in our own vessels; and, when they are open, about one-half of the freight is carried in British vessels. Such is the spirit and effect of the late arrangement, about which there was so many flourishes of trumpets! The discriminating duty, in favor of the British colonies, will cause a large part of the flour exported from the United States, for Jamaica, &c. to pass through the British colonial ports in Canada, Nova Scotia and New-Brunswick.]

—

REPORT FROM THE ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

It appears from the report of the United States ordnance department, 26,124 muskets have been made at the several United States armories and arsenals, during the past year. Also 90 gun-carriages.

We find from the same report that the rents which accrued from the public lead mines the last year, were 563,567 lbs. being 890,564 lbs. less than the rents of the preceding year. The quantity of lead made was 3,332,056 lbs. being less than the product of the preceding year by 6,209,252 lbs. The falling off is to be attributed to the low price of the article for two years past. The lead accruing to the United States, in the shape of rents, during the past year, would, if sold in the market, barely suffice to pay the expenses of collection. The supply from the mines is greater than the country requires, and unless a market for the excess be found in foreign countries, it is not to be expected that even this rate of production will be sustained. It appears from the treasury statements that the whole quantity of lead, in all its various forms, imported during the ten years commencing with 1819, has averaged 7,835,933 lbs. and that the quantity exported averaged 1,338,218 lbs. leaving for domestic consumption an average of 6,497,704 lbs. Prior to 1828, the product of the public mines had been so considerable as to affect the market; but during that year more than twelve millions of pounds were obtained. In 1829, the public mines yielded fourteen and an half millions of pounds, and the average for the last three years is more than twelve millions, being about double the quantity consumed prior to the year 1829.

It is recommended that the lead regions be surveyed and sold, as their value is well known. Independently of the mineral riches of these lands, the climate is represented to be remarkably salubrious, and the soil to be fruitful and adapted to support a dense population.

The militia of the United States amounts to 1,190,853; being about one-tenth of the estimated population.

—

CAPITAL, INCOME AND REVENUE, OF FRANCE.

In the article "France" of the Dictionarie Geographique Universel, now publishing in Paris, by a geographical society, the following statement is given of the capital of the French soil, and of the revenues of the empire.

The arable lands at a valuation of 30 francs the hectare, are worth	*f.*13,690,800,000
The woods, vineyards, meadows, and other lands	2,828,800,000
Ponds and marshes	81,920,000
Rustic buildings	3,000,000,000
Cattle, valued at the lowest price	16,703,941,676
Poultry, 51,600,000 head at 1 franc	51,600,000
Swine, 3,900,000 head at 40 francs	156,000,000
Asses, 2,400,000 at 25 francs	60,000,000
Farming utensils	3,000,000,000
	*f.*39,522,061,676
To this may be added the annual receipts,
From Manufactures	*f.*1,820,102,000
Agriculture	4,678,708,000
Colonies	40,380,000
Foreign countries	346,020,000
In warehouse	52,000,000
	*f.*6,937,210,000
The produce of the taxes of every class is	924,410,000

This is double the revenue of France in 1789; "and hence," says a journal of that country, "an opinion may be formed if she have been a great loser by the change in her laws and institutions." [But may not the people be doubly able to pay it? We have seen flour at 15 dollars, and at less than 5 dollars a barrel, in the sea ports of the United States. The high price shewed a state of prosperity—the very low one a season of adversity. The value of money is altogether conditional.]

—

NATIONAL DEBT OF FRANCE.

The following statement of the amount of the public debt of France, will at this moment, be found not without interest.

	Capital.
In 5 per cent. stock of	f.3,304,930,000
In 4½ per cent	22,877,776
In 4 per cent	100,000,000
In 3 per cent	1,423,493,338
	f.4,851,301,109

This is exclusive of the unfunded debt, of which there is no official account, but it is supposed to amount to 400,000,000 frs. Nor does it include a sum of 80,000,000 francs in 3 per cent. stock, the remnant of indemnity granted to the emigrants, which, not having been appropriated, has been lately applied to the service of the state. Taken altogether it therefore appears that the debt of France, both funded and unfunded, amounts to about $1,025,250,213. [N. Y. Enq.

BRITISH PARLIAMENTARY REFORM.

Motions on this subject in the house of commons, during the last fifty years:—

1782	by Mr. Pitt	negatived by	20
1782	Mr. Sawbridge	do.	88
1783	Mr. Pitt	do.	144
1785	Mr. Pitt	do.	24
1790	Mr. Flood	withdrawn
1793	Mr. Grey, now premier,	negatived by	241
1797	Mr. Grey " "	do.	165
1800	Mr. Grey " "	do.	145
1809	Sir Francis Burdett	do.	59
1810	Hon. T. Brand	do.	119
1812	Hon. T. Brand	do.	127
1812	Marquis of Tavistock
1817	Sir Francis Burdett	do.	188
1818	Sir Francis Burdett	do.	106
1819	Sir Francis Burdett	do.	95
1821	Mr. Lambton, now lord Durham,	do.	12
1821	Lord John Russell	do.	31
1822	Lord John Russell	do.	105
1823	Lord John Russell	do.	98
1824	Lord John Russell	do.	111
1825	Hon. Mr. Ambercrombie	do.	24
1826	Lord John Russell	do.	124
1829	Marquis of Blandford	do.	74
1830	Marquis of Blanford	do.	113
1830	Mr. O'Connell	do.	386

GENERAL POST OFFICE.

The following is the chief clerk's explanations of certain erasures, or alterations, that have been made at the general post office—

O. B. Brown, being duly sworn made the following statement in writing:

When directed by the postmaster general to cause the statement of the allowances (marked A.) to be made, I first instructed Mr. John Taylor to commence the work, and afterwards, by consent of the postmaster general, employed Mr. Dundas to assist him. The directions which I gave, were to call upon Mr. Suter, the pay clerk, for his pay list, which would exibit the payments actually made, and on what contracts they were made; from which, reference could be had to each particular contract. Mr. Taylor soon after informed me, that in many cases, the additional allowances were not entered on the contracts; and when they were so entered, in most instances, the date of entry was omitted, and he needed instruction as to the proper date. I then directed him to take the date of entry to the credit of the contractor as the only criterion that could be given. Sometime after this, he asked farther instruction as to the proper person who should be regarded as having made the allowance at the different periods. I directed him to enter all allowances made from the 1st of July, 1823, to the 6th March, 1829, inclusive, to the name of John McLean, who was postmaster general during that period, to enter all allowances made from the 7th of March, to the 5th of April, 1829, to Abraham Bradley, who was by law acting postmaster general during that period; and from the 6th of April, 1829, the day when William T. Barry took charge of the department, to enter all allowances to his name.—In the case No. 191, of Mr. Harrell, the service appears to have been ordered by Mr. McLean, and the allowance made on the 13th of April, 1829, by Mr. Barry. The entry on the transcript to the name of Mr. Bradley, is an error, which I was not apprised of, never having seen it till this morning, as I was confined by sickness when the report was made; but the error must have arisen from the following circumstance.

The entry of the allowance was made on Mr. Suter's pay list, with no other date of entry than a reference to a letter of April 13, 1829, to Mr. Harrell. The entry from the pay list into the books of accounts, for so much of the additional allowance as accrued for services rendered prior to the 1st of April, 1829, was made under date of April 1, 1829, instead of the date when the allowance was actually made, 13th April, 1829.

It was not known to me, and of course could not have been anticipated by the persons employed in making the statement, that the date of an entry to the credit of a contractor for additional allowance, was ever made antecedent to that allowance. From examination, however, such appears to have been the ancient custom of the department in similar cases, and a custom which, if incorrect, as I believe it to be, appears not yet to have been changed. O. B. BROWN, chief clerk.

General post office, 28th Feb. 1831.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

From the National Journal.

The Cherokee nation vs. the state of Georgia.

The argument in this case, commenced on Saturday the 12th inst. by Mr. Sergeant, on the part of the Cherokee nation, was followed up this day by Mr. Wirt.

Mr. Wirt, in the commencement of his argument, stated the nature of the present motion, which he said was addressed to the original jurisdiction of the supreme court in the name of the Cherokee nation of Indians, praying for process of subpœna against the state of Georgia, and for an injunction against that state, her officers, and agents, to restrain them from exercising the laws of Georgia within the Cherokee territory, on the ground that the specific laws which go to introduce the civil and criminal code of Georgia into the Indian territory, are null and void, as being repugnant to the constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States.

He next proceeded to argue that the court possessed jurisdiction of the subject—that this jurisdiction depended solely on the constitution of the United States, and did not proceed from congress—that congress could confer no new jurisdiction on the supreme court, nor could it take any from it which it possessed. The constitution had established the supreme court, and had defined its jurisdiction, and in what cases that jurisdiction was original and exclusive. He then cited the 3d article of the constitution, by the 1st section of which the whole judicial power of the United States is deposited in one supreme court, and such inferior courts as congress shall from time to time establish; and the 2d section which describes the judicial power of the court—as relates to the subject matter of controversy over which its jurisdiction is to extend, and the character of the suits that may come before it. And from that part of the same which declares, that the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity, arising under the constitution—the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made under their authority; he contended that the present was a case which plainly came under the cognizance of the court.

Mr. Wirt then went on to show that the Cherokee nation was a foreign state, neither owing allegiance to the United States, Georgia, to any state in the union, or to any other power. That from time immemorial the Cherokees had been a sovereign and independent people—that they had been acknowledged as such from the time of the first settlers under the charter of George II, in 1732, to the present day, by the various treaties that had been made with them at different periods; and that as such the state of Georgia could have no jurisdiction within their territory. That although within what was called the limits of Georgia, they were a foreign state, and in proof of this, he instanced the towns and provinces at one period possessed by England in the heart of France. But that in the case of the Cherokees, they were not only a foreign nation, but an independent one—the sole and exclusive masters of all the soil within their territory, which they had not ceded by their own free will, and could be governed, of right, by no other laws but such as they themselves thought proper to ordain. Mr. Wirt in the course of his argument quoted the several treaties—cited various cases and decisions in point, and after addressing the court on the subject from eleven o'clock till half past two, concluded his highly forcible and eloquent appeal, in a peroration of deep feeling and pathos, and in which the sympathies of his auditory were completely enlisted, by expressing his confidence that the court would grant the injunction required, as the last stay and hope of an unfortunate and much injured people.

The court was considerably crowded throughout the day; some of the Cherokee delegation were present—one of whom, of very intelligent and respectable appearance, shed tears copiously during Mr. Wirt's address. No one, when we left, had appeared on the part of Georgia.

[Mr. Sergeant was very able, and listened to with delight. Of Mr. Wirt's speech, as continued on Monday, a correspondent of the N. Y. Journal of Commerce, thus speaks—

"The peroration was sublime, indeed. I scarcely ever heard addressed to that august tribunal a more pathetic appeal. I looked upon the judges, who were all solemn, and evidently deeply affected by the contrast the orator drew between the condition of that gallant tribe, when they roamed through their native hills and vales, the acknowledged and undisputed lords of their wild domains, with that which has brought them humble supplants to the government of the United States, for protection against the encroachments of their neighbors. I then turned my eyes upon Taylor, Coody, and Ridge, who have been here to prosecute their suit, ever since the meeting of the court. I could not stand the effect of the very first glimpse of their confiding, yet anxious countenances, and sought relief from the pressure of my sympathy in a flood of tears."]

The "National Intelligencer" with reference to the same subject, says, "Mr. Wirt delivered in that case, on Monday last, one of the most splendid discourses ever pronounced in that court, and as powerful in argument as it was beautiful in diction.

—

The result is thus stated in the same paper of the 19th—

The supreme court of the United States terminated its annual session yesterday.

Among the decisions pronounced previous to the adjournment, was one upon the application, on the part of the Cherokee nation, for an injunction to stay certain proceedings of the state of Georgia. The decision of the court was an unequivocal denial of the injunction.

The opinion of the court was read by chief justice Marshall, and is therefore to be presumed to be from his luminous mind and pen. We have not been able to obtain it for publication, anxiously as we desired to do so. We heard it read, however, and shall venture so far to report the grounds of it, as to state, that the court disclaims jurisdiction of the case, on the ground that the Cherokee nation is not a foreign nation, in the sense of the constitution. These Indian nations, it is the opinion of a majority of the court, are not sovereigns, independent of the sovereignty of the United States, but domestic dependent nations, in a state of "pupilage" to the United States, or in a relation corresponding to that which wards have to their guardians. The supreme court, therefore, cannot take cognizance of cases to which it is sought to make them parties as nations. With respect to the rights of the Cherokees, however, as individuals, to the lands guarantied to them, it was pretty distinctly intimated in the opinion of the court, that there is a mode by which they may be brought before the supreme court for adjudication.

The opinion went on to say, that, if the objection to entertaining jurisdiction in this case were not fatal to the application, there were other grounds on which an application for the interference of this court in the case would encounter grave objections. If jurisdiction was exercised in the case, it must be on the ground that the Cherokees are a foreign nation; and the relations between foreign powers and the states are placed in the charge of a different branch of the government. For this court to undertake to arbitrate such questions, would be to assume a political power not intended to be vested in it! If it were true, as argued, that the Cherokee nation is oppressed by the state of Georgia &c. &c. it belonged not to this court (the opinion concluded), but to other tribunals, to assert their rights and to redress their wrongs.

Mr. Justice Baldwin delivered a very long separate opinion, agreeing entirely in the conclusion to which the majority of the court had arrived, but not concurring in the views taken in the opinion which had been read.

Mr. Justice Johnson also delivered a separate opinion on the question.

Our own opinion on the subject is of little consequence; but the reasoning of the court upon the constitutional provisions bearing upon the case, appeared to us to be conclusive.

And on the 20th, had the following paragraph—

The Cherokee nation, vs. the state of Georgia. We are informed that Mr. Peters, the reporter of the decisions of the supreme court, intends to publish this case immediately, in a separate volume from the reports of the term, as well as to include the case in the fifth volume of the reports.

He has made arrangements by which the whole of the arguments, in the language of the counsel, will be given to the public; that of Mr. Wirt having been taken down by a stenographer engaged for the purpose. The proposed publication will also comprehend other interesting matter connected with the case.

The public will look with deep interest for this publication, of a case which has attracted so much attention, and excited so much sensibility.

—

Another great case was discussed shortly before the rising of the supreme court—the Charlestown bridge, vs. the Warren bridge at Boston. Messrs. Dutton, (of Boston), and Mr. Webster, on the one part, against Mr. Jones (of Washington) and Mr. Wirt, on the other. It was a war of giants. It was Mr. Dutton's first essay in this court, and is spoken of in terms of high commendation—as impressive, logical, and classical. Mr. Jones is well known to the public as one of the ablest advocates. Of Messrs. Webster and Wirt it is needless to say a word, except that they displayed the utmost of their mighty powers. We have not yet heard the decision of the court.

The public mind is much agitated because of a report, that chief justice Marshall, on account of his advanced age, and increasing infirmities, is about to resign. At the present period such proceeding would be regarded as a national calamity. Who may take his place in the public confidence? who grasp that moral power which he holds in his hands—by the steadiness, firmness and ability displayed in his long and useful life? It makes one melancholy to reflect, that such men as John Marshall must grow old, become infirm and die!

☞We are glad to believe that judge Marshall, yielding to the remonstrances of the people, has abandoned the idea of retirement for the present.

STATE RIGHTS AND SO FORTH!

Not long since, Mr. Blair, of South Carolina, made a speech in the house, of which the following sentences are a part:

South Carolina will do every thing; nay, she has done every thing that the federal compact, honor and patriotism require of her; and after this, if the worst must come, why, in God's name, let it come! If those who ought to cherish her as an old revolutionary sister and confederate, regardless of their common sufferings and dangers, their joint achievements, and their blended glory, still persevere in ungenerous and unhallowed attempts to beggar and enslave her, she will defy you, sir.

What! will she again remonstrate? Yes sir, she will remonstrate, in terms as vivid as the lightning's flash, and in a voice as loud as heaven's thunder.

[☞"As loud as heaven's thunder"—GOD BLESS US!]

—

The Georgia Journal has the subjoined remarks in relation to the application recently made to judge Evans, to restrain the tax collector from collecting the tax imposed by the state upon the dividends arising from U. S. bank stock owned by citizens of this state:—

"Another collision.—South Carolina and the United States government, are in a fair way to get at loggerheads on another subject besides the tariff. We will wait with anxiety to see the upshot of the business. South Carolina will now have a fair opportunity of showing whether she can act with the promptness and decision which Georgia displayed in the Tassels case. If South Carolina would talk less—but we forbear to reproach her."

And the Columbia Times speaks of it in the following modest strain:—

"It is known that at the last session of the legislature, an act was passed taxing the dividends of the U S. Bank. An application was lately made to judge Evans, in Charleston, to restrain the tax gatherer from collecting the said tax, on the ground of its unconstitutionality. It was immediately dismissed. An appeal was taken to the court of appeals now sitting in that city, and the decision of the judge below promptly confirmed. We suppose it will go now into the supreme court of the United States, who will undertake, doubtless, to nullify our law.

It is to be hoped that the court of appeals will refuse to certify its proceedings to the U. S. court. Let us see if we alone of all the states, are to be eternally defied and trampled on, because we happen to have an uncommonly large minority of federalists, who will sustain all measures of the general government tending to put down those of the republicans. This is the case of Georgia over again. Are we too proud, or too poor spirited, to follow her example? The 25th section of the judiciary act is unconstitutional, and should not be obeyed.

South Carolina has an unlimited right to tax all property of every species within her sovereign limits, and must be sustained in it against any privileged body of aristocrats, public or private."

—

From the Lynchburg Jeffersonian Republican.

The advocates of American monarchy, under the gentler term consolidation, have labored hard to prove that the state rights party, and its doctrines, are alone dangerous to our existence as a republic. Their arguments are cunning insinuations, and false imputations of motive. They will not condescend to reason; but declaim in filthy words, and deal about the slang wang of their party, for the purpose, not of enlightening, but of misleading the understanding.

Our country is called "the United States" that is, a union of the states, not a union of all the people of the states, as one great and undistinguished mass, but a union of the several states, each considered as individual bodies politic. How then is this union of the states to be destroyed? It may be destroyed by dismemberment—that is by cutting them loose from each other, and leaving them as they originally were, separate and distinct, and independent sovereignties. But is this the only way in which this union of the states may be destroyed? Certainly not. It may be destroyed, by merging all these states into one great state—that is, by consolidation. These are the two extremes of our system—and which is the more dangerous. In order to produce dismemberment, there must be an open, public, and unconcealed action. In order to produce consolidation, there not only must be, but is actually now going on, a secret underhanded, and silent action, which is concealed from the people. Which of the two is the more dangerous, a secret enemy who stabs in the dark, or an open enemy who strikes at mid-day? Let the man of sense answer.

The truth is, the doctrine of consolidation, with which the federalists are so much pleased, is dangerous in two respects. It not only threatens the country with a monarchy, but in case it fails in that, its natural tendency, is to force a dismemberment. A dissolution of the union will never take place, unless the doctrine of consolidation forces it. In that is comprehended all the active and dangerous elements of disunion. It threatens the people in the same way that a proud and imperious man threatens his neighbor—"Submit, or I will knock you down." If he submits, he is dishonoured—if he does not he is still worse off.

☞ This is a new reading of the constitution of the United States—our copy of that instrument says—"we the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union," &c. "do ordain and establish this constitution," &c. The states are not mentioned in the power existing to "establish" the constitution, though it was ratified by them.

—

New York and New Jersey have nearly been in mortal combat, because of "state-rights" and the catching of oysters—and, by the following article from the "Centreville Times," it seems possible that Maryland and Pennsylvania may be in the same condition! We are quite willing to supply our neighbors of Philadelphia with some of our good oysters, if obtained honestly—but must and will resist the rascally practice of catching them with "drags," which destroys the breed and renders a permanent injury to all parties. In this respect, we really hope that the laws of Maryland will be supported—but do not like the idea of calling Philadelphia vessels, "foreign" ones.

"We understand that several oyster sloops, (probably a dozen), are now engaged in scouring the shores of the Chester river for oysters. These boats, it is said, are from Philadelphia, and are completely armed for defence, knowing that they are violating the laws of the state, which makes it a punishable offence for any foreign vessels to fish for oysters in any of the waters of this state. The instruments used for oystering, are the drags (likewise a violation of an act of assembly), and a punishable offence. Great excitement exists amongst our citizens, who are at a loss how to proceed in the matter.

"Would it not be wise for the proper authorities to appoint an armed vessel, to scour the shores of our rivers and apprehend these marauders? What is the use of legislation if such fellows are allowed to pilfer our oysters in defiance of law and order. We hope something will soon be done in this matter."

LEGISLATURE OF NEW YORK.

Distribution of the surplus revenue—The following resolutions heretofore offered by the committee of ways and means, of which Mr. Selden is chairman, were lately called up in the assembly by Mr. Selden, and were passed without debate and unanimously.

Resolved, If the senate concur, that the surplus revenues of the United States, beyond what shall be deemed by congress necessary for the expenses of the general government, and a proper provision for public defence and safety, ought to be annually distributed among the several states according to their population, to be estimated in the manner pointed out by the second section of the first article of the constitution, for the apportionment of representatives and direct taxes.

Resolved, If the senate concur, that the governor be desired to transmit a copy of the foregoing resolutions, to the executives of the states, to be laid before their respective legislatures, with a request that they will take the same into consideration, and transmit the result of their proceedings to this and the other states, and to the president of the United States, to be laid before congress.

LEGISLATURE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

In the last REGISTER, page 56, we inserted sundry resolutions concerning the "American system," or a protecting tariff, which passed the house of representatives with only two votes in the negative against 87 in the affirmative, and the word "ju-di-ci-ous" being refused a place in them, though offered by way of amendment!—and these resolutions being taken up in the senate, on the 14th instant were passed unanimously.

Mr. Burden offered the following resolution to the senate—

"That whereas the bank of the United States has tended in a great degree to maintain a sound and uniform currency; to facilitate the financial operations of the government; to regulate foreign and domestic exchange, and has been conducive to commercial prosperity, that the legislature of Pennsylvania recommend a renewal of its charter under such regulations and restrictions as to the power of the respective states as congress may deem right and proper."

Mr. Ingersoll's resolution which was postponed in the house, differs in some respects from the foregoing; it is as follows:—"Resolved as the sense of the senate and house of representatives, that the constitution of the United States and near half a century's experience, sanctions a bank of the United States, as necessary and proper to regulate the value of money and prevent paper currency of unequal and depreciated value."

A letter to the editor of the Philadelphia "Sentinel," dated Harrisburg, March 15, says—

Mr. Burden's resolution recommending a renewal of the charter of the United States bank, passed unanimously this morning, in the senate; there was no discussion upon it, and there was no necessity, as the conduct, capacity, and advantages to the community of that institution, were fully and ably examined on the question yesterday. The resolution of Mr. Ingersoll, on the same subject, having been postponed in the house of representatives, it was taken for granted, in New York, that Pennsylvania was opposed to the bank of the United States, and accordingly a committee was raised in the New York legislature, who have reported resolutions against the renewal of the charter. The resolution offered by Dr. Burden, and unanimously passed by the senate of this state, will show that the bank is popular, and that Pennsylvania is anxious that the charter shall be renewed.

The "Harrisburg Reporter," speaking of the resolutions of Messrs. Ingersoll and Burden, has the following queer remarks—"throughout the debate, interesting, animated and occasionally even sharp or personal, in the house of representatives, on the subject of the bank of the United States, not a sentiment was expressed from any quarter towards general Jackson, but of attachment and the highest respect; nor was a single word uttered by any one against the bank of the United States. The argument generally was that the chosen president of Pennsylvania might find it consonant with his views of the public good, to keep the bank of the United States, and the mint of the United States, where they now are, in the commercial metropolis of Pennsylvania, and not suffer any movement to supplant those institutions to the detriment of this state."

[The president has twice most earnestly suggested to congress, even at this early period, the destruction of the bank of the United States; and it is morally certain that he will refuse to sign a bill renewing the charter, if it shall come before him, being re-elected to the high office that he holds. We call the remarks "queer," because that Pennsylvania is in direct and rigid opposition to the favorite measures of the "chosen president of Pennsylvania."]

THE ARABIAN HORSES.

In the house of representatives—February 22.

The following message was received from the president of the United States:

To the congress of the United States:

I submit herewith to congress a letter from Mr. Rhind, stating the circumstances under which he received the four Arabian horses, that were brought by him to the United States from Turkey. This letter will enable congress to decide what ought to be done with them. ANDREW JACKSON.

The following is a copy of Mr. Rhind's letter.

Washington, 10th Dec. 1830.

SIR:—I think it proper to state the circumstances under which I became possessed of the Arabian horses, landed from the vessel in which I reached the United States from Turkey.

Finding, during my residence at Constantinople, that our Turkish friends were far behind us in many improvements, I suggested to the ministers several which were of great use to them; and after closing the business of the negotiation, much of my time was occupied in giving them drafts, schemes and elucidations. The sultan, I understood, took great interest in these suggestions, and many inquiries were made of me, by his request, to all of which I afforded the best explanation in my power.

It being customary at that court, for the person who negotiates a treaty, to remain there until the ratifications are exchanged, or by express assent of the porte, to leave a person in his place, I was therefore, under the necessity of appointing Mr. Narvoni to that station, and presented him in that capacity to the reis effendi.

I shortly thereafter took final leave of the Turkish ministers.

Finding that no vessel would leave Turkey for the United States prior to the first of September, I determined, instead of remaining idle at Constantinople, to proceed to Odessa; a voyage of three days, and make the necessary arrangements there for the reception of our vessels; having accomplished this, I returned to Constantinople on my way to Smyrna, where I was to embark.

On reaching the capital, I had several interviews and communications with my former Turkish friends, and suggested other improvements in their system, very gratifying to them.

Being informed by the reis effendi, that permission would be granted me to export one or more Arabian horses; and conceiving, that whilst it would be a personal object to myself, it would also be a benefit to our country if I succeeded in conveying one to the United States. I visited the studs of many of the nobility in order to select some, and was on the eve of closing for the purchase of two, when the circumstance coming to the knowledge of the sultan, he, on the 31st of August, directed four horses to be sent in his name. Although this was evidently not intended as a present to me in my official capacity, since the ministers were aware I could not accept them as such, still the gift was one that could not be returned without giving offence. Being well informed, that to refuse them would be considered an insult to the sultan, and would doubtless be attended with injury to the interests of the United States, and Mr. Narvoni, as well as others, assured me, that I must take them away from Constantinople, if I should cut their throats and throw them overboard the next day. I was consequently obliged to take them, and relinquish the purchase of those I had selected. I immediately had the four horses appraised by competent judges, on the spot, and took them with me to Smyrna.

Having no funds of the United States, or the means of raising them to pay for their expenses and passage to America, I shipped them as a commercial adventure in the name of, and for account of the owners of the vessel in which they came, and from whom I had secured, an individual credit on London previous to leaving the United States. The horses are consequently in their possession, but if the United States have a claim for their value, I presume those gentlemen will pay it over, should they sell for more than the expenses attending them, which of course are very considerable.

So far as regards myself, I am ready to transfer to the United States, any right, title, or interest I may have in them, should it be required.

With great respect, I have the honor to be your obedient servant, CHAS. RHIND.

To the president of the United States.

The subject was referred to the committee on foreign affairs. [No decision was had on the subject.]

"SIGNS OF THE TIMES:"

OR

POLITICS OF THE DAY.

We have thought that a page or two given up to articles extracted from the belligerent newspapers, because of the "Calhoun correspondence," might interest our readers and be useful for reference. The present is a mere collection of scraps, from both sides, without order. We expect hereafter to give some of the regular set-tos of the "Telegraph" and "Globe," &c.

The stolen letter.—How a certain confidential letter from president Monroe to Mr. Calhoun got into the hands of general Jackson, without the consent or knowledge of Mr. Calhoun, is still a mystery. The Washington Telegraph thus closes a reply to the New York Standard, on the subject:—

"As we have said, it has been seen that names in this matter are substantial things; and it may be that the names of the member of congress, and of the person who assumed to be Mr. Calhoun's friend, would cast much light upon this subject, and enable the public to determine how far their agency goes to prove or disprove a plot. It is argued that, because they professed to act with Mr. Calhoun's consent, therefore there was no plot. If this argument be good, the fact that they acted without Mr. Calhoun's knowledge and against his consent, is conclusive proof that there was a plot. And we ask the editor of the Standard what he will say if it shall appear that the letter was purloined, and that, so far from acting under the sanction of Mr. Calhoun, this professed friend, after travelling from Washington to Nashville for the purpose of placing the letter in the hands of general Jackson, travelled to Albany to report progress? ☞ We believe that all this will appear, if the names be given. We ask for the name, not only of the member of congress, but also of him who, the Standard says, "can tell how he got the letter." Will the editor of the Standard do us the favor to republish this article, and give to it a fair and candid answer?

Letter to the editor of the Albany Argus, dated house of representatives, Washington, Feb. 28.

"The newspapers will inform you of the passage in the house of representatives of the bill authorising a subscription on behalf of congress for the public documents proposed to be published by Gales and Seaton. This measure has often been before attempted, and defeated. The expense will be great; precisely what, cannot now be estimated; but from 50,000 to 100,000 dollars, as the series shall be more or less complete and extensive.

"At a distance, it may not be easy to believe, what however is apparent here, that the treacherous political conduct of the editor of the Telegraph has most efficiently aided, and indeed caused, this heavy and doubtful appropriation in favor of printers, the avowed opponents of the administration. Until its exercise was attempted, no one supposed that Green had so little influence with the house. Gales and Seaton will owe much to the odium felt by all honorable men at the low cunning and miserable duplicity of Green in deserting and opposing, while he professed to support general Jackson. It is questionable, before the public manifestation of his treachery, if this bill could have obtained within twenty votes of a majority. To the odium attached to his faithlessness, he added the effrontery, with a view to defeat the bill, to send to the house through the speaker, a notice that he proposed to print these documents, without relying on the patronage of congress, and requesting leave to use the documents of the house in the prosecution of the work. No one believed that he would do this without reference to congressional aid, either immediately or remotely; or that he designed to attempt it at all, if by the proffer he could defeat the bill; but several were satisfied, by the offer that he at least believed a reprint of the documents to be required. Such republican members as were of this latter opinion preferred to vote for Gales and Seaton, though avowed opponents, rather than afford the least countenance to such an individual as the conduct of the editor of the Telegraph proves him to be: and the opposition members of course voted for the appropriation. But even the conduct of Green could not change the votes of the republicans of the New York delegation. The few republican members of the house who voted for the bill, did so from a strong conviction that a re-print was necessary.

From the Lynchburg Virginian.

"We leave the reader to form his own opinions on the facts submitted. Since the correspondence first appeared, an opportunity has been afforded in some degree to ascertain the public sentiment in different quarters. Every public print without exception speaks in high terms of the conduct of Mr. Calhoun, with the significant saving of those which print the laws under the appointment of Mr. Van Buren. And from our knowledge of the human character, we venture to say, that few of that stamp will be found to justify the vice president.

Other facts have been brought to light since the first publication. Mr. Forsyth has appeared under his own name as the friend of Mr. Crawford. The letter of the latter gentleman to Mr. Calhoun has been published with a reply from that individual, followed by a notification from the secretary of state himself. Such a detestable plot to undermine the character of any man, has never appeared before the eyes of any people. The president has been basely imposed upon by the cunning contrivers of this political intrigue. But woe be to them, if he should detect their artifices—and he will detect them. His sense of justice will make the plotters tremble.

From the Maine Democrat.

The Telegraph has been very zealous of late in its endeavors to create an impression that Mr. Van Buren was the chief instigator of what the Telegraph has been pleased to term a "plot" to alienate the feelings of the president from Mr. Calhoun. The course of the Telegraph induced Mr. Van Buren to send a note to its editor, in which he denied all knowledge of or participation in the affair. In answer to this, the editor of the Telegraph takes occasion to charge Mr. Van Buren with falsehood. A more shameful and abusive attack than that of the Telegraph upon Mr. Van Buren we have seldom seen—and coming from a source "professedly" friendly to the administration, it was well calculated to excite surprise. We are persuaded that all such attempts to prejudice the reputation of Mr. Van Buren will prove abortive. He stands too high in the estimation of the people to suffer any disparagement from the insinuations of the editor of the Telegraph or any of his abettors, however exalted their station, or ardent their pretended attachment to the democratic cause. We had prepared an article on this subject, but are compelled to defer it by a press of other matter.

From the United States Telegraph.

The secretary of state would persuade the people that he has no other object than the re-election of general Jackson, and the good of the party. Why then does he labor to force Mr. Calhoun into opposition? Why did he issue his orders to all his presses to open a bitter and uncompromising war upon Mr. Calhoun, and that, too, before the publication of the correspondence? Has he no "motive?" We may well imagine that general Jackson could have no sufficient motive for assailing Mr. Calhoun; But is it so with Mr. Van Buren? Who does not see that Mr. Van Buren wishes to fight the war for the succession now? Who does not see that, by making an issue between general Jackson and Mr. Calhoun, he brings the weight of gen. Jackson's popularity and the fears of the party to bear on Mr. Calhoun's future prospects, and thereby impairs his strength in a future, contemplated contest? Who is it that labors to make the issue between general Jackson and Mr. Calhoun? It is not Mr. Calhoun or his friends. Is it not Mr. Van Buren and his presses that are constantly placing general Jackson in the front rank? Does this show respect for the feelings, and regard for the fame and character of gen. Jackson, or a desire to promote the union and preserve the harmony of the party? Who is it that boasts of general Jackson's strength, and defies all opposition to him? Is not this done by Mr. Van Buren's partisans? Who is it that whilst he labours to build up presses devoted to himself and opposed to Mr. Calhoun, labors to destroy this press? And why does he do so? Is it not because he has ascertained that our support of general Jackson is independent of the line of safe precedent? Why has Mr. Van Buren established the Globe? Why have that press, and all the other presses in the same interest, been incessant in their attacks upon Mr. Calhoun?

From the Albany Argus, March 8.

It has been significantly asked, why the publication of the vice president, about which rumor spoke so freely for months before its appearance, was delayed until so near the adjournment, and until after the election of the editor of the U. S. Telegraph as printer to congress?

Another question, not less significant, has been asked, and that is, why the Telegraph, so tame and so amiable, towards all parties, during all the session, previous to the election of printer, became, so soon as its appointment was secured, the assailant, without cause or justification, of those who contributed to that appointment, and of their friends, and so much in favor (if we may judge from their eulogies) of those who voted against it? It is not strange, perhaps, under such circumstances, that the Telegraph and its friends, feel somewhat sensitive under any imputations of "duplicity;" nor that they seek to disguise under an ideal "plot," a premeditated but artfully concealed attempt to disturb the harmony and divide the friends of the administration.

From the Globe.

"We have seen enough of private letters and public papers to satisfy us, that Mr. Calhoun's ill advised attempt to bring his private quarrels into the public discussions of the country, has utterly destroyed all chance for his political advancement, which his "nullification" had left."

"The nullification party unite in the scheme of the coalition, and strive to persuade the people that they do not assail the president, but those to whose arts they pretend he is a victim. They would have us to believe that he is under control, because they found on a memorable occasion, that no artifice could deceive him, or any influence swerve him from the great cause of the country, and induce him to give his countenance to the interested schemes of partisans, however they might profess devotion to himself. The public have not forgotten the celebrated nullifying dinner got up under the pretence of commemorating the principles of the patriot Jefferson, and to which the patriot Jackson was invited to lend the sanction of his presence. Toasts and speeches were prepared to recommend the new doctrines to which the vice president had committed himself in the south, and they were so artfully disguised in the garb of state rights, that it was supposed, amidst the enthusiasm and applause of surrounding friends, the president from sympathy, would catch the contagion, and unite in proclaiming the principles of nullification, or in other words, the right of one state to dissolve the union. A copy of the toasts were placed at the plate of the president, that he might be prepared to join in the spirit of the proceeding; but no sooner had he run his eye over the paper than he endorsed on the back of it his own commentary, and put his veto upon it. This was like the night attack on the enemy, on the 23d of December. He rebuked at once, the politicians who sought to entrap him, through the consenting feelings natural to such an occasion, by his peremptory toast—"The federal union must be preserved." From that moment Mr. Calhoun felt that his principles were out of favor. And he resolved to take the ground that the president was the "victim of political intriguers," when he found him superior to all intriguers. He found that no flattery nor management on the part of himself or his friends could bend the noble-minded and single hearted patriot to give the weight of his character and station to the designs of artful and ambitious partisans, and he has sought, through every avenue, to destroy that influence which he could not propitiate to his purpose. The good sense of the people will foil him in this, as the good sense of the president foiled his first attempt."

From the Richmond Enquirer.

"The friends of the administration are awake in Virginia. No specious pretexts will now blind their vision: no insidious artifices will betray them into mischief. Did the slightest delusion remain, the manifesto before us would purge away the film. We must avoid divisions; Virginia will support the cause of Andrew Jackson—but as to the selection of his successor, she will trust to the wisdom of futurity. Who will bind himself at this moment to the car of Mr. Van Buren, or John C. Calhoun, or any other man? Who will now say what he will do in this matter, some four years hence—when circumstances may be materially altered—and the characters of men are better developed. They may laugh at us, and say "you are a fence man—What! not declare which of the aspirants you will support? Are you afraid to commit yourself? Are you waiting to see which is to be the strongest side? We can abide the laugh—and even the sneers of our opponents. We know what they are worth—and we can despise their artifices. But, no man who regards the interests of his country, will now recklessly commit himself to the banners of the white or the red ruse, before they are fairly displayed in the field. We ought to go for the great interests of the country, not for the petty views of individuals—to save the constitution, if we can, and not to serve the personal ambition of a candidate. Men are mutable, but principles are eternal."

Remarks on the above, from the Political Arena.

We are under no necessity to inform the intelligent reader, whence we extract the above—He will recognize in it immediate ly the genius of the Enquirer—It savors somewhat of armed neutrality, for the present at least. We are not surprised the Enquirer should have taken alarm at the discovery that Mr. Calhoun has ten friends in Virginia to Van Buren's one—It is not too late for Mr. Ritchie to choose the stronger side in the approaching war of the succession. In the mean time, until "the characters of men are better developed," he acts wisely in keeping up the clamor for the nominal head of the government. Witnessing daily the realisation of his prophetic declaration about the "curse," we reverence Mr. R. as a seer, and should rely upon his oracular assertion that "Virginia will support the cause of A. Jackson," were it not that all the Calhoun men seem to think that by electing general Jackson again, they would ensure the succession of Van Buren.

"Men are mutable"—sad truism! fully illustrated, in times past and present, by Mr. Ritchie himself—"Principles are eternal"—they are so doubtless, but adherence to them by Mr. Ritchie, depends upon circumstances—Messrs. Tazewell and Tyler acted up to this motto, and incurred the displeasure of the Enquirer.

From the Richmond Enquirer.

The gentlemen who are so anxious to press the friends of Mr. Clay in the legislature [of Virginia] to bring out resolutions approving the course of our senators, not with the view of doing honor to them, but of embarrassing the administration, are respectfully requested to pause in their movements, and survey the ground more carefully before them, than they have yet done in any of the consultations of any caucus.—They ought to see how easy it is for the friends of the administration to tack to their resolution a "nevertheless," or a "notwithstanding" this one error on the part of general Jackson—an error too not without precedent in the acts of its wisest predecessors; yet "Resolved," &c. &c. that he, the said Andrew Jackson, commands the confidence of the legislature of Virginia, &c. &c. Thus, the friends of the original resolution will either be compelled to vote against their own project, or swallow along with it the bitter pill of an expression of the avowed confidence of the legislature in the acts of the administration. PLOT & COUNTER-PLOT.

From "the Globe," of March 19.

The Telegraph continues its attacks on the Globe in the absence of the editor. On Thursday, that paper asks, among other ailly questions, "Why has Mr. Van Buren established the Globe?"

The writer of this knows all about the establishment of the Globe; and he avers, that Mr. Van Buren had no more agency in it than Mr. Calhoun. It is not, and never has been pledged to the present or ultimate support of Mr. Van Buren. If the editor of the Telegraph would take a retrospect of his own designs, intrigues, conversations, and correspondence, for the last eighteen months, which have not been concealed from the real friends of the administration, he would not look to the future interests of the secretary of state for the origin of the Globe. But for intrigues, hostile to general Jackson himself, to the peace, usefulness and efficiency of his administration, of which that editor was the principal agent, the establishment of this paper would have been discouraged, and, it is presumed, would never have taken place.

We need not dwell upon the condition general Jackson would have been placed in on a recent occasion, had he been obliged to rely altogether on such friends as the Telegraph!

Guilt is always suspicious. Real plotters and intriguers think every body else is plotting and intriguing also. In this case, they have endeavored to conceal their schemes in the loudness of their denunciations against others. They may thank themselves for the establishment of the Globe; and others will thank its editor for the promptitude with which he has aided in turning the effects of their ambitious plans, with irresistible force, upon their own heads.

From "the Globe," of March 19.—[Communicated.]

The plot of "six weeks deliberation," is finally developed, and foiled. The publication of Mr. Calhoun's pamphlet was well timed. The excitement it was expected to produce in Virginia, might be at its zenith about the adjournment of congress; and the Virginia legislature, presumed to be on the eve of adjournment about the same time, might be induced to act precipitately upon the first impressions of the book—a union of Mr. C's personal friends with the opposition in the legislature might over persuade a majority of that body to nominate Mr. Calhoun for the presidency; and a great triumphal dinner given to Mr. Calhoun by the members of the legislature on his passing through Richmond, might go far to prepossess the state, and supplant general Jackson in the affections of the people. But it has all turned out to be a hair brained delusion. The resolutions to nominate Mr. Calhoun were only thought of, to be abandoned by his adherents as idle and ridiculous excess of vanity; and Mr. Calhoun has passed through Richmond, receiving the civilities, indeed, which her citizens are always ready to bestow upon strangers, but without being offered the honors of a triumphal feast. That the nomination for the presidency, to be followed by a festival celebration, on his passing through Richmond, if not anticipated by Mr. Calhoun himself, were at least ardently desired by his adherents, there can be no doubt of, on reading the following extracts, which have been industriously circulated by the opposition prints, to aid in accomplishing the wish, or produce an effect that should be tantamount to it on the public mind. But Virginia yet stands firm to the true faith, and Mr. Calhoun, profiting by the reproof, has left Richmond with the understanding "that he will support general Jackson!"

From the U. S. Telegraph, March 19.

Remarks by the editor of the Telegraph.—That this article, which appears editorially in the Globe, was written by Mr. Kendall is manifest. That is, Mr. Kendall does know all about the establishment of the Globe, we admit. He now pretends that "but for intrigues hostile to general Jackson himself, to the peace, usefulness, and effeciency of his administration, of which the editor [of the Telegraph] was the principal agent, the establishment of this paper [the Globe] would have been discouraged, and, it is presumed would never have taken place."

Here, we have the distinct assertion of Mr. Kendall, that the editor of the Telegraph was engaged in intrigues hostile to general Jackson, and that "his designs, intrigues, conversations, and correspondence for the last eighteen months which have not been concealed from the real friends of the administration," is the cause of the origin of the Globe. Here is a bold avowal that the Globe was established to put down the Telegraph. Now Mr. Kendall knows that the editor of the Telegraph has it in his power to prove by evidence, which neither he or Mr. Blair dare controvert, that this statement is utterly untrue. But, if Mr. Kendall is so well informed of the correspondence of the editor of the Telegraph, he can certainly produce some positive proof of the intrigues which he alleges have been carried on for eighteen months. We hereby release all persons whatever, from any injunction of secrecy, and defy Mr. Kendall to produce a single letter, or to adduce a single conversation, however confidential, which will sustain his charge. We thus remove all impediment, and challenge the proof. Having done so, we defy the editors of the Globe to do the same thing, for themselves, their counsellors, aiders, and abettors. We ask of the press throughout the United States the sheer justice of republishing this article.

From the same.

Public sentiment.—We discover that the opposition are much gratified at the warfare which Mr. Van Buren is now waging against Mr. Calhoun and this press. The Globe has paraded extracts from a few presses, chiefly those who publish by authority, as evidence of public sentiment. To us this conflict is painful. We cannot close our eyes to the nauseating effects which the exposure of such an intrigue is to produce. We are desirous to terminate the war, but to do this, we must act upon the principle which gave success to general Jackson. We will march into the enemy's territory, nor will we withdraw our forces until he be vanquished. We now have an admission of the purpose for which the Globe was established, and the public must be satisfied that we have had from the first no other alternative but the most humiliating vassalage, or a war of extermination. We are resolved to silence the enemy's batteries. We have abundant material, and all that we ask is a patient hearing, and a decision according to our merits. We have a right to expect this at the hands of our readers.

From the U. S. Telegraph, of March 22.

Amos Kendall & Co. are busily engaged in undermining the popularity of general Jackson. Take the following specimen from the New York Courier, which is but a response to the electioneering letters of the fourth auditor.

From the Courier and Enquirer.

"☞The coalition papers say, that twenty two Virginian members of congress have seceded from Jackson's administration. Let 'em. Virginia will set matters right; or, if she don't, it is no matter—we can get along without her. Maine and New Hampshire are Jackson—Vermont, New Jersey, and Connecticut, will soon be Jackson."

He knows but little of the character of Old Virginia, who can believe that she will patiently bear such insults.

The following is another specimen from the same press:

"That every state in the union has a deep regard, an unfeigned veneration for Virginia, all will freely and cheerfully admit. Good old Virginia, the land of great spirits gone to better worlds! but the aristocracy of that democratic state are becoming troublesome, thrusting their long line of ancestry continually in your face, talking of their state as the "republic," "a bold and fearless race," &c. &c. as if there was no other state throughout this great confederacy. It is amusing and yet provoking to see the old tinsel—the thread-bare laced ruffles and pinked heel shoes of the "ancien regime" elbowing everybody aside to take the lead, and such men as Tazewell and Tyler enveloping themselves in the mantles of Washington, Jefferson, and Madison—strutting through the senate and crying make way for the "republic" of Virginia—make way for Hamlet the Dane. Every Virginian of independent and manly bearing must flout such empty pretenders, such impudent inflated efforts to bring their state into disrepute. But Mr. Tyler has said no one finds fault with himself or colleague; they, it is imagined are unaccountable agents:—have a right to oppose Adams to-day, support Jackson to-morrow, flatter Clay the next day, and finally charge the president with committing "lawless acts:" they presume to think that they can take any protean shape they please, support or oppose any party, break down the democracy of the country and join Webster and the tariff men, and because they were born in the "republic" of Virginia, no fault is to be found with them!

We are pleased to know that the contrary is the fact—Virginia has a general interest in preserving, sustaining, and uniting the democratic party of the country. Virginia will support Andrew Jackson, and thus show how far the opposition of Tazewell and Tyler is approved.

Who does not see that such attempts to dragoon senators into subservient approbation of the doings of the state department, must recoil on the popularity of general Jackson?

The preceding are "enough for the present," and sufficient, perhaps, of things of this sort; though longer and more grave articles may be further attended to.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 5—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, APRIL 2, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1019

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞ We respectfully invite the attention of our friends to the facts and principles set forth in the editorial article headed "The past and the present," intended as a supplementary paper to our address "To the friends of the American system," published in the REGISTER of the 19th ult. If it does not bear us out in all that we said, as to the happy effects of the protecting laws, we must needs think that the public documents of our country are false, or that figures have lost their power.

We also invite the severest critisim of the learned in the schools—the "free trade philosophers"—the Adam Smith's of our country, some of whom are to be found in every South Carolina village containing ten pine-log chimnies, and are as "plenty as blackberries" about the mouldering ruins of former palaces in the "ancient dominion"—fit emblems of the "let-us-alone" policy of a state, which was, and yet might have been, the first in the union, but reduced to a fifth rank among her sisters, (regard being had to population, wealth and effective strength combined), though redeemed from actual decline by her new and thrifty valley districts and trans-Allegany counties, forcing themselves onward in spite of suicidal legislation, because that freemen in them hold the axe, the plough, and the hammer, and labor is honored.

The article is longer than it was desirable that it should be, but the materials were so abundant, and presented themselves so rapidly, that, with all our power of condensation, we could not well reduce them into a less space. We recommend it specially to Mr. Ritchie, the prince and high priest of all weather-cocks, though Mordecai Manassah Noah, "judge of Israel," be included among them—hoping that, instead of "giving tongue," and yelping and barking and snapping at "Mr. Hezekiah Niles," or scolding like a harridan at all who refuse the "thirty pieces of silver,"—he will speak to the facts which it contains, and tell how it is, (the commerce of the country being ruined by the tariff, and the people beggared by the protecting laws!) that the present undeniable state of prosperity exists?—and give us more argument and less snarling.

"Let dogs delight,
"To bark and bite!"

we wish to appeal to the minds of men—and have no skill in that which Mr. Ritchie esteems most excellent.

☞ By the free use of our small type, for the insertion of articles chiefly intended for record, we gain a good deal of room for current matter, in these bustling times. We shall also publish supplementary sheets—one of them next week, to get in some old reports to congress concerning a protecting tariff. They laugh at the constitutional constructions of the new men of these days.

☞ The Washington "Telegraph" and "Globe" are carrying on a war of extermination—one or the other must fall. The former yet seems to have a large majority of "the party," with it—but the latter the support of the administration and many of the "authority" presses, under their present high state of "improvement," of which Mr. Green speaks pretty plainly. The "Telegraph" tells some strange stories about the "Globe," and the famous Mr. Amos Kendall, 4th auditor of the treasury, who, it appears, is the real editor of that paper—and calls Mr. K. an "☞ UNGRATEFUL HYPOCRITE." Mr. K. retorts in severe terms. We think that either editor is telling the truth of the other!

The following is among the reminiscences of Mr. Green—

"We need not inform our readers that Mr. Kendall and Mr. Blair were both the active partisans of Mr. Clay in 1825; that they both took an active part to prevail on the members of Congress from Kentucky to vote for Mr. Adams; and that neither of them entered the Jackson ranks until a late period."

☞ Some very angry letters have passed between Mr. Blair, a member of congress from South Carolina, and the celebrated Dr. Cooper, president of the college of that state. They are "as hot as pepper!" The doctor, it seems, has made another book—scouting at the Christian religion, which Mr. Blair calls "blasphemous." &c. The doctor rejoins, and speaks of Mr. B's "moral conduct" as "a defender of the faith!" Mr. Blair is at him then "like a house on fire," and talks about the doctor's dictation of politics and policy—as how that he was scouted out of England, scourged out of Pennsylvania, and calls him the bosom friend of "Marat, Le Gendre, and the bloodiest of the bloody butchers of revolutionary France." The doctor in reply insinuates hard things of the "habits and character" of Mr. B. but neither affirms nor denies the authorship of the pamphlet. And thus the nullificators nullificate one another; and "throw stones!"

Because of the public character of those gentlemen, we shall, perhaps, make room for their correspondence—which, it must needs be expected from the character of the individuals, is very violent.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES. The grand jury of Bibb county, Georgia, have made a "solemn protest" against the establishment of a branch of the bank of the United States at Macon—regarding it as a foreign establishment.

The resolutions offered in the legislature of New York against the bank—have not yet been taken up, though "cart-loads of pamphlets"* have been thrown into Albany, to help the passage of them.

The Charleston Mercury says—The resolution in favor of renewing the charter of the U. S. bank, recently introduced by Mr. Ingersoll into the Pennsylvania house of representatives, has been rejected. The debate upon the resolution is said to have been ardent and animated; but neither the ingenuity of Mr. I., nor the letter which he produced from Mr. Madison, nor the location of the parent bank in Philadelphia, were of adequate avail to procure its passage. The advocates of state rights—all who dread the continued existence of an institution which is as eminently dangerous as it is clearly unconstitutional—will hail this result with unmingled satisfaction.

But the National Gazette informs us that—The following resolution was passed unanimously in the senate of Pennsylvania:

"That whereas the bank of the United States has tended in so great a degree to maintain a sound and uniform currency; to facilitate the financial operations of the government; to regulate foreign and domestic exchange, and has been so conducive to commercial prosperity, that the legislature of Pennsylvania recommend a renewal of its charter, under such regulations and restrictions as to the power of the respective states, as congress may deem right and proper."

On Saturday last it was adopted in the house of representatives by a vote of seventy five to eleven. Of the eleven gentlemen who composed the minority, it is understood that nearly all of them—perhaps the whole except three—were friends of the bank, whose only objection to the resolution was, that it did not propose a renewal entirely without reference to any restrictions. The resolution, therefore, has passed unanimously in the senate, and almost unanimously in the house. It will be, we are satisfied, as unanimously approved by the people of this state.

*Written by Mr. Henshaw, collector at the port of Boston!

CITY BANK OF NEW YORK. A fellow who calls himself Edward Smith, alias Jones, about 34 years of age, has been arrested at New York, having in his possession a trunk filled with bank notes to the amount of 185,738 dollars, of which the City bank was robbed. About 60,000 dollars, including the gold, is yet missing; probably in the hands of an accomplice, for whom a zealous search was making at Philadelphia. Smith, or Jones, is an old and notorious offender,—and as yet had refused to give any information as to the manner of the robbery. The money was returned to the bank. One account says that Smith is a native of South Carolina—another that he is an Englishman.

CHESAPEAKE AND DELAWARE CANAL. The tolls on this canal for the last two weeks were 1,800 and 2,600 dollars—total 3,400.

PENNSYLVANIA. The bill to incorporate the York and Maryland line rail road, which had been negatived, was reconsidered last week—but again rejected, being indefinitely postponed—43 to 32.

FOREIGN NEWS. We have some items of news—in Paris papers to the 9th February. France was quiet—but going on with her preparations for war. The duke of Nemours, second son of Louis Phillippe, was elected king of Belgium—but it was altogether uncertain whether the throne would be accepted for him, France being unwilling to have any difference with the great powers. All was quiet at Brussels, &c. except in the rejoicings of the people in the selection of a king. Nothing specially worthy of notice had yet happened in Poland—the troops had marched to meet the advancing Russians, under count Deibitch. Poland has adopted the tri-colored cockade. A bomb was exploded in the centre of the palace in Rome, in which the cardinals were assembled—no pope yet chosen, but much intrigue going on. Nothing special is reported from England.

☞ An arrival at Charleston brings London dates to the 13th February. It is proposed to lay a tax of 1*d.* per lb. on all cotton imported, with a like drawback on all cotton goods exported, but a general reduction of the taxes in the sum of 1340,000*l.* is expected. American flour 1*l.* 19*s.* to 2*l.* 11*s.* O'Connell and his friends had plead guilty to the chief counts against them. No judgment yet given. Nothing else important.

NAVY OF THE U. S. There are in the navy 37 captains.

17 of whom have been in commission above 15 years, and rank with a major general.
3 have been in commission over ten and under fifteen years, and rank with a brigadier general.
8 have been in commission under ten and over five years, and rank with a colonel.
9 have been in commission under five years, and rank with a lieutenant colonel.

37

There are in the navy 33 masters commandant, who rank with a major.

But the pay of the naval officers is far short of those of the army, with the same rank.

LEGISLATIVE IMPROVEMENT. We heartily rejoice in stating that a bill to provide for borrowing and appropriating $125,000 to make a road from Winchester to some point on the Ohio river, has passed the senate of Virginia 17 to 14, and become a law. It is a small matter, to be sure, for so great a state—but any improvement is comfortable to us, in affording a hope of better times.

COMPARATIVE PAUPERISM. In England about 1 person to 11, on an average, is a pauper. In Massachusetts, 1 to every 168; in New York, 1 to every 220; and in the interior of Pennsylvania, where the poor-house system prevails, 1 to every 339.

FOREIGN PAUPERS. A bill has passed the legislature of Massachusetts, in relation to the introduction of foreigners, which provides that no alien shall be allowed to land from any vessel whatever, until the master shall have paid five dollars to the city or town where the vessel shall arrive.

It would be well were such a law passed in every state. We are wretchedly imposed on, in Maryland, by the transport of British paupers to our shores; and our alms-houses, jails and penitentiary, have a ten-fold proportion of their inmates in foreigners, recently landed in the United States. Such a law would not check the emigration of such persons as we are desirous of receiving.

CANADA. There are loud complaints in some of the Canadian papers of profligacy in the disbursements of money, derived from the taxes paid by the people—and such complaints, being incidental to a colonial state, will exist so long as persons are sent from Great Britain to govern in Canada. It is a sort of banishment from "home," and the profit of the employment is the inducement which leads to a seeking of places in the colonies. It is stated, that the debt of Upper Canada now amounts to $1,500,000. The government officers, in salaries, fees, perquisites, &c. appear to receive about 70,000 pounds a year; and the colonial officers have extravagant allowances, that the patronage of the crown may secure their devotion, &c.

INDIAN DEPARTMENT. The following is a synopsis of the bill making appropriations for the Indian department for the year 1831, approved by the president on the 21st inst. viz:—For the payment of the superintendent of Indian affairs at St. Louis, and the several Indian agents, $29,500; for sub-agents, $19,500; for presents to Indians, $15,000; for interpreters and translators, $21,525: for gun and blacksmiths, and their assistants, employed within the superintendencies and agencies, $18,340; for iron, steel, coal, and other expenses attending the gun and blacksmith's shops, 5,426, for transportation and distribution of annuities, $9,959; for expenses of provisions for Indians at the distribution of annuities while on visits of business with the different superintendents and agents, and when assembled on business, 11,890, for contingencies of the Indian department, $20,000; for certain surveys, $2,227; claims for Indian depredations, $1,300; for provisions and necessary assistance to Indians emigrating to the West, and to those tribes now settled on or near the Kanzas river, west of the Missouri, $3,562; for provisions and other assistance to Indians removing to the west from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, $5,000; for building houses for Indian agents, sub-agents, blacksmiths' shops, &c. $7,000; additional expense at the Red river agency, $1,300; for extinguishment of the title of the Creeks to land in Georgia, $4,989; for claims against the Osages, by citizens of the United States, $834; for extinguishment of the claims of the Cherokees to their lands in Georgia, $46,104; for carrying into effect the treaty of 6th May, 1828, with the Cherokees, for their removal from Georgia, $59,134; for purchase of Creek and Cherokee reservations, $2,100. There are a few other unimportant items.

MR. WEBSTER. A very splendid public entertainment was given to Mr. Webster, at New York, last week, by about two hundred and sixty of the most respectable of the citizens, late chancellor Kent, and Messrs. J. Hone, P. A. Jay, H. Maxwell, and E. M. Greenway, presiding. The preparations were on a grand scale, and every thing of the best quality that could be obtained. This compliment was paid to Mr. Webster, because that he had victoriously maintained the sound doctrines of the constitution, in the great debate in the senate. The regular toasts generally pointed to this object. The following are the 1st, 4th, 5th, and 6th:

The supremacy of the law, "to which all owe homage—the very least as feeling its care—and the greatest as not exempt from its power."

The constitution of the United States, the monument of our country's wisdom—the instrument of its safety, its liberty, and its greatness.

The judiciary of the United States—a co-ordinate branch of the government—every patriot will support and defend it, in the exercise of its constitutional authority.

Our guest, Daniel Webster—to his talents we owe a most triumphant vindication of the great principles of the constitution.

After the 5th toast, received with thunders of applause, chancellor Kent, pronounced a most valuable tribute to the able and triumphant services of the champion of the constitution; and then he proposed the 6th toast. Mr. Webster thereupon rose, and addressed the company for an hour and a half, "holding them in breathless suspence, and they sympathising with every phrase and sentiment that he uttered." Judge Spencer and Mr. Storrs, also briefly addressed the meeting, as did senor Mosquero (one of the invited guests, and late president of Colombia), on being complimented.

There were many volunteers, largely partaking of the spirit of the meeting. When Mr. Webster retired, all the company stood, and cheered him. These are some of the volunteers—

By Philip Hone. That part of our delegation in the last congress who stood up for the constitution, and determined, by their votes, that not only should no question be taken on the constitution, but that the constitution should be unquestioned.

By W. B. Lawrence. Henry Clay, of Kentucky, the associate and fellow labourer of Daniel Webster, in the support of sound constitutional principles.

By Dr. J. W. Francis. Nullification to all nullifiers.

By Mr. Robinson. (Extracts). The federal union—Its parents, "a disordered finance, prostrate commerce and ruined credit;" its offspring, "safety at home and consideration and dignity abroad."

By Charles King. The political innocent—who has no motive for supplanting a rival—no knowledge of the means of effecting it.

By Mr. Sedgwick. Nullification—the American guillotine, designed for the constitution. May it be immortalised by the political death of its inventors.

☞ We have reports of chancellor Kent's remarks and Mr. Webster's and judge Spencer's speeches.—They are, surely, of the very first order, but their length forbids a prompt insertion.

THE PAST AND THE PRESENT. In our address to "the friends of the American System," on the 19th ult. we indulged in some free and grateful remarks on the present general prosperity of our country—unless in some of the let-us-alone districts. To appreciate, in a small degree, the benefits that have flowed, and are flowing, upon us—we have thought it might be advantageous to look a little back—truth being most easily discerned by comparison, in all matters that do not admit of positive demonstration. A few "obstinate figures" have therefore been collected, with some extracts from various papers, accompanied by a few explanatory observations, to shew the late past and present condition of the United States. If in the latter there is much to be pleased with, (not having the fear of Mr. Ritchie before our eyes), we shall insist on ascribing it to the yet partial success of the "American System," until the "free trade" logicians, and British mercenary writers, shall assign some other and better reason for the present comfort, ease and prosperity of the people of the United States.

Of specie, and the bank of the United States.

By a table inserted in the 23rd vol. of the REGISTER, page 185, the following export and import of specie appears, in the 4th quarter of the year 1821, and two first quarters of 1822:

Export of bullion and specie in the 9 months	$10,095,478
Import	1,913,415
Excess of export	8,182,063
In 1829, we imported of specie and bullion	7,394,612
and exported	4,311,134
Excess of import	3,083,478

Shewing an actual difference, the excesses being added together, as they must be, of eleven millions and a quarter of dollars, in the short period stated.

[☞ We here take occasion to express a regret, (which we shall often feel before we get through this article), that the usual treasury report on the commerce and navigation of the United States for 1830, has been delayed so long after its common time of publication—for we much need it, just now.

The treasury tables for 1830, we have no doubt, will shew a duplicate balance in favor of specie imported, as compared with 1829.]

The quantity of specie in the bank of the United States in 1819, was only $2,743,834, but in 1821 and '22, it stood thus—

1821	$6,499,224
1822	3,711,145
	½)10,210,369
Average	5,105,184

On the 1st Jan. 1831, the bank had in specie 10,808,047
Or, 600,000 dollars more than the aggregate of the two years given.

On the 1st October, 1822, the bank had its notes in circulation only to the amount of 5,456,891
On the 1st Jan. 1831, the circulation was 18,526,887
Or, nearly three and an half times greater than in 1822.*

The one most clearly shews the scarcity, and the other the abundance, of "money." As it was, or is, with the bank of the United States, so it was, or is, with the state banks, and in, at least, the same general proportion. LOOK AT THE MIGHTY DIFFERENCE!

Finances of the United States.

From Mr. Secretary Crawford's annual treasury report of Dec. 10, 1821, as corrected by the actual receipts shewn by the register of the treasury 14th Dec. 1822, the gross revenue for 1821 stood thus—

From the customs	15,898,434
miscellaneous	113,378
small treasury notes†	324
A LOAN	5,000,000
	21,012,136

And yet, though aided by the loan of five millions, there was but $8,367,093 paid on account of the interest and principal of the public debt—really; and without the money borrowed, only $3,367,093, or not much more than one half of the interest, alone, actually payable in that year—the sinking fund of ten millions—that "sacred fund," being in two-thirds suspended! And yet there would remain in the treasury, 1st Jan. 1822, the beggarly amount of 1,777,648 dollars. But, if certain "balances of appropriations" for the service of the year had not been carried to the "surplus fund," as it is called, there would have been a balance against the treasury of 490,962 dollars, instead of the 1,777,648 said to remain in it.‡

By Mr. Crawford's report of Dec. 23, 1822, there was paid, or would be paid, on account of the public debt in

---

*Notes issued	31,972,247 76
on hand, in bank and its offices	13,445,360 86
Actual circulation	$18,526,886 90

†These were passed to the credit of the treasury, though a seven per cent. stock was issued for them.

‡In a report made 19th Jan. 1821, in obedience to a resolution of the house of representatives, Mr. Crawford, after saying that the small sum of $2,076,918 of the Louisiana debt, though due, had not been paid—made these melancholy remarks: "It is proper to observe, that, if the sum of $2,076,918 15 of the Louisiana stock, has not been pressed for payment, it has been the result of FORBEARANCE on the part of the holders of that stock, and of CONFIDENCE in the faith of the nation, that such forbearance will not operate to their injury!" All this about the paltry sum of two millions! We would rather have paid ten times our share of the whole, than that such undignified terms should have been used.

that year, the sum of 6, 273,055 dollars, though drawing near half a million from "balances of appropriations," as before, gathered up and returned to the "surplus fund," to make a good appearance—about which, and of the proceedings of his echo, the then committee of ways and means in the house of representatives, we spoke freely at the time—as a reference to the 21st, 22nd and 23rd vol. of this work will show. We thought that there was a good deal of management in some of these things, as well as no small amount of gross error. But let all that pass. It is proper to add, that, because of the desperate state of the finances, Mr. Crawford recommended, in his report of 1822, an increase of duty on glass, paper, iron and lead, and "all articles composed of the two latter materials"—"with a view to the augmentation of the REVENUE."

Now, in 1829 we paid on account of the public debt		12,383,867
In 1830 we paid, or would pay		11,354,630
		23,738,497
Real payment in 1821	3,367,093
1822	6,273,055	9,640,148
Difference in two years		$14,098,349

The amounts for 1829 and 1830 are from Mr. Secretary Ingham's report of the 15th December, 1830—but the same rate of payments had prevailed during the whole four years of the preceding administration.

These facts are amply sufficient to shew the miserable state of the finances in 1821–2, because of the poverty of the country, which we shall particularly describe below, as if with "a pencil of light," for we have the facts in possession.

Of the public revenue.

The revenue from the customs in 1821 was	13,004,447
1822	17,589,761
	½)30,594,208
Average	$15,297,104
Customs in 1829	22,681,965
Three first quarters of 1830	17,268,124
Add one-third for last quarter	5,756,041
	½)45,706,130
Average	$22,853,065

Or 7½ millions, annually, more since the "abominable tariff" of 1828, than in the glorious let-us-alone times of 1821 and 1822! Aye, and it should always be recollected, that the "free trade" folks prophecied—yea, verily, they prophecied ten thousands of times "right solemnly"—that the tariff would destroy the revenue and render direct taxes indispensable to the support of the government!† But, poor mistaken or wicked things—they knew not, or would not confess, the incontrovertible fact—that desire always presses upon means; and, that, to enable persons to expend money, they must be put in the way of getting it! The want of employment for labor in 1821–22, caused the lack of revenue; the abundance of employment for labor in 1829–30, has brought about this mighty increase—the "vile" and "base," and "abominable" and "swindling" and "rascally" and "infernal" tariff to the contrary notwithstanding!

The whole exports of the United States in 1821 and 1822, were

	Domestic.	Foreign.	Total.
1821	$43,671,894	21,302,488	64,974,382
1822	49,874,079	22,286,202	72,160,281
	½)93,545,973	43,588,691	137,134,663
	46,772,986	21,794,345	68,567,331

† Now, these very honest and enlightened and consistent persons, are calculating the payment of the whole public debt and the yet abundant means of the national government, to cause a reduction of duties! Do they not feel ashamed of themselves? They ought—if shame is in them. But they have no shame.

In the foreign articles is included the specie exported. There were large importations of specie in the early part of 1821, for the supply of the bank of the United States, &c. but the export of the same year was much larger. In 1822 we imported 3,369,846 dollars, in bullion and coin, and exported 10,810,180.

As before observed, we have not the tables for 1830, but in 1829, the year after the tariff of 1828, we exported—

In domestic products	55,700,193
In foreign	16,658,478
	72,358,671

Or, nine millions more in domestic products than the average of 1821–22. Among the foreign products exported in 1822, there were 10,810,180 dollars in specie; but in 1829 only 4,311,134—a solid difference of six millions and a half!—and a comparative one of more than 9½ millions—thus:

Exported, specie in 1822		10,810,180
Imported do do		3,369,846
	Against us	6,440,334
Imported in 1829	7,394,612
Exported do	4,311,134	3,083,478
Real difference in favor		9,523,812

Tonnage.

American tonnage departing for foreign places, 1821		804,947
Foreign do	83,073
American, 1822		813,748
Foreign, do	97,490
		½)1,618,695
	180,563
		809,347
American tonnage departing, 1829		944,799
Foreign do do	133,006

Or showing an increase, in both, of more than one-sixth.

	Registered.	Enrolled, &c.	Total.
1821	619,896	679,062	1,298,958
1822	628,150	696,548	1,324,699
1828	812,619	928,772	1,741,391

Or a total increase of 416,692 tons in six years, or an advance on the tonnage of 1822, at the rate of more than thirty-one per cent. [The year 1828 is the latest return yet published.] In 1829 and '30, we have no doubt, that from 250,000 to 300,000 tons have been added. The present tonnage of the United States is just about two millions—rather more than less. But ships are now in great demand, and many are about to be built. They are needed—not for the West India trade!*

What more is necessary to shew the gratifying change that has taken place in the condition of our country? We might extend similar comparisons, from official papers, to a larger amount than those yet given. It is not required. But we shall notice a few things particularly, for the benefit of the planters, and the information of FARMERS, most of the former and some of the latter, having been confounded by the boisterous impudence of foolish or bad men, shouting the ruin of the nation, by the tariff—tariff—tariff!

Chief articles of export.

	lbs.	Dollars.
1821—Cotton	124,893,405	20,157,484
1822 "	144,675,095	24,035,058
	½)269,568,500	44,192,542
Average	134,784,250	22,096,271
1829	264,837,186	26,575,311

* We pray the reader to remark the mighty increase of the enrolled tonnage. This shews the commerce between the states, and the giant progress of the "American System"—a Hercules in its cradle!

Here is a greatly increased quantity, as well as a large increase in value. It shews that the demand has not been destroyed by the tariff! The price depends, and must always depend, on scarcity or supply. In 1818, 92,471,000 lbs. of cotton were valued at 31,334,000; but in 1823—173,723,000 lbs. at only 20,445,000. That is, the whole export of 1823 was worth eleven millions of dollars less—one half less, than half the quantity in 1818. As these things happened before the passage of the tariff of 1824, any present reduced price in cotton may as well be ascribed to the entry of the wild beasts into Noah's ark, as to our protecting laws. The rules which operated before the passage of these laws, operate still—and must, so long as commerce exists amongst men. This is self-evident.

	Hhds.	Dollars.
1821—Tobacco	66,858	5,648,962
1822	82,169	6,222,838
	½)149,027	11,871,800
Average	74,531	5,935,900
1828	96,278	5,269,960
1829	77,131	4,982,974
	½)173,409	10,252,934
Average	86,704	5,126,467

Here is also an increased quantity and reduced price per hhd. Tobacco is subject to the same laws that govern cotton. In 1816, because tobacco was scarce in Europe, 69,241 hhds. were worth $12,809,000; or, a million more than 149,027 hhds. in 1821 and 1822. The supply of 1828-9 was considerably above the average of 20 years past—and hence the lessened price, per hhd. It is well known that 28,000, or 30,000 hhds. of Maryland tobacco, have generally sold for more money in Europe than 35,000—the first being a fair supply, the last giving an excess, and reducing the price of the whole.

	Tierces.	Dollars.
1821—Rice	88,221	1,494,307
1822	87,089	1,563,482
	½)175,310	3,057,789
	87,655	1,528,894
1829	171,636	2,514,370

This shews a large increase both in value and price, and further remark is useless.

	Barrels.	Dollars.
1821—Flour	1,056,119	4,298,043
1822	827,865	5,103,280
	½)1,883,984	9,401,323
	941,992	4,700,661
1829	837,385	5,793,651

In 1830—1,225,881 barrels of flour were exported, but we know not the value put upon it. As the foreign demand and price of flour has advanced, the farmers are certain that the tariff has not ruined them! They also know that the eastern part of the United States takes more flour and grain from the middle and western states, than all Europe, Asia, Africa and America, (except the United States), affords a market for.

Products of the sea, forest, of animals and manufactures.

	Of the sea.	Forest.	Animals.	Manufact.
1821	1,499,188	3,794,341	2,334.731	2,262,622
1822	1,384,539	3,815,542	2,529,503	2,483,052
	2,883,727	7,609,883	4,864,234	4,745,674
	½)1,441,863	3,804,941	2,432,117	2,372,837
1829	1,817,100	3,681,759	2,563,291	5,716,100

The three first remain pretty nearly the same—the last shews a handsome increase. We again wish that we had the tables for 1830!

With these presentations of facts we leave our readers to their own reflections. They will compare 1821-2 with 1829. The last year would have shewn much more advantageously for us. That is, in demonstrating the mighty benefits which flow from the protecting system, or tariff.

[Here might be added numerous facts to shew a great and general reduction in the price of imported commodities, and especially of those kinds which have been protected in the home product of them. We believe that there is only one exception to this remark—which is in the article of wool; and the farmers will not complain of that! The "bounty" paid to the manufacturing "monopolists"—or something else, we care not what, has reduced the cost of such things to consumers at least one-third!

"His optics must be good I ween
"To see what is not to be seen," an oppression, because that two dollars, in the present abundance of money, purchases as much goods as three dollars would do, when money was so wretchedly scarce, as in 1821-2-3. But

"———"Scurvy politicians
"Seem to see the things they see not"]

We shall now give a few extracts and remarks to exhibit the state of the country at large in about the year 1821, and conclude with some general observations on "things as they are."

State of the country—1821-22.

Out of a large quantity of matter, we shall, at present, only offer a few brief notices, by way of example; prefering what happened in Pennsylvania, the great central state, honest, economical and laborious, and, generally speaking, at that time, the richest in the union—though extremely distressed.

The wealthy and sober and industrious, and great agricultural county of Chester, with 39,536 inhabitants in 1810, had 115 public paupers—or 1 in 344 of the population; in 1820, the number of its inhabitants was 44,452, the paupers 230 in 1821, or one in 138!

The "Franklin Republican" (of Chambersburg) of the 31st July 1821, had twenty advertisements of the sheriff for the sale of pieces of real property—most of them relating to large and hitherto valuable farms. [The same paper of the 29th March, 1831, has only one such advertisement.]

The "Westmoreland Republican," (of Greensburg) of the 3rd August 1821, had advertisements of fifty-seven different pieces of real property, to be sold by the sheriff. [This paper of the 18th March, 1831, contains not one such advertisement, though manifestly the one in which the sheriff would make such publications, if necessary.]

The "Easton Centinel" of the 10th of August, 1821, advertised sixty-three farms to be sold by the sheriff.

The "Juniata Gazette" of the 14th August 1821, contained sheriff's advertisements for the sale of thirty-seven tracts of land, also sundry houses and lots, mills and factories, &c. This county contained only 16,618 persons in 1820. [We do not now receive these papers, to make comparisons, as in the other cases.]

Out of this terrible state of things, which specially existed in the middle and western states, (though we shall notice some of the "groans" of the southern also), grew the appraisement laws, stop-laws, relief laws, and the many other expedients that were resorted to, to avoid forcible collections of debts, for the "abomination of desolation" was spread over the land. In some places, the attorneys or sheriffs used many contrivances, (being honest and feeling men), to delay processes against property; and, under the valuation law, the people, in numerous instances, interposed in a manner that, perhaps, may be excused, but cannot be justified. For example, the Chillicothe Supporter of the 25th July 1821, had a long account of a case under the "appraisement law." A parcel of wheat in the sheaf, was seized to satisfy a debt—and two men, on their oaths, valued it at 75 cents per bushel—its real worth being only 25 cents; the creditor then had his option to receive one third of the amount of his claim, or suffer his debt to remain as it was! In some other states, (Pennsylvania among them, we think), the sale of property was forbidden, unless two-thirds of its appraised value was offered and paid for it. This, in general, was a complete "stop-law."

A number of grand juries presented the scarcity of specie, or "specie funds," as a "nuisance," as well they might—the bank of the United States, for instance, having a circulation of only 5,456,891, and 3,711,145 dollars in specie on hand in 1822, against a circulation of 18,526,887 dollars, and 10,308,047 in specie on hand, 1st of January 1831! To abate this "nuisance" the juries very properly recommended the fabrication and use of home-made articles, for clothing, &c.

In 1821–2 we probably owed an average debt to England of at least fifty millions—a large part of which was paid by the benefit of the insolvent laws! And such was the state of our credit, that a letter was published in the Liverpool Courier, said to be written by a director of the bank of the United States, at the time—which stated, that those to whom he would have sold goods to the amount of £100,000, a short time before, he would not then trust for 1,000 pounds worth—saying, "the vast number of failures takes away their odium. Men fail in parties for convenience; and the barriers of honesty are broken down by a perpetual legislation suited to the condition of insolvent debtors." "Houses that rented for 1,200 dollars now rent for 450," and so on. We were very indignant at the publication of this letter, but are forced to confess there was too much truth in some parts of it.*

A report to the house of representative of Pennsylvania, (previous to the valuation law) contained the following paragraphs:

"Ruinous sacrifices of landed property at sheriffs' sales, whereby in many cases, lands and houses have been sold at less than a half, or a third, or a fourth of their former value, thereby depriving of their homes and of the fruits of laborious years, a vast number of our industrious farmers, some of whom have been driven to seek, in the uncultivated forests of the west, that shelter of which they have been deprived in their native state.

"Forced sales of merchandise, household goods, farming stock and utensils, at prices far below the cost of production, by which numerous families have been deprived of the common necessaries of life, and of the implements of their trade."

This horrible picture was not too highly colored.—Let us see what was the state of things in other parts of the country.

About the 1st of May, 1822, the New York banks drew on those of Boston for 3 or 400,000 dollars. This sum, which many of our state banks could (individually) pay or liquidate in an acceptable manner, at the present time, without much effort, caused a general panic in the rich city of Boston!—and from 100 to 110 failures, to an amount of from 3 to 4,000,000 dollars (says Mr. Carey) almost immediately took place. Money was worth 12 and 15 per cent. per annum, and many persons stopped for 2, 3 and 400,000 dollars, who, a few days before, had been "regarded and justly, as in a state of affluence"—confidence being lost in all money-transactions. All this for 3 or 400,000 dollars!

This extreme suffering reached the south at a later period, but at last it came upon that part of the United States like a "wind from the desart." We take the following from Mr. Carey's essays—

Extract from a speech of Mr. Carter, of South Carolina, in the house of representatives of the United States, 20th February, 1824.

"The prostration of their foreign markets has spread over the face of the south a general pervading gloom. In all that region which stretches itself from the shores of the Potomac to the Gulf of Mexico, where all the arts of civilized life once triumphed, the arm of industry is now paralized. Large and ample estates, once the seats of opulence, which supported their proprietors in affluence and comfort, are now thrown out to waste and decay."

"The farmer of the grain growing states will tell you, that he has large annual surpluses of grain, which he is doomed year after year, to see rot and perish on his hands; that it is to no purpose that he applies himself to the diligent cultivation of a fruitful soil; that each return of autumn finds his barns filled, to overflowing, with abundance; but that it is all useless, nay, worse than useless to him: for his well stored barns stand continually before his eyes, as tormenting memorials of his labors frustrated, and the bounty of his fields most cruelly wasted. He may represent his labors as equaling in their futility and vexatious disappointment, the fabled toil of Sysiphus himself. The deplorable accuracy of such a picture will not be disputed."

Mr. Randolph stated that—

"The profits of slave labor had been for some time on the decrease; and that, on a fair average, it scarcely reimbursed the expense of the slaves, whether from infancy to age.

Mr. Garnet, of Virginia, said, that—

"Its population, (Virginia), was driven into distant lands—and reduced to beggary—and that desolation was spread over the country."

Mr. Tatnall, of Geo. in his speech against the tariff bill of 1824, said—

"Are you prepared by passing this infernal bill, to add to a poverty which is ALREADY wearing one portion of our country to the bone, for the purpose of supplying the appetites of a few pampered nabobs. Such a policy is disgraceful to a free people. It is inconsistent with our institutions, and will be destructive to our happiness. And is it thought that we will tamely submit to this treatment? No, sir, BY HEAVEN WE WILL NOT."

Extract from the Charleston Memorial, Feb. 24, 1824.

"The effects produced, (by the reduction of the price of cotton), are deplorable in the extreme. Property of all kinds is depreciated beyond example. A feeling of gloomy despondence is beginning to prevail every where in the lower country. Estates are sacrificed to pay the last instalments on the bonds given for the purchase money. No body seems disposed to buy, what every body is anxious to sell, at any price."

It is enough! We only ask the reader to remember that these things were BEFORE the passage even of the "infernal bill" of 1824—and yet the pure and MODERATE and CONSISTENT politicians of the south, curse the tariff as the author of every mischief that befals them! If one of them should break his leg in a fox-chase, or burn his mouth by putting the wrong end of a segar into it, he would certainly "d—n the tariff," for having caused his misfortune, and hurrah for "free trade!"

Now, for the other side—

"LOOK HERE UPON THIS PICTURE, AND, ON THIS."

State of the country 1830-31.

Specie is overflowing—its circulation is not less than forty millions of dollars. There is a sound currency in all parts of the union. The bank of the U. States has three and an half times the circulation, and three times the amount of specie on hand, that it had in 1822! All the well managed state banks are sound, and as able to pay their debts as the bank of the United States; and, in general, might extend their loans to nearly twice the present amount of them, with entire prudence, on approved security. The three per cent. stocks of the United States, worth only 75 per cent. in 1821-2, are now worth 93¼ a 94 per cent. and any quantity of money may be had for 4½ a 5 per cent. per annum. The only complaint now is from the money-lenders. Millions are idle in their hands—or may be obtained from them, at a few days' notice; and yet, more than one hundred millions of dollars have been vested in stocks for factories and workshops, roads and canals, and other things within the "AMERICAN SYSTEM," since the year 1822! The public revenue—(which had been so low that, though assisted by a loan of five millions, the interest on the public debt was hardly paid, and a miserable fragment of the Louisiana debt, actually due, was not discharged, notwithstanding the sinking fund had been smuggled into the general means of the government for two successive years), is now so abundant, that an annual average of more than eleven millions of dollars have been paid on account of the debt since 1824, though large sums were appropriated to internal improvements, fortifications, revolutionary pensions, &c. The average balance of the treasury, in bank, was 182,211 dollars in 1821—since 1824, not less than 4,000,000; the public creditors being unwilling to receive their money, except on compulsion, unless at a premium on the stocks held by them. The foreign demand for the products of the planters has mightily increased—we shipped 264 millions lbs. of cotton in 1829 against 134 millions in 1821–2.

*England is now much indebted to us. We call a dollar 4*s. 6*d.* sterling, but it really is, at the present price of silver in England, only worth 4*s.* 1½*d.*—so it takes 485 cents, instead of 444, to pay one pound in England. Thus, we must send to London 109¼ dollars to pay what we call 100. The rate of exchange is now 106½ a 107—or at least 2¾ per cent. below the real par.

89,000 hhds. tobacco in 1829 against 74,000 in 1821–2.

171,000 tierces of rice in 1829 against 87,000 in 1821–2

And, though the foreign demand for the productions of our farmers has not been much increased, the domestic market has been powerfully extended to them, as we shall briefly state below. The value of the domestic exports, however, increased from 46 millions in 1821–'2 to 55 millions in 1829; and our tonnage advanced from 1,311,828 tons in 1821–'2, to 1,741,391 in 1828—now very nearly two millions of tons! What has become of the Jeremiads about the "ruin of commerce," and the other childish talk of the anti-tariff politicians and philosophers? They are as disgusting as "the tale of an idiot twice told." And the population, though severely checked in 1820-21 and '22, has since proceeded with gigantic rapidity and power—the practice of marrying early being resumed, because of increased employment for the laboring classes. Our cities and large towns, then "decayed and deserted," as Mr. Randolph said, with thousands of tenantless houses, though offered at less than one half of their former hire—are now filled with busy and happy people—and, though thousands of houses have been built in them annually since 1824—(the year of the "infernal" tariff), enough are not to be had, at high rents, to accommodate the teeming inhabitants. Take Baltimore for an example—though not more prosperous than Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, New Orleans, &c. &c. In this city, the brickmakers, masons, carpenters, &c. are hardly able to do one half of the work that it is desired they should. Money being abundant, the people wish to invest it. We have very few, or, at least, very few important bankruptcies; and the people, at large, were never so able to meet their engagements, as at the present time. But the cities and large towns do not stand alone. Many hundreds of beautiful villages have sprung up—the church spire and the belfry of the factory, standing near one another, to enliven and grace the prospect. These things have brought back from the country a large amount of persons who had fled thither for subsistence—worthy mechanics, who had sought new labors in the field, or on the public roads, have returned, and, instead of being producers, have become consumers of the crops of the farmers. Here is the chief secret of the "American system"—the thing hidden from "philosophers" and incomprehensible to those who prefer 'involuntary laborers," or slaves, to musket-bearing freemen! We shall give one example. The town of Providence, R. I. has received from the middle states and Virginia, about 130,000 barrels of flour and 200,000 bushels of corn in a single year, a large part of which passed to the manufacturing villages in the interior. And we see it stated in that valuable paper, the "Providence Journal," of a late date,—that $50,000 annually pass into the country for common articles of marketing--50,000 dollars annually for wood and hay supplied by the farmers—or, in all, 375,000 dollars a year for marketing, including meats, and wood, hay, &c. There are about 200,000 spindles in the cotton and woollen factories of Rhode Island. It is ascertained that the farmer's annual supply is at the rate of $4½ for every working spindle—and here is, at once, a market to the farmer amounting to 900,000 dollars a year, independent of the Providence [town] market, and the subsistence of men and animals employed in the transportation of commodities, by water or land. Destroy these spindles, and the market must cease—for the people employed in, or by the factories, must scatter, and supply themselves with food,—having nothing to exchange for it, except labor, not then in demand. Lands within the range of the Providence market, are worth 100 dollars an acre. Destroy the town, and ruin the manufacturers, and these lands will be worth no more than those adjacent to the city of Williamsburg, the once splendid capital of the "ancient dominion;" and the "uncultivated fields, pine groves and tenantless mansions" of Virginia will have their like in Rhode Island.

On these pleasing subjects, we know not how to stop—for grand and beautiful specimens of the effects of the "American System" so rapidly present themselves, that we could fill a volume with them; and the body of facts before us seems inexhaustible: but we fear a trespass on the patience of the reader, and the occupancy of too much room. We shall only add, that protection to the cultivation of the cane in Louisiana, is, of itself, worth much more to the southern states than the whole amount of taxes that they pay to the general government—in the advanced value of their lands and slaves, which that protection causes. Destroy the sugar planters of Louisiana, and the lands and slaves of the cotton-growing states will have a diminished value of more than two hundred millions of dollars.† The people of the south are becoming sensible of this, as the following extract from the Columbia "Times," of the 12th Feb. last, will shew—

"Our friends in congress are at this moment preparing a blow for us, and nobly sacrificing our interests to our principles: we are encouraging them in it, which will be speedily and severely felt throughout the south. One of the reasons that the wretched policy of the general government has not been more palpably oppressive is, that the duty which it has placed upon sugar has created an immense diversion of the planting interest from the cultivation of cotton into that channel. This has made the decline in that article far more gradual than it would otherwise have been, and sustained the prices for slave property, by creating a constant demand for it in the sugar countries. Let the duties be taken off from sugar, and the consequence will be, not only total ruin to nine-tenths of the sugar planters, but it will, by rendering it no longer a profitable crop, turn from fifty to an hundred thousand laborers, and countless acres of land, the best adapted, perhaps, in the world, to such a purpose, back again to the cultivation of cotton. What follows? not only a further depression in the cotton market, but a most serious decline in the value of slave property. The shock will be felt almost instantaneously throughout the whole of the slave-holding states, from the Potomac to the Sabine. Thus it is, that the south, in proposing and advocating this repeal, is gallantly sacrificing herself on the altar of principle and patriotism.

"It is from these very considerations that we expect to see this proposition to repeal carried. Deeply enraged as the monopolizers are against the south, they will be glad to take any step destructive to her interests, especially when she herself urges it."‡

---

* Mr. Summers' speech in the legislature of Virginia, at the present session, on the loan bill, for purposes of internal improvement.

The writer of this article travelled, by land, about 500 miles through the interior of some of the eastern states, in the summer of 1829. It was very rare to meet with a deserted house, and he only saw one that was in ruins. Houses decay in New England and New York as well as in Virginia; but the ruins are not suffered to waste. They are promptly employed in new buildings, or applied to some other useful purpose. "Economy is wealth." These people tear up the mighty stumps of white pine trees, and make elegant and effectual fences of them. It is said they will last one hundred years.

† The interest on a capital of 200 millions, at 6 per cent. is 12 millions—being almost twice as much as the planting states pay in taxes to the national government—"tariff and all!"

‡ We have, for years past, been sometimes almost wicked enough to wish a repeal of the protecting duty on the cultivation of the cane; but, however provoked, we cannot wish that which will surely desolate the South, and cause the sacrifice of scores of thousands of human beings in servile wars, or from the impossibility of comfortably feeding and providing for the two millions of slaves that blacken its surface---in the event suggested. We regard it as a matter of self-preservation to the people of the south, that this thing should not happen. If it should, they will literally repent of it in "dust and ashes."

The "monopolizers," as the friends of protection are called, will not repeal the duty on sugar—the system must be preserved. And they, also, very well know by ample experience—that protecting duties have rather the effect to reduce, than to increase, the cost of commodities—as foreigners always have, and always will, advance their prices according to our dependence upon them. THIS IS A NOTORIOUS TRUTH. Domestic competition is the only safety that we have against foreign imposition.

To conclude—

"Look upon THIS picture,—and on THIS."

Such is the benevolent and magnificent progress of the "American System." Give it fullness, and it will far outstrip the predictions of its most enthusiastic friends. It may yet have seasons of adversity, and require further nursing—being yet only in the "gristle" of its strength; but, if cherished, will render our country the market and banking-house of the world; as well as being the "home of the free" and "an asylum for the oppresssed of all nations."

MR. RANDOLPH. So great has been the pressure of business upon us, that we even neglected some important matters which shall be mentioned below, concerning an extraordinary envoy for Russia, "John Randolph, of Roanoke;" who, it will be recollected, after being sent to St. Petersburg, in a vessel of war, expressly fitted for his accommodation, remained only nine or ten days at his post, and fled to England, leaving the public business committed to his charge to the care of a mere youth—who, at his request, had been appointed secretary of legation, to a court hitherto deemed the most interesting to us of any in Europe, those of London and Paris, perhaps, excepted. Mr. Pinkney, when minister at St. Petersburg, wrote to Mr. Monroe on the 21st January, 1818, and said—"The state of the world, too, requires that we should have a good stock of prudence at this court; and I feel quite sure that on that score I shall never be found deficient. My place, however, will doubtless be supplied by a man, much more able and distinguished, and at the same time, of equal discretion. You cannot put too much ability and character into this mission. One of the foremost men of our country ought to be selected for it. A charge d'affaires may be left here for some time; but when a minister plenipotentiary is appointed, he should be of marked political rank."

The appointment of Mr. Randolph to any place in which he might be expected to attend to business, was hardly thought of—for many years past. Though a member, at different times, of both the house of representatives and the senate, and puffed-up because of his wonderful talents, on what committees was he appointed—and if, perchance, he belonged to any, what did he do? I happened to be in the lobby of the house of representatives, (where a large number of members, of all parties, were waiting to receive their letters, by the eastern mail), when it was rumored that he had been nominated to the senate, which produced a general laugh, being regarded as a hoax, or matter of fun, only*—but the certainty of the thing was soon ascertained, and many free remarks were made about it. I then recollected the observation of one of his colleagues, (as a manager on the part of the house, in the trial of judge Chase before the senate), made about twenty-seven years ago, that Mr. Randolph would never attempt another regular argument—which I thought it might be a special duty of a minister plenipotentiary to do! I could not recollect that he had offered such an argument since that time, though he has thrown out volumes of words, hot as the lava of Vesuvius, and as useless; for some of which my old friend Ritchie had gravely, (and in the power of his right to pronounce judgment on all men), proclaimed him to be "a nuisance and a curse."

* Except by one or two persons, well known to me—one, an old and rigid member of congress from Virginia, who considered the report as a scandal on the president, and severely rebuked another person for laughing at the report.

The manner of his appointment—the visit of the secretary of state to him at Norfolk, that the despatches might be delivered in the most respectful manner, with other circumstances—mark this transaction with peculiar force, and hold it up in solemn solitude—the like never having happened in any country before; and it is understood, that he had a "roving commission"—to abandon Russia, on his own caprice, without leave from his government—and for such time as he pleased! At an extra expense of about 40,000 dollars for his conveyance, and 20,250 dollars more for his outfit, salary and infit—he staid nine or ten days at St. Petersburg; and whether he will return thither or not, depends altogether upon his own queer whims.

About the 26th of December last, he attended a dinner given by the lord mayor of London on the swearing-in of a new alderman for "Farrington without," at which a small party was present. How he got there, is not stated; but, being toasted, he made a speech, the substance of which is thus given, in the London Morning Herald of the 27th.

"Mr. Randolph returned thanks in a very elegant speech. He was peculiarly happy in being associated with the citizens of the great metropolis of England, who, as well as those of his own country, were descended from the Anglo-Saxons, who spoke the same language, which was so extensively and vigorously spread over both hemispheres, and which would continue to increase and to be used as the vehicle of the grand inspirations of liberty when every other language should be consigned to the tomb, and be only found amongst the recollections of posterity—(cheers.) With every wish for the prosperity of the city of London, and with the deepest sense of gratitude for the hospitality and friendship with which his lordship had honored him, he returned thanks for America, and for himself, one of the humblest of her citizens—(cheers.)

The next we hear of him, except some strange tales of his eccentricities, is, that he will be a candidate for congress—first mentioned in some of the Virginia papers, but thus officially announced in the "Richmond Enquirer" of February 24.

Prince Edward, February 18, 1831.

To the editors—

On the seventh of this month, my friend Wm. Leigh, of Halifax county, addressed to me a letter, of which you have a copy below. Believing the publication of his letter in your paper will be the most effectual way of complying with his request, and that of Mr. Randolph, I must ask of you the favor of inserting it in the Enquirer. Yours, most respectfully,

E. BOOKER.

Charlotte Court House, Feb. 7, 1831.

Dear sir—Mr. Randolph has desired me to make it known to the people of the district, that he will be a candidate to represent them in the next congress. He says that he will not be able to return in time to attend the elections in the spring, but that he will be back by the meeting of congress. I will thank you to let it be known as generally as possible throughout the counties of Prince Edward, Cumberland and Buckingham, that Mr. Randolph is a candidate for congress, and that although he will not be able to attend the elections, he will be at home by the meeting of congress. The weather is so cold that I can scarcely write; and, therefore, I shall say nothing more. Yours, most truly,

WM. LEIGH.

When this proceeding was made known to Mr. Bouldin (who represented the Charlotte district in the last congress), he issued the following—not liking to be so very unceremoniously, if not rudely, disposed of—

To the editor of the Enquirer:

Sir—Until within a very few days, I had not supposed it within the range of possibility, that any set of circumstances could place me in opposition to Mr. John Randolph, before the people, or in any other way. To him, and to his friend and agent, Mr. Wm. Leigh, no fact could be better known than this, that a disclosure of his purpose to me, would not simply have been yielded to, but would have been furthered with all my heart. I have the same high admiration of Mr. Randolph's talents that I before had. I will not hide, cover, or smother the fact, that, on all the great questions on which this country has been divided, he has displayed a reach of thought—a sagacity almost prophetic—which I have in vain looked for elsewhere; but, sir, I cannot consent to be put aside, in the unceremonious manner they have chosen to adopt. I appeal from the indignity offered to the moral feeling of the community of which I am a member, and am again a candidate for congress.

Yours, &c. THOS. T. BOULDIN.

And so things stand at present. It will not at all surprise us, (if Mr. Bouldin's notification shall reach London in time), to find Mr. Randolph "at home," speaking to the people, and urging his own election, from the hustings!*—for at the dinner given him at Norfolk, before his departure, he is reported to have said—he "did not go out as resident minister—he went upon a special mission,† and that reinfecta aut facta, whether his purpose was obtained or defeated, home he returned:" after imparting this information, he next put in a disclaimer as to any avaricious motives, in the following manner:

"He did not go to pocket the paltry outfit—he never had, and never would consent, to take the people's money without rendering an equivalent for it."

The "paltry outfit" [9,000 dollars] has, however, been voted. It will be seen whether he has, or will, receive it or not. It is a thing worthy of remembrance.

The "Richmond Enquirer," with reference to his annunciation as a candidate for congress, said—"We shall see, in the event of his election, whether Mr. Tristram Burges will beard the lion to his face—instead of attacking him behind his back—Mr. B. has contrived to run up a pretty considerable account with Mr. R. which, we guess, may be paid up to him in due season with pretty usurious interest."

The italics are Mr. Ritchie's own. Has he forgotten that "Mr. Tristram Burges," as the learned member of congress from Rhode Island is called, "bearded the lion to his face," and gave him one of the soundest dressings that he ever received—and that "the lion" shrunk from the eloquent invective of the man from the north, in reply to the pourings-out of his gall? Has Mr. Ritchie forgotten the habit of "the lion" to assault Mr. Wright, of Ohio, and fly, like a Parthian, whenever the latter gentlemen had an opportunity of returning him "his own"—to which he was fully capable, whenever he pleased:——that once, when Mr. Randolph, having discharged his arrows at Mr. Wright, was running out of the house as usual, (seeing that the latter had obtained the floor), Mr. Wright, in no gentle terms, called upon him "to stop," and Mr. Randolph said, "I have got such a cough, Mr. Speaker—ugh! ugh! ugh!"‡ But, thus publicly marked, he returned to his seat, and, I think, never attacked Mr. Wright again. Neither of the gentlemen named are fond of such exhibitions—but they have not feared to grasp "the lion" by his beard when they thought proper.

There is hardly any prominent man in the community who has had a lower grade in the republican party than Mr. Randolph§—nor was any one a more severe and unsparing opponent of gen. Jackson's election to the presidency; and why he, altogether unfitted—totally incapable, by his constitution, temperament and habits, to the business of a mission so important, should have been appointed, is a mystery yet to be solved.—But we do not wish to run into personal and political speculations. We shall see whether, when Mr. Randolph returns home, he feels grateful for the high and costly compliment paid to him. If so—it will be the first time in his life, perhaps, that he respected any human being but himself.

When having written thus far we accidently met with Mr. Randolph's speech about the tariff and a great many other things, in April 15, 1824. We present the following extract from it to shew, at once, the suavity of his temper and force of his predictions! It is a fine specimen of his reasoning powers—and of the decency and dignity of his speeches—most of which are made up of such fustian.

"The merchants and manufacturers of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, the province of Maine and Sagadahock, repel this bill, whilst men in hunting shirts, with deer skin leggins, and mocasins on their feet, want protection for manufactures; men with rifles on their shoulders, and long knives in their belts, seeking in the forests to lay in their next winter's supply of bear's meat. But it is not there alone the cry is heard. It is at Baltimore—decayed, deserted Baltimore, whose exports have more than one-half decreased, whilst those of Boston have four times increased—it is decayed and deserted Baltimore, that comes here and asks us for the protection of those interests which have grown up during the late war—privateering among the number I presume. Philadelphia, too, in a state of atrophy, asks for the measure. Philadelphia, who never can, pass what bill you please, have a foreign trade to any great amount, or become a great manufacturing town, for which she wants all the elements of climate, coal and capital—this city now overbuilt, swoln to the utmost extent of the integument, and utterly destitute of force or weight in the union, wants this bill for the protection of the domestic industry of her free blacks, I presume."

It is true, that Baltimore and Philadelphia were in an uncomfortable state in 1824. The population of both had rather declined than increased, since 1820, because of the want of employment for the laboring classes. Hundreds of houses were without tenants—and real property seemed to have no settled value, in either. But what followed a granting of the protection which they sought, though sparingly extended? What is the condition of these cities now? Since 1824, not less than 10 or 12,000 dwelling houses, stores, factories and workshops have been built in them; and so filled are they with people that a thousand more, if erected in one week, would in one week be occupied. In 1820, Baltimore contained 62,738 inhabitants, and the city and county of Philadelphia 137,097*—now the first has 80,625, and the last 188,961 souls, shewing together an increase of 69,746, nearly all of whom are free persons; or, the capital of the two being 199,835 in 1820, an increase at the rate of more than 34 per cent. whereas Virginia, on a capital of 1,065,366 in 1820, shews a present amount of 1,213,514—a total increase of 148,148, or at the rate of 13¾ per cent. and, though we cannot now ascertain the fact, we may almost venture a positive assertion that the whole increase of free persons in Virginia, has been in the western grain growing and manufacturing districts. So much for Mr. Randolph's pity for Baltimore and Philadelphia. But how splendidly ridiculous is his saying that Philadelphia wanted the elements of climate, COAL and CAPITAL, to become a great manufacturing town. We do not know what is the fault with the climate, but the manufactures of that city and its vicinity, in one year, are worth the whole tobacco crops of Virginia for

---

* This article was written two or three weeks since. We then thought the elections for congress took place in May; but an act has passed the Virginia house of delegates to hold them in August in the present year, and in April hereafter.

† This "special" matter had reference, perhaps, to a trade with the Black Sea—but the passage of the Balkan by the Russians and the treaty of Adrianople, had accomplished that, long before his appointment; and unless the Dardanelles had been opened by the Russian arms, the Black Sea would have remained sealed.

‡ This is a matter of common notoriety, and was much spoken of at the time when it happened, at Washington.

§ He was ejected from his seat in congress, with great indignation—and Mr. Eppes, the son-in-law of Mr. Jefferson, (who moved into the district for the purpose of being a candidate), put in his place. He was a bitter enemy of Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and J. Q. Adams—so also of general Jackson, until very recently—and we do not recollect that he has done a single act to support the administration of the latter, except in assaulting some of its opponents, and accepting an office from the president, not only without performing its duties, but with a previous expectation that he would not perform them.

*We put the city and county of Philadelphia together, because of their inseparable connexion in population and business.

eight or ten years—as to coal, she supplies, or is about to supply, twice her own large population with all that the people will take; and in respect to capital, let the legal interest be offered on approved security, and twenty millions of dollars will be found for the new investment, at a few days notice. It would not be hazarding much to say, that there is a larger surplus money-capital in Philadelphia, than in the whole state of Virginia.* The "decay" and "desertion" of Baltimore,—the "atrophy" and "over-building" of Philadelphia, have passed away. The "American System" has dawned upon them, and never were they so prosperous—so sound—so wealthy, as at the present time.

But enough of Mr. Randolph, of whom we have entertained but one opinion for 27 or 28 years—that he was good for nothing in this world, but to find fault with and abuse other people; or, as Mr. Ritchie said of him, as a "nuisance" in society—we will not say a "CURSE," except to his poor, miserable—spleen-consumed, self.

THE CHEROKEE CASE.†

From the National Intelligencer of March 26.

The opinion of the supreme court in the Cherokee case is represented, in some of the administration papers, as a sanction of the pretensions and conduct of Georgia with regard to the Cherokees and their territory. Here is a gross error. The court did not mean to give confirmation or countenance to Georgia. They merely declare that they have not the power to interfere in the manner required on the part of the Indians.

[National Gazette.

We trust that the decision of the supreme court, in the case of the Cherokee nation against Georgia, will be universally acquiesced in. It will set the question forever at rest, and may perhaps, upon the whole, be rather beneficial than otherwise to the Indians. It will place their relations to the United States upon a sure footing, and give a definite and fixed character to their claims to national sovereignty.

[Fredricktown Examiner.

The statement of the National Gazette, that, in the decision of the supreme court on the motion on behalf of the Cherokee nation, the court merely declared that it has not the power to interfere in the manner required, is entirely correct. A different impression, however, seems to have been received by some, and the notion generally entertained of the effect of that decision appears to us to be not very definite. This is not at all surprising to those who have not before them the opinion of the court, which discloses the whole merit of the legal question. As it may be some time before that opinion is published, perhaps our readers may not be displeased with such a view of the question as by light reflected by the opinion of the court, has presented itself to us. We do not pretend of course, to give the reasoning of the court, but to disclose the leading considerations which produce conviction in our mind of the correctness of the conclusion to which it arrived.

First, then, we must look at the case, as it came before the court, without regard to moral or philanthropic or equitable considerations connected with it. We are not even to inquire, in considering the late decision of the court, whether the Indians have been wronged by the legislation of Georgia, or by the acquiescence of the general government in that legislation. Of course, then, we are not to inquire whether the alleged wrongs of the Cherokees require redress. There is a preliminary question which requires to be settled—the question of the right of the supreme court to exercise original jurisdiction in the case. If it has not that, then no case was presented for it to act upon, and it could not grant the injunction prayed for.

The 2d section of the 3d article of the constitution declares that "the judicial power shall extend," among other cases enumerated, "to controversies between a state, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects." The same section goes on to declare that "in all cases in which A STATE shall be a party, the supreme court shall have ORIGINAL JURISDICTION." If the Cherokee nation, therefore, be a foreign state, in the sense of the constitution, then the supreme court has original jurisdiction of such a case as that presented by the Cherokees, as was contended by their bill, and by the arguments of their counsel before the supreme court. If the Cherokee nation be not a foreign power in the meaning of the constitution, then the court has not jurisdiction of the case sought to be made before it. The court decided that the Indian nations within the limits of the United States are not "foreign states," and therefore refused to grant the writ of injunction.

The reasons for this decision are drawn from the terms of the constitution, from the course of our legislation, from the nature of our treaties and intercourse with the Indians, and from the laws and usages of nations.

The first of these illustrations, without going further, appears to us to be conclusive. In what language, for example, does the constitution of the United States (the paramount rule for the government of the court), speak of the Indian nations or tribes, when it speaks of them at all? Let us examine that point.

1. "Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states, which may be included within this union, according to their respective numbers; which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons."—Constitution U. S. art. 1, section 2.

In the determination of the numbers of the "respective states" of the union, one particular class of persons is expressly included, and another expressly excluded. If nothing had been specially said of either of those classes, it might have been doubted whether the Indians were independent of the sovereignty of the union or not. But here are two classes, respecting which it is questioned whether their numbers be entitled to representation or not. Aliens, being free persons, were subject to enumeration; but it was doubted whether the indented white servants, of whom there were then a considerable number in the several states, could be considered "free persons," and they were therefore specially included: for the same reason, that is, because of the doubts arising from the anomaly of their relation to the several states, the Indians "not taxed" were specially introduced, in order to exclude them from the enumeration, in which it is obvious, they would, in the opinion of the framers of the constitution, have otherwise been included. If the Indians within the states of the union had been at that time regarded as foreign nations, of course the constitution would not have excluded them from the enumeration, any more than it has done the inhabitants of Europe, or the wandering Arabs. If they were not "foreign states" at that time, they certainly are not now.

2. "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes."

In this provision it will be seen that the Indian tribes were not regarded by the framers of the constitution as "foreign nations," nor as being states of the union; because, after specifying both of these, it adds, as not being included in either, "and with the Indian tribes." The conclusion that the Indian tribes and foreign nations were understood to stand in distinct relations to the general government is irresistible. "The Indian tribes" indeed

*Notwithstanding something like complaints have recently been made of surplus money lying idle in the banks of the state.

†It is much to be regretted that the opinion of the supreme court, in this highly interesting case, was not published at once. If we understand its disposition, it has become the private property of the reporter of that court, and can only be printed for his emolument. It should not be so. The decision belongs to the nation, because of the peculiar interest felt in this matter, and ought to have been promptly, and freely, laid before it.

A copy-right was taken out for Mr. Wirt's splendid oration on the celebration of the late revolution in France, and not one in an hundred have seen it of those who would have read it with delight, had not that silly thing been done. It fell as if "still-born from the press." ED. REG.

stand as completely distinguished, in this clause, from "foreign nations," as they do from "the several states." They were neither foreign nations, nor states of the union, but something different from either.

All the legislation of congress corresponds with the inevitable construction of the only clauses of the constitution in which the Indians are specially mentioned. All the intercourse and relations with them have been conducted, not through the department of state, to which is given in charge the relations of the United States with foreign powers, but through the department of war. Who would think of sending a minister, or deputation, from one of the powers of Europe, from the grand Turk, or the emperor of China, or from any foreign power, to hand in his credentials to the war minister of the government?

The treaties made with the Indians, it will be observed, furnish no valid argument in favor of the claim which they set up, for present purposes, to be considered as foreign nations. For, when the constitution establishes the treaty-making power, it avoids, with evident intent, saying any thing which shall limit this authority to treaties with foreign nations. "The president shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, to make treaties; provided, two-thirds of the senators present concur:"—that is, to make treaties with foreign nations, or, as the government had theretofore been in the habit of doing, with the Indian tribes.

The treaties from time to time made with the Indians abound with provisions which show that they were considered in a different relation from that of foreign, or sovereign and independent nations. In one of these treaties, for example, it was stipulated that the Indians who were parties to it should be erected into a state or states of the union, when their numbers should justify it; in another, that a particular tribe should have the privilege of sending a representative to congress when sufficiently numerous, &c. Could a similar provision be made by treaty in favor of any foreign nation?

From these and a variety of other illustrations, it is clearly apparent to us, as decided by the court, that the Indian nations or tribes are not foreign nations, and cannot therefore maintain actions in the courts of the United States, in that capacity. Perhaps it had been better, had the constitution enumerated the Indian tribes among the parties between whom the supreme court may entertain original jurisdiction. But we must take the constitution as it is, and not as we, for any temporary purpose, may wish that it had been.

On these general grounds, we do not see how the court could have come to a different conclusion from that which it pronounced. The few suggestions which we have thrown out will increase the anxiety of our readers to see the opinion of the court at large, which we are sure will remove every trace of doubt from such minds as have not prejudged the case.

We concur in the suggestion, of the Examiner, that this decision of the court may, upon the whole, be rather beneficial than otherwise to the Indians. We are satisfied that it will be so.

NEW YORK AND N. JERSEY—U. S. SUPREME COURT.

To the legislature.

Gentlemen—I consider it my duty to lay before you the accompanying communication from the attorney general, concerning our controversy with New Jersey. The matter to which it relates, derives much of its importance from the grounds assumed by the judges of the supreme court of the United States with regard to their powers; and I feel bound to present to you my views of the subject, as well as the course which I feel impelled, by a regard to the interests and honor of the state, to pursue, unless you shall think proper to give it a different direction.

You are apprised, by the accompanying papers, and those which have preceded them, from the same source, of the several steps taken by the state of New Jersey to compel our appearance before the national judiciary to contest with her the question of sovereignty over a portion of the waters of the Hudson river. It seems to be a mere question of sovereignty over the waters, inasmuch as New Jersey admits in her bill of complaint, that, whatever right she may have had to the islands, those rights have been lost by adverse possession and the lapse of time.

The attorney general, with my sanction, has hitherto declined to appear in court, and respond to the complaint, without intending any disrespect to that high tribunal, and in a manner, which, I trust precludes the imputation of such a motive. His refusal to appear was grounded upon the belief, that the court has not been invested with the power to take cognizance of original suits where a state is made a defendant party. The reasons for this, opinion is more fully detailed by the attorney general, but may be succinctly stated as follows:

1. It was not designed, by the constitution, to confer that power on the court, until congress had legislated upon it, and declared what controversies between states were proper to be entertained by the court, and what should be the mode of proceeding. The constitution is silent in regard to both of these matters. A strong argument in favor of this construction, is afforded by that clause in the constitution, which, after enumerating the powers of congress, adds, "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by the constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

2. That congress had passed no laws for those purposes.

In 1789 a judiciary act was passed, giving writs and other proceedings in all cases, other than those where a state was defendant. This was a practical construction of the constitution, and showed their opinion that legislation was necessary to enable the court to proceed. And by neglecting to provide specifically for proceedings in controversies between states, they indicated their opinion that the time had not arrived when it would be proper for the court to entertain such suits. The meaning of congress is most distinctly marked by the wording of the judiciary act. It grants to the court the power to issue certain writs; and further, "all other writs not specially provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions, and agreeable to the principles and usages of law." Now, as no mode of proceeding against a sovereign state is known to the common law, it would seem to be a fair conclusion, that congress designed, by precise and unequivocal language, to exclude an implication that the power to proceed against a state was granted by the act.

3. Although the court has frequently attempted to exercise this power, by entertaining suits against states, and summoning them to appear and answer, no state has ever obeyed their summons; thereby virtually denying the power of the court.

4. Several attempts have been made by states to prevail upon congress to pass laws for this object; but they have uniformly refused to vest this power in the court. Two of these attempts made in 1822 and 1828, are detailed in the several reports of the attorney general.

5. The state of New Jersey has impliedly admitted the want of power in the court, by her attempt to obtain the passage of a law in 1822, and by a proposition made through her commissioners to the commissioners on the part of this state in 1827, to submit this controversy to the supreme court, as an impartial tribunal to arbitrate between the parties.

Taking the foregoing view of the subject, I did not consider myself justified in permitting the state to be represented as a party defendant before a tribunal which had no right to exercise authority over us, and which I confidently hoped would, on a review of its own powers, come to that conclusion.

But the matter has now assumed a new aspect. The opinion of that court shews that they view that subject differently, or at least, are disposed to assume the jurisdiction on an exparte case.

The grounds upon which it is supposed that the court claims cognizance of the controversy, are,

1. That ample power is given to them by that clause of the constitution, which ordains that "The judicial power shall extend to controversies betwen two or more states." That having the power, the means of exercising it are incidental; and that they may, by rules of court, prescribe the forms of proceeding.

2. That the proceedings in suits before that court, prescribed by statute, are applicable to cases where a state is defendant, any that, therefore, congress has legislated on the subject: and

3. That the decisions of that court have been uniform, in all cases which have come before it, and support the authority of the court.

We have now reached a point in the progress of this litigation, where the future action of the state should be determined upon with deliberation, and governed by a due sense of all the high responsibilities resting upon us, as citizens of the United States, and members of a corporate state sovereignty. This state can never forget that she is a member of the union, and has a large stake in its perpetuity. While she will permit no encroachments on the part of the general government, she will put forth her strong arm, in time of need, to support it in the exercise of its acknowledged powers. If, on this occasion, she is compelled to differ with the national judiciary, I have no doubt, that she will do so firmly and dispassionately, and afford a becoming example of respect towards the tribunal deemed worthy by the founders of our government, to be the depository of the power for preserving the peace of the union.

It was undoubtedly a part of the design of our government, to have a judicial tribunal to decide on all questions of conflicting rights, growing out of the limitations of the sovereignty of the states, and the specific delegations of power to the general government. And one of its special objects was to adjust amicably, all such differences as might arise between the states. The want of such a power, with sufficient energy to enforce its decisions, was one of the leading motives for proposing a constitution.

Every worthy American must be penetrated with feelings of gratitude, when he contemplates the beautiful structure of our government, and the wonderful harmony and adaptation of its parts. The people, although divided into several communities, are, nevertheless, by their compact, bound together in fraternal relations, under a common head, with all the same social interests, duties and feelings, which belong to a consolidated nation. In its great outlines, human wisdom could not devise any thing more perfect, to secure to those who live under its protection, in the possession of their rights, and to defend them from calamities attendant upon civil dissentions. It would have been essentially defective in its arrangements, if provision for the adjustment of disputes between the members of the confederacy had been omitted. An appeal to arms, which is the only means of redress by one nation for the wrongs committed upon it by another, is ill suited to the condition of the members of the same political family.

But in this part of the system, an inherent difficulty reminds us of the imperfection of all human works. Our government is based upon a written constitution, which is the rule of conduct for all the constituted authorities. Legislative discretion finds its limits there. Who shall decide when its boundaries are transgressed? If this power had been placed in congress, then not the constitution, but the will of that body, would be the fundamental law of the empire. It is in the nature of things, that there must be an irresponsible power somewhere; and in the adjustment of the parts of our government, it was deemed essential to the uniformity of its action, to place it beyond the influence of those commotions arising from popular errors, which indiscriminately destroy, and soon pass away. This power was therefore intended to be placed in judicial officers, rendered immovable save for misconduct.

This body, being the ultimate tribunal, from which no appeal lies, must necessarily decide, among other things, upon its own constitutional powers. The only relief from its errors, rests in a resort to amendments of the constitution, to an impeachment of the judges, and in cases of flagrant usurpations, to a refusal by the officers to execute its decrees, or a forcible resistance on the part of the state which is sought to be subjected to its power.

While we deny to the supreme court the right to bring us before its judgment seat, we have no reason to believe that it designs to usurp authority over us, or that it will persist in enforcing a jurisdiction, when it is convinced of its error. Indeed the court seem to invite us to a discussion of their power, in the closing part of their opinion, where they say, that "the question of proceeding to a final decree will be considered as not conclusively settled, until the cause shall come on to be heard in chief."

However clear we may consider the question to be, that the court has no power, yet the only peaceful tribunal which has cognizance of the question has decided it, provisionally, against us; and it becomes a question of magnitude, whether we shall now assume an attitude of resistance, or whether we shall embrace the opportunity still presented to us, to debate the question.

It will be proper to inquire, in the first place, if any, and what rights of the state, will be compromised, by an appearance in court to contest the jurisdiction, and ultimately to try the merits of the dispute between the states. A resort to forcible resistance would be both unwise and unbecoming in the state, except on undisputed ground, and at the last point of forbearance.

It has been feared by some, that if we should appear in court, we should thereby waive our right to object to the jurisdiction, in the subsequent progress of the cause. If a law of congress be necessary to give effect to the constitution, and the court takes no jurisdiction without it, then appearance by the court waives nothing. Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by an act which does not extend it over all the states. The constitution or the law, or both conjointly, may confer such a jurisdiction, but no state can bestow it either by implication or express consent. It is a rule of law, that the consent of a party does not give jurisdiction; a court takes no more power by virtue of it than an unofficial person. The authority of a tribunal erected by the consent of the parties, is derived from the submission, and cannot be extended beyond its terms. Contending, as we do, that the clause of the constitution which declares that the judicial power shall extend to controversies between states, is a dormant power, and does not attach to any tribunal until it is vivified by an act of congress, our appearance, in compliance with a summons from the court, under a protest against its proceedings, will admit nothing.

But supposing that this position is untenable, and that the constitution should be interpreted to mean to invest the court with a jurisdiction, which it is unable to execute, for want of process to bring the parties into court; yet we have a right to contend, and I think we will be sustained by the court, and the enlightened sense of the American people, that the technical rules of law, so proper and expedient in ordinary causes between private parties, ought not to apply to a case so peculiar and momentous. This case is entirely anomalous, involving a great and fundamental question of right; it is to determine the limits of power between a state sovereignty and an arm of the national government, beyond which there no is appeal, except to that which severs the bonds of the union, and involves us in all the horrors of a civil war. Such rights as we contend for are not to be controlled by technicalities, and cannot be waived by an implication. We have too much regard to the public peace, too much respect for the constituted authorities, too much interest in sustaining the national as well as state governments in their proper spheres, to put at defiance any branch of authority created by the constitution, until argument and remonstrance are exhausted.

We have great confidence, that when the merits of the controversy between this state and New Jersey shall be examined, they will be found to rest with us. If this should be the result of an investigation before the court it would quiet this hitherto vexatious dispute, which has so long disturbed our harmony with a sister state. If, however, judgment should pass contrary to our expectations, and justice should not demand of us to cede the disputed territory, and we should still deny the authority of the tribunal, we should then be in as good a condition to resist the execution of the judgment, as if it had passed against us by default of appearance.

As the court has seen fit to select the executive and attorney general, as the proper persons to bring into their court, as the representatives of the state, I shall, unless otherwise directed by the legislature, instruct the attorney general, to protest against any waiver of right by appearing, and to appear and contest the suit in its progress to its final determination.

E. T. THROOP.

Albany, March 10, 1831.

Albany, Febrary 24th, 1831.

His excellency Enos T. Throop, governor of the state of N. York.

Sir—It has become my duty again to invite the attention of your excellency to the suit commenced in the supreme court of the United States, by the state of New Jersey against the people of the state of New York. And in doing so, it may be proper to give a brief account of the nature and progress of this litigation.

In June 1829, a copy of the bill filed by the state of New Jersey, and a subpœna to appear and answer, were served upon the governor and attorney general. The subpœna was directed to those officers and commanded them to appear "on behalf of the people of the state of New York," which they were not to omit "under the penalty of five hundred dollars."

The bill filed by the state of New Jersey, after setting forth letters patent granted by king Charles the second, to his brother James, duke of York, in 1664, and several other grants, proceeds as follows: "And your complainants respectfully insist, that by the fair construction of the grants before mentioned, and by the principles of public law, the state of New Jersey is justly and lawfully entitled to the exclusive jurisdiction and property of and over the waters of the Hudson river, from the forty-first degree of latitude, to the bay of New York, to the filum aquæ, or midway of the said river; and to the midway of or channel of the said bay of New York, and the whole of Staten Island sound, together with the land covered by the water of the said river, bay and sound, in the like extent.

"And your complainants well hoped that the people of the state of New York would have permitted your complainants peaceably and quietly to enjoy her said rights of property, jurisdiction and sovereignty, over the said waters and land covered with water, of the said river Hudson, and the other dividing waters of the bay of New York, without the interruption and disturbance of the state of N. York, as in justice and equity she ought to have done.

"But now so it is, may it please your honors, that the people of the state of New York intending to encroach upon and aggrieve the state of New Jersey in her lawful rights, at an early period of the settlement of the said states, and while they were colonies, wrongfully and forcibly possessed herself of the said island, called Staten Island, and the other small islands in the dividing waters between the two states. And your complainants then being a feeble colony, and under a proprietary government, although the right of New Jersey was publicly and frequently urged to the said islands, she could oppose no effectual resistance to the said encroachment of the state of New York, which was then under royal patronage, and her inhabitants exempted from the taxation, which New Jersey was obliged to impose upon her citizens; that the possession thus acquired by New York, has been since that time acquiesced in, and the state of New York refuses to yield up to your complainants the said islands, insisting that by the principles of public law, the said possession of the said islands, has established the title to the same in herself; but your complainants insist and charge, that although it may be true, that the long continued possession of New York of the said islands, may conclude your complainants from disturbing the same at this time, and which your complainants are willing, for the sake of peace, to admit, yet that the state of New York has no other pretence of title to the said islands on which she can rely, but the said adverse possession, and that inasmuch as the said possession of those islands by the state of New York has been uniformly confined in its exercise to the fast land thereof, your complainants insist, that the title of New Jersey to the whole waters of the Staten Island sound remains clear and absolute in your complainants, according to the terms of the said herein recited grants." The principal prayer of this bill is that "the eastern boundary line between your complainants, and the state of New York, may by the order and decree of this honorable court, be ascertained and established, and that the rights of property, jurisdiction and sovereignty of your complainants to the filum aquæ, or middle of said Hudson river, from the 41st degree of north latitude on the said Hudson river, through the whole line of the eastern shore, as far as the said river washes and bounds the state of New Jersey, down to the bay of New York, and to the channel or midway of the said bay, and to all the waters and the lands they cover, lying between the New Jersey shore and Staten Island, and to all other waters washing the southern shores of New Jersey within and above the narrows, and that your complainants may be quieted in the full and free enjoyment of her property, jurisdiction and sovereignty, in the waters aforesaid, and that the right, title, jurisdiction and sovereignty of New Jersey in and over the same, as part of the public domains, be confirmed and established by the decree of this honorable court."

There may be some difficulty in ascertaining from the statements and allegations in the bill, whether the state of New Jersey intends to claim any thing more than the right of territorial jurisdiction, separate from the right of property in the soil. If the claim be of this description, it will be difficult to find a precedent for its adjustment, either in a court of law or of equity jurisdiction. And if a right of property is asserted, it would seem to be a case requiring a trial at law in some of those actions which have been devised for determining the right to real property. In the one case a question is presented in relation to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject matter in litigation; and in the other a question going only to the form of the remedy.

But these were questions of less immediate importance than the one presented by this proceeding, whether the supreme court of the United States could exercise original and compulsory jurisdiction over a state. Having at an early day, expressed to your excellency and the legislature an opinion that the court could not take cognizance of the suit, I deem it proper on this occasion, briefly, to state some of the grounds upon which that opinion was founded.

The constitution of the United States, (art. III. sec. 2.) declares among other things, that, "the judicial power shall extend—to controversies between two or more states,—between a state and citizens of another state—and between a state, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens or subjects." The 11th amendment to the constitution declares that "the judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States, by citizens of another state, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state." Without considering whether this ought to be regarded as a construction, rather than as an amendment to the constitution, and conceding that the judicial power of the United States extends to controversies between states, it still remains to be considered, whether the grant of jurisdiction by the constitution, included also the means of carrying it into execution, or whether those means were to be provided by congress.

The constitution provides, (art. III. sec. 1.) that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish," but neither the number of judges of which the supreme court should consist, or the times or places of their meeting, nor the amount of their compensation was settled. These, with many other essential things, were left for the determination of congress, in filling up the great outline that had been marked out by the constitution. That legislation would be necessary in the organization of the new government, and its several departments was foreseen and provided for by the framers of the constitution. That instrument declares, (article I. section 8. subd. 17.) that "congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof." In this provision a distinction is plainly recognised between a power vested by the constitution in any department of the government and the necessary means of carrying that power into execution.

There is therefore nothing absurd in saying, that a power conferred by the constitution may remain dormant, if congress for any cause shall omit to pass the necessary laws for bringing it into exercise. Had no laws been passed providing for the organization of the supreme or the other courts of the United States, the whole judicial power would have remained a dead letter in the constitution. If, after the number of judges of which the supreme court should consist had been fixed by law, and the offices had been filled, no times or places had been assigned by law for their meeting, there would have been judges, but no court. And if, when that court was duly organized, no process had been given to bring before it the persons to be affected by its judgments; or if process had been given, without the proper officers to execute it, the court would still have been without the means of exercising its constitutional authority.

Such no doubt were the views entertained by the members of the first congress that assembled under the constitution. They proceed to pass the necessary laws for the organization of the federal courts, and to provide them with process, and officers to execute their commands. But it is believed that neither the first nor any subsequent congress has passed any such laws as were necessary for carrying into execution that portion of the judicial power which extends to controversies between two or more states.

It is a fundamental principle in our laws, admitting of but few and special exceptions, that no court can give a valid judgment until it has acquired jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. In relation to all those suits against individuals and corporations, of which the federal courts have cognizance, it is not denied that they have been provided with the means of acquiring jurisdiction over the persons, (whether natural or artificial), to be affected by their judgments. But to acquire jurisdiction over a state, it is believed that some other means are necessary than such writs as are "agreeable to the principles and usages of law;" for the reason that there was never any principle or usage of law to issue writs or legal process of any description against a state or independent government. Nor is it supposed that giving "forms and modes of proceeding" in equity cases "according to the principles, rules and usages which belong to courts of equity," can reach the case of a state made a defendant, for the reason that there were no pre-existing forms or modes of proceeding against a state, nor were there any principles, rules or usages, by which a court of equity could acquire jurisdiction over an independant government.

Without going into any particular examination of the acts of congress, relating to the judicial power of the United States, it may be sufficient in this place to say, that the grant of original jurisdiction over a state was a new and extraordinary power: And if the federal courts could not exercise their ordinary jurisdiction over individuals without the authority of an act of congress for that purpose, it must be apparent, that this case called for special legislative provisions. A law giving to the federal courts such "forms of writs and executions" and "modes of process" in the several states as were then "used and allowed in the supreme courts of the same," would sufficiently provide for impleading individuals, but would make no advance towards carrying into execution the power to implead a state.

In the case of corporations the law had provided the appropriate process for compelling their appearance, and directed the mode in which service was to be made; but against a state or sovereignty, no process for compelling an appearance had ever been devised; nor had any means been pointed out by which the defendant could be summoned to answer the complaint. It was therefore necessary in providing for the exercise of this power, either that some new writ, summons, or process adapted to the case should be given; or that a new quality or efficacy should be imparted to those then in use. It was also necessary to direct in what manner such process should be served, whether upon the governor or some other officer, executive, or judicial, or upon the legislature of the defendant state, whether some person should be required by law to appear for the state, or under what circumstances the court should be authorised to proceed ex parte. The means also by which a state should answer the complaint, whether through its legislature, or some one or more of its executive officers, were all to be provided, for the reason that none of those things were previously known to the laws, or to any forms of judicial proceedings. These are only a sample of the many provisions that seem to be necessary in such a case. Similar difficulties must exist in every stage of the proceeding, and instead of diminishing they will be found to multiply, and increase in importance, in the consideration of the final decree or judgment to be rendered, and the proper means for carrying it into execution.

Although it was not designed in this communication to go beyond a brief statement of the leading reasons for the opinion that has been expressed, it may be proper to notice several cases which came before the court, between the years 1790 and 1800, in which the court entertained jurisdiction against a state. The case of Georgia against Baailsford determines nothing upon this question, for the reason that the state was the complainant in the bill, and so a voluntary party to the suit. And in relation to all the cases that came before the court, it is not unimportant to remark that no one appeared to argue against the exercise of jurisdiction; and in only two of the cases did the court deliver any opinion upon that question. Those were the cases of Chisholm against the state of Georgia, decided in February term, 1793, and Grayson against the state of Virginia, decided in August term, 1796. In the first case the leading question discussed by the judges who maintained the jurisdiction of the court, was, whether upon the true construction of the constitution a state could be made a party defendant, and not whether the means of exercising jurisdiction had been provided by congress. Mr. Justice Iredell was the only one that entered distinctly into the latter question, and he arrived at the following conclusions: "1st That the constitution, so far as it respects the judicial authority, can only be carried into effect by acts of the legislature appointing courts, and prescribing their methods of proceeding. 2d. That congress has provided no new law in regard to this case, but expressly referred us to the old. 3d. That there are no principles of the old law, to which we must have recourse, that in any manner authorise the present suit, either by precedent or by analogy. The consequence of which, in my opinion, clearly is, that the suit in question cannot be maintained."

In the case of Grayson against Virginia, after the service of a subpœna, a motion was made for a distringas to compel the state to enter an appearance; but the court postponed a decision, "in consequence of a doubt whether the remedy to compel the appearance of a state should be furnished by the court itself, or by the legislature."

Two general rules were finally adopted, the first of which was in the following words: "Ordered, that when process at common law, or in equity, shall issue against a state, the same shall be served upon the governor, or chief executive magistrate, and the attorney-general of such state." The validity of this rule manifestly depended upon the power of the court to provide the means for impleading a state. It is true that the federal courts were authorised by statute "to make and establish all necessary rules for the orderly conducting business in the said courts;" but it is believed that this was only an authority to regulate proceedings in cases where the courts had jurisdiction by law; and not a power by which jurisdiction could be acquired. The like remarks is applicable to another provision, by which the courts of the United States were authorised to make alterations and additions in the forms of writs, and in the forms and mode of proceeding. Congress made direct and appropriate provisions for carrying into execution every portion of the judicial power, except that which related to the impleading of a state. And to place the jurisdiction of the court in this case upon its power to make rules and regulate practice, is to suppose that congress intended to do indirectly what it was not prepared to do by direct and specific legislation. And, besides, if the power to make rules and to regulate practice, was sufficient to enable the court to exercise this new and extraordinary jurisdiction over a state, it was most clearly sufficient to enable the federal courts to exercise every other portion of their jurisdiction; and all the other legislation upon this subject has been useless.

But whether this rule was originally valid or not, it was supposed to be obsolete, for the reason that it was not to be found in any subsequent publication of the rules of the court. This was one of two rules which originally appeared together, in the report of the case of Grayson against Virginia; the one of which has been regularly republished ever since; the other, never, until within the past year. Mr. Peters, in his reports, says that this omission arose from the fact, that it was not regularly entered by the clerk at the time of its adoption.

The doctrine that the supreme court of the United States cannot exercise original and compulsory jurisdiction over a state, has the sanction of much higher authority, than any opinion I may entertain upon the subject.

None of the five states sued at the period already mentioned, were suspected either of a want of patriotism, or of attachment to the union; yet each of those states, to wit, Connecticut, New York, Virginia, South Carolina and Georgia, neglected or refused to appear and submit to the jurisdiction of the court.

The decision of the court entertaining jurisdiction, produced great dissatisfaction, and resulted in the adoption, by at least three-fourths of the states of the eleventh amendment of the constitution, which put an end to all of the suits then depending, before a final judgment had been recovered in either of them.

This controversy, and others of a similar character, have existed for the last thirty years; and yet, it is believed that this is the first instance during that period, in which an attempt has been made to implead a state.

It is believed that the commissioners on the part of New Jersey, among whom were several distinguished lawyers, manifested their opinion that the court could not exercise compulsory jurisdiction over a state, by a proposition for a voluntary submission of the matter in controversy to the supreme court of the United States. See their letters to the New York commissioners, of the 15th and 17th September, 1827. Senate Journal, 1828, appendix A.

Bills have been repeatedly presented to congress, prescribing the mode of "commencing, prosecuting and deciding controversies between states;" but they have never met with the approbation of the legislature. One or more of these bills were brought in by the senators from New Jersey, who are reported to have admitted in the discussion of the bill, as did other senators who were in favor of bringing this power into exercise, that the supreme court could not exercise this jurisdiction without an act of congress for that purpose, and that no such act had been passed. And those bills are said to have been opposed and rejected, not on the ground that the court could act without further legislation, but on the ground that the measure was inexpedient; and that the harmony of the union would be best preserved by leaving dormant in the constitution that portion of the judicial power which extends to controversies between states.

It is believed, therefore, that it may be truly said, that congress has not only omitted, but it has actually refused to pass the necessary laws for carrying into execution the judicial power over a state.

It may not be improper to add, that when this case came before the court in February, 1830, (3 Peters, 461), neither the counsel for the state of New Jersey, nor the court itself treated this as a question that had been already settled, or as one free from difficulty.—Mr. Wirt, on behalf of New Jersey, asked the court to assign a day for the argument of the question of jurisdiction before another subpœna should issue; saying "it might, if decided against the plaintiff, prevent unnecessary expense." And the court did assign a day for the argument of that question; and the chief justice added, that, "if the argument should be merely ex parte, the court would not feel bound by its decision, if the state of New York afterwards desired to have the question again argued." The court at a subsequent day, and without argument, awarded further process upon the ground of previous precedents; saying, however, that "the state of New York will still be at liberty to contest the proceeding at a future time in the course of the cause if it shall choose to insist upon the objection."

This question is distinct from those in which the supreme court exercises an appellate jurisdiction where a state may have been a party in the court below. In all such cases the state is plaintiff, and so a voluntary party to the original proceedings: and although the parties are reversed in the forms of proceeding in the appellate court, it is still a continuance of the same suit; and cannot properly be said to be the commencement or prosecution of a suit against a state. There is this further distinction, that a writ of error acts only upon the record, and not upon the parties to it. It is directed not to the party, but to the court in which the judgment was rendered, and directs that the record be sent into the appellate court for review. A citation is issued, but it is only for the purpose of advising the party, that the judgment will be reviewed; and neither an appearance or any other act on his part is required. This jurisdiction does not depend upon the character of the parties, but upon the character of the cause: and its exercise has been amply provided for by the 25th section of the judiciary act of 1789.

I submit herewith, marked D, a copy of one of the bills that have been before the senate of the United States on this subject. It was introduced by Mr. Dickerson, one of the senators from New Jersey, on the 10th day of January, 1822, and is entitled "a bill prescribing the mode of commencing, prosecuting and deciding controversies between states." At the close of the paper marked D, another bill upon the same subject, brought in by Mr. Robbins, one of the senators from Rhode Island, on the 11th day of December, 1828, is mentioned and the difference between the two bills is pointed out. From these bills it will be seen, that the advocates for bringing into exercise this portion of the judicial power of the United States, have considered it a matter of great delicacy and importance, and one requiring very special legislative provisions. Several other bills, having the same object in view, have at different periods been presented to congress, but I have only seen copies of the two already mentioned.

But independent of the opinion which I entertained in relation to the power of the court, this was a proceeding against the state in its sovereign capacity, and involving its territorial jurisdiction. And whether the state should or should not render a voluntary submission to the proceeding, by appearing and answering the complaint, was a question belonging either to the governor or the legislature, and not to the attorney general, or any subordinate agent of the government. This opinion was suggested in a communication to your excellency, in July, 1829, soon after the suit was instituted, and again in my communication in December following, which was laid before the legislature by your excellency on the opening of the session of 1830.

The bills presented to congress for the purpose of carrying into execution that portion of the judicial power which relates to controversies between states, directed that the state made a defendant should be notified by the service of a certified copy of the bill of complaint and all documents, upon the governor or chief executive officer of the defendant state, and that a notification should be served by the marshal on the legislature of the defendant state, at the time of serving a copy of the bill. Those bills further provided, that no person should be permitted to act for the defendant state unless legally authorised by the legislature thereof: And that certain rules should be granted against the legislature of the state impleaded. These provisions sufficiently indicate that the advocates for bringing into exercise this portion of the judicial power of the United States, thought such a proceeding of sufficient importance to be presented to the state in its sovereign capacity and to be acted upon by its legislature.

The first process issued in the cause was made returnable on the first Monday in August, 1829. The supreme court of the United States does not sit at that period in the year, but it is a day on which rules may be entered in the exercise of the ordinary equity jurisdiction of the court. It was thought proper to advise the clerk of the court that this was not deemed a proper case for entering orders as of course; and a letter was addressed to him on the 27th of July, 1829, a copy of which marked A, is hereunto annexed. The clerk was requested to lay that letter before the court, should the subject at any time be presented for its consideration.

On the 26th day of December, 1829, I addressed a communication to your excellency, which has been before mentioned, and which will be found in the legislative documents for 1830, No. 4.

While at the city of Washington, in the discharge of other official duties, I was, on the thirteenth day of January 1830, served with a notice that the supreme court would be moved on the thirteenth day of February following to proceed ex parte in the cause, and to take the bill filed by New Jersey as confessed, and to render a decree in conformity with the prayer thereof. Not having received any instructions to appear in the suit, and thinking it improper to do so without authority, I addressed a letter to the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court, on the eve of my departure from Washington, a copy of which, marked B. is hereunto annexed.

When that motion came on to be heard, the court awarded further process, without passing upon the question of jurisdiction. That process was afterwards served, and was returnable on the second Monday of January last. In my communication on that subject, at the commencement of the present session of the legislature, it was mentioned that a decision of the question of jurisdiction might be expected at the present term of the court.

On the fifth day of the present month, a motion was made on the part of New Jersey, in relation to the further progress of the suit, and an opinion has since been delivered, and an order or decree has been made by the court, copies of which, marked C, are hereunto annexed. The order is in substance that the complainant be at liberty to proceed ex parte, and that unless the defendant being served with a copy of the decree sixty days before the ensuing August term of the court, shall appear on the second day of next January term thereof, and answer the bill, the court will proceed to hear the cause on the part of the complainant and decree on the matter of the bill.

Although this order appears to be absolute, that the court will proceed to a decree, the concluding paragraph of the opinion will show that it was not so intended. The language of the opinion, after stating that the court would proceed to a final hearing and decision, is as follows: "But inasmuch as no final decree has been pronounced, or judgment rendered in any suit heretofore instituted in this court, against a state, the question of proceeding to a final decree will be considered as not conclusively settled until the cause shall come on to be heard in chief."

Two remarks are respectfully submitted upon this opinion.—

The chief justice and those justices who concurred with him in opinion, have regarded the question of jurisdiction as one that had been previously adjudged, without saying what would be their opinions independent of the former decisions.

The jurisdiction asserted extends only to the power of hearing the parties, while the question of proceeding to a final decree (without which the litigation to say the least, would be useless) is to be considered as not conclusively settled.

It will be seen that nothing has been done to prejudice the rights of the state, if it shall be thought proper, either as a matter of duty or expediency, to appear and defend the suit. But if that question is to be passed upon by the legislature, it ought to be done before the close of the present session.

I am, with respect, your excellency's obedient humble servant,

GREENE C. BRONSON, attorney general.

[A]

Utica, (N. Y.) July 27, 1829.

William Thomas Carroll, esq.
Clerk of the supreme court of the U. States.

Sir—The governor and attorney general of the state of New York were recently served with the copy of a bill in equity, said to have been exhibited in the supreme court of the United States, by "The state of New Jersey vs the people of the state of New York;" and with a subpœna in that cause to appear on the first Monday of August next.

I beg leave respectfully to say, that such service is regarded on the part of the state of New York, as utterly void; because the mode adopted is unknown to the common law, is not authorised by any statute of the U. S, nor warranted by any existing rule or order out of the court of which the process issued. A rule on the subject of the service of process upon a state as defendant, was adopted in August term, 1796, (3 Dall. Rep. 320, 335); but this rule, (so far as I have observed), has been omitted in every subsequent publication of the rules of the supreme court, and is no doubt obsolete.

Entertaining this view of the subject, it is supposed that no proceeding will be had in the cause, either in vacation or at term, until the court shall have directed the mode of serving such process, and the prescribed course shall have been pursued.

When the court has been clothed with power to compel the appearance of a state defendant in an original suit or proceeding, is a question, among others, which will no doubt receive from that high tribunal, all the consideration that its importance demands, before any order shall be made in the premises.

I will thank you to hand this to the court if the subject shall ever be presented to their consideration; and should any rule or order be made in, or affecting this cause, please send a certified copy, addressed to me at Albany.

I am, sir, with great respect your obedient servant,

GREENE C. BRONSON, attorney general, state N. Y.

[B.]

Washington city, February 8, 1830.

To the honorable the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the United States:

A bill has been exhibited in this court by the state of New Jersey, against the people of the state of New York, concerning the boundary line between the two states, and a subpœna to appear and answer, with a copy of the bill, has been served upon the governor of the state of New York. A notice has recently been served, that on the 13th instant, the court would be moved to take the bill pro confesso, and proceed to a decree for the want of an appearance.

I beg leave most respectfully to say, that the opinion is entertained on the part of the state of New York, that this court cannot exercise jurisdiction, in such a case, without the authority of an act of congress, for carrying into execution that portion of the judicial power of the United States, which extends to controversies between two or more states.

The governor of the state of New York has made a communication upon the subject of this suit to the legislature now in session; but it has not yet been acted upon, so far as I have been advised. Whether the legislature will authorise any person to appear and discuss the question of jurisdiction; or whether for the purpose of obtaining a judicial decision upon the merits of an unfortunate controversy, they will order an appearance, waving the question of jurisdiction, I am at this time unable to determine.

I have deemed it proper to make this communication, to explain what might otherwise be supposed a want of respect for this honorable court, on the part of the executive authority of the state of New York.

GREENE C. BRONSON, attorney general of N. Y.

[C.]

The state of New Jersey against
The people of the state of New York.

Opinion and order of the supreme court of the United States, delivered by Mr. chief justice Marshall, January term, 1831.

This is a bill filed by the state of New Jersey against the state of New York, for the purpose of ascertaining and settling the boundary between the two states

The constitution of the United States declares that "The judicial power shall extend" "to controversies between two or more states." It also declares, that "In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a state shall be a party, the supreme court shall have original jurisdiction."

Congress has passed no act for the special purpose of prescribing the mode of proceeding in suits instituted against a state, or in any suit in which the supreme court is to exercise the original jurisdiction conferred by the constitution.

The act "to establish the judical courts of the United States," sec. 13 enacts "That the supreme court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies of a civil nature, where a state is a party, except between a state, and its citizens; and except also between a state and citizens of other states or aliens; in which latter case it shall have original but not exclusive jurisdiction." It also enacts, sec. 14, "That all the before mentioned courts of the United States shall have power to issue writs of scire facias, habeas corpus, and all other writs not specially provided by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions, and agreeble to the principles and usages of law." By the 17th section it is enacted "That all the said courts of the United States shall have power" "to make and establish all necessary rules for the ordinary conducting business in the said courts, provided such rules are not repugnant to the laws of the United States."

"An act to regulate process in the courts of the United States" was passed at the same session with the judicial act, and was depending before congress at the same time. It enacts "That all writs and processes issuing from a supreme or a circuit court shall bear test, &c." This act was rendered perpetual in 1792. The first section of the act of 1792 repeats the provision respecting writs and processes issuing from the supreme or a circuit court. The second continues the form of writs, &c. and the forms and modes of proceeding in suits at common law prescribed in the original act; "and in those of equity, and in those of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, according to the principles, rules, and usages which belong to courts of equity and to courts of admiralty respectively, as contradistinguished from courts of common law, except so far as may have been provided for by the act to establish the judicial courts of the United States; subject however, to such alterations and additions as the said courts respectively, shall in their discretion deem expedient, or to such regulations as the supreme courts of the United States shall think proper from time to time, by rule to prescribe to any circuit or district court concerning the same."

At a very early period in our judicial history, suits were instituted in this court against states and the questions concerning its jurisdiction and mode of proceeding were necessarily considered. So early as August, 1792, an injunction was awarded at the prayer of the state of Georgia, to stay a sum of money recovered by Brailsford, a British subject, which was claimed by Georgia under the acts of confiscation. This was an exercise of the original jurisdiction of the court, and no doubt of its propriety was expressed.

In February 1793, the case of Oswald vs. the state of N. York, came on. This was a suit at common law. The state not appearing on the return of the process, proclamation was made, and the following order entered by the court; "unless the state appear by the first day of the next term, or show cause to the contrary, judgment will be entered by default against the said state."

At the same term the case of Chisholms' executors against the state of Georgia came on, and was argued for the plaintiffs by the then attorney general Mr. Randolph. The judges delivered their opinions seriatim; and those opinions bear ample testimony to the profound consideration they had bestowed on every question arising in the case. Mr. chief justice Jay, Mr. justice Cushing, Mr. justice Wilson, and Mr. justice Blair decided in favor of the jurisdiction of the court, and that the process served on the governor and attorney general of the state was sufficient. Mr. justice Iredell thought an act of congress necessary to enable the court to exercise its jurisdiction.

After directing the declaration to be filed, and copies of it to be served on the governor and attorney general of the state of Georgia, the court ordered, "that unless the said state shall either in due form appear, or shew cause to the contrary, in this court, by the first day of the next term, judgment by default shall be entered against the said state."

In February term 1794, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and a writ of inquiry was awarded, but the 11th amendment to the constitution prevented its execution.

Grayson vs. The state of Virginia, 3 Dallas, 320, 1st Peters cond. Reports 141, was a bill in equity. The subpœna having been returned executed, the plaintiff moved for a distringas to compel the appearance of the state. The court postponed its decision on the motion, in consequence of a doubt whether the remedy to compel the appearance of the state should be furnished by the court itself, or by the legislature. At a subsequent term, the court, "after a particular examination of its powers," determined that though "the general rule prescribed by the adoption of that practice which is founded on the custom and usage of courts of admiralty and equity," "still it was thought, that we are also authorised to make such deviations as are necessary to adapt the process and rules of the court to the peculiar circumstances of this country, subject to the interposition, alteration and control of the legislature.

We have therefore agreed to make the following general orders—

1. Ordered, that when process at common law, or in equity, shall issue against a state, the same shall be served upon the governor, or chief executive magistrate, and the attorney general of such state.

2. Ordered, that process of subpœna issuing out of this court in any suit in equity, shall be served on the defendant sixty days before the return of the said process; and further, that if the defendant on such service of the subpœna, shall not appear at the return day contained therein, the complainant shall be at liberty to proceed ex parte.

In Huger and al vs. the state of South Carolina, 3d Dallas, 339, the service of the subpœna having been proved, the courts determined, that the complainant was at liberty to proceed ex parte. He accordingly moved for, and obtained commissions to take the examination of witnesses in several of the states.

Fowler and al vs. Lindsey and al. and Fowler and al. vs. Miller and 3 Dallas 311, were ejectments depending in the circuit court for the district of Connecticut for lands over which both New York and Connecticut claimed jurisdiction. A rule to shew cause why these suits should not be removed into the supreme court, by certiorari, was discharged, because a state was neither nominally, nor substantially, a party. No doubt was entertained of the propriety of exercising original jurisdiction, had a state been a party on the record.

In consequence of the rejection of this motion for a certiorari, the state of New York, in August term, 1799 filed a bill against the state of Connecticut, 4th Dallas 1. 1st Peters, cond. Reports 203, which contained a historical account of the title of New York to the soil and jurisdiction of the tract of land in dispute; set forth an agreement of the 28th November, 1783 between the two states on the subject, and prayed a discovery, relief and injunction to stay the proceeding in the ejectments depending in the circuit court of Connecticut.

This injunction was, on argument refused, because the state of New York was not a party to the ejectments, nor interested in their decision.

It has been settled by our predecessors on great deliberation, that this court may exercise its original jurisdiction in suits against a state, under the authority conferred by the constitution and existing acts of congress. The rule respecting the process, the persons on whom it is to be served, and the time of service, is fixed. The course of the court on the failure of the state to appear after the due service of process, has been also prescribed.

In this case, the subpœna has been served as is required by the rule. The complainant, according to the practice of the court, and according to the general order made in the case of Grayson vs. the commonwealth of Virginia, has a right to proceed ex parte, and the court will make an order to that effect, that the cause may be prepared for a final hearing. If upon being served with a copy of such order, the defendant shall still fail to appear, or to shew cause to the contrary, this court will so soon thereafter as the cause shall be prepared by the complainant, proceed to a final hearing and decision thereof. But inasmuch as no final decree has been pronounced, or judgment rendered, in any suit heretofore instituted in this court against a state, the question of proceeding to a final decree will be considered as not conclusively settled, until the cause shall come on to be heard in chief.

Mr. justice Baldwin did not concur in the opinion of the court directing the order made in the cause.

The state of New Jersey, complainant against
The people of the state of New York.
defendant.

The subpœna in this case having been returned, executed sixty days before the return day thereof, and the defendant having failed to appear, it is, on the motion of the complainant, decreed and ordered, that the complainant be at liberty to proceed ex parte: and it is further decreed and ordered, that unless the defendant, being served with a copy of this decree sixty days before the ensuing August term of this court, shall appear on the second day of the next January term thereof, and answer the bill of the complainant, this court will proceed to hear the cause on the part of the complainant, and to decree on the matter of the said bill.

Washington, February 12, 1831.

I, Richard Peters, reporter of the decisions of the supreme court of the United States, do hereby certify, that the foregoing is a true copy of the order and opinion of said supreme court, delivered in the above cause by Mr. chief justice Marshal, at January term, eighteen hundred and thirty-one.

RICH. PETERS.

[Document D. is a copy of the law introduced by Mr. Dickerson into the U. S. senate, in 1822, and is omitted.]

THE "CALHOUN CORRESPONDENCE."

From the Georgia Constitutionalist.

We have been furnished by Mr. Forsyth, and we give to the public Mr. James A. Hamilton's letter of the 29th January, 1828, to Mr. Forsyth, and Mr. Forsyth's letter to Mr. Crawford, to which Mr. Crawford's letter placed in the hands of the president of the United States was a reply. These letters are published in consequence of the request and suggestion of Mr. Calhoun, contained in his supplemental address to the people of the 24th of February.

By Mr. Forsyth's authority and desire, we state that these papers are not considered by him of the slightest importance to the public, to himself, or to Mr. Calhoun. Mr. Calhoun has expressed a different opinion on all these points, and in deference to his judgment on the last, the only one on which he had a right to decide, they are submitted to public inspection. Having offered, in May, this letter of Mr. Hamilton, and all the information in his possession, relative to this affair to Mr. Calhoun, an offer of which Mr. C. has not chosen to avail himself, Mr. Forsyth saw this public call upon him with very great surprise. Those who are determined to do justice however always disregard forms, and as Mr. Calhoun has preferred the mode eclatant, to the mode simple, his wishes are gratified in the manner pointed out by himself.

The delay in affording this gratification has been unavoidable, for Mr. Forsyth was under the neeessity of applying to Mr. Crawford for a coppy of the letter to him, and to ransack, since his return home, his papers on the Sand Hills to find Mr. Hamilton's letter.

—

Savannah, January 29, 1828.

Dear sir: It was my intention when I left New Orleans to have taken time to visit our illustrious friend Wm. H. Crawford, but the delays of my journey to Milledgeville, consumed so much of my time as to render it impossible for me to do so.

Whenever you meet him do me the favor to inform him of my intention, as I can with difficulty excuse myself for the omission to do so. I wish you would ascertain from him and communicate to me whether the propriety or necessity for arresting and trying general Jackson was ever presented as a question for the deliberation of Mr. Monroe's cabinet. I understand Mr. Southard, in his suppressed correspondence, has asserted that to have been the fact.

I would have written directly to Mr. Crawford, but you know how much delicacy and difficulty there is in making such communications in writing. I want the information not to be used, but in order that I may, in the event of a pu' lication which may come from a high quarter, know where to look for information on this subject. Of course nothing would be published without the consent of Mr. Crawford and yourself.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. HAMILTON.

His excellency John Forsyth, governor of Georgia.

—

Copy of a letter from John Forsyth to William H. Crawford.

Senate Chamber, April 16, 1830.

Dear sir: The president having learned by some means that I had given the information contained in the enclosed copy of a letter to Mr. Hamilton, of New York, to that gentleman, I have been requested by one of his friends to give the same information for his use. Although I had your express permission to write to Mr. H. I had no express permission to make any other use of what you communicated to me, and I do not consider myself at liberty to do more than what I have done without referring the subject again to you. I was more particular than I should otherwise have been by learning that Mr. Calhoun had given a different account of the transaction alluded to. I have thought proper therefore to send you the enclosed, and to know first, whether my statement of our conversation is correct, and secondly, if you have any objection to my complying with the request made to me.

With great respect, I am, dear sir, very sincerely yours.

JOHN FORSYTH.

Wm. H. Crawford, Lexington, Georgia.

—

From "the Globe," of March 26, 1831.

[We have been favored with the following communication, from the secretary of war, which will shew the groundlessness of the intimation conveyed by a late Telegraph, that the intimate friends of general Jackson, if not the general himself, were satisfied with Mr. Calhoun's address, &c. before it appeared in public.]

"Recently it had been stated in the U. S. Telegraph, that the appeal of Mr. Calhoun to the public, previous to its publication had been submitted to, and approved by a confidential friend of the president. The allusion is to myself. I perceive not the force of the argument which would make this circumstance to operate beneficially or otherwise; but as it has been mentioned, I take occasion to present the agency particularly that I had in this business, and how, and why it was occasioned.

"Previous to the publication being made, I received a request from Mr. Grundy to see me. I afforded him the interview he sought. He informed me the vice-president had concluded certainly to make publication of the correspondence; and that his, (Mr. G's.) great anxiety was, that the appeal intended to accompany it should be so framed, as that the president might not feel himself called upon, by any thing it should contain, to offer a reply. If the president should adopt this course, he entertained the opinion, that the matter would soon pass away, and every thing of party excitement be avoided. Such was the nature of our conversation, and I readily accorded with him in his frank desire.

"Mr. Grundy expressed the opinion that it would be in his power to obtain the assent of the vice-president, to show me the remarks which Mr. Calhoun intended to present to the public. Shortly after dark, the next evening, I went to his lodgings. Arriving, I was told by the servant at the door, that Mr. Grundy was not at home, but had gone to Mr. Ingham's. I directed him to go there, and say that I wished to see him. He soon returned, and shortly afterwards Mr. Grundy came in, and we sat down together, and alone, in his bed room.

"He observed it had been permitted to him, to show me the paper of which he had before spoken; and after some cursory remarks, such as he thought it would now do, and that I would, as he read it, note any expression which I might consider exceptionable, proceeded to read it. Whenever a remark occurred which I thought calculated to excite, or which by possibility might be misconceived, I offered suggestions, agreeably to the invitation which Mr. Grundy had tendered; of all which he made notes. I kept none myself, and hence cannot say that all were adopted. I do not doubt about it, however, as Mr. Grundy afterwards informed me that they had been adopted.

"Having read through the appeal, Mr. Grundy observed, "well, if the suggestions and illustrations we have made, shall be approved, do you think the president will feel himself called upon to reply, or to notice, himself, any thing that the appeal contains?" My answer was, I thought not, and my anxious desire was that he would not; but without doubt the newspapers would take hold of and canvass the matter, and to what, a course of that kind in the end might lead, time only could determine.

"We were about to separate, when Mr. Grundy observed,— "Will you see general Jackson, and explain to him what has taken place? I will see Mr. Calhoun, and if the course we have taken be approved, you shall be informed." But I did not communicate the subject to the president, because, upon reflection, I thought it improper to do so. From Mr. Grundy I received a note the next day, stating that all was right, which I understood to mean, that the suggestions offered had been adopted.

"The evening preceding the day when the correspondence made its appearance, a printed copy was enclosed to me, with a request that I would submit that too to the president. This also, I declined to do.

"Ill health has prevented me from making this communication earlier."

—

Having simply noticed a common report, that there had been an 'angry correspondence between" Mr. Senator Hayne and the president, it is proper to insert the following:

From the Charleston Mercury.

To the editor:

Sir—On my return to this city yesterday from Washington, my attention has been called to various notices in the public prints of an "angry correspondence," which is said to have taken place between general Jackson and myself, and which is supposed to have had some connexion with the controversy between the president and vice president. In one of the versions of this story, it is asserted that general Jackson returned one of my letters unanswered, with the word "insolent" written upon it. To put an end to these misrepresentations, it is proper that I should state, that no correspondence has ever taken place between gen. Jackson and myself of an unfriendly character, or having the remotest connexion with his controversy with Mr. Calhoun—and that he has never returned any letter addressed to him by me, either with or without an endorsement—nor have I any reason to believe that he has treated with the slightest disrespect any communication which I have ever made him—and it is certain that I have made none of a disrespectful character, or which would justify such treatment on his part.

ROBERT Y. HAYNE.

Charleston, March 29, 1831.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 6—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, APRIL 9, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1020

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞The present number contains twenty-four pages, a supplement of eight being added. The matter is various, and more than usually interesting.

☞Some late intelligence from Europe will be found in page 92. A large part of northern Italy is in a state of revolution, and Paris has been excessively agitated, because of certain proceedings of the Carlists, or adherents of the old dynasty. The priests hardly escaped a general slaughter, and many churches, &c. were attacked, and destroyed by the multitude. The firmness of the national guard prevented the most horrid proceedings. There is nothing important from Belgium or Poland, nor much news from England. Our summary takes in all the important points that have reached us.

The proposed increase of duty on cotton imported into Great Britain, has caused a great stir at Liverpool, Manchester, &c. We do not suppose that it can have any material effect on us, whether adopted or not. It is the old and established policy of Great Britain (and we also think it a wise one), to encourage her home industry, first—after that the industry of her colonists; and give up what is left to "free trade!" If her colonies could have supplied the cotton which her manufacturers desired, our's would long since have been excluded, as the sugar, coffee, &c. of the Spanish and French West India islands, &c. is excluded—as our products are taxed by the late arrangement which opened the West India trade!

A strong opinion is entertained that a general war will take place in Europe. We do not see how it can be avoided; and it promises to be as bloody as any that we have witnessed. Whatever may be its abberations or excesses, it will be a war of the people against kings.

OLD CONGRESSIONAL REPORTS. These reports inserted in the supplement to the present number, are conclusive as to the right and duty of congress to protect the manufactures of the United States. In two cases, the committee of commerce and manufactures did not recommend an increase of duty, as prayed for; but the question of expediency was the only one that came up for consideration, the constitutionality of protection being undisputed.

One or two of the reports are unimportant, but we prefer giving of the whole (as handed to us by col. Howard), to avoid the suspicion of unfairness in selection. There is an opinion expressed as to the unhealthiness of manufactures, borrowed from the state of things in England, which is not supported by experience in the U. States—nor will it ever be, so long as the present easy acquisition of lands remains to the people. In England, the laboring classes cannot much change either their condition or pursuits; but with us, there are many thousand landed proprietors, and, though not rich, entirely independent farmers, whose earnings in workshops and factories enabled them to become so. Young men and young women, skilful and economical, having each saved a few hundred dollars, make a joint interest in their property and persons, and start in the world, as their fathers and mothers did before them. There is no appearance of general bad health at our largest factories—labor kills far less than idleness destroys.

MONEY. A letter from London, speaking of the disturbed state of things in Europe and the prospect of a general war, says that immense amounts of money were placed at the disposal of the bank of the United States, by European capitalists, that they may be transferred to the United States for safe keeping. Money was already abundant—but it seems that we are to have a great glut. Well—some of it will be changed for bricks and morter, lands and roads, and will "stick" with us.

WOOL. About six hundred bales of foreign wool were recently sold, at public sale, at Boston, as follows: 324 bales English pulled, 42 a 45; 87 English fleece 51 a 61, 50 Russian 30 a 31½; 80 Saxony 93 a 107. The whole went off with great animation, and was sold to a good profit. Smyrna 36 a 38.

At private sale there was disposed of—10,000lbs. Albany, pulled—lambs 55 cash; 10,000 do, spinning 47; 6,000 New York city, pulled, lambs 55; 1200 lbs. superfine 62½, cash.

There has also been a large sale of Spanish wool at Philadelphia. The prices were from 62½ cents lowest, to 101 cents per lb. the highest, according to quality.

☞If there had been faith in the stability of our market—certainty in our protecting laws, continually threatened with repeal or vexed in their operation, we should not now have had to look abroad for a supply of the middling and most useful and important sorts of wool; and we do not think it is hazarding any thing to say, that, in the fluctuating prices of American wool, and the import of the foreign article, our country has sustained more pecuniary injury in one year, than the whole protecting duties, payable on wool and woollens, will amount to in ten years.

"THE BANE AND ANTIDOTE." We publish a long and well written paper, which has been properly called the "Manifesto of the Nullifiers;" and also give a public report of Mr. Webster's speech at the anti-nullification dinner at New York. The first needs no present rebuke—the latter no commendation from us. Let all men read both, and we shall agree with cheerful confidence to abide the issue.

MR. BURGES. A great public dinner was given to this distinguished member of congress on the 30th ult. at New York, by about 300 persons—gen. Jacob R. Van Rensselaer presiding, assisted by P. H. Schenck, A. Chandler, H. Booraem and T. R. Smith, esquires, as vice presidents. The regular toasts and volunteers, with the remarks of gen. Van Rensselear, on proposing the health of the guest, and the speech of Mr. Burges, in acknowledgment of the honor conferred upon him, are of masculine strength, with much severity and sharpness of point. The speech was received too late for our present number; but the whole proceeding is immediately connected with the "politics of the day," or "signs of the times," and must have a place in this work. The orator took a pretty general view of the leading measures and doings of the present administration, and especially reprobated the conduct of Mr. Van Buren, and his management of our foreign relations, &c. He exposed the real nature of the boasted arrangement about the West India trade, and mentioned that at the very time when the executive stated officially that our minister to Russia had left his place of destination, solely on account of ill health, and would, as the cabinet well hoped, soon return,—the secretary of state was officially in possession of the fact, that the wandering diplomatist had demanded and received his passports, which, he says, was not known to himself and his colleagues when they discussed the propriety of the appropriation for the payment of Mr. Randolph's salary,* &c. With reference to the letter of Mr. Donelson, private secretary of the president, to a leading member of the legislature of Pennsylvania, he asks, "what private secretary, of what other president of the United States, would, without consulting him, have dared to write such a letter?"—as to his being a candidate for re-election. These brief references may shew the spirit of the address. The health of HENRY CLAY was received with three, and six, and nine cheers.

*The Richmond Enquirer, however, says that Mr. Randolph would return to Russia in June.

CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL. It is pretty plainly hinted that the late report, as to the intended resignation of judge Marshall, was put afloat to bring about such a result! If so—the authors of the intrigue have no reason to be pleased with the public feeling expressed on the occasion.

"Mr. INGHAM. We know, from undoubted authority, that the president of the United States has expressed a wish that the present secretary of the treasury, Mr. Samuel D Ingham, should retire from the cabinet, and thus relieve the president of an unpleasant duty which he will ultimately be compelled to exercise in effecting Mr. Ingham's removal from that station." [Penn. Inq.

"We have received intelligence upon which we can rely, that the hon. Samuel D. Ingham, has been removed from the treasury department." [Norfolk Herald.

☞This thing has been freely talked of, for some time past. It is supposed to have an immediate connection with Mr. Calhoun's affairs—Mr. Ingham being his personal and political friend. There was also a strong report that Mr. Branch would be invited to resign. But so many things are said, that it is hard to know what is truth.

If the system should be carried out—numerous changes, either in the employment or principles of the newly appointed officers of the customs, &c. must be expected.

MR. O'CONNELL. Since having plead guilty to fourteen counts in the presentment against him, Mr. O'Connell seems to have lost much of his popularity. He is spoken of as a viper warmed into life on the bosom of Ireland, and stinging her—as having betrayed her with the Judas kiss to her perseeutors, &c. He seems to have belonged to that class of politicians, of which we have not a few, who cannot comprehend the force of the beautiful saying, that "truth is a victor without violence;" whose "reformation" is RUINATION. Such as has taken place in our own post-office department—by which we have lost fifty FRIENDS in the course of the last twelve months; about which we have said little, hoping no present amendment; and knowing, by long experience, that our paper would reach its destination, unless arrested by careless or incompetent persons, blockheads or knaves.

"FREE TRADE." The Charleston Patriot says the commercial accounts "are of the highest consequence to this country. The imposition of an additional duty of 1*d*. per pound on our principal raw material must materially affect those arrangements on which a profitable commercial intercourse has been held between the two countries. It will arm the American manufacturer with a new weapon, and constitute an additional impediment to the restoration of a liberal commercial system. We could not have expected such a measure from the ascendant party in England, who have sailed for so long a period under the colors of free trade."

☞No British ministry ever has regarded what is called "free trade'" except so far as British interests were concerned, and no British ministry ever will—if expecting to remain in power. Britain has a large stock of "free trade" talk—for exportation; but none for home use. This duty of a penny a pound upon cotton will be imposed—if it shall appear her interest to do it; it will chiefly rest in a tax upon her own consumption, and we have no right to find fault with it. We agree with the Charleston Patriot, that it will "arm the American manufacturer with a new weapon"—but only in demonstrating to those who most need a knowledge of the truth—the hollowness of British pretensions to "free trade."

"WEST INDIA TRADE." The Richmond Enquirer of the 24th ult. said—Yesterday, Mr. Maxwell, the eloquent and ingenious delegate of the borough of Norfolk, stated in the house of delegates in his speech upon the pilot bill, this striking fact, that since the recent opening of the West India trade, thirty vessels had cleared in one month from Norfolk, for the West Indies—a fact, as strongly indicative of the growing prosperity of Norfolk, as it is creditable to the diplomacy of the present administration.

[Was the West India trade shut, until recently? The loyalty in this matter is like that of king-ridden slaves in the old world—who, when they speak of the king, (though even the miserable thing in Portugal), always mean their own master. So all the Tom-Ritchie publishers in the United States, when they speak of a British vessel of war, humbly call it "his majesty's" ship. So also when a reference is made to the opening of the British West India ports, it is servilely called an opening of the West India ports—though the trade we have had with such ports, when open, did not exceed one third part of that which we had with the island of Cuba alone—which, we are told, is somewhere in the West Indies!

If the opening of the British West India ports does not help Norfolk—not even a partial good will arise from the trumpeted arrangement. It is not said how many of those vessels cleared from Norfolk for the British West Indies, nor how many of them were British. A letter from Nansemond, Va. dated 18th March, may serve to explain this—it says:

"The West India trade is doing the administration no good. Staves and other lumber for that market, are now lower than at any other time—and what is sold, goes in British bottoms?"]

A Bermuda paper remarks: Between the 1st and 15th of February, seventeen vessels from the United States arrived at Barbadoes, with cargoes; of this number, fourteen were American vessels, and the remainder British. The greater number came to an entry, the others went on.

Advices from Barbadoes inform that several American vessels had touched at Barbadoes, but very few sales had been effected, as many of the articles of American produce sell in the islands almost as low as they could be laid in, in the United States.

A St. Thomas paper observes, "We hear a great many complaints from the masters of American vessels, that instead of finding any advantage from the opening of the ports, they have a great difficulty to find a market—as no island they have touched at in the run down has afforded them the facilities of trade; the old system seems to be preferred by both parties."

The following articles shew that John Bull perfectly understood what he was about when he made his arrangement with us:

"The duties finally arranged, (says a late London paper), on the trade between Canada and the United States are 25 per cent less than those proposed by the late ministry, and all duties to cease in five years. Wheat and flour from the United States to come through Canada, to the West Indies, duty free. A hint is given that eventually both wheat and flour will come to this country, [England], from the states through Canada, duty free."

We have been favored with the following interesting extract of a letter from Messrs. Gates & Co. dated Montreal, 16th inst. [N. Y. Com. Adv.

"We expect to witness and have some little share of the largest year's business ever done in Montreal. We soon expect to hear that a new act, by the British parliament, will admit United States' wheat and other grains, rye flour and corn meal, into Canada, for consumption, and export to any quarter, free of duty; and also United States' wheat flour for export to the British West Indies, free of duty. And indeed, we should not be surprised, and such a thing is intimated as not improbable, that all the above named articles, including wheat flour, will be admitted free, not only for consumption, but for export to all quarters, even to England, as colonial, and on the same terms as if our own, and manufactured in the colonies. If this should prove correct, you will not, we apprehend, have gained so much by getting the British West India ports opened to you direct, and the revenue of your great western canal will somewhat suffer."

Messrs. Gates and Co. conclude with a very pretty sneer—but we richly deserve it, for our folly in mounting a political hobby horse that will essentially injure the navigation of the United States and benefit that of Great Britain, as the commercial tables of the present year will certainly shew—for we see the cross of St.

George frequently at our wharves since the opening of the navigation, though unfrequent for years past.

The following is well preserved here, for the sake of future comparison.

The total amount of the imports from the United States to the port of St. John, [New Brunswick], and its out-bays, during the year ending January 5th, 1831, was £82,906 18s. 9d. Of this amount there were—

Articles the produce of foreign Europe	23	18	11
" " foreign states in Asia	1	7	11
" " or manufacture of the United States,	5,458	8	11
Total in British ships,	5,483	15	9
Articles the produce or manufacture of the United States, in foreign vessels,	77,423	3	0

"Wooden nutmegs." A hogshead in which some tobacco was exported from New Orleans to Bremen, and the heading of which only, being of solid oak eight inches thick, and weighing 350 lbs. has been sent back to New Orleans. And there are plenty of "horn gum flints" in the stones and dirt that are packed up in bales of cotton, in several of the southern states. The character of these great staple articles for export should not be thus trifled with.

Fidelity. It was often emphatically observed of our late fast friend, col. Peter Little, (who so long and so well represented Baltimore in the congress of the U. States), that it was always known "where to find him"—meaning not only that he was in his place, on duty, but also that he acted upon certain established principles, to which he was ever faithful.

I accidentally took up a letter from him, a day or two past, dated May 16, 1829, containing a notice of all the yeas and nays called in the first session of the 20th congress, commencing 3d Dec. 1827, and ending 26th May, 1828. They amount to 156, and the previous question was called 23 times—together 179 times. Col. Little was present and voted on all these, 11 excepted—some of which latter he regarded as unimportant in the stages of the business as before the house, and was indifferent as to the results of them.

Chesapeake and Ohio canal. The following resolutions have passed both branches of the legislature of Pennsylvania—

Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania in general assembly met, That the senators of this state in the United States' senate, and the representatives of this state in congress, are requested to endeavor to procure the passage of a law authorising the subscription of a million of dollars on the part of the general government to the stock of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, to be expended on the western section,

And be it further resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing resolution to each of our senators and representatives in congress.

☞We should be a little astonished at this proceeding, in the face of the presidential veto, if any thing could astonish us at the present time, in the movements of political parties. But it is not our business to speak of them just now.

The canal is now navigable from Seneca creek, 21 miles, and the water will soon be let into two miles more. The tolls in the last week in March, on the part finished, amounted to about $3,000. The cost of carrying flour from Seneca to Georgetown was fifty cents per barrel—now seven cents, tolls included.

New Hampshire erect. We meet with the following in the "Richmond Enquirer"—

The Boston Gazette confirms the following passage in a letter from Concord to the N. York Courier, giving an account of the recent election in that state:—"We did not know it before—but this election has developed the fact that New Hampshire is decisively an anti-tariff state; in other words, opposed to the system of Mallary and others, who would keep the tariff as it is."

Philadelphia. Seven or eight hundred persons having signed a call for a meeting of the friends of Henry Clay, resident in the city and county of Philadelphia, on Monday last, the 4th instant—at 4 o'clock, about five thousand persons being assembled, John Sergeant was called to the chair by general acclamation, and Samuel Richards, John S. Warner, Lawrence Shuster, appointed vice presidents, and John Scholefield and William Fitler, secretaries.

The morning had been very inclement, and a small meeting was expected; and as it yet rained some, and threatened to rain heavily, the meeting proceeded to the hall of the Musical Fund Society, which is capable of holding three thousand people, and it was immediately filled. The meeting was then opened with an appropriate address by the president—who was followed by Josiah Randall, concluding a strong speech with moving the appointment of a committee to draft and report resolutions to the meeting; and James Harper, John B. Trevor, Joseph Akin, Adam Woelper, J. P. Wetherill, R. A. Parish, and Samuel Brashears, were appointed that committee. In the absence of the committee, David Paul Brown, being called on, addressed the meeting in a speech that was warmly received; at the close of which, the committee reported a number of resolutions decidedly disapproving "the policy and conduct of Andrew Jackson, as president of the United States," as having more than "realised the apprehensions of his opponents," &c. and expressing the highest confidence in "the magnanimous spirit and manly patriotism, political experience and distinguished public services of Henry Clay."

We have arranged certain late proceedings in several of the states, concerning the next presidential election, (for or against the present incumbent) and shall add the resolutions above alluded to—and publish the whole together, at an early day, for future use.

Virginia. The Richmond Enquirer of March 21, says—There were several bills passed yesterday, connected with internal improvement. Among these, were: 1st, the bill establishing a company to erect a rail road from Winchester to a point at or near Harper's ferry, with a capital of $300,000—2ndly, a bill establishing the Loudoun rail road, from the Potomac river, at the mouth of the Ketocton creek, to Ashby's gap turnpike, (about thirty-one miles), with a capital of $400,000; all of which, we understand, will unquestionably be raised by private subscription; and 3d, establishing a turnpike road from Danville, in Pennsylvania, to Evansham, with a capital of $100,000. We ask Mr. Niles, whether these things do not look like doing something besides talking?

☞We are happy to say that this looks like doing. "Mr. Niles" much wishes Virginia to become a tariff state—and she will, as soon as her farmers shall understand, by feeling, the importance of the home market—which will be most certainly made known to them by cheapened transportations of their products. No person who sends his tobacco to market, by rolling, and employs two negroes and three or four horses, thus to transport it through water and mud—will make a good tariff man, until he abandons the practice.

But—what are the proceedings in Virginia compared with those in the little state of New Jersey, as shewn in the following paragraph:

There are now authorised or in progress in New Jersey—a canal from the Delaware to the Raritan—a canal from Phillipsburgh opposite Easton to the Hudson—a rail road from Patterson to Jersey City—a rail road from Somerville to Elizabeth town—a rail road from Camden to Amboy—and a rail road from Camden to Salem county.

Profligacy and poverty. Under reduced allowances, it will require for the support of the king and queen £110,000; for the salaries of officers of the household, £130,000; again, for the expenses of the household, or the tradesmen's bills, £180,000; for royal bounties and charities, £23,000; and for the royal pensions £75,000; amounting in all to the truly royal sum of £518,000 per annum. As a contrast to this, Mr. Hunt, said in parliament, that in one of the districts he had visited, the working people earned from 4*s.* 6*d.* to 4*s.* a week; in another the highest they could earn was 5*s.* Their breakfast was oatmeal broth, their dinner potatoes, their evening meal oatmeal broth again. They paid £6 a year for the wretched hovel they inhabited, 2*s.* a quarter for taxes, and 2*s.* a quarter for the clergy; with 1½*d* for each chimney in the dwelling. They were so ragged and dirty they could not think of going to church.

CLAIMS ON FRANCE. We learn by letters from Paris of a recent date, says the Boston Patriot, that there is reason to believe the commission appointed by the king of the French to examine into American claims on France, will report favorably to their allowance; and that an early treaty arrangement for their liquidation may be with some confidence anticipated, should the present ministry continue in office.

Then it is possible that the revolution in France may be of great pecuniary advantage to us. The claims would never have been settled under the old dynasty.

THE LATE PRINCE OF CONDE. There is a great dispute in France as to the will of this prince, who committed suicide, shortly after the flight of king Charles. He bequeathed the enormous sum of 64 millions of francs, about 12 millions of dollars, to the duke d'Aumale, third son of the present king of the French, and about 15 millions, or three millions of dollars, to the baroness de Feuchere, an English woman who lived with him—on the ground that the will was the result of intimidation and sinister influence, &c. The baroness is also suspected of having caused the death of the old man, though the jury determined that he had hanged himself.

MILITARY LIBERTY! A seaman on board the U. S. frigate, dated Guerrero, Callao bay, Nov. 28, 1830, thus writes to his father in Boston:

"We have been at Valparaiso, Coquimbo, Guayaquil, Payta, Juan Fernandez, and the city of Lima. The latter I admire most of any, from its magnificent buildings and its grand and ancient looking churches, which excite in the foreigner much curiosity. This country is designated by the term of free, and the people are as free as a flock of sheep broke from their fold, and ranging the wilderness at the mercy of every wolf, who chooses to take them under his protection; so much for South American liberty."—Poulson's Adv.

NEWSPAPERS IN THE STATE OF NEW YORK. An extract from Mr. William's State Register for 1831, gives the number of newspapers in the state at 234, of which about 70 are favorable to the present administration and 80 against it; 46 of the latter number are anti-masonic. In Putman and Rockland counties only, no papers are published. In the city of New York, there are 51 papers of all kinds; daily 11, semi-weekly 10, weekly 24, semi-monthly 5, monthly 1. There are supposed to be 16,000 daily sheets published, 18,000 semi-weekly, and 50,000 weekly. The whole number of papers printed in the city in a year, is supposed to be 9,536,000. The paper consumed by the journals of the state, in a year, is estimated at above 33,000 reams, and the cost of it, at $4 a ream, is $132,000. [Journal of Commerce.

TOBACCO. The whole amount of tobacco brought to Philadelphia annually, is about 2,000 hhds. from Kentucky; 400 from Virginia, and 100 from Maryland; about 2,000 of this is consumed at home, and 500 exported.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

The parliament assembled on the 3rd of Feb. among the new members were the famous Mr. Jeffry, of Edinburg, and the equally famous Mr. Orator Hunt—who had already made two long speeches. He made a motion that the pardon of all persons convicted of riots, burnings, &c. should be prayed for—for which he got only one other than his own vote.

There is a good deal of talk about reform, and a reduction of the civil list and the receipts of the priesthood. The great dignitaries of the latter will, probably, be chiefly struck out.

Ireland was exceedingly disturbed, and lively apprehensions were again entertained for the peace of the country. In the house of commons, Mr. O'Gorman Mahon gave a terrible description of the poverty and distress of the people; he said that in one parish in the county of Mayo, a short time back, 4,631 persons were without food, even a day's supply, without clothing, or bed to lie down upon. His remedy for such evils, was the re-establishment of Ireland as she was before the union, with her own parliament.* The chancellor of the exchequer, in reply said—"no man has a greater horror of war than I have; and civil war being the worst form that war can assume, my detestation of it is in equal proportion. But at the same time even civil war is preferable to the dismemberment and destruction of the empire." (Loud and reiterated cheers.)

It appears by the debates that the large sum of £572,000 of the public money has already been expended on the Rideau canal, in Canada, and that £693,000 more for that canal and £250,000 for the Granville canal, was estimated as necessary. Lord Althrop (chancellor of the exchequer) submitted to the house of commons, whether it was better to sacrifice what had been expended, or proceed with these works, the ultimate cost of which was not determinable, and a committee was raised for the purpose of considering the subject. The new ministry thus avoid the responsibility of those proceedings—which was thought by some as casting a censure on their predecessors.

Great excitement was caused by the proposition of the ministers to lay a duty of one penny per lb. on all cotton imported, (in addition to the present duty of 6 per cent.) and allow a drawback of like amount on all cotton goods exported. It brought about a rise in the price of cotton on hand.

There was a dreadful snow storm in England about the 1st Feb.—pretty much such an one as we had last winter. Many stage coaches had to be digged out of the drifts—the travelling, for some days, was of course, interrupted. Some of the stage drivers and guards perished with the cold.

It appears from parliamentary papers, lately published, that the whole number of persons employed, and receiving salaries in all the public offices and departments of Great Britain and Ireland, in the year 1827, was 23,912, and the aggregate amount of the salaries was £2,788,907 11*s.* 9*d.* The number had been reduced by 1,502 since 1819, and the amount had been reduced £378,534.

The number of persons employed in the United Kingdom, in the department of the customs, in 1827, was 11,346, in the excise 6,491, and in the stamps 519. The number employed in the department of the post office in Great Britain was 1,371, and in Ireland 323.

A very magnificent ball was given by the king and queen at Brighton, on the night of the 24th Jan. About 1,000 persons, of the high grades, were present, dressed in the highest fashion. The whole party had not cleared out before 5 o'clock in the morning.

FRANCE.

The regular army of France would, in the month of February, amount to 350,000 men.

The Jews are admitted to the full enjoyment of all civil rights, in France.

The ex-king Charles has been sued at Edinburg, by count Plaffenhoffen for 30,000*l.* sterling. Some strange revelations are expected to be made in the trial of the case.

The naval force of France was being placed in a state of preparation for war. Many ships were fitting for speedy service.

Cannon, howitzers and mortars are daily arriving at Lyons, from Algiers. They are sent on to the north.

* This Mr. O'Gorman Mahon made a great deal of disorder in the house. He made his strokes right and left, and seemed disposed to "meet" any body and every body, as the case might be. Nothing but the address, good humor, and resolution of the speaker kept him within bounds.

Orders had been given to the artillery corps, by the minister of war, to prepare and equip 100 field batteries of 6 pieces of cannon each, by the end of January.—These orders having been executed, marshal Soult has just ordered 50 other batteries to be formed, by which the artillery will be carried to 900 pieces of cannon, with their horses.

On the 23d January last, a ball, the most splendid ever known in Paris, took place at the opera house of that capital. It occupied the thoughts of all the fashion for a fortnight. It was for the benefit of the poor, and the receipts amounted to one hundred and fifty thousand francs—30,000 dollars. The decorations of the theatre were of surpassing magnificence. All the royal family were present and on the floor; all the foreign legations in their richest uniforms; Lafayette, surrounded by his grand-children, manifested the goodness of his nature, in the mild delight with which he appeared to survey the scene. The dancing continued until 6 o'clock in the morning.

BELGIUM.

The accounts from this country are so mixed up with rumors and speculations, that it is no easy matter to gather the facts—but nothing of immediate importance has happened since our last notices of events.

A Dutch lieut. Von Speyck, 18 or 20 years old, commanding a gun boat with 31 men, which run aground and was likely to fall into the hands of the Belgians, set fire to her magazine, and destroyed all on board, (himself included), except two persons, as well as killed 12 and wounded 21 of the Belgic troops, which were close at hand to take possession.

GREECE.

Greece seems to have been almost forgotten during the great struggle among the higher powers. Her affairs appear to be in a desperate state; she has no money in her treasury, and the president Capo d'Istria is accused of using every art to prevent the election of a sovereign, which they look upon as the only means of saving her from ruin. Prince Paul of Wertemburg, a minor, seems to be considered as the most proper person for the crown.

SPAIN.

The treasury is at the lowest ebb. A strong disposition prevailed to make the clergy disgorge the amount of 80 millions, reals; and a forced loan of 160 millions is spoken of. Spain was endeavoring to put her army on a better footing—but the means were deficient.

ITALY.

It is considered as very important that the prince de Carignan, a Sardinian, has received the command of the king's army, in place of the Austrian general Antucci. It is a triumph of natural and liberal feelings.

LATER NEWS

From Paris papers of the 11th of February, received at New York.

A telegraphic communication says that a revolution has broken out in Italy. It was reported that the duke of Modena had been killed by the people. The tri-colored cockade was mounted by the insurgents. There had been some fighting between the troops and the people.

Cardinal Capillari has been elected pope.

Austria has placed every thing on the war establishment in her Italian possessions, and her force is a powerful one.

News from Constantinople show a disposition on the part of the grand seignor to avail himself of the embarrassments of Russia, to evade the execution of the recent treaty.

The cholera morbus appears to be still proceeding westward, and has appeared in Austria.

The Polish diet, 83 to 13, has placed the executive power in a commission of five members, and declared the independence of the Polish nation. Field marshal Diebitsch was advancing, filled with the hope of victory, and seemingly resolved to execute the severest punishment on the Poles. But the latter appear to have a good spirit of resistance, with many excellent officers of the school of Napoleon.

The affairs of Belgium remained unsettled, and there is much speculation about them.

The run upon the Irish banks for gold was continued, without much apparent effect, except to distress the poor people who had grain and meat to dispose of—the merchants and others refusing to purchase any thing, except of sheer necessity only. Hence large quantities of corn offered at Cork, Limerick, &c. was carried back by the country people, and the price of pork had fallen 6*s* 6*d*. the cwt.

There are apprehensions of a famine along the coast from Sligo to Galway, and in Ennis, in Ireland. The last crop of potatoes was already nearly exhausted.—The prospect a-head is spoken of as "awful."

The following extract from an English paper, shows to what a shameful extent the tythe system is carried in that country. The parson who could receive such contribution for his support, must have the effrontery of Belzebub himself. "In the Portsmouth parish account for last year, there is a curious item of five pounds five shillings paid to the rector for tythes on the poor house garden!!"

Great distress prevails in the Highlands of Scotland, the poor people being expelled in crowds from the hills and glens of their ancestors, by their landlords, to make room for sheep. This famous breed of men seems about to be exterminated. They are forced to emigrate—or starve.

The ship Mahmoud is about to be launched at Constantinople. She has a flush deck, and is nine feet wider in her beam than the largest [British] line of battle ships! Her length is 234 feet, and her width 63 feet; and her sides are four feet six inches thick. On her main deck she is to mount long brass 32 pounders; on her middle deck, 42 pounders; and on her lower deck, 68 pounders—besides four or more guns carrying enormous stone balls.

There is a report that an insurrection has broken out in Finland, and that the Russians had been driven out of the whole country, the strong fortress of Sweaburg, the Gibralter of the north, excepted.

All the troops stationed near Petersburg had marched towards Poland. The Russians look for a desperate resistance, and well they may, for the peasants are reported to have converted their sythes into swords, and their pitch-forks into spears, to harrass the Russian detachments. We know what happened in Spain, when every man seemed to regard the war against Frenchmen as his own. The Poles have had some skirmishes with the Russians, and beat them.

The bey of Oran has chosen France for his residence—with a suite of 170 persons, including one hundred women, 36 white and 64 black, his whole seraglio, he had embarked on board the French frigate Victory, for Toulon. It is said that, in money and jewels, he has only 1,200,000 francs.

Colombia remains—as it was, the prey of contending chieftains. All the department of Magdalena, except the capital, Carthagena, had revolted against gen. Moutilla, and he was preparing for a siege.

LATEST NEWS.

From London papers of the 22d February.

On the 14th February the factious Carlists in Paris were impudent enough to celebrate a funeral mass for the duke of Berri—the chiefs of the party met at the church to hatch treason, and bow down to a bust of the baby-duke of Bordeaux! These things happened in the late beautiful church of St. Germain l'Auxerrois. The people broke in upon the meeting, and would have cast the priests into the Seine, but for the national guards—yet the latter joined the people in demanding the destruction of the church, which was accomplished; and soon the cross and crowns that adorned it, fell thundering on the pavement to the music of the Marseilles hymn. In the night, there was a mighty cry of "down with the priests." In the morning, the multitude stripped the church of all things moveable, and distributed the fragments in all directions. On the 15th, the church of St. Paul was attacked, and all objects ornamented with fleurs-de lis destroyed—and the cross pulled down. The tri-color was hoisted on various churches, and a bust of Louis-Philip placed on the platform of St. Germain, surrounded by flags. On the 18th, the crowd proceeded to the palace of the archbishop of Paris,* to burn it—it was preserved by the firmness of the national guard, but its furniture and pictures were destroyed—nothing but the walls remained! After which several other churches were divested of their ornaments of crosses with fleurs-de lis, and all the emblems of the victories of the duke of Angouleme were effaced. Had the popular fury contented itself with cooling the fiery zeal of the Carlists assembled at the church of St. Germain's by a ducking in the Seine, no one would blame it—but the rage of the people was vented on senseless things, and fragments of articles found in the churches, or archbishop's palace, were handed about, and offered for sale, with coarse epithets and great glee.

The preceding is a mere sketch of the outrages. A general slaughter of the priests seems hardly prevented—the many for the acts of a few. In some cases, parties of the national guards were disarmed by the people—but, in general, they maintained the order of the metropolis, prudently directing, as it were, the popular ardor in cases wherein they could not resist it. The king gave way to the public feeling, and issued an ordinance to efface the fleur-de lis from the great seal of France. He reviewed the battalions of the national guard, and addressed them. They appeared resolved to stand by him, and the public peace.

The 17th and 18th were passed in great agitations. They reached the chambers, which abounded with acts of violence—the members making wild exclamations, with maddened gesticulations—many wishing to be heard, and none willing to listen. In the meantime, the work of destruction against all remembrances of the Bourbon family was going on. The images of our Saviour were removed from the palace of justice, and many of the crosses taken down. A number of persons supposed to be concerned in the plans of the Carlists were arrested, and a warrant was issued for the apprehension of the archbishop of Paris.

The public mind remained unsettled as on the 20th. A civil war was expected. The minister of the interior resigned. A few white cockades were seen. Some degree of order was restored to the chambers, but the debates were exceedingly ardent.

The very latest accounts impress us with a belief that these violences were about to terminate, through the moderation, devotion and power of the national guard—and, perhaps, the political atmosphere may be purified by the storm. We do not see Lafayette in these transactions. A new ministry was to be formed, of which Soult and Lafitte were to be members.

From Poland we hear of the continued enthusiasm of the people, which is not at all checked by the approach of the Russian armies. The Jews are taking a decided part in favor of liberty. Some small affairs had taken place—the Russians will be harrassed in the advance, but the Poles seem resolved to take their grand stand near Warsaw. Military operations had been impeded by the season, and the Poles expected great advantages from the humidity of the weather, promising a general thaw.

The king of France having refused the crown of Belgium for his son, the duke of Nemours,—prince Charles of Naples was spoken of. But nothing had been determined.

The accounts of insurrections in Italy are confirmed. Romagna, Modena, Piombino, Tuscany, Lucca and Genoa, &c. were in revolution. Provisional governments were forming. The troops at Genoa took part with the people.

In Ireland, Mr. O'Connel seems to be regarded as having given up his projects—and "a glorious triumph" as claimed for the administration of lord Anglesea. Eleven regiments of militia were ordered to Ireland.

The business of taxation and reform occupied the British parliament.

In the house of commons, on the 21st, the chancellor of the exchequer said:

His plan was this: he proposed to substitute for the present 6 per cent. ad valorem duty on printed calicoes, a duty of 5-8 of 1d per pound on all imports of raw cotton, without any drawback export duty—excepting, of course, from the operation of the tax, the cotton of our East Indian and other possessions. He meant also, for reasons which he would state on another occasion, to allow the drawback duty to operate for three months.

Sir R. Peel was understood to ask the noble lord how he meant to make good the loss to the revenue from his proposed reduction of duty on printed calicoes?

The chancellor of the exchequer said, that the amount of the East India duty was so trifling, as to be almost beneath consideration. The amount of the other duty would not make up the loss in question; but the amount of that duty, together with that of the duty on printed calicoes, would make it up.

This proposition for an additional duty upon cotton, produced great dissatisfaction at Liverpool and Manchester, and deputations were immediately sent to London, who discussed the matter with the chancellor of the exchequer.

Consols, Feb. 22—78¾ to 78 7-8. Orders have been sent to the tower to get ready 200,000 stand of arms.

The affairs of Canada appear to occupy considerable attention in parliament, as to financial arrangements—salaries, taxes, &c.

The latest letter from Liverpool, dated Feb 23, says—Our deputation returned from London, having obtained the chancellor's consent finally to fix the new duty at 5-8 per lb: or about 10*a* 11 per cent. instead of the old duty, and to give up all drawback on printed calicoes; the period for the latter to be abandoned at about 3 months hence. The time for levying the new duty on cotton is not yet fixed; it may be very early. American flour in bond not lively, but more inquired after for the last two days. New York flour has been sold at 35*s*. but not held firm.

* It appears that he gave orders to celebrate the funeral mass of the duke of Berri.

BRIEF NOTICES.

Imprisonment for debt. The legislature of Massachusetts has passed a law exempting from imprisonment for debt, all debtors for sums under ten dollars, and all females for debts of any amount contracted after the passage of the law. The law is intended as an experiment to test the advantages of the policy of abolishing imprisonment for debt in all cases.

The legislature of Ohio adjourned on the 14th ult. after a session of three months.

They passed an act for erecting toll gates on the national road. The governor is to draw money enough from the state treasury to put up the gates and houses—to appoint a superintendent of repairs, &c. The gates are to be put up 20 miles apart. The treasury is to be reimbursed, from the tolls, the money which had been borrowed from it for the expenses of the outfits.

Albert Gallatin, esq. has been elected president of the "national bank," a lately incorporated institution in the city of New York.

Murders. We hear of several horrid ones recently committed by slaves—and a lady, with a view to a robbery, had her skull fractured, throat cut, and arm broken, by a negro man and woman, near Vienna, Maryland.

Gibbs, the pirate, under sentenee of death at New York, for murder and piracy on board the brig Vineyard, has made a confession; and among other things stated that he commanded a cruiser from Cuba, and captured a valuable American ship, all of the crew of which he caused to be murdered except the lady of a passenger, whom he forced for several weeks to be his wife, and then cut her throat and threw her overboard, lest she might expose his atrocities. This horrible villain is a native of Rhode Island, said to have consanguinity with one of the oldest and most respectable families of the state. Gibbs is only his assumed name—his real one is said to be known to his counsel, and they ought to keep it.

The oyster war. One of the many vessels belonging to Philadelphia, illegally fishing for oysters in the Chesapeake, and also furnished with illegal instruments, has been captured, and her crew committed to jail at Centreville, Maryland. It appears there are five counts against each of the prisoners, on each of which they are liable to fine and imprisonment—the fine will about equal the value of the vessel and cargo, 500 dollars, and they may be imprisoned for several months—8 months on more than one of the counts. The five persons engaged in the capture it is said will divide 50 dollars each—"prize money." So we go.

The Susquehannah. The Columbia, (Pa.) Spy of March 24, says—The river business has not been so lively during the past week as it was the week previous; but a considerable number of arks have arrived and passed us by on their way to a market. The river is getting low, and we understand the Shamokin and Nanticoke dams are passed with difficulty—at the latter we learn there are upwards of fifty arks and rafts waiting for a rise of water.

[These are the obstructions which Maryland complains of.]

The North Eastern boundary. We learn from the following paragraph, which we copy from the Portland Daily Evening Advertiser, that the official communication of the decision of the king of the Netherlands, on the boundary question, was received at Portland on Friday last, and communicated to the legislature in secret session.

Yesterday the official decision of the ex-king of the Netherlands, was brought to the executive of this state, by a special messenger from Washington, who, we understand, has come in great haste, in order to be here before the rising of the legislature—a haste, which present appearances in that body do not demand. This decision, it is reported, does not differ from the decision as published in the British papers, and copied into the papers of this country. It is also reported that a protest was offered by Mr. Preble, in which he recapitulates the reasons of sir Charles Bagot, who seems to think the British have gained all they wanted. The reasons of his "majesty," of the Netherlands, or of the "illustrious arbitrator," as president Jackson styled him, are said to be of a curious, and extraordinary character.

A secret session has been held in the senate this forenoon on the reception of the communication which was immediately transmitted by the governor; and apparently it was of some importance, as they were with closed doors a good part of the forenoon. Measures of some interest, it is rumored, were adopted. This communication was transmitted to the house, the latter part of the forenoon; and a session was ordered immediately on purpose to discuss the subject matter.

The Portland Advertiser mentions that the injunction of secrecy had been removed on the proceedings of the legislature in regard to the north eastern boundary. A copy of the decision has been transmitted by Mr. Van Buren, accompanied with the protest of Mr. Preble, and other documents appertaining to the decision. These, together with the message of the governor, were referred to a committee, of which Mr. Deane, of Ellisworth, was chairman. The report of Mr. Deane considers the arbitration not binding, as the arbiter has not given a decision, but advice as to certain disputed points. The report and resolutions were accepted with great unanimity.

Chesapeake and Ohio canal. Thirty thousand barrels of flour, with much other merchandise, descended that part of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, [23 or 24 miles], which is completed, since the water was let in—or ten days, to the 1st inst.

United States bank stock was sold last week at 28¼ per cent. advance.

Runaways. Nineteen negroes seized a lighter, and boldly crossing Ocracock bar, put to sea. Boats were sent out after them, and they were rescused from almost certain destruction, on the edge of the gulf stream—for the lighter was so leaky as to be abandoned, and in the night there was a severe gale.

Dismal Swamp canal. The Norfolk Herald informs us that the receipt of tolls in the present year is 1,000 dollars more than in the same time last year. The trade on all well located and well made roads and canals naturally increases, because the cheapened cost of transportation is continually extending its influence.

Whaling. From the Hudson, N. Y. Republican. It gives us pleasure to announce to our readers, the arrival at this port, on Sunday evening last, of the ship Alexander Mansfield, capt. Bennet, from the South Atlantic ocean, with a full cargo, having on board 2,020 barrels right whale, and 180 do. sperm oil, and about 20,600 lbs. whale bone. She was towed up from New York by the steam boat Swiftsure, and arrived here about 8 o'clock in the evening, under the discharge of cannon and the cheers of the citizens, who had assembled on the docks in great numbers to witness her arrival.

This ship, (the first fitted out by our enterprising citizens for whaling), sailed from this place on the first of June last, and in less than ten months returns with a full cargo—being one of the most successful voyages ever performed. The crew are in fine health and spirits.

Another whale ship, (the third) is now fitting out at our docks, which we understand will sail shortly.

The New York canals were expected to be navigable in their whole lines, on the 15th April, inst.

Baltimore inspections—quarter ending 1st April 1831—165 623 bbls. and 3,702 ½ bbls. wheat flour; 24 hhds. 814 bbls corn meal, 1,290 kegs butter; 7,247 kegs lard; 993 bbls. and 11 ½ bbls. Baltimore packed beef, and 863 bbls. do. pork—102 bbls. foreign packed beef, and 1,161 do. pork; 513 hhds. flaxseed.

The Welland canal. The legislature of Upper Canada has passed a bill to authorise a loan of £50,000 sterling, to complete this canal.

New banks. Several new banking companies have been incorporated at the present session of the legislature of New York.

Night rainbow. A beautiful one was observed at Harrisburg between 2 and 4 o'clock, A. M. of the 24th March last.

Mr. Mordecai M. Noah, surveyor of the port of New York, has again become one of the proprietors of the "New York Courier and Enquirer." It is not stated that he has resigned his office.

Debt. A bill for abolishing imprisonment for debt, has passed the house of assembly of New York, by a vote of 79 to 24. It is expected to pass the senate without serious difficulty.

Mr. Irwin. The report that this gentleman, lately a member of congress from Pennsylvania, had been appointed U. S. judge for the Western district of that state, in the place of judge Wilkins, resigned, is positively contradicted. It seems probable, however—that Mr. Irwin had been fixed on; but it was found that he could not be constitutionally appointed, having voted, in the last congress, to increase the compensation of certain judges—among them the judge for western Pennsylvania. But Messrs. Miller, of Pennsylvania, and De Witt, of New York, members of the last congress, (and worthy and capable), have been appointed, by the secretary of the treasury, commissioners of insolvent debtors, under the act of the last session, for their relief.

Martinico. A letter of the 9th March says—"There are thirty or forty negroes to be executed this week.—We still have accounts of some distressing fires on the sugar estates, and I much fear there must be a good deal of bloodshed before the insurrection is entirely quelled."

THE CHEROKEES.

New Echota, (Cherokee nation), March 19.

The law of Georgia, making it a high misdemeanor for a white man to reside in the Cherokee nation without taking the oath of allegiance and obtaining a permit from his excellency the governor, or his agent, is now in a course of execution. On last Sabbath, after the usual time of divine service, the Georgia guard arrived, and arrested three of our citizens, viz. rev. Samuel A. Worcester, missionary of the American board for foreign missions; Mr. John F. Wheeler, one of our printers of the Cherokee Phœnix; and Mr. Thomas Gann—the two last mentioned are citizens, with Cherokee families. Mr. Isaac Proctor, assistant missionary at Carmel, had the evening before been taken, and came with the guard as a prisoner. They were conducted to the residence of Mr. Tarvin, where they were kept under guard during the night. In the morning they were marched off by the way of Etahwah, where, we presume, the same evening the rev. John Thompson, another missionary of the American board, was arrested.

Our object is now simply to give facts as they have occurred before our eyes, and not to indulge ourselves in remarks—the scene has just commenced, and we must wait until it closes. Although our readers will recollect, that the law under which these worthy men are taken is express, and the punishment severe, imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than four years, yet it would be doing injustice to the good people of Georgia to say, that the law, enacted as this has been at a time of great excitement, will assuredly be executed. The court may honorably acquit them, and thus save the credit of the state. It does not become us, therefore, to anticipate the result, and comment upon these proceedings at this time. Nor are we disposed to censure the guard, for doing what they undoubtedly feel to be their duty, as officers of the state; we can speak of them only as respects their conduct in doing that duty. We must observe, however, that we cannot see the propriety and the use of such a military movement to arrest, without a process, a few unarmed and peaceable individuals; and we had rather by a great deal they had come on some other day instead of the Sabbath. The men of whom they were in pursuit, were not going to run away and leave the country; they would have been as sure of finding them on any other day as on the Sabbath.

In justice to the commanding officer, (col. Nelson) we must say, that he acted with a deal of civility and kindness towards his prisoners while in this place. He was so accomodating as to allow Mr. Worcester to return with a guard in the evening, and take supper and attend worship with his family—he also gave him the same privilege in the morning. We wish we could say that all acted kindly, but we are obliged to notice quite a different behaviour; a behaviour, however, we have reason to believe, disapproved by the commander. [Phœnix.

[The author of the following letter is a full blooded Indian.] [Amer. Daily Advertiser.

Washington city, Feb. 6, 1831.

Mr. Elliot Cresson—My friend: Permit me to address you as such, in which character I view all the humane and benevolent who exercise sympathetic feelings for the Indians under their trials and sufferings. Far was it from the expectation of Washington and Penn, when they entered into treaties of peace with our ancestors, that we, their descendants, should so soon feel the inconveniences of violated faith, which they and other great men assured them should endure for ever. Even now, do we believe that if partisan newspapers and leaders, and aspiring politicians, did not throw clouds and darkness upon our rights, that justice would be continued to our race by the people of the United States. It was with surprise, and as unexpected to me as the noise of thunder in a cloudless sky, that I read the remarks of judge Wilkins of Pittsburg, calculated to tarnish the fair fame of William Penn, whose kindness, honor, integrity and justice is above all price, and cherished in the remembrance even of the South Western Indians. Is it true that the good people of Pennsylvania hold their tenures of land, forced from the bleeding and weeping Indians, who, like the wounded deer, driven off by hunters from their standing forests and running waters, have languished away their doleful existence in the remote regions of the west? Where is the injustice of that man recorded? It is not in the heart of an Indian! Did he ever compel Indians to be amenable to Pennsylvania laws, and at the same time denied them the right of evidence in her courts? If laws were passed by him, they were not to oppress but to protect. Sir, we have nothing to do with the party warfare which rages in these United States. But politicians should not, in this enlightened age, seek the examples of cruelty practised by some of the colonists, under British and Spanish influence, to justify their favorite chief.

But I am yet to learn of the time and manner of Penn's injustice to my ancestors or to other tribes of Indians who were his immediate neighbors. If the plea of state necessity, in thus exercising oppression, to effect the removal of the children of the forest, (as they have been kindly termed), be permitted to obtain, and to disregard treaties, trample on the dignity of the supreme court, and set at defiance the constitutional acts of the majority; they "must not lay the flattering unction to their souls" that its disorganising tendency will cease at the point of the extinguishment of Indian rights. It will extend far, and cut the vitals of these United States. It is a twin brother to nullification, which has reared its head, and spoke the discordant sentiments of disunion in South Carolina. May I then, feeble as must be the voice of an Indian, raise it on this occasion, and call the attention of your people to the dangerous rock of state necessity.—We are all entitled to law, and receive it as the boon guaranteed to us by the great men who established the government, which declares that all men are by nature equal, and possess certain inalienable rights—the pursuit of happiness, and the enjoyment of liberty and life. This is what is right, and demanded by the Cherokee nation, whose rights are by treaty engrafted into the United States. They have yet a little spot of earth given them by the great king of kings, on which they desire to repose, and raise their children. For the love of righteousness and charity let them enjoy it without molestation.

What have they done that they are outlawed from the favor of the executive of the general government? They have learned to read the word of God, and to worship him in spirit and in truth. They have only practised the lessons of Washington and other great men, the illustrious predecessors of the present chief magistrate of the United States. No—my friends, the people of Pennsylvania! to you I call for help to save my nation from destruction. You have done much, for which we hope to be grateful; but preserve us still in your generous sympathy—let us live and enjoy the blessings of civilization and religion on the land of our fathers. Yours, respectfully,

JOHN RIDGE.

"POLITICS OF THE DAY."

From the Southern Times.

Washington, March 3rd, 1831.

To the editor of the Southern Times.

I perceive in your paper of the 19th ultimo, the following extract of a letter written by me to a friend in Columbia, to which my attention has been called, with the request to correct a part of it.

EXTRACT.

"I have just learned from our friend ——— that col. Drayton submitted the name of Mr. Findley, of Charleston, to the president with a recommendation signed by Hayne, Huckolls, Martin, McDuffie, Barnwell, and another or two, for the office vacated by the lamented death of John Gadsden, and, that the appointment was refused on the ground "that he had been in favor of a state convention and was a reputed nullifier;" this information he, Mr. ———, said he (the president) received from Blair, and I think he added judge Smith.

I have since learned that gen. Blair did not give the president that information, but that he read or mentioned in his presence a toast about "disunion, &c." by a gentleman of the name of Finley, at a dinner in Charleston—but on comparing the names he became satisfied that it was not the individual for whom the application was then pending, and he immediately threw the paper containing the toast in the fire. I have no doubt the statement about the toast, was the ground on which Mr. ——— (as well as myself) came to the conclusion, that general Blair informed the president that Mr. Finley was a nullifier.

It is also stated in the extract, "I think he added judge Smith." Judge Smith's name was mentioned in Mr. ——— conversation with me, but Mr. ——— says, not as giving the information to the president, but as being in favor (with gen. Blair), of another gentleman for that appointment, so that the error was mine, in confounding the two points of conversation.

Exact and strict fairness, to these gentlemen, in a matter that would not otherwise perhaps be deemed important, were, it not for the severity of the newspaper remarks and their extended circulation, induces me to request that you publish this letter.

WARREN R. DAVIS.

Copy of a letter from Mr. Blair to hon. R. W. Barnwell.

DEAR SIR: I desire to know whether at any time I informed you that the president of the United States had refused to appoint, (or nominate), Mr. Finley, of Charleston, as district attorney for South Carolina, on the avowed ground that he had been in favor of a state convention and was a reputed nullifier? An immediate answer will oblige your obedient servant, &c.

Hon. R. W. Barnwell. JAMES BLAIR.
March 4th, 1831.

—

DEAR SIR: Your note, I presume, has reference to a publication which appeared some time since, in the Southern Times and Gazette, of South Carolina. I must therefore premise that I, by no means understand that communication, as conveying the idea that the knowledge of the motives which influenced the president in passing over the recommendation of Mr. Finley, for appointment to the office of district attorney, was derived from you.

It imputed to you the information, conveyed to the president, of the political opinions of Mr. Finley, and that this was the intention of the writer, I think you have received assurance.

I shall not, however, prescribe to you the construction of the letter, or the questions you may desire to have answered. I shall therefore state, in answer to your inquiries, that my knowledge that the president refused to nominate Mr. Finley explicitly on account of his political opinions, was derived from another source. You never did, at any time, state to me that the president refused to appoint, or nominate Mr. Finley, on the ground that he had been in favor of convention and a reputed nullifier. Your obedient servant,

R. W. BARNWELL.

Hon. James Blair.
March 14th, 1831.

—

REMARKS ON THE ABOVE,
By the editor of the Southern Times.

We cheerfully publish the above letter from the hon. Warren R. Davis, and the appended correspondence which has been forwarded to us by general Blair. If there had been any misapprehensions of the letter formerly published, and the part that any one bore in the matter to which it alluded, we are glad to have it in our power to correct them. We cannot, observe, in adverting to this affair again, that the remarks thrown out by ourselves in the first moment of indignation at the assurance, that a party constituting a majority of the people of this state, and composed of as pure patriots and as intelligent and honorable men, as the same number taken indiscrimmately, from any portion of the civilized earth, at any period of time, had been placed under the ban of proscription by the president of the United States, have been the subject of much animadversion throughout the union. The Washington Globe —of which Mr. Van Buren, is the SUN, and Amos Kendall, the high priest of the MAGI—has undertaken to connect them with the correspondence of the president and vice president, and to regard them as intended to rally the nullifiers against Jackson. In reply, we have only to say that the correspondence had not appeared, nor had we any certain knowledge that it ever would appear when those remarks were penned; and as to rallying our friends against Jackson, we have no disposition to call them out, were it in our power, for such a purpose. The idea that any appeal to any party, with the view of affecting his election, was intended, is altogether imaginary and gratuitous. If it is expected, however that the press here is either to sound his praises or be silent in relation to him, its impartiality and independence are much miscalculated by the servile partizans at Washington. In all just and proper measures, gen. Jackson may depend upon a warm and cordial support—[a sentence here omitted]—but if a blind devotion to him, right or wrong, is looked for, we have no hesitation in expressing our belief that they will be disappointed, not only from the press, but from the people. Above all, if gen. Jackson thinks to find us a race so imbued with the spirit of christian meekness as to turn the left cheek to him when he smites us on the right, he will discover that he has been sadly in error, in his estimate as well of our character, as strength.—To a blow, whenever and by whom stricken, South Carolina and the nullifiers will be found ready to respond, nor will a venal press be able to convince the public, that any retort, however indignant, upon a wanton and gross violation of the rights and feelings of a respectable portion of the people, is the rally of a party, for the attack of the president, under the direction of his enemies.

BRITISH STATISTICS.

Abstract of the nett produce of the revenue of Great Britain, in the years and quarters ending 5th January, 1830, and the 5th January, 1831, shewing the increase or decrease on each head thereof.

	Years ending Jan. 5.		Increase.	Decrease.
	1830.	1831.
	£	£	£	£
Customs	16,023,860	16 343,561	319,701
Excise	17,749,721	16 895,775		853,946
Stamps	6,644,635	6,605,291		39,344
Post office	1,376,000	1,358,011		17,989
Taxes	4,896,566	5,013,405	116,839
Miscellaneous	449,091	283,380		165,711
	47,139,873	46,499,423	436,540	1,076,990
	Deduct increase.....			436,540
	Decrease on the year			640,450

	Qrs. ending Jan. 5.		Increase.	Decrease.
	1830.	1831.
	£	£	£	£
Customs	3,851,876	3,769,695		82,181
Excise	4,869,022	4,831,220		37,802
Stamps	1,558,573	1,585,683	27,110
Post office	321,000	330,005	9,002
Taxes	2,017,075	2,062,030	44,955
Miscellaneous	71,968	81,401	9,433
	12,689,514	12,660,034	90,503	119,983
	Deduct increase.....			90,503
	Decrease on the quar.			29,480

The decrease in the revenue was in the receipts from the excise; but taxes to the amount of 450,500*l.* on beer, leather, cider, &c. had been repealed. The corn duties in 1829, also produced 122,810*l.* more in 1829 than in 1830. On the whole then, the decline in the amount of the revenue, does not shew a reduced ability to pay the taxes, in the last year, compared with the preceding one.

From an English publication, entitled "Thoughts on the causes and cures of the present distresses."

The rapid increase of taxation within our own times, compared with former periods of English history is very remarkable, and well deserves serious consideration. The following data will be useful:

Amount of the nett produce of the public revenue at the accession of successive sovereigns.

On the accession of
James I	1605	£600,000
Charles I	1625	896,819
The Commonwealth	1648	1,517,247
Charles II	1660	1,800,000
James II	1685	2,000,000
William and Mary	1688	2,001,855
Anne	1701	3,895,205
George I	1714	5,691,803
George II	1727	6,762,643
George III	1760	8,523,540
George IV	1820	46,132,634
William IV	1830	47,139,873

To the above is to be added the expense of collecting, which at present amounts to between 4,000,000*l.* and 5,000,000*l.* annually. In earlier times there were no regular taxes, our sovereigns continued to manage upon the rents of the crown lands, the aid of the barons, the benevolence of the church, and the occasional pillage of the Jews. When they were minded to go to war, they saved up money to begin with, and pawned their jewels or a province, generally, before they squeezed the people; and until the reign of William III, the house of commons was an effective check on the expenses of government. But in the fourth year of William III, in an evil hour, birth was given to the continuance of raising funds for present expenditure, by borrowing money to be repaid out of future taxes. The worst effect of the bold experiment was contained in this discovery and avowal of sir Robert Walpole, that, with the patronage thus acquired, he could purchase a majority in the house of commons. Still, however, up to the reign of George III, and within the lifetime of our present beloved monarch, the taxes did not much exceed 8,000,000*l.* annually; but before the end of that dazzling and distempered reign they amounted to 80,000,000 a year. The annual expenditure was even much greater, and in one year amounted to 120,000,000. Loan after loan, however, supplied all deficiencies; and the close of the reign of George III, bequeathed a debt of 800,000,000*l.* sterling, and the interest thereon, to posterity.

POPULATION OF GREAT BRITAIN.

In the year 1750	7,800,000
1801	10,820,000
Marriages	67,228
Baptisms	237,029
In the year 1811	12,353,000
1821	14,400,000
Marriages	96,883
Baptisms	343,660
In the year 1830*	17,000,000

INCOMES OF THE ENGLISH ROYAL FAMILY.

The duke of Cumberland receives 21,000*l.*; for prince George of Cumberland, 6,000*l.*; the duke of Sussex, 21,000*l.*; the duke of Cambridge, 27,000*l.*; princess Augusta, 13,000*l.*; princess of Hesse Homburg, late Elizabeth, 13,000*l.*; princess Sophia 13,000*l.*; the duchess of Kent, including the allowance for her daughter the princess Victoria, 12,000*l.*; the duke of Gloucester, including what he receives as the husband of princess Mary, (13,000*l.*) 27,000*l.*; the princess Sophia of Gloucester, his sister, 7,000*l.*; total 160,000*l.*, less than the income enjoyed by many of his majesty's subjects whom we could name.

[The concluding is a loyal remark. It is true, in point of fact. But those of "his majesty's subjects" who have the great incomes stated, derive it from their own property. If the people of England are the PROPERTY of every drunkard, debauchee or blockhead, man, woman, or baby, of the royal family, then the amounts paid would seem moderate enough—but until some men are born with bridles in their mouths, and others with boots and spurs on, we cannot reconcile the accident of birth alone as conferring a right to be maintained at the public expense.]

ENGLISH POOR RATES.

The total amount paid in England and Wales only, in the year 1826-7, including all charges belonging to the poor, was seven millions, eight hundred and three thousand, four hundred and sixty-five pounds—or say $34,500,000: equal to the whole current expenses of the United States, and of the governments of all the states, cities, towns, counties or districts, and on every account; and yet leaving a mighty balance. And yet the population of England and Wales is only about one-third larger than that of the United States.

*Estimated, but nearly the real amount.

ANTI-NULLIFICATION.

From the New York American, March 28.

SPEECHES AT THE DINNER TO MR. WEBSTER.

The following remarks, introductory to the toast of the guest, D. WEBSTER, were made by the president of the occasion, chancellor Kent:—

The president called the attention of the gentlemen to a toast, to which he was sure their judgment and their hearts would respond.

New England had been long fruitful in great men, the necessary consequence of the admirable discipline of her institutions; and we were this day honored with the presence of one of those cherished objects of her attachment and pride, who has an undoubted and peculiar title to our regard: It is a plain truth that he who defends the constitution of his country by his wisdom in council, is entitled to share her gratitude with those who protect it by valor in the field. Peace has its victories as well as war. We all recollect a late memorable occasion, when the exalted talents and enlightened patriotism of the gentleman to whom he had alluded, were exerted in the support of our national union, and the sound interpretation of its charter. If there be any one political precept, pre-eminent above all others, and acknowledged by all, it is that which dictates the absolute necessity of the union of the states under one government, and that government clothed with those attributes and powers with which the existing constitution has invested it. We were indebted under Providence, to the operation and influence of the powers of that constitution, for our national honor abroad and for unexampled prosperity at home. Its future stability depended upon the firm support and due exercise of its legitimate powers in all their branches. A tendency to disunion—to anarchy among the members rather than to tyranny in the head—had been heretofore the melancholy fate of all the federal governments of ancient and modern Europe. Our union and national constitution were formed as we have hitherto been led to believe under better auspices and with improved wisdom. But there was a deadly principle of disease inherent in the system. The assumption by any member of the union, of the right to question and resist, or annul, as its own judgment should dictate, either the laws of congress or the treaties, or the decisions of the federal courts, or the mandates of the executive power, duly made and promulgated as the constitution prescribes, was a most dangerous assumption of power, leading to collision and the destruction of the system. And if, contrary to all our expectations, we should hereafter fail in the grand experiment of a confederate government, extending over some of the fairest portions of this continent, and destined to act, at the same time, with efficiency and harmony, we should most grievously disappoint the hopes of mankind, and blast forever the fruits of the revolution.

But happily for us, the refutation of such dangerous pretensions, on the occasion referred to, was single and complete. The false images and delusive theories which had perplexed the thoughts and disturbed the judgments of men, were then dissipated in like manner as spectres disappear at the rising of the sun. The inestimable value of the union, and the true principles of the constitution, were explained by the clear and accurate reasonings, and enforced by pathetic and eloquent illustrations. The result was the more auspicious, as the heretical doctrines, which were then fairly reasoned down, had been advanced by a very respectable portion of the union, and urged on the floor of the senate by the polished mind, manly zeal, and honored name of a distinguished member of the south.

The consequences of that discussion have been extremely beneficial. It turned the attention of the public to the great doctrines of national rights and national union. Constitutional law ceased to remain wrapped up in the breasts, and taught only by the responses of the living oracles of the law. Socrates was said to have drawn down philosophy from the skies, and scattered it among the schools. It may with equal truth be said that constitutional law, by means of these senatorial discussions, and the master genius that guided them, was rescued from the archives of our tribunals and the libraries of lawyers, and placed under the eye and submitted to the judgment of the American people. Their verdict is with us, and from it there lies no appeal.

As soon as the immense cheering and acclamations with which this address and toast were received, had subsided,

Mr. Webster rose and spoke as follows:—

I owe the honor of this occasion, gentlemen, to your patriotic and affectionate attachment to the constitution of the country. For an effort, well intended, however otherwise of unpretending character, made in the discharge of public duty and designed to maintain the constitution, and vindicate its just powers, you have been pleased to tender me this token of your respect. It would be idle affectation to deny, that it gives me singular gratification. Every public man must naturally desire the approbation of his fellow-citizens; and though it may be supposed that I should be anxious, in the first place, not to disappoint the expectation of those, whose immediate representative I am, it is not possible that I should not feel, nevertheless, the high value of such a mark of esteem as is here offered. But, gentlemen, I am conscious that the main purpose of this occasion is higher than the mere manifestation of personal regard. It is to evince your attachment to the constitution, and your just alarm, at whatever threatens to weaken its proper authority, or endanger its existence.

Gentlemen, this could hardly be otherwise. It would be strange, indeed, if the members of this vast commercial community should not be the first and foremost to rally for the constitution, whenever opinions and doctrines are advanced, hostile to its principles. Where, sooner then here, where, louder than here, may we expect a patriotic voice to be raised, when the union of the states is threatened? In this great commercial emporium, at this central point of the united commerce of the United States, of all places, we may expect the warmest, the most determined and universal feeling of attachment to the national constitution. Gentlemen, no one can estimate more highly than I do, the natural advantages of your city. No one entertains a higher opinion than myself, also, of that spirit of wise and liberal policy, which has actuated the government of the state in the accomplishment of high objects, important to the growth and prosperity both of the state and the city. But all these local advantages, and all this enlightened state policy could never have made your city what it now is, without the aid and protection of a general government, extending over all the states, and establishing, for all, a common and unform system of commercial regulation. Without national character, without public credit, without systematic finance, without uniformity of commercial laws, all other advantages possessed by this city, would have decayed, and perished like unripe fruit. A general government, was, for years before it was instituted, the great object of desire to the inhabitants of this city. New York was conscious of her local advantages for commerce—she saw her destiny, and was eager to embrace it; but nothing else than a general government could make free her path before her, and set her forward on her career. She early saw all this, and to the accomplishment of this great and indispensable object, she bent up every faculty, and exerted every effort. She was not mistaken. She formed no false judgment. At the moment of the adoption of the constitution, New York was the capital of one state, and contained thirty-two or three thousand people. It now contains more than two hundred thousand people, and is justly regarded as the commercial capital, not only of all the United States, but of the whole continent also, from the pole to the south sea. Every page of her history, for the last forty years, bears high and irresistible testimony to the benefit and blessings of the general government. Her astonishing growth is referred to, and quoted, all the world over, as one of the most striking proofs of the effects of our federal union. To suppose her now to be easy and indifferent, when notions are advanced tending to its dissolution, would be to suppose her equally forgetful of the past, and blind to the present, alike ignorant of her own history, and her own interest, metamorphosed, from all that she has been, into a being, tired of its prosperity, sick of its own growth and greatness, and infatuated for its own destruction. Every blow aimed at the union of the states strikes on the tenderest nerve of her interest and her happiness.

To bring the union into debate, is to bring her own future prosperity into debate also. To speak of arresting the laws of the union, of interposing state power in matters of commerce and revenue, of weakening the full and just authority of the general government would be, in regard to this city, but another mode of speaking of commercial ruin, of abandoned wharves, of vacated houses, of diminished and dispersing population, of bankrupt merchants, of mechanics without employment, and laborers without bread. The growth of this city, and the constitution of the United States, are coevals and contemporaries. They began together, they have flourished together, and if rashness and folly destroy one, the other will follow it to the tomb.

Gentlemen, it is true, indeed, that the growth of this city is extraordinary, and almost unexampled. It is now, I believe, sixteen or seventeen years since I first saw it. Within that comparatively short period, it has added to its number three times the whole amount of its population when the constitution was adopted. Of all things having power to check this prosperity, of all things potent to blight and blast it, of all things capable of compelling this city to recede as fast as she has advanced, a disturbed government, an enfeebled public authority, a broken or a weakened union of the states, would be sovereign. This would be cause efficient enough. Every thing else, in the common fortune of communities, she may hope to resist, or to prevent. That would be fatal as the arrow of death.

Gentlemen, you have personal recollections and associations, connected with the establishment and adoption of the constitution, which are necessarily called up on an occasion like this. It is impossible to forget the prominent agency which eminent citizens of your own fulfilled, in regard to that great measure. They are now recorded among the illustrious dead; but they have left names never to be forgotten, and never to be remembered without respect and veneration. Least of all, can they be forgotten by you, when assembled here for the purpose of signifying your attachment to the constitution, and your sense of its inestimable importance to the happiness of the people.

I should do violence to my own feelings, gentlemen: I think I should offend yours, if I omitted respectful mention of great names, yet fresh in your recollections. How can I stand here, to speak of the constitution of the United States, of the wisdom of its provisions, of the difficulties attending its adoption, of the evils from which it rescued the country, and of the prosperity and power to which it has raised it, and yet pay no tribute to those who were highly instrumental in accomplishing the work? While we are here, to rejoice that it yet stands firm and strong; while we congratulate one another that we live under its benign influence, and cherish hopes of its long duration, we cannot forget who they were that, in the day of our national infancy, in the times of despondency and despair, mainly assisted to work our deliverance. I should feel that I disregarded the strong recollections which the occasion presses upon us, that I was not true to gratitude, not true to patriotism, not true to the living or the dead, not true to your feelings or my own, if I should forbear to make mention of Alex. Hamilton.

Coming from the military service of the country, yet a youth, but with knowledge and maturity, even in civil affairs, far beyond his years, he made this city the place of his adoption; and he gave the whole powers of his mind to the contemplation of the weak and distracted condition of the country. Daily increasing in acquaintance and confidence with the people of this city, he saw, what they also saw, the absolute necessity of some closer bond of union for the states. This was the great object of desire. He never appears to have lost sight of it, but was found in the lead, whenever any thing was to be attempted for its accomplishment. One experiment after another, as it is well known, was tried and all failed. The states were urgently called on to confer such further powers on the old congress as would enable it to redeem the public faith, or to adopt themselves some general and common principle of commercial regulation. But the states had not agreed, and were not likely to agree. In this posture of affairs, so full of public difficulty and public distress, commissioners from five or six of the states met, on the request of Virginia, at Annapolis, in September 1786. The precise object of their appointment was, to take into consideration the trade of the United States; to examine the relative situations and trade of the several states; and to consider how far a uniform system of commercial regulations was necessary to their common interest and permanent harmony. Mr. Hamilton was one of these commissioners; and I have understood, though I cannot assert the fact, that their report was drawn by him. His associate from this state was the venerable judge Benson who has lived long, and still lives, to see the happy results of the counsels which originated in this meeting. Of its members, he and Mr. Madison are, I believe, now the only survivors. These commissioners recommended, what took place the next year, a general convention of all the states, to take into serious deliberation the condition of the country, and devise such provisions as should render the constitution of the federal government adequate to the exigencies of the union. I need not remind you, that of this convention, Mr. Hamilton was an active and efficient member. The constitution was framed, and submitted to the country. And then another great work was to be undertaken. The constitution would naturally find, and did find, enemies and opposers. Objections to it were numerous and powerful, and spirited. They were to be answered: and they were effectually answered. The writers of the numbers of the Federalist, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Madison, and Mr. Jay, so greatly distinguished themselves in their discussions of the constitution, that those numbers are generally received as important commentaries on the text and accurate expositions, in general, of its objects and purposes. Those papers were all written and published in this city. Mr. Hamilton was elected one of the distinguished delegation from the city, into the state convention at Poughkeepsie, called to ratify the new constitution. Its debates are published. Mr. Hamilton appears to have exerted, on this occasion, to the utmost, every power and faculty of his mind.

The whole question was likely to depend on the decision of New York. He felt the full importance of the crisis; and the reports of his speeches, imperfect as they probably are, are yet lasting monuments to his genius and patriotism. He saw at last his hopes fulfilled: he saw the constitution adopted, and the government under it, established and organized. The discerning eye of Washington immediately called him to that post, infinitely the most important, in the administration of the new system. He was made secretary of the treasury; and how he fulfilled the duties of such a place, at such a time, the whole country perceived, with delight, and the whole world saw with admiration. He smote the rock of the national resources, and abundant streams of revenue gushed forth. He touched the dead corpse of the public credit, and it sprung upon its feet. The fabled birth of Minerva from the brain of Jove, was hardly more sudden, or more perfect, than the financial system of the United States, burst forth from the conceptions of Alexander Hamilton.

Your recollections, gentlemen, your respect, and your affections, all conspire to bring before you, at such a time as this, another great man, now, too, numbered with the dead. I mean the pure, the disinterested, the patriotic John Jay. His character is a brilliant jewel in the sacred treasures of national reputation. Leaving his profession at an early period, yet not before he had singularly distinguished himself in it, from the commencement of the revolution, his whole life, until his final retirement, was a life of public service. A member of the first congress, he was the author of that political paper which is generally acknowledged to stand first among the incomparable productions of that body; papers, which called forth that decisive strain of commendation from the great lord Chatham, in which he pronounced them not inferior to the finest productions of the master states of the world. He had been abroad, and he had also been long intrusted with the difficult duties of our foreign correspondence at home. He had seen and felt, in the fullest measure, and to the greatest possible extent, the difficulty of conducting our foreign affairs honorably and usefully, without a stronger and more perfect union at home. Though not a member of the convention which framed the constitution, he was yet present while it was in session, and looked anxiously for its result. By the choice of this city, he had a seat in the state convention, and took an active and zealous part, for the adoption of the constitution. He was selected by Washington to be the first chief justice of the United States; and surely the high and most responsible duties of that station, could not have been trusted to abler or safer hands. It is the duty, one of equal importance and delicacy, of that tribunal, to decide constitutional questions, arising occasionally on state laws. The general learning and ability, and especially the prudence, the mildness, and the firmness of his character, eminently fitted Mr. Jay to be the head of such a court. When the spotless ermine of the judicial robe fell on John Jay, it touched nothing not as spotless as itself. These eminent men, gentlemen, the cotemporaries of some of you, known to most, and revered by all were so conspicuous in the framing and adopting of the constitution, and called so early to important stations under it, that a tribute, better, indeed, than I have given, or am able to give, seemed due to them from us. There was yet another, of whom mention is to be made. In the revolutionary history of the country, the name of chancellor Livingston became early prominent. He was a member of that congress which declared independence; and a member, too, of the committee which drew and reported the immortal declaration. At the period of the adoption of the constitution, he was its firm friend and able advocate. He was a member of the state convention, being one of that list of distinguished and gifted men, who represented this city in that body; and threw the whole weight of his talents and influence into the doubtful scale of the constitution.

Gentlemen, as connected with the constitution, you have also local recollections which must bind it still closer to your attachment and affection. It commenced its being, and its blessings, here. It was in this city, in the midst of friends, anxious, hopeful, and devoted, that the new government started in its course. To us, gentlemen, who are younger, it has come down by tradition; but some around me are old enough to have witnessed, and did witness the interesting scene of the first inauguration. They remember what voices of gratified patriotism, what shouts of enthusiastic hope, what acclamation rent the air—how many eyes were suffused with tears of joy—how cordially each man pressed the hand of him who was next to him, when, standing in the open air, in the centre of the city, in the view of assembled thousands, the first president was heard solemnly to pronounce the words of his official oath, repeating them from the lips of chancellor Livingston. You then thought, gentlemen, that the great work of the revolution was accomplished. You then felt that you had a government—that the United States were then, indeed, united.—Every benignant star seemed to shed its selectest influence on that auspicious hour. Here were heroes of the revolution; here were sages of the convention; here were minds disciplined and schooled in all the various fortunes of the country, acting now in various relations, but all co-operating to the same great end, the successful administration of the new and untried constitution. And he—how shall I speak of him?—he was at the head, who was already first in war—who was already first in the hearts of his countrymen—and who was now shown also, by the unanimous suffrage of the country to be first in peace.

Gentlemen, how gloriously have the hopes, then indulged, been fulfilled! Whose expectation was then so sanguine—I may almost ask whose imagination then so extravagant as to run forward and contemplate as probable, the one half of what has been accomplished in forty years! Who among you can go back to 1789, and see what this city, and this country too, then were—and then beholding what they now are, can be ready to consent that the constitution of the United States shall now be weakened, nullified, or dishonored?

Gentlemen, before I leave these pleasant recollections, I feel it an irresistible impulse of duty to pay a tribute of respect to another distinguished person, not, indeed, a fellow citizen of your own, but associated with those I have already mentioned, in important labors, and an early and indefatigable friend and advocate in the great cause of the constitution. Gentlemen, I refer to Mr. Madison. I am aware, gentlemen, that a tribute of regard from me to him is of little importance; but if it shall receive your approbation and sanction, it will become of value. Mr. Madison, thanks to a kind Providence, is yet among the living, and there is certainly no other individual living to whom the country is so much indebted for the blessings of the constitution. He was one of the commissioners at Annapolis, in 1786, at the meeting of which I have already spoken; a meeting, which to the great credit of Virginia had its origin in a proceeding of that state. He was a member of the convention of 1789 and of that of Virginia the following year. He was thus intimately acquainted with the whole progress of the formation, of the constitution, from its very first step, to its final adoption. If ever man had the means of understanding a written instrument, Mr. Madison has the means of understanding the constitution. If it be possible to know what was designed by it, he can tell us. It was in this city, that in conjunction with Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Jay, he wrote the numbers of the Federalist; and it was in this city that he commenced his brilliant career, under the new constitution, having been elected into the house of representatives of the first congress. The recorded votes and debates of those times, show his active and efficient agency in every important measure of that congress. The necessary organization of the government, the arrangement of the departments and especially the paramount subject of revenue engaged his attention, and shared his labors. The legislative history of the first two or three years of the government is full of instruction. It presents, in striking light, the evils intended to be remedied by the constitution, and the provisions which were deemed essential to the remedy of those evils. It exhibits the country, in the moment of its change, from a weak and ill defined confederacy of states, into a general, efficient, but still restrained and limited government. It shows the first working of our peculiar system, moved, as it then was, by master hands.

Gentlemen, for one, I confess, I like to dwell on this part of our history. It is good for us to be here. It is good for us to study the situation of the country at this period, to survey its difficulty, to look at the conduct of its public men, to see how they struggle with obstacles, real and formidable, and how gloriously they brought the country out of its state of depression and distress. Truly, gentlemen, these, founders and fathers of the constitution were great men, and thoroughly furnished for every good work. All that reading and learning could do, all that talent and intelligence could do, and what perhaps is still more—all that long experience, in difficult and troubled times, and a deep and intimate practical knowledge of the condition of the country could do, conspired to fit them for the great business of forming a general, but limited government, embracing common objects, extending over all the states, and yet touching the power of the states no farther than those common objects require. I confess, I love to linger around those original fountains, and to drink deep of their waters, I love to imbibe, in as full measures as I may, the spirit of those who laid the foundation of the government, and so wisely and skilfully balanced and adjusted its bearings and proportions.

Having been afterwards, for eight years, secretary of state, and as long president, Mr. Madison has had an experience in the affairs of the constitution, certainly second to no man. More than any other man living, and perhaps more than any other man who has lived, his whole public life has been incorporated, as it were, into the constitution; in the original conception and project of attempting to form it, in its actual framing, in explaining and recommending it by speaking and writing, in assisting at the first organization of the government under it, and in a long administration of its executive powers, in those various ways he has lived near the constitution, and with the power of imbibing its true spirit, and inhaling its very breath, from its first pulsation of life. Again, therefore, I ask, if he cannot tell us what the constitution is, and what it means, who can? He had retired with the respect and regard of the community, and might naturally be supposed not willing to interfere again in matters of political concern. He has, nevertheless, not withholden his opinions on the vital question discussed on that occasion, which has caused this meeting. He has stated with an accuracy almost peculiar to himself, and so stated, as, in my opinion, to place almost beyond further controversy, the true doctrines of the constitution. He has stated, not notions too loose and irregular to be called even a theory—not ideas struck out by the feeling of present inconvenience or supposed mal-administration—not suggestions of expediency, or evasions of fair and straight-forward construction, but elementary principles, clear and sound distinctions, and indispensable truths. I am sure, gentlemen, that I speak your sentiments, as well as my own, when I say, that for making public so clearly and distinctly as he has done, his own opinions on these vital questions of constitutional law, Mr. Madison has founded a new and strong claim on the gratitude of a grateful country. You will think with me, that at his advanced age and in the enjoyment of general respect and approbation, for a long career of public services, it was an act of distinguished patriotism, when he saw notions promulgated and maintained, which he deemed unsound and dangerous, not to hesitate to come forward and to place the weight of his own opinion in what he deemed the right scale, come what, come might. I am sure, gentlemen, it cannot be doubted—the manifestation is clear—that the country feels gratefully the force of this new obligation.

Gentlemen, what I have said of the benefits of the constitution to your city, might be said, with little change, in every other part of the country. Its benefits are not exclusive. What has it left undone, which any government could do, for the whole country? In what condition has it placed us? Where do we now stand? Are we elevated or degraded by its operation? What is our condition under its influence, at the very moment when some talk of arresting its power and breaking its unity? Do we not feel ourselves on an eminence? Do we not challenge the respect of the whole world? What has placed us thus high?—What has given us this just pride? What else is it, but the unrestrained and free operation of that same federal constitution which it has been proposed now to hamper, and manacle, and nullify? Who is there among us, that should find himself on any spot of earth, where human beings exist, and where the existence of other nations is known, that would not be proud to say, I am an American? I am a countryman of Washington? I am a citizen of that republic which, although it has suddenly sprung up, yet there are none on the globe who have ears to hear and have not heard of it—who have eyes to see, and have not read of it—who know any thing and yet do not know of its existence and its glory? And, gentlemen, let me now reverse the picture. Let me ask who there is among us, if he were to be found to-morrow in one of the civilized countries of Europe, and were there to learn that this goodly form of government had been overthrown—that the United States were no longer united—that a death-blow had been struck upon their bond of union—that they themselves had destroyed their chief good and their chief honor, who is there, whose heart would not sink within him? Who is there who would not cover his face for very shame.

At this very moment, gentlemen, our country is a general refuge for the distressed and the persecuted of other nations. Whoever is in affliction from political occurrences in his own country, looks here for shelter. Whether he be a republican, flying from the oppression of thrones—or whether he be monarch or monarchist, flying from thrones that crumble and fall under or around him—he feels equal assurance, that if he got foot-hold on our soil, his person is safe, and his rights will be respected.

And who will venture to say, that in any government, now existing in the world, there is greater security for persons or property than in the United States? We have tried these popular institutions in times of great excitement and commotion; they have stood substantially firm and steady, while the fountains of the great political deep have been elsewhere broken up; while thrones, resting on ages of proscription, have tottered and fallen; and while, in other countries, the earthquake of unrestrained popular commotion has swallowed up all law, and all liberty, and all right together. Our government has been tried in peace, and it has been tried in war; and has proved itself fit for both. It has been assailed from without, and successfully resisted the shock; it has been disturbed within, and has effectually quieted the disturbance. It can stand trial—it can stand assault—it can stand adversity—it can stand every thing, but the marring of its own beauty, and the weakening of its own strength. It can stand every thing, but the effects of our own rashness, and our own folly. It can stand every thing, but disorganization, disunion, and nullification.

It is a striking fact, and as true as it is striking, that at this very moment, among all the principal civilized states of the world, that government is most secure against the danger of popular commotion, which is itself entirely popular. It seems, indeed, that the submission of every thing to the public will, under constitutional restraints, imposed by the people themselves, furnishes, itself, security that, that will desire nothing wrong.

Certain it is, that popular constitutional liberty, as we enjoy it, appears, in the present state of the world, as sure and stable a basis for government to rest upon, as any government of enlightened states can find, or does find. Certain it is, that in these times of so much popular knowledge, and so much popular activity, those governments which do not admit the people to partake in their administration, but keep the people under and beneath, sit on materials for an explosion, which may take place at any moment, and blow them into a thousand atoms.

Gentlemen, let any man who would degrade and enfeeble the national constitution—let any man who would nullify its laws, stand forth and tell us what he would wish. What does he propose? Whatever he may be, and whatever substitute he may hold forth, I am sure the people of this country will decline his kind interference, and hold on by the constitution which they possess. Any one who would willingly destroy it, I rejoice to know would be looked upon with abhorrence. It is deeply entrenched in the regards of the people. Doubtless, it may be underminded by artful and long continued hostility, it may be imperceptibly weakened by secret attack; it may be insidiously shorn of its powers by slow degrees; the public vigilance may be lulled and when it awakes, it may find the constitution frittered away. In these modes, or some of them doubtless, it is possible that the union of the states may be dissolved.

But if the general attention of the people be kept alive—if they see the intended mischief before it is effected, they will effectually prevent it by their own sovereign power. They will interpose themselves between the meditated blow, and the object of their regard and attachment. Gentlemen, next to the controlling authority of the people themselves, the preservation of the government is mainly committed to those who administer it. If conducted in wisdom, it cannot but stand strong. Its genuine original spirit is a patriotic, liberal, and generous spirit: a spirit of conciliation, of moderation, of candor, and charity: a spirit of friendship, and not a spirit of hostility, with the states: a spirit, careful, not to exceed, and equally careful not to relinquish its just powers. While no interest can or ought to feel itself shut out from the benefits of the constitution, none should consider those benefits as exclusively its own. The interests of all must be connected, and reconciled, and provided for, as far as possible, that all may perceive the benefits of a united government.

Among other things we are to remember that, since the adoption of the constitution new states have arisen, possessing already an immense population, spreading and thickening over vast regions which were a wilderness when the constitution was adopted. Those states are not like New York, directly connected with maritime commerce. They are entirely agricultural, and need markets for consumption, and access to those markets. It is the duty of the government to bring the interests of these new states into the union and incorporate them closely in the family compact. Gentlemen, it is not impracticable to reconcile these various interests and so to administer the government as to make it useful to all. It was never easier to administer the government than it is now. We are beset with none, or with few, of its original difficulties: and it is a time of great general prosperity and happiness. Shall we admit ourselves incompetent to carry on the government, so as to be satisfactory to the whole country? Shall we admit that there has so little descended to us of the wisdom and prudence of our fathers? If the government could be administered in Washington's time, when it was yet new, when the country was heavily in debt, when foreign relations were threatening, and when Indian wars pressed on the frontiers, can it not be administered now? Let us not acknowledge ourselves so unequal to our duties.

Gentlemen, on the occasion referred to, it became necessary to consider the judicial power, and its proper functions under the constitution. In every free and balanced government, this is a most essential and important power.—Indeed, I think it is a remark of Mr. Hume, that the administration of justice seems to be the leading object of institutions of government; the legislatures assemble, that armies are embodied, that both war and peace are made, with a sort of ultimate reference to the proper administration of laws, and the judicial protection of private rights. The judicial power comes home to every man. If the legislature passes incorrect or unjust general laws, its members bear the evil as well as others. But judicature acts on individuals. It touches every private right, every private interest, and almost every private feeling. What we possess is hardly fit to be called our own, unless we feel secure in its possession; and this security, this feeling of perfect safety, cannot exist under a wicked, or even under a weak and ignorant administration of the laws. There is no happiness, there is no liberty, there is no enjoyment of life, unless a man can say when he rises in the morning, I shall be subject to the decision of no unjust judge to-day.

But, gentlemen, the judicial department under the constitution of the United States, possesses still higher duties. It is true that it may be called on, and is occasionally called on to decide questions, which are, in one sense, of a political nature. The general and state governments, both established by the people, are established for different purposes, and with different powers. Between those powers, questions may arise, and who shall decide them? Some provision for this end is absolutely necessary.—What shall it be? This was the question before the convention; and various schemes were suggested. It was foreseen, that the states might inadvertently pass laws, inconsistent with the constitution of the United States, or with acts of congress. At least, laws might be passed, which would be charged with such inconsistency. How should these questions be disposed of? Where shall the power of judging, in cases of alleged interference, be lodged? One suggestion, in the convention, was to make it an executive power, and to lodge it in the hands of the president, by requiring all state laws to be submitted to him, that he might negative such as he thought appeared repugnant to the general constitution. This idea, perhaps, may have been borrowed from the power exercised by the crown, over the laws of the colonies. It would evidently have been not only an inconvenient and troublesome proceeding, but dangerous, also, to the powers of the states. It was not pressed. It was thought wiser and safer, on the whole, to require state legislatures and state judges to take an oath to support the constitution of the United States, and then leave the states at liberty to pass whatever laws they pleased and if interference, in points of fact, should arise, to refer the question to judicial decision. To this end, the judicial power, under the constitution of the United States, was made co-extensive with the legislative power. It was extended to all cases arising under the constitution and the laws of congress. The judiciary became thus possessed of the authority of deciding, in the last resort, in all cases of alleged interference, between state laws and the constitution, and laws of congress.

Gentlemen—This is the actual constitution—This the law of the land. There may be those, who think it unnecessary, or who would prefer a different mode of deciding such questions. But this is the established mode, and till it be altered, the courts can no more decline their duty, on these occasions, than on other occasions. But, gentlemen, can any reasonable man doubt the expediency of this provision, or suggest a better? Is it not absolutely essential to the peace of the country, that this power should exist somewhere? Where can it exist, better than where it now does exist? The national judiciary is the common tribunal of the whole country. It is organised, by the common authority, and its places filled by the common agent. This is a plain and practical provision. It was framed by no bunglers, nor by any wild theorists. And who can say, that it has failed? Who can find substantial fault, with its operation, or its results? The great question is, whether we shall, provide for the peaceable decision of cases of collision. Shall they be decided by law or by force? Shall the decisions be decisions of peace, or decisions of war?

On the occasion referred to, the proposition contended for, was that every state, under certain supposed exigencies, and in certain supposed cases, might decide for itself, and act for itself, and oppose its own force to the execution of the laws. By what argument, do you imagine, gentlemen, it was, that such a proposition was maintained? I should call it metaphysical, and subtle; but these terms would imply at least ingenuity, and some degree of plausibility; whereas the argument appears to me plain assumption, mere perverse construction of plain language, in the body of the constitution itself. As I understand it, 'when put forth in its revised and most authentic shape' it is this: that the constitution provides that, any amendments may be made to it, which shall be agreed to by three-fourths of the states; there is, therefore, to be nothing in the constitution to which three-fourths of the states have not agreed. All this is true; but then comes this inference, viz: that when one state denies the constitutionality of any law of congress, she may arrest its execution as to herself, and keep it arrested, till the states can all be consulted, by their conventions, and three-fourths of them shall have decided that the law is constitutional. Indeed the inference is still stranger than this; for state conventions have no authority to construe the constitution, though they have authority to amend it; therefore the argument must prove, if it prove any thing, that when any one state denies that any particular power is included in the constitution, it is to be considered as not included, and cannot be found there, till three-fourths of the states agree to insert it. In short, the result of the whole is, that though it requires three-fourths of the states to insert any thing into the constitution, yet any one state can strike any thing out of it. For the power to strike out, and the power of deciding, without appeal, upon the construction of what is already in, are substantially and practically the same.

And, gentlemen, what a spectacle we have exhibited, under the actual operation of notions like these? At the very moment when our government was quoted, praised, and commended all over the world; when the friends of republican liberty, every where, were gazing at it with delight, and were in perfect admiration at the harmony of its movements, one state steps forth, and by the power of nullification, breaks up the whole system, and scatters the bright chain of the union, into as many sundered links as there are separate states!

Seeing the true grounds of the constitution thus attacked, I raised my voice in its favor, I must confess, with no preparation, or previous intention. I can hardly say that I embarked in the contest from a sense of duty. It was an instantaneous impulse of inclination, not acting against duty, I trust, but hardly waiting for its suggestion. I felt it to be a contest for the integrity of the constitution; and I was ready to enter into it, not thinking, or caring, personally, how I might come out.

Gentlemen, I have true pleasure in saying that I trust the crisis has, in some measure passed by. The doctrines of nullification have received a severe and stern rebuke from public opinion. The general reprobation of the country has been cast upon them. Recent expressions of the most numerous branch of the national legislature are decisive and imposing. Every where, the general tone of public feeling is for the constitution. While much will be yielded, every thing, almost, but the integrity of the constitution, and the essential interests of the country, to the cause of mutual harmony, and mutual conciliation, no ground can be granted, not an inch, to menace and bluster. Indeed menace, and bluster, and the putting forth of daring unconstitutional doctrines, are, at this very moment, the chief obstacles to mutual harmony, and satisfactory accommodation. Men cannot well reason, and confer, and take counsel together about the discreet exercise of a power, with those who deny that any such power rightfully exists, and who threaten to blow up the whole constitution, if they cannot otherwise get rid of its operation. It is matter of sincere gratification, gentlemen, that the voice of this great state has been so clear and strong, and her vote, all but unanimous, on the most interesting of these occasions, in the house of representatives. Certainly such respect to the union becomes New York. It is consistent with her interests and her character. That singularly prosperous state—which now is, and is likely to continue to be, the greatest link in the chain of the union—will ever be, it is to be hoped, the strongest link also. The great states which lie in her neighborhood agreed with her fully in this matter. Pennsylvania, I believe, was loyal to the union, to a man; and Ohio raises her voice, like that of a lion, against whatsoever threatens disunion and dismemberment. This harmony of sentiment is truly gratifying. It is not to be gainsaid that the union of opinion, in this great central mass of our population, on this momentous point of the constitution, augurs well for our future prosperity and security.

I have said, gentlemen, what I verily believe to be true: that there is no danger to the union from open and avowed attacks on its essential principles. Nothing is to be feared from those who will march up boldly to their own propositions, and tell us that they mean to annihilate powers exercised by congress. But, certainly, there are no dangers to the constitution, and we ought not to shut our eyes to them. We know the importance of a firm and intelligent judiciary; but how shall we secure the continuance of a firm and intelligent judiciary? Gentlemen, the judiciary is in the appointment of the executive power. It cannot continue or renew itself. Its vacancies are to be filled in the ordinary modes of executive appointment. If the time shall ever come, which Heaven avert! when men shall be placed in the supreme tribunal of the country, who entertain opinions hostile to the just powers of the constitution, we shall then be visited by an evil, defying all remedy. Our case will be 'past surgery.' From that moment the constitution is at an end. If they who are appointed to defend the castle, shall betray it, woe betide those within! If I live to see that day come, I shall despair of the country. I shall be prepared to give it back to all its former afflictions, in the days of the confederation. I know no security, gentlemen, against the possibility of this evil, but an awakened public vigilance. I know no safety, but in that state of public opinion which shall lead it to rebuke and put down every attempt, either to gratify party, by judicial appointments, or to dilute the constitution, by creating a court which shall construe away its provisions. If members of congress betray their trust, the people will find it out, before they are ruined. If the president should, at any time, violate his duty, his term of office is short, and popular elections may supply a seasonable remedy. But the judges of the supreme court possess, for very good reasons, an independent tenure of office. No election reaches them. If, with this tenure, they betray their trust, Heaven save us! Let us hope for better results. The past, certainly, may encourage us. Let us hope that we shall never see the time, when there shall exist such an awkward posture of affairs, as that the government shall be found in opposition to the constitution, and when the guardians of the union shall become its betrayers.

Gentlemen, our country stands, at the present time, on commanding ground. Older nations, with different systems of government, may be somewhat slow to acknowledge all that justly belongs to us. But we may feel, without vanity, that America is doing her part, in the great work of improving human affairs. There are two principles, gentlemen, strictly and purely American, which are now likely to overrun the civilized world. Indeed they seem the necessary result of the progress of civilization and knowledge. These are, first, popular governments, restrained by written constitutions; and, secondly, universal education. Popular governments and general education, acting and re-acting, mutually producing, and reproducing each other, are the mighty agencies which, in our days, appear to be exciting, stimulating, and changing civilized societies.—Man every where is now found demanding a participation in government—and he will not be refused—and he demands knowledge as necessary to self-government. On the basis of these two principles, liberty and knowledge, our own American systems rest. Thus far we have not been disappointed in their results. Our existing institutions, raised on these foundations, have conferred on us almost unmixed happiness. Do we hope to better our condition by change? When we shall have nullified the present constitution, what are we to receive in its place? As fathers, do we wish for our children better government, or better laws? As members of society, as lovers of our country, is there any thing we can desire for it better than that, as ages and centuries roll over it, it may possess the same invaluable institutions which it now enjoys? For my part gentlemen, I can only say, that I desire to thank the beneficent author of all good, for being born where I was born, and when I was born, that the portion of human existence, allotted to me, has been meted out to me in this goodly land, and at this interesting period. I rejoice that I have lived to see so much developement of truth—so much progress of liberty—so much diffusion of virtue and happiness. And through good report, and evil report, it will be my consolation to be a citizen of a republic, unequalled in the annals of the world, for the freedom of its institutions, its high prosperity, and the prospects of good which yet lie before it. Our course, gentlemen, is onward, straight onward, and forward. Let us not turn to the right hand; nor to the left. Our path is marked out for us, clear, plain, bright, distinctly defined, like the milky way across the heavens. If we are true to our country, in our day and generation, and those who come after us shall be true to it also, assuredly, assuredly, we shall elevate her to a pitch of prosperity, and happiness, of honor and power, never yet reached by any nation beneath the sun.

Gentlemen, before I resume my seat, a highly gratifying duty remains to be performed. In signifying your sentiments of regard, you have kindly chosen to select as your organ of expressing them, the eminent person,* near whom I stand. I feel, I cannot well say how sensibly, the manner in which he has seen fit to speak, on this occasion. Gentlemen, if I may be supposed to have made any attainment in the knowledge of constitutional law, he is among the masters in whose schools I have been taught. You see near him a distinguished magistrate,† long associated with him in judicial labors, which have conferred lasting benefits, and lasting character, not only on the state, but on the whole country: Gentlemen, I acknowledge myself much their debtor. While yet a youth, unknown, and with little expectation of becoming known, beyond a very limited circle, I have passed days and nights, not of tedious, but of happy and gratified labor, in the study of the judicature of the state of New York. I am most happy to have this opportunity of publicly acknowledging the obligation, and of repaying it, so far as it can be repaid, by the poor tribute of my profound regard, and most sincere good wishes.

Gentlemen, I will no longer detain you, than to propose a toast.

"The city of New York: herself the noblest eulogy on the union of the States."

The regular toast, respecting the chief justice of the United States, was introduced by chancellor Kent, with the following remarks:

The toast I have now the honor to propose, naturally reminds us how much we owe to that high court which administers the supreme law of the land. So long as the people of this country shall prefer the government of laws to the government of men, the supreme court of the United States will remain an object of profound veneration. It is the best asylum of persecuted rights; we can create none better, and if ever the liberties of this country are doomed to perish, they will expire in the presence of that tribunal.

The present chief justice of that court was distinguished by his military conduct in the American war. He was afterwards eminent in the councils of peace. He has since presided for thirty years in the supreme court, and sustained its character with admirable ability. I cannot think of him nor speak of him without reverence. His spotless character, over which the hand of time has now thrown a mellowed lustre; his long-tried services; his mighty mind; his impartial judgment; his independent spirit; his unshaken fortitude; his devotion to his duty, have secured to him a name as immortal as the laws and the constitution of his country.

Judge Spencer, on being called on for a toast, returned his sincere thanks for the honor that had been conferred upon him. If, he said, it had been his good fortune, during a pretty long career of judicial service, to add any thing to the strength of the judiciary, he had been amply rewarded in the good opinion entertained by his fellow citizens. It had been his fortune to change his character from a judicial officer to become the representative of the people in congress for two terms, during which period an attempt had been made to destroy the federal court, by an increase of its members, under the idea that the west required these additional members. He had given his feeble efforts to arrest and defeat so dangerous a practice, and had had the satisfaction of seeing that the project dropped, and at the last session was not taken up. He said he had also had the satisfaction during the past session of recording his vote against the report of the committee on the judiciary, which he considered in fact a repeal of that branch of the government, and, he was happy to say, was rejected before it reached a second reading. He said he felt proud in calling their distinguished guest his friend—he had had the high enjoyment of witnessing his mighty effort in defence of the principles of the constitution, and he could say with truth that it surpassed all reports that had ever been given of it, and the individual who had called forth his denunciation had retired completely vanquished. That discussion, which had been spread before the people, had done more, in his opinion, to secure the stability of the government than any event that had ever happened. He closed by offering the following toast:

By judge Spencer.—The memory of those statesmen who formed the judiciary of '89: The key-stone and monument of our country's prosperity.

After the toast—"The exiles of South America: may our country afford them an asylum until their own affords them a home"—Mr. Mosquera, the ex-president of Colombia rose and said:

Gentlemen—I am sorry that I am not sufficiently conversant with the English language to express my feelings on this occasion; but they prompt me to address you in the best terms I can command. As an American, and as an individual of the human family, I see with the sincerest satisfaction, that Providence has been pleased to give this happy land to one united people, who may certainly be proud of the names of their great men, and particularly of those of Hamilton, Jay, and Madison, as the heavenly supporters of the union.

May it please the Almighty that the welfare and happiness of this union may always have such good and enlightened advocates as the hon. Daniel Webster.

* Chancellor Kent, the presiding officer.

† Judge Spencer.

"MANIFESTO OF THE NULLIFIERS."*

From "the Southern Times" of March 16, 1831.

THE LATE SESSION OF CONGRESS.

During the memorable canvass of last summer, in favor of convention, among the most prominent of the arguments used to allay our excitement and induce us to delay the measure, was that the first session of the late congress had, at its close, evinced a disposition to lighten our burdens and restore the constitution, and that the session, which is now just over, might confidently be looked to, to realise any expectations which this apparent disposition might create. It is unwise and rash, said many of our leading men, to take the remedy in our own hands while this reasonable hope exists.—Pause—the good feelings of Jackson towards the south—the firmness of his friendship—the independence of his course—his desire of reform—the weight of his popularity—the returning sense of justice in the majority of congress, and the redeeming spirit of the times, all admonish us to wait the issue of another session. Let that pass and if our condition is not bettered, we are with you. We will all unite and make a "pull together" for the preservation of the constitution and our liberty. This was the language of those who disdained to be called submissionists—and it prevailed among the people. For ourselves, though we could not doubt the sincerity of many by whom it was used, we put no faith in it, nor did many of the most decided of the convention party. But it prevailed among the people, and a convention was not called. Let the proceedings of the late session now be canvassed before the same people, that they may see what has been gained, and whether they have not a right now to claim the support of their counsellors, in defending themselves against the ruinous and unmitigated usurpations of the general government.

* This title was given to the article by the editors of the "National Intelligencer" and is a good one. They also intimate, and we think correctly, that it is the production of a member of congress—possibly, it is that of a small "combination."

The session opened with a message from the president, in which, as the London Morning Chronicle very aptly remarks, "he seemed to wish to avoid giving triumph or ascendancy to any principle." It recognised the constitutionality of the tariff to the fullest extent, and recommended in general terms, some trivial modifications. All expectation of relief from Jackson fell to the ground, as soon as this message was read and understood, and subsequent events have fully confirmed the impressions which it produced at first. Indeed circumstances are daily developing themselves, which show, that whatever may have been gen. Jackson's original good feelings for the south, the sources of them have become poisoned, and that influences are at work, to wean him from his southern friends, his first and warmest friends, and decoy him into the support of interests as deeply at war with ours, as with the principles of our government. We speak of the controversy with Mr. Calhoun, and the proscription of the nullification party—events which are totally disconnected with each other, yet both evincing a feeling of hostility to southern politics and southern men, very far from flattering to any hopes of the redress of southern wrongs, through his intervention. They do more: they show to the American people that the great principles of the constitution do not constitute the guides, or occupy so much the attention of this administration, as the putting down and setting up, of men and parties.

The proceedings of congress, while they furnish to the anxious reviewer nothing that can be called a reformation, give abundant testimony that all future reliance either upon the justice of that body, or the redeeming spirit of the times, is as totally fallacious, as experience proves that of the past to have been. All the great outworks of the usurpations of the federal government have been attacked with a zeal and vigour—a hardihood of courage and array of intellect, combining with it a tact, a skill, and a perseverance, not surpassed in the annals of parliamentary history. Driven from the ramparts, they have rallied and returned with renewed force; repulsed at one point, they have concentrated on another, until at length baffled in every attempt—beaten, broken, utterly routed, the friends of "liberty, constitution, union," have been compelled to abandon the assault, and retire dispirited from the field of battle.

The campaign commenced with the attack of Mr. Wayne on the United States Bank. He only moved to refer a part of the president's message, inimical to this institution, to a select committee, and although this was a courtesy rarely, if ever refused to a president, and the motion commanded the support of the administration, it was rejected indignantly by a vote of 108 to 67. The question of the bank—that great financial monster which, if permitted to exist, must inevitably devour our liberties, was heard no more in the house of representatives. In the senate, Mr. Benton revived it, after two-thirds of the session had passed away, and asked leave to introduce a resolution that the charter of the bank should not be renewed after its expiration in 1835, which, after one of the ablest and most unanswerable arguments ever heard on any floor, was promptly rejected by a vote of 23 to 20. The bank stands now as secure as it ever did, and the whole of its tremendous influence is at work, circulating McDuffie's reports—procuring reviews and pamphlets to be written, succoring distressed states, and brow-beating refractory ones, for the purpose of sustaining itself through the approaching ordeal of '35. And with its immense power, there is too much reason to believe that it is saddled upon us inevitably, and forever.

The second charge was lead by Mr. Haynes against the tariff. He introduced a motion that the committee of ways and means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the duty on sugar, and the house refused to consider it by a majority of 16 votes. The proposition was renewed the next day by Mr. Barringer, who included in it bar iron, coarse wool and woollens, and cotton bagging. The house refused to consider this motion by the increased majority of 38. These motions, it will be recollected, the house did not reject simply, but to express their perfect contempt of them, refused to consider. The plan of attacking the tariff in detail, so much vaunted last summer, was thus exploded at once! It was some time after, that Mr. Haynes made a third attack on sugar, and at last succeeded in obtaining the consideration of his resolution by a vote of 89 to 85—a majority of four, in the absence of thirty-nine members. It was not, however, until near the close of the session, that it was brought before the house, and then Mr. White occupied the time allotted to such discussions every day until the adjournment, in opposition to the resolution. In the senate, the repeal of the sugar duty was referred to the committee of manufactures, and Mr. Dickerson made a report recommending the indefinite postponement of the subject. The report was laid on the table, and there ended the matter. We were confidently told last summer, that the sugar duty would go by the board this session, and here is the history of as lamentable a failure as has ever been recorded. Will false prophets—no, we will not call them so, for many have been honestly deluded—will our too sanguine friends attempt by any ingenuity, to excuse this gross outrage, not only on our rights, but on our feelings? Or can they any longer cry out "patience?" Will they say in another session this duty will be taken off? We believe it will. The moment the real monopolizing party, who go for protecting nothing but their own manufactures and the raw materials necessary for them, are strong enough, they will discard every article the duty on which they have to pay in common with the south, and leave naked and bald the hideous machine by which we are to be crushed.—All other attacks upon the tariff have met with the same fate. General Smith's bill for the gradual melioration of the system, bad as it was, received no courtesy, and Mr. Haynes' report in favor of lowering the duty on iron, though it recommended no present movement, came to the light clogged with a counter report from the minority—(one man), and fell heavily upon the table. The propositions just laid upon the table by Mr. Benton for consideration next session, for the reduction of certain duties after the payment of the public debt, amount to "vox et preterea nihil." If ever they are called up again, it will only be to make more permanent arrangement for their repose. But have the tariff party done nothing more than maintain their ground with firm and scornful defiance? Look at the report of the committee on manufactures. It boldly assumes the ground that any modification of the duties whatever is inexpedient. It attributes the prosperity of the country (north of the Potomac?) entirely to the tariff, and warning its friends of the efforts making to cut it up in detail, admonishes them that the great interests of the country should hold a "generous communion" with each other, and by making "mutual concessions," unite in the "common cause" of sustaining the protecting system. This is certainly cheering.—It is the returning sense of justice—the redeeming spirit of which we have heard so much.—Barter and traffic in principles and rights, in market overt—a diabolical conspiracy against the liberties of the nation, and the property of a portion of the citizens formed in the capitol, in open day—before the eyes of the people. Shall we be told to bear with it? Nor is this all: as if to place an hermetic seal upon all delusive hopes, by convincing us that they have gone as far as they intend to go in the way of repeal, they have stopped in their course, and resolved, if not to retrace their steps, at all events to remain where they are. A bill was reported by the committee on manufactures, to continue the duty on salt, which had, by the act of the session before the last, fallen five cents on the 1st of January last, and is to fall five more on the first of January next, at its present rate of 15 cents a bushel. So far from gaining any thing against the tariff, this bill provides for an increase of it, a repeal of it, a repeal of a part of the very act on which the relief party took their stand last summer. This bill was laid upon the table. Mr. Mallary, the chairman of the committee on manufactures, voting for its postponement. The report, however, was printed; and this was the only object sought for the present. Instead of the expectations of the people being realised by some reduction, however small, of the tariff, they find that an effort is making, and will no doubt prove successful, to filch back from us a part of what we have gained. The bill is a standing menace. There it lies, as if to scoff at the pretensions of those who would cut up the tariff by piecemeal—a flag of defiance hung out to show us that all hope of reconciliation is past, and to warn us that if any thing is to be done, it is not worth while to mince matters any longer—the time has arrived!—So much for the tariff.

The veto message of general Jackson has, it cannot be denied, checked the progress of that gangrene on the body politic—internal improvements. Yet the grounds taken in that message evidently show that he acts upon no clear and definite principle, and will leave to his successor no established landmark by which to be guided in his administration. It forms no precedent based on the essential principles of the constitution, but only goes to build up a custom founded on the will of the president, sustained by reasons as vague and oracular as ever came from the lips of power. It has been truly said by one of the most subservient of parasites, "the snake is only scotched—not killed." The boldness with which new schemes of internal improvement have been pressed—the national road of sixty miles long in Illinois—the extension of the Cumberland road through Ohio, Indiana, Illinois—the clearing out of creeks, &c. &c., some of which have succeeded, shew that the friends of the system feel by no means daunted or hopeless. It will scarcely be believed that notwithstanding the great and much vaunted reform of the administration, the immense sum of twelve hundred and forty thousand dollars, in round numbers, has been appropriated at this session, for purposes of public improvement, including the sums appropriated for beacons, buoys, &c., which absorb about five hundred and seventy-five thousand of it, leaving six hundred and sixty-five thousand for internal improvements. Of this sum, one hundred thousand dollars has been appropriated to the Cumberland road, which has already cost the government nearly $3,000,000, and constitutes now an annual sink for the interest, of upwards of $1,650,000 or more. 25,000 dollars has been appropriated for carrying on surveys under the act of 1824. An act justly considered as throwing wide the doors for boundless speculations in this branch of usurpation—which has already caused hundreds of thousands to be expended in laying out plans for public works, the lowest estimated expense of which will not be, if executed, not less than sixty millions of dollars. Of the balance Massachusetts has received, leaving out fractions, $41,000; New York $77,000; Pennsylvania $217,000; and Ohio is benefitted first and last by the enormous expenditure of $235,000. Louisiana receives $18,000; North Carolina $25,000; Arkansas $15,000; Florida $17,000; and this is all that is expended south of the Potomac. Of the sum appropriated for beacons, buoys, &c. Maine receives $30,500; Massachusetts $14,300; Connecticut $14,800; Rhode Island $3,000; New York $12,300; Pennsylvania $11,500; Maryland $19,900; Virginia $8,000; North Carolina $12,400; Georgia $3,000; Mississippi $14,400; Louisiana $47,000; Florida $17,000; Illinois $5,000; Michigan $20,300; Ohio $6,000; and poor South Carolina $2,500.

Such have been the appropriation of the public money for the purposes of public improvement; and in these directions has it gone. We repeat it, "the snake is only scotched," and scarcely that. But supposing this hand of boundless profusion to be cut off from the body politic, has the late session given us nothing in its stead? The scheme of the distribution of the surplus revenue, so warmly recommended in both messages of the president, has been reported on by a committee of the house. They modestly submit it to the consideration of the states, for the present. But will it stop here? We fear not. The president is too firmly attached to it—it is a child of his own, nursed by himself, and he will not abandon it readily. Should it be enforced, the dangerous and ruinous tendency of internal improvement, in their worst form, will be forgotten in the convulsion it will bring upon this nation. The enormous pension bill which has passed the house, but was not taken up in the senate, owing to the press of business and the opposition of Mr. Hayne, provides for the disbursement of eight millions of dollars anually, as relief to our plethoric treasury! What are internal improvements to this, and who can say that there is a prospect of a repeal of the tariff, from the economy of the goverment, which, after the payment of the public debt, will necessarily reduce it? And this bill will finally pass. One, almost the same with it, was lost in the senate last year by a single vote. So much for internal improvement.

The federal judiciary, that tremendous engine of federal power, has been also attacked by the friends of the constitution. The bill of Mr. Davis, providing for the repeal of the first and most dangerous inroad on the constitution in its favor, supported by a report as conclusive as was ever presented to any deliberative body, was promptly and indignantly rejected at its second reading by a vote of 137 to 51. The result of the trial of judge Peck, in the senate, which occupied so much of the time of congress, shews too plainly that the feelings which sustain this institution in the exercise of its despotic powers, will also shield its officers from the punishment due to the most arbritrary, and high-handed violations of the rights of the citizens, which have ever stained the judicial records of any nation.

From this imperfect review of the proceedings of congress, it is obvious that the republican cause not only has gained nothing during the late session, but has lost much. From every assault on the usurpations of the government, our friends have been driven back, discomfitted. And the bank, the tariff, the federal judiciary, the two former in principle and the latter in practice, engines of oppression, which are crushing to the earth the people of the south, and annihilating the freedom of the nation, stand secure in their strength, and scornful in their defiance of our puny efforts to impose a check upon them. We have not time for further reflections on this all important subject, but we put the questions—Has not the time arrived for the union of all parties in the state in the defence of their rights? Are not all of those who deluded the people and themselves with the hope of some relief from the late congress now bound to throw themselves into the republican ranks, and join in one last and resolute effort to protect the sovereignty of our state within her chartered limits?

CHOCTAW TREATY.

EXECUTIVE PROCEEDINGS.

Extract from so much of the executive journal of the senate as relates to the Choctaw treaty.

Thursday, December 9, 1830. The following message was received from the president of the United States, by Mr. Donelson, his secretary:

Gentlemen: I transmit herewith a treaty, concluded by commissioners duly authorized on the part of the United States with the Choctaw tribes of Indians, which, with the explanatory documents, is submitted to the senate for their advice and consent as to the ratification of the same. ANDREW JACKSON.

December 9, 1830.

The message, treaty, and documents, were read.

Ordered, That they be referred to the committee on Indian affairs, and that the treaty and documents be printed under an injunction of secrecy.

Tuesday, December 14, 1830. The following motion, submitted by Mr. Poindexter, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before the senate, copies of any letters or other communications which may have been received at the department of war, from the chiefs and head men, or any one of them, of the Choctaw tribe of Indians, since the treaty entered into by the commissioners on the part of the United States, with the tribe of Indians, at Dancing Rabbit creek; and that he also be requested to inform the senate, from the information which he may possess on that subject, whether any, and if any, what number of Indians belonging to said tribe have emigrated to the country west of the Mississippi since the date of said treaty, and whether any reluctance has been manifested by said Indians, or any part of them, to emigrate according to the stipulations of the treaty: and, also, what number of said tribe had removed west of the Mississippi according to former treaties entered into with them.

Monday, December 20, 1830. The following message was received from the president of the United States, by Mr. Donelson, his secretary:

December 20, 1830.

To the senate of the United States:

In compliance with the resolution of the senate of the 14th inst. calling for copies of any letters or other communications which may have been receivd at the department of war, from the chiefs and head men, or any one of them, of the Choctaw tribe of Indians, since the treaty entered into by the commissioners on the part of the United States with the tribe of Indians, at Dancing Rabbit creek; and also for information showing the number of Indians belonging to that tribe who have emigrated to the country west of the Mississippi, &c. &c. I submit herewith a report from the secretary of war, containing the information requested.

ANDREW JACKSON.

The message and documents were read.

Ordered, That they be referred to the committee on Indian affairs, and be printed in confidence for the use of the senate.

Monday, January 3, 1831. The following message was received from the president of the United States, by Mr. Donelson, his secretary:

January 3, 1831.

To the senate of the United States:

Since my message of the 20th of December last, transmitting to the senate a report from the secretary of war with information requested by the resolution of the senate of the 14th December, in relation to the treaty concluded at Dancing Rabbit creek, with the Choctaw Indians, I have received the two letters which are herewith enclosed, containing further information on the subject. ANDREW JACKSON.

The message and the accompanying documents were read.

Ordered, That they be referred to the committee on Indian affairs, and be printed under an injunction of secrecy.

Tuesday January 4, 1831. Mr. White, from the committee on Indian affairs, to whom was referred, on the 9th December, the treaty with the Choctaw Indians, together with the messages relating thereto of the 20th December and the 3d inst. reported the treaty without amendment.

Thursday, February 17, 1831. The treaty with the Choctaw Indians was read the second time, and considered as in committee of the whole.

On motion by Mr. Poindexter,

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

The following motion, submitted by Mr. Benton, was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the committee on Indian affairs be authorized to call before them any persons now in Washington city, and take their examinations on oath, relative to the country destined for the use of the Choctaws, and other Indians, beyond the Mississippi, and the actual condition of the Indians who have removed; and report the said examinations to the senate.

Saturday, February 19, 1831. Mr. Benton, from the committee on Indian affairs, who were authorized by the resolution of the senate of the 17th inst. to take depositions relative to the country destined for the use of the Indians beyond the Mississippi, submitted the answers of William Clarke, superintendent of Indian affairs at St. Louis, to certain interrogatories propounded by the committee.

The document was read.

The senate resumed, as in committee of the whole the consideration of the treaty with the Choctaw Indians, and no amendment having been made, it was reported to the senate.

Mr. White submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent:

Resolved, (two thirds of the senators present concurring), That the senate do advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty between the United States of America and the mingoes, chiefs, captains, and warriors of the Choctaw nation, concluded at Dancing Rabbit creek, on the 15th of September, 1830, together with the supplement thereto, concluded at the same place the 28th of September, 1830.

A motion was made by Mr. Knight to amend the resolution by inserting after "that," in the second line, the following: "disavowing the principle asserted by the commissioners in the preamble that the president cannot protect the Choctaw people in their rights and possessions in the state of Mississippi; but on the contrary he has full power and authority, so to do, and with this asseveration."

And, after debate,

On motion by Mr. Hendricks, it was agreed to recommit the treaty to the committee of the whole.

On motion by Mr. Hendricks, to strike out the preamble to the treaty, the question was put—Shall the following words, "whereas the general assembly of the state of Mississippi has extended the laws of said state to persons and property within the chartered limits of the same, and the president of the United States has said that he cannot protect the Choctaw people from the operation of these laws: Now, therefore, that the Choctaws may live under their own laws in peace with the United States and the state of Mississippi, they have determined to sell their lands east of the Mississippi, and have accordingly agreed to the following articles of treaty" stand part of the treaty? And it was determined in the negative—yeas 11, nays 32.

Those who voted in the affirmative are—

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Dudley, Ellis, Forsyth, Grundy, Hayne, King, Livingston, Tazewell, White—11.

Those who voted in the negative are—

NAYS—Messrs. Barnard, Barton, Bell, Bibb, Burnet, Chambers, Chase, Dickerson, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Holmes, Iredell, Johnston, Kane, Knight, McKinley, Marks, Naudain, Poindexter, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Sanford, Seymour, Smith, of Md. Smith, of S. C. Sprague, Troup, Tyler, Willey, Woodbury—32.

So the motion to strike out the preamble was agreed to.

No further amendment having been made, the treaty was reported to the senate, the question again put, and the amendment concurred in.

Mr. White submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, (two-thirds of the senators present concurring), That the senate do advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty between the United States of America and the mingoes, chiefs, captains, and warriors, of the Choctaw nation, concluded at Dancing Rabbit creek, on the 15th of September, 1830, together with the supplement thereto, concluded at the same place, the 28th September, 1830, with the exception of the preamble.

Monday, Feb. 21, 1830. The senate resumed the consideration of the treaty with the Choctaw Indians, together with the resolution submitted the 19th instant, to ratify the same.

On motion by Mr. Knight to amend the resolution, by inserting after the word "That," in the 2nd line, the following words—"disavowing the principle asserted by the commissioners in their negotiation, that the president cannot protect the Choctaw people in their property, rights and possessions, in the state of Mississippi"—it was determined in the negative—yeas 19, nays 25.

Those who voted in the affirmative are—

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Burnet, Chambers, Chase, Clayton, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Holmes, Johnston, Knight, Marks, Naudain, Robbins, Ruggles, Seymour, Silsbee, Sprague, Willey—19.

Those who voted in the negative are—

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Bibb, Brown, Dickerson, Dudley, Ellis, Forsyth, Grundy, Hayne, Hendricks, Iredell, Kane, King, Livingston, McKinley, Poindexter, Robinson, Sanford, Smith, of Md. Smith, of S. C. Tazewell, Troup, Tyler, White, Woodbury—25.

On the question to agree to the resolution, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 33, nays 12.

Those who voted in the affirmative are—

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benton, Bibb, Brown, Chase, Dickerson, Dudley, Ellis, Forsyth, Grundy, Hayne, Hendricks, Holmes, Iredell, Johnston, Kane, King, Knight, Livingston, McKinley, Poindexter, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Sanford, Smith, of Md. Smith, of S. C. Tazewell, Troup, Tyler, White, Willey, Woodbury—33.

Those who voted in the negative are—

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Burnet, Chambers, Clayton, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Marks, Naudain, Noble, Seymour, Silsbee, Sprague—12.

Ordered, That the secretary lay this resolution before the president of the United States.

—

[The motion made by Mr. Hendricks, to strike out the preamble to the treaty, is a solemn protest against certain doctrines lately advanced in respect to the Indians. The senate 32 to 11, would not admit the right of Mississippi to extend her laws over them, nor that the United States "cannot protect the Choctaw people from the operation of these laws."]

The following article from the "National Intelligencer" is highly interesting—

It has been suggested that those members of the senate opposed to the administration, who voted for the Choctaw treaty, have sanctioned the doctrines of the administration in regard to the Indians. On the contrary, it will be seen from the extract from the executive journal, that they have put on record a solemn protest against those doctrines. The condition of the Choctaws, as they understand it, is this: The state of Mississippi had extended its laws over this nation, and incorporated them with their citizens; that is, compelled them to be citizens or subjects. To this the Indians never would submit, and claimed the protection of treaties and the laws of the United States. The president, denying the constitutionality of these laws and treaties, refused to execute them against the laws of that state. The senate, if it had the will had no power, to compel the president to execute these laws. The Indians were doomed to submission or banishment. To have refused to ratify this treaty, then, would have left them at the disposition of a state determined to get rid of them, and with no place provided for their retreat, nor means of subsistence until they could find a home beyond the reach of the white man. They thought, in a word, that it would have been cruel to protect the Indians to their own destruction.

It is well understood that those senators of the minority who voted for the ratification of the treaty, or several of them, condemned in strong language, the course of measures by which this noble race were brought to the brink of ruin; for such they considered the situation of the Choctaws to be, though they have been dealt with much more considerately and kindly than the Cherokees are supposed by some to have been. But they saw that this course had placed these Indians in a thraldom from which the senate could not extricate them; that go they must—go they would, without knowing where, rather than submit to the laws of the state, against which the president had declined to protect them. It was then thought by those who voted for the ratification of the treaty, to be due to the Indians—it was due to humanity—to approve the treaty, and give them a home, and furnish them the means of enjoying it.

Such is the exposition which, in conversation, we have received of the views of the senators who voted for the ratification of the Choctaw treaty.

CONGRESSIONAL REPORTS.

[Made the 10th February, 1802, and committed to a committee of the whole house on Monday next]—

Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures, on the memorials and petitions of sundry manufacturers of gun-powder, of hats, of types, of brushes, and of stone ware within the United States, referred during the present session.

That in the opinion of your committee, such manufactures as are obviously capable of affording to the United States an adequate supply of their several and respective objects, ought to be promoted by the aid of government. Two modes of administering this aid have presented themselves to your committee: the one, to permit free of duty, the importation of such gross articles as are essential to those manufactures, the other, to impose higher duties on such articles on importation, as can be supplied by our own citizens to advantage.—That at the present juncture, our infant manufactures peculiarly demand and merit the protection of government. Exempt as the foreign manufactures will now be from the charges of war-freight or war-insurance, the manufacturing interest of the United States will not be capable of entering into a competition with them on equal terms, without the friendly interposition of government. The committee therefore recommend the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the following articles, in addition to those already free, be admitted free of duty on importation, viz: burr-stones, unwrought-bristles—regulus of antimony,—salt-petre, sulphur and rags.

Resolved, That it is expedient to impose a duty, in future of twenty-five per cent. ad valorem, on fur hats, brushes, stone ware, printing types, saddles, cannon balls, glass bottles, and glass ware of all kinds—on gun powder, five cents per lb; on glue, three cents per pound; on tarred cordage, two cents per pound; on untarred cordage or yarns, two cents and a half per pound; on soap, three cents per pound; on candles of tallow, three cents per pound; on window glass ten by twelve, or under, two dollars per hundred feet; on all above that size, three dollars per hundred feet; on anchors, two cents per pound; on spikes and bolts of iron, two cents per pound; on cut, slit or rolled iron, one cent per pound.

Resolved, That in future, there be imposed a duty on importation from any foreign nation, of one dollar per barrel on all pickled fish, and one dollar per quintal on all dried fish.

A true copy.

Attest, MATTHEW ST. CLAIR CLARKE,
clerk of the house of representatives.

February 15, 1831.

—

Made the 18th Febrnary 1802, and referred to the committee of the whole house, to whom was committed on the tenth inst., the report of the committee of commerce and manufactures on the memorials and petitions of sundry manufacturers of gun powder, of hats, of types, of brushes, and of stone ware within the United States.

Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures on the petition of sundry inhabitants of the state of Kentucky, referred on the ninth instant.

That your committee have in a former report recommended additional duties on tarred and untarred cordage and yarns, so that the duty payable hereafter may be two cents per pound on tarred, and two and a half cents per pound on untarred cordage—that the present duty on hemp is twenty-two dollars and forty cents per ton—on sail duck twelve and a half per cent. ad valorem. That the duty on hemp is about twenty per cent. on its prime cost in Europe, which is equal to any protecting duty heretofore laid by law, or now recommended by your committee. The committee are apprehensive, that the laying of higher duties on those articles would have a tendency to induce our ship owners to equip their ships in foreign countries, to the great injury of the petitioners and such other citizens of the United States as may have engaged in the culture of hemp, or its manufacture into cordage or sail duck.

The committee are therefore of opinion, that it would not be expedient to impose further duties on hemp or sail duck.

A true copy.

Attest, MATTHEW ST. CLAIR CLARKE,
clerk of the house of representatives.

February 15*th*, 1831.

—

Made the 8th of March, 1802, and referred to the committee of the whole house to whom was committed on the 10th ult. a report of the committee of commerce and manufactures on the memorials and petitions of sundry manufacturers of gun powder, of hats, of types, of brushes, and of stone ware within the United States.

Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures, on the petitions of sundry manufacturers of starch, of paper, and of umbrellas in the state of New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Delaware, referred on the eighteenth twenty-sixth, and twenty-seventh ultimo, and the first instant.

That your committee have already recommended, that rags, being the gross article of which paper is made, should in future be imported free of duty: that this encouragement added to the twelve and a half per cent. now imposed on the importation of foreign made paper, it is hoped and expected will be sufficient for the manufacture of that article. The committee are of opinion that as paper is the gross article made use of by our printers of all kinds, it would be extremely injurious to that useful branch and inexpedient to increase the duty on imported paper.

Your committee recommend that the duty in future to be imposed on starch may be three cents per pound—on hair powder, four cents per pound, and on umbrellas, fifty cents each.

A true copy.

Attest, MATTHEW ST. CLAIR CLARKE,
clerk of the house of representatives.

February 15th, 1831.

—

Made the 16th of April, 1802—considered and agreed to.

Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures on the memorials and petitions of sundry calico printers in Pennsylvania—of sundry citizens of New Jersey and Delaware—of sundry cordwainers of Massachusetts and Delaware, of Samuel Corp, of sundry merchants of Richmond and Manchester in Virginia—of sundry shoemakers of the town of Lynn in Massachusetts—and of Thomas Stagg, junior, and Thomas Snell—also on a resolution of the house of the 18th of February last, directing the committee to inquire and report on the expediency of erecting a port of entry at the town of Beaufort in North Carolina.

That the joint committee of both houses having determined on closing the present session at an early day, the committee are of opinion, that the consideration of the said petitions and resolve be postponed until the third Monday of November next.

A true copy.

Attest, MATTHEW ST. CLAIR CLARKE,
clerk of the house of representatives.

—

Made the 21st of February, 1803—considered and the resolution therein contained agreed to by the house.

The committee of commerce and manufactures, to whom were referred the petitions and memorials of the following manufacturers of the United States, to wit: of the Franklin association, and other journeymen printers,—of comb-makers, gun smith's, cork-cutters, calico printers, cordwainers, paper-makers, letter founders, makers of umbrellas, brushes, glass, stone ware, gun-powder, hats and starch, praying for protecting duties to be laid on the importation of articles, of their respective manufactures, REPORT:

That justice to the petitioners and sound policy point to the necessity of granting governmental aid for the protection of such manufactures as are obviously capable of affording to the United States an adequate supply of their several and respective objects, either by admitting free of duty the raw article essential to their manufactures, and which cannot be procured in the United States, or by imposing a higher duty than is paid on those articles, to the manufacture whereof our citizens are incompetent.

The committee take leave to observe, that the duties now payable on importation do not in their opinion, operate as protecting duties to our infant manufactures, because that the duties on almost all the articles of consumption being nearly equal, the manufacturers of the United States are charged therewith in every thing they consume, and the journeymen being compelled to pay for every thing they consume at least 28 per cent. more than they would be obliged to pay, if such duties did not exist; he must of course be paid in proportion for his labor—your committee are therefore induced to believe that the present duties on imports operate as an injury rather than a benefit to the manufacturer of the U. States.

Your committee refrain from pressing this important subject during the present session, as well because that the press of public business is such, that time sufficient could not be afforded for a proper discussion, as that they hope and expect that congress will, at their next session, revise their laws laying duties on imports, as a preparation for which the committee submit the following resolution—

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be, and he is hereby directed to prepare and lay before congress early in their next session, a plan for the laying new and more specific duties, on goods, wares and merchandise imported into the United States, so as that the same shall (as near as may be) neither increase nor diminish the present revenue arising to the United States from imports.

A true copy.

Attest, MATTHEW ST. CLAIR CLARKE,
clerk of the house of representatives.

February 15th, 1831.

—

Made January 24th, 1804. Read and referred to the committee of ways and means.

The secretary of the treasury, in obedience to the resolution of the house of representatives of the 21st of February, 1803, respectfully REPORTS—

That the articles in the annexed statement are susceptible of being taxed in proportion to quantity instead of value—

That the great variations in prices, arising from the various places where the articles are purchased, from fluctuations at the same places, and from the different modes of purchasing, render it difficult to state with precision, in conformity with the resolution, what specific duty, instead of that now laid, would neither increase nor diminish the revenue; but that from the best materials which have been obtained, the duties, which, in the annexed table, are stated as equal to those now laid, appear equivalent to the present duties ad valorem computed on the highest market value—

And that the alterations in the rate of duty, which will be found in the last column of the statement, have been suggested by some of the collectors.

Although not embraced by the resolution of the house, it is respectfully suggested, that a small difference in the rate of duties respectively laid on the importation of several manufactures of hemp and flax, cotton, silk, wool, paper, leather and hardware, for the purpose of ascertaining with precision the amount consumed in the United States of each class, would hereafter enable the legislature, without risk to the revenue, to introduce from time to time such modifications as might appear most favorable to the agricultural and manufacturing interests of the country.

All which is respectfully submitted.

ALBERT GALLATIN.

Treasury department, 23d January, 1804.

—

Statement of articles, on the importation of which new specific duties may be laid.

ARTICLES.	Quantity.	Specific duty equal to the ad val. imp. by new tariff.	Alterations on specific duty proposed by several collectors.
Fish.		$ Cts.	Dolls. Cts.
Cod, dried	cwt.	37½	1
Salmon, pickled	barrel	75
Mackarel do.		45	75
Shad do.		37½
Herrings do.		28	50
Fruit.
Almonds, soft shelled	lb.	2½
hard do.		2
Currants		2
Prunes and plumbs		2	2
Figs		1½
Raisins, Muscatel		1½
Do. in boxes and jars		1½
Do. in casks		1	1½
Pine apples	t00	60	1
Cocoa nuts		60
Lemons		18	50
Oranges		18
Limes		8	20

Glass.
Black quart bottles	groce	60		75
Window, English
not above 8 by 10	100 s.f.	1 60	}
10 by 12		1 75	}	1 75
above		2 25	}
Do. German
not above 8 by 10		1	}
10 by 12		1 20	}	1 25
above		1 50	}
Gun-powder.
First quality	ewt.	3 25	}
Second do.		2 75	}	3
Iron.
Old		25		25
Bar		60		75
Hoop and slit		90		1
Sheet		1 20		1 25
Paints.
White lead in oil		2	}
Do. dry		1 90	}	2
Red lead in oil		1 50	}
Do. dry		1 35	}	1 50
Yellow ochre in oil		1 50	}
Do. dry		60	}
Spanish brown in oil		80	}	1
Do. dry		20		50
Pewter.
Plates and dishes	lb.	3½		5
Quick silver		5½		10
Spices.
Cassia		3		6
Cinnamon		20		20
Cloves		20		20
Mace		1 25		1 25
Nutmegs		50		50
Tallow		1		1½
Nankeens.
Short	peice	9		10
Long		14	}	15
Blue		15	}
Russia sheeting.		2	}
Do. duck		1 80	}	2
Raven's do.		1 20		1 50
Umbrellas.
Silk, East India		35		35
Do. other		50		75
Cotton		25		30
Nails.*
From 3*d.* to 8*d.*	lb.	2		3
Under 3*d.*		2		15 p. c. ad. val.
†Segars.	thoud.	30		2
‡Seines.	lb.	unascerd		4
§Shoes.
Kid and morocco	pair	15		25
‖Wines.
Sicily	gallon	23		30
¶Saddles and saddlery.		12½ p. ct.		15 p. c. ad. val.

*Spikes and nails now pay a duty of 2*d.* per pound, which is, therefore, much lower, in proportion to the value on nails of a small, than on those of a large size; the alteration proposed in the last column would equalise the duty.

†Segars now pay, under the name of tobacco, a duty of 6*d.* per pound, which is less than 5 per cent. on the value.

‡Seines now pay an ad valorem duty of 12½ per cent.; twine pays 4 dollars per cwt.; it is proposed to lay a similar duty on seines.

§Kid and morocco shoes now pay the same duty as leather shoes, viz: 15 cents per pair; it is proposed to lay on them a duty equal to that laid on silk shoes, viz: 25 cents a pair.

‖Sicily wine being non enumerated, now pays 23 cents per gallon; it is proposed to lay on it a duty of 30 cents as on Lisbon wine, to which it is said to be at least equal in quality.

¶All manufactures of leather now pay 15 per cent. ad valorem, saddles and parts of saddles excepted, which pay only 12½ per cent.

Made 25th of January, 1804—Read and referred to a committee of the whole house on Monday next.

Report of the committee of commerce and manufactures, on various memorials and petitions from citizens of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Maryland, praying for legislative patronage to several domestic arts, trades and manufactures.

During the first session of the seventh congress, petitions and memorials were presented to congress from the manufacturers of gun powder, of hats, of printing types, of brushes and of stone ware. These were severally referred to the committee of commerce and manufactures. And upon them a distinct report was made on the 10th February, 1802. In the course of the same session, a report was made by the same committee on the subject of hemp, in consequence of a memorial from certain citizens praying an increase of duty on imported hemp and sail duck. This was presented to the house on the 18th February, 1802.

Afterwards, during the same session, the memorials and petitions of various manufacturers of starch, paper and umbrellas, referred by order of the house were severally reported on, and this report was offered on the 8th March, 1802.

The session then drawing to a close, the reports on these petitions, together with the memorials of sundry calico printers, cordwainers and shoe makers, were few of them, acted on; but were left with other unfinished business to be taken up at the succeeding session. The resolution of the house to this effect, passed on the 16th of April, 1802.

In the course of the succeeding session, a considerable number of the former petitions were renewed, or others presented for similar purposes: and to the former collection, were added memorials from printers, comb makers gunsmiths and cork cutters. The report on this volume of memorials was made on the 21st of February, 1803.

A number of these memorials, or others of the like import, have been presented again during the present session. The cutters of cork, the makers of plated trappings for carriages and horses, the stainers of plain cotton goods, and in short, the domestic tradesmen and artists of almost every other denomination, have applied to congress to patronise their respective employments, and to increase their profits. The modes of favoring domestic manufactures by governmental aid may be reduced to the following heads.

1st. Encouragement by exempting imported raw materials from imposts. Already has it been recommended to the house to encourage some of our domestic manufactures by increasing the facility of introducing the raw materials which enter into them. And it was thought a sufficient encouragement for the manufacture of wheat into flour, and of mill stones, that rough or unwrought burrs should be admitted free from duty. The like opinion was entertained concerning the encouragement of the brush manufacture, by advising that bristles of swine should be admitted free. As our country is not known as yet to furnish pure antimony, the exemption of the regulus of that metal from impost, was thought a sufficient encouragement for the incipient type manufacture. The paper manufacture seemed to be sufficiently provided for, if rags were permitted to be brought into the country without being dutied. Though saltpetre and sulpher, both abound in the U. States, yet as their preparation is still in a backward state it was thought that the manufacture of gunpowder would receive due patronage by exempting them both from the payment of imposts on their importation from Italy and India. Some think indigo ought to come free, as also, the bark of the cork tree.

2d. Encouragement by laying higher or prohibitory duties on manufactured articles imported. It has been urged that a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem, on fur hats, brushes, stone ware, saddles, cannon ball, glass bottles and glass ware of all kinds, and fifty cents on umbrellas, three cents per pound on starch; and four cents on hair powder, would leave an operation favorable to the domestic enterprise of hatters, brush makers potters, saddlers, iron masters, glass, umbrella and starch manufacturers.

In like manner it has been considered by a former committee, that if five cents the pound was laid upon imported gun powder, three cents per pound upon glue, two cents per pound upon tarred cordage, two and a half cents upon untarred cordage or yarns, on printed calicoes, an additional duty of two and a half per cent. on all plated ware an additional duty of five per cent. on soap, three cents the pound, on candles of tallow three cents the pound, on anchors, two cents per pound, on spikes or bolts of iron, two cents per pound, on cut, slitted, or rolled iron, one cent per pound, on foreign pickled fish, one dollar the barrel, and on all dried fish, one dollar the quintal, there would be an adequate governmental aid extended to the manufactures of gun powder, glue, cordage, soap, and candles, anchors, spikes, slit iron and to the cod fishery.

3d. Encouragement by withholding drawback from articles of foreign manufactures exported again.

This is done already in the case of loaf and refined sugar, and might easily be extended to other articles.

4th. Encouragement by allowing drawback of duties paid on domestic manufactures equal to what was paid for the raw materials on their importation.

This has generally been allowed on the exportation of sugar refined from the foreign material, and on rum distilled from foreign molasses, though under our present law neither is entitled to the drawback. It has been supposed that plain cottons which undergo the operation of staining and printing within the country might be permitted to receive drawback on exportation in the form of calicoes.

5th. By direct bounties. This mode of encouragement has been thought to have been employed in the curing and exporting of cod fish, and could be extended to other branches of business if sound policy required it.

From this view of the proceedings of congress, it will appear, that much has been done already to encourage the domestic industry of our citizens.

That industry under such aids as the government by these means has given, at a time when population is so rapidly increasing, has caused useful arts and manufactures to rise up and thrive in almost every part of the country; our works in wood, copper, hemp, leather and iron, are already excellent and extensive, and if we do not excel in the manufacture of the finer articles of cotton, silk, wool and the metals, we may felicitate ourselves that by reason of the ease of gaining a subsistence and the high price of wages, our fellow citizens born to happier destinies are not doomed to the wretchedness of a strict discipline in such manufactories.

Our citizens are distinguished for their ingenuity and skill; they have invented many expedients by machinery to shorten and cheapen labor. The machine for making wool and cotton cards, the machines for ginning cotton, the machine for cutting and heading nails, the machinery for elevating wheat and for raising and stirring meal in mills, and the improvements in the manufacture of muskets, class with the most useful inventions with which the age has been adorned.

It is perhaps to be regretted by the petitioners, that congress is deprived of the power to encourage manufactures by imposing duties on certain domestic raw materials if exported. If this, however, had not been withheld by the constitution, an export duty upon horns and bones of oxen and deer, might operate in favor of the comb, knife, lantern, &c. manufacture; and an export duty upon green myrtle wax, might favor the bleaching of that choice vegetable production, and the formation of white candles from it; so perhaps the laying an export duty upon furs would be a ready method of aiding the hat manufacturer. Or to take a stronger case, an export duty on provisions, by making bread, meal and other articles of food cheap at home, might be viewed by some of the petitioners as a capital method of lowering labor and encouraging domestic manufactures. But none of this latter class of expedients is under the control of the government.

The committee observe in the journal of the house, that on the 21st of February, 1803, a resolve was passed, directing the secretary of the treasury to prepare and lay before congress a plan for the levying new and more specific duties on goods, wares and merchandise imported into the United States, so that the same shall as near as may be, neither increase nor diminish the present revenue collected from imports. From this plan lately presented to congress, additional light has been thrown on this subject.

In the mean time, it ought to be considered that there is a great scope for agriculture, tillage, and rural employment in the United States. Agriculture is the great occupation which sets in motion all kinds of manufactures. It furnishes both the raw materials, and the articles of subsistence, to those who are engaged in manufacturing employments. The cultivation of the earth is therefore absolutely necessary to provide the ingredients for artizans to work upon, and the food for enabling them to live while they are engaged in labor. This being the fact, the great question arises, whether we shall furnish raw materials and food to manufacturers in our own country, or in foreign lands.

Political economists will instantly see that the good of the revenue and the happiness of the people, are best promoted, by offering a part of our unwrought materials and of our surplus provisions to domestic manufacturers, and at the same time to export the other part of what we can spare in exchange for the wrought productions of foreign manufactories.

In a country devoted to agriculture, the cluster of arts and trades, which minister to its wants, spring up of course, and almost from necessity. The plainer, coarser, and more useful fabrics in wood, wool, leather, iron, flax, cotton, and stone are manufactured with tolerable skill, while the more fine, costly and high wrought articles of those several kinds can be procured more conveniently from foreign parts, and while the country consumer pays for the former with one part of his spare produce, he barters away the other part to procure a proportion of the latter. There may be some danger in refusing to admit the manufactures of foreign countries; for by the adoption of such a measure, we should have no market abroad for our produce, and industry would lose one of its chief incentives at home.

In addition to the wise calculations and estimates of our predecessors in congress, who devised the existing systems of imports, there may, probably, be something done, and the following plan appears to the committee as well adapted as any thing that has occurred, to suit the wishes of the petitioners as far as seem reasonable, and as actual circumstances warrant:—

Resolved, That rags of linen, cotton, woollen and hempen cloths, bristles of swine, regulus of antimony, unwrought burr stones, salt-petre and the bark of the cork tree, which pay at present 12½ per cent. ad valorem be admitted free of duties.

Resolved, That brushes and black bottles now paying 12½ per cent., be henceforward charged with a duty of 25 per cent.

Resolved, That fur hats and plated ware, which now pay 15 per cent. shall be raised to a duty of 20 per cent.

Resolved, That stone ware, window glass, and cannon ball, which now pay 15 per cent. be hereafter charged with a duty of 25 per cent.

Resolved, That foreign pickled and dried fish, which now pay 12½ per cent. ad valorem, be subjected to a duty of 150 cents the barrel for the former, and 100 cents the quintal for the latter.

Resolved, That a duty of three cents the lb. be laid upon starch, of 4 cents the lb. upon hair powder, and 4 cents upon glue, on their importation, in lieu of the present duties of 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Resolved, That printed calicoes, and gun powder, now paying 12½ per cent. be henceforward charged with a duty of 15 per cent.

Resolved, That tarred cordage and cables, now paying 180 cents the cwt. be subjected to a duty of 2 cents the pound, and that untarred cordage, now paying 225 cents the cwt. be made to pay 2½ cents the pound.

Resolved, That a duty of 50 cents a piece be laid upon umbrellas, of 3 cents per pound upon soap, of 3 cents the pound upon the tallow candles, of 2 cents the pound upon anchors, of 2½ cents upon spikes and bolts of iron.

A true copy,

Attest, MATTHEW ST. CLAIR CLARKE,
clerk of the house of representatives.

15th Feb. 1831.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.

The monthly statements of the bank of the United States, called for by the house of representatives, were laid on the tables of the house. We select for publication the following recapitulation of the latest of those statements, being that for January, 1831.

Funded debt, various
Bills discounted, personal security	32,827,121 72
funded debt	83,276 00
bank stock	665,005 61
Domestic bills of exchange		33,575,403 33
Real estate		10,455,653 90
Baring, Brothers & Co., Hope & Co., Hottinger & Co.
Due from bank United States and offices		21,166,206 65
Due from state banks		2,618,146 87
Due from United States Deficiencies
Banking houses, bonus, and premium
Expenses
Cash, viz: notes of bank United States and offices	13,445,360 86
notes of state banks	1,494,506 64
specie	10,808,047 07
Mortgages
Navy agent, Norfolk
Foreign exchange account
			8,674,681 06
Capital stock		44,032,057 23
Notes issued		2,629,125 21
Discount, exchange, and interest		2,387,331 19
Dividends unclaimed
Profits and loss
Contingent fund
Less losses chargeable to contingent fund		23,784,250 52
Due to bank United States and offices		5,267 32
Due to state banks		141,874 55
Redemption of public debt		1,944,761 02
Deposites, viz: on account of treasury United States		77,285 02
Deduct overdrafts and special deposites
Deposites, viz: on account of public officers	25,746,914 57
Do. individuals	164,988 44
	40,144 17
	52,426 58
			109,081,106 88
			34,996,269 63
		3,390,892 45	31,972,247 76
		5,374,883 55	462,480 74
			69,541 18
			1,497,720 20
		18,818,207 65	1,983,991 10
		1,983,246 36	20,801,454 01
			574,701 14
	77,220,119 01
	279,490 20
	6,940,628 81
	1,616,685 18
	8,165,436 13
			109,081,106 88

Bank of the United States, Jan. 2, 1831.

W. McILVAINE, cashier.

DISBURSEMENTS OF GOVERNMENT.

A statement of the disbursements made in each state since 1789, for fortifications, light houses, public debt, revolutionary pensions and internal improvements, by a return made by the secretary of the treasury, transmitted to congress 21st December, 1830.

States and territories.	For fortifications.	For light houses.	For public debt.
Maine	6,105 07	124,687 34
N. Hampshire	95,913 30	65,277 12	1,181,399 22
Massachusetts	542,779 92	777,994 30	41,199,662 99
Rhode Island	603,545 46	113,039 05	1,933,764 54
Connecticut	72,196 29	138,671 43	2,592,565 88
Vermont		4,729 22
New York	3,266,136 15	404,646 21	48,032,756 47
New Jersey	20,350 00	3,251 17	1,131,841 90
Pennsylvania	191,871 64	27,458 88	60,888,181 07
Delaware	477,002 35	254,814 77	218,190 41
Maryland	1,079,809 03	103,715 39	7,755,036 76
Virginia	2,488,465 04	291,318 88	1,907,500 75
N. Carolina	507,772 78	304,307 13	272,713 22
S. Carolina	707,017 96	157,531 70	8,630,215 11
Georgia	175,777 58	242,867 73	158,546 53
Kentucky
Tennessee	15,111 18
Ohio		15,719 36
Louisiana	1,806,398 60	157,152 73
Indiana	525 00
Mississippi	1,400 00	4,560 44
Illinois	494 36
Alabama	1,174,362 98	14,628 98
Missouri	5,288 69
Michigan	34,534 12	20,809 89
Arkansas
Florida	104,000 00	121,534 63
Columbia	43,781 74		4,403,304 46
Total	13,420,639 24	5,348,716 35	180,303,679 31

*Revolutionary and other pensions, and internal improvements.

States and territories.	Revolutionary & other pensioners.	Internal improvements.
Maine	1,496,699 45	47,176 27
New Hampshire	1,229,771 92	35,529 76
Massachusetts	2,459,714 66	207,341 90
Rhode Island	346,943 22	200 00
Connecticut	1,403,376 60	25,859 14
Vermont	1,352,891 67
New York	4,590,337 08	174,181 90
New Jersey	550,857 20	100 00
Pennsylvania	1,897,211 19	42,641 68
Delaware	81,169 73	34,513 00
Maryland	574,614 57
Virginia	1,194,920 88	80 00
North Carolina	366,539 34	29,840 00
South Carolina	153,149 94
Georgia	117,758 78	7,514 68
Kentucky	764,530 83
Tennessee	557,044 30	200 00
Ohio	853,013 16	462,965 32
Louisiana	27,705 25	6,435 00
Indiana	188,118 82	115,067 49
Mississippi	19,481 55	53,291 38
Illinois	37,841 19	8,500 00
Alabama	81,411 21	92,725 73
Missouri	49,498 92	24,575 09
Michigan	29,884 99	84,523 56
Arkansas		47,477 20
Florida		102,955 15
Columbia	118,180 82
Cumberland road		2,443,420 20
Sub'n. to Ches. & Del. canal		450,000 00
Do. Dismal Swamp do.		200,000 00
Do. Lou. & Portl'd do.		235,500 00
Do. Ches. & Ohio do.		200,000 00
Improving the navigation of Mis. and Ohio rivers		180,315 65
Total,	20,492,647 27	5,310,930 11

*Under the head of internal improvement are included the building of piers, preservation of ports and harbors, making roads and removing obstructions in rivers.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 7—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, APRIL 16, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1021

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞ About as much matter as would fill two sheets has been prepared for the present one—of course, many articles have been postponed. Among them is a free and broad review of the principles of the message of the president of the United States, in which he rejected the Maysville road bill, and notices of various proceedings connected with it; also a long, and, as we think, interesting article on rail roads, steam and steam carriages—being a collection of facts which have cost us much application and time, adapted to general information. The latter was written in reply to certain queries propounded by the editor of the "Richmond Enquirer" in a good spirit which we are always happy to reciprocate, and, indeed wish to maintain with all men—though, when placed on the defensive, the Spartan policy of halting at the boundary of our own territory, is not always observed—as will be seen by the essay in the present number headed "Southern views"—In which we have carried "the war into the enemy's camp;" and we will do it—to the utmost extent that an industry which never tires, a zeal that has no bounds save in the full accomplishment of its purposes, will enable us to go, the state of our health permitting. We have suffered the persecution for opinion's sake—held orthodox before the revolution, and ever since, until late workings of political parties—and the whole of our "inner man" is filled with a spirit of resistance.

☞ The editor is collecting materials for a history of the IRON MANUFACTURE in the United States, and facts belonging to its early condition (even before the revolution) and its present state, are respectfully solicited, and in regard to all its branches, great or small—price and quantity, at various times, capital employed, and workmen and their families subsisted; references to the early proceedings of the British government to prevent the establishment of this manufacture—which her sagacious ministers well knew was "first in war and first in peace," are specially solicited. We desire to have the facts before the 1st of June—and if every individual who is interested will contribute his "mite," a body of information may be collected that will surprise the best informed among us.

It is not required that gentlemen should take much trouble in arranging the facts; the editor will cheerfully incur the labor of that. And, as he thinks it important that such a history should be prepared, he will thank all the friends of the "American system" with whom he exchanges, to give one insertion of this notice.

MR. INGHAM. Having mentioned, as an article of news, the reports concerning the retirement of the secretary of the treasury, it is proper to observe the Washington Globe says, that "not the slightest indication" has been given at Washington, "authorising the belief that such a thing was in contemplation."

The "Richmond Enquirer" knows nothing about the matter, but trusts that Mr. Ingham "will neither be removed nor retire, without good cause, independently of all party considerations."

But the "New York Standard" says—"We have little doubt that Mr. Ingham will resign as secretary of the treasury, and be succeeded by the honorable Louis McLane, now minister to England."

☞ The same New York paper has the following awful lines!—they are thought to relate to Noah, "judge of Israel," surveyor of the port of New York, and editor of the Courier!

"It is whispered, that at least one important U. S. officer in this city, will shortly have leave to retire.

COM. BAINBRIDGE, because of his removal from the command of the navy yard at Philadelphia, was complimented by a public dinner in that city on Thursday last.

No particulars have yet reached us. He is superceeded by com. Barron, instead of Warrington, as hitherto stated; the latter takes Barron's place at Norfolk.

JUDGE MCLEAN. A public dinner was tendered judge McLEAN, by a number of citizens of Philadelphia, on the 11th inst. which, in a long and handsome letter, he declined on account of his official duties.

MR. RANDOLPH. Error corrected! We stated in our last, that the Richmond Enquirer said, "Mr. Randolph would return to Russia in June." But Mr. Ritchie only "understands that Mr. Randolph expects to set out for St. Petersburg, on, or before, the month of June.

JUDGES AT THE POLLS! There has just been a most ardent contest for charter officers of the city of New York. Old Tammany grasped his tomahawk and mounted his war-horse, with a great shew of fight. The result is not yet known—but such was the excitement, that a greater number of votes have probably been taken than ever before was polled in that city.

Much was done in the different wards to keep "the party" together. The "Standard" of the 13th inst. had thirteen and an half of its heavy columns devoted to accounts of ward meetings, lists of committees of vigilance, and other results of regular electioneering! At the head of one of these committees of vigilance, the "Evening Journal" says that the names of judges Oakley and Irwin are placed. Judge Oakley is on the bench of the "superior court of the city of New York"—we do not know the particular place which judge Irwin fills. Surely, it was not expected that these gentlemen would scour the ward, and attend at the polls to hand out tickets, and take a part in the petty contests incident to a "committee man!" But we wonder at the confidence displayed in such a use of their names. Our elections are hot enough in Baltimore and other parts of Maryland, but neither party would dare a proceeding like this.

A "BATTLE CRY." The following line, which is the motto of the "Burlington, (Vermont) Free Press," seems about to be adopted as the battle cry of the opponents of the present administration:

"Not the glory of Cæsar, but the welfare of Rome,"

PHILADELPHIA. The late meeting in this city has caused a call of one of the citizens of the third congressional district, (now represented by col. Watmough), to be held at the Commissioners Hall, in the Northern Liberties, on Monday next, to appoint a delegate to the "grand national convention" to be held at Baltimore, in December next, to adopt measures opposed to the re-election of president Jackson.

Names were also gathering to a paper for a "Jackson town meeting" at Philadelphia, on Monday next, a due notice of the proceedings of which shall be given. The "Sentinel," the leading administration paper in that city, has adopted this motto:

"The union must and shall be maintained,"

AGAINST

"War, pestilence and famine."

A "MISTAKE!" The "honorable Isaac Hill's" [late?] paper, the New Hampshire Patriot, has the following sore denunciation and pregnant query:

"We learn that Eben L. Childs, of Portsmouth, has received the appointment of clerk in the general post-office, with a salary of $800 a year.—We should like to be informed who it is that has imposed the blue light federalist, and bitter reviler of general Jackson, upon the postmaster general?

MASSACHUSETTS. Other unsuccessful attempts have been made to elect members of congress from the yet vacant districts of Massachusetts, and the presence of three parties may still further embarrass the people; a majority of the whole number of votes being required to elect. In Essex, north district, Mr. Cushing had 2,109 votes, Mr. Osgood 1,531, Mr. Marston 1,136, and there were yet 124 scattering—one town to be heard from, which could not affect the result. Mr. C. was the national republican candidate, Mr. Osgood the Jackson, and Mr. Marston (a national republican) the anti-masonic. In the Bristol district, Mr. Hodges, the present member, received 2,276 votes, Mr. Ruggles 2,371—and 222 scattering—a "no choice" election again. Mr. Ruggles, though, as we believe, a "national republican," is also the anti-masonic candidate, and received the support of the friends of the administration, as well as of the anti-masons.

The "national republican" candidates for governor, lieut. governor, &c. have received about three-fourths of all the votes.

CONNECTICUT. The general election took place in this state last week. The whole "Clay ticket" was elected by a very large majority.* All the present members of congress—Messrs. Barber, Ellsworth, Huntington, Ingersoll, Storrs and Young were re-elected. For the lowest on the Clay ticket 10,038; highest on the Jackson ticket 5,260—lowest 3,915.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES. We lately published a resolution which passed both branches of the legislature of Pennsylvania almost unanimously, in favor of re-chartering the bank of the United States, and the following resolution, after an arduous and ardent debate, passed the house of assembly of New York:

"Resolved, (if the senate concur) as the sense of this legislature, that the charter of the bank of the United States ought not to be renewed."

The resolution was agreed to, ayes 73, noes 35, as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. L. Benton, Bettis, Bigelow, Blodget, Bogert, Brandow, Brown, Budd, Carroll, Clark, Cole, Cother, Comstock, Conklin, A. Cook, P. C. Cook, Crippen, Curtis, Downing, Eckerson, Edmonds, Eldridge, Fowler, Freeman, Gansevoort, Gardner, Gilbert, Gilchrist, C. Griswold, Hager, Henry, Hoffman, Hough, Howard, Hulse, Jermain, Kieth, Lawyer, Litchfield, Love, Mapes, McDowell, Morehouse, Moulton, Myers, Ostrander, Otis, Parker, Pike, Pine, Remer, Richardson, Rob, Schoonmaker, Shepard, speaker, J. B. Spencer, Sprague, Stackhouse, Tilford, J. E. Townsend, W. Townsend, Trowbridge, Turril, Van Buren, Vark, Walker, Watson, Weed, Whiteman, Williams, Winne, Worthington—73.

Noes—Messrs. Andrews, Ashley, Birdsall, Cargill, Dunlap, Earll, Eddy, Ellis, Fillmore, S. Griswold, Halsey, Horsford, Hubbard, Juliand, Laecy, Livingston, Ludlow, Manchester, Murphy, Norton, Ottley, Price, Rawson, Robinson, Sayler, Sayre, Selden, J. C. Spencer, Stilwell, Thorn, Tredwell, Tyler, White, Willcox, Woodworth—35.

The resolution came up in the senate of the state on the 11th April—when it was discussed, and a motion to postpone its consideration to January next, made. This was rejected on the 12th, as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Allen, Bronson, Cary, Fuller, Mather, Maynard, Porter, Rexford, Sanford, Seward, Sherman, Tracy, Warren—13.

Noes—Messrs. Armstrong, Beardsley, Benton, Conklin, Deitz, Dodge, Eaton, Foster, Gere, Hubbard, McLean, Quackenboss, Tallmadge, Throop, Todd, Westcott—16.

The question then occurred on the passage of the resolution, and it was carried, as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Armstrong, Beardsley, Benton, Conklin, Deitz, Dodge, Eaton, Foster, Gere, Hubbard, McLean, Quackenboss, Tallmadge, Throop, Todd, Warren, Westcott—17.

Noes—Messrs. Allen, Bronson, Cary, Fuller, Lynde, Mather, Maynard, Porter, Rexford, Sanford, Seward, Sherman, Tracy—13.

There are many strange stories connected with this resolution—some of which are probably much exaggerated, and we shall not specially refer to them. It was several times ably and warmly discussed in the house of assembly, and a motion for its indefinite postponement was only lost by the speaker's double vote—that is, he voted as a member to make a tie, and then as speaker to untie the result. This was passing in the very "eye of the wind."

There is one report, however, which we fear is true, and must confess that it has a little alarmed us—not because of its issue, but on account of its principle. It is stated, that after the decision above mentioned, which shewed a majority of one against the resolution, a caucus was held, at which a minority of the party, (but who had opposed to the resolution), were brought over to vote for it.

We regard this proceeding as altogether indiscreet, and dangerous to our republican institutions. We have no objection to caucuses when their object is to rally persons to the support of established principles; but cannot agree to submit principles to such decisions of party. The practice is pregnant with greater evils than its worst enemies ever apprehended of the bank.

As observed some time ago, when the season for it has arrived we shall probably take part in the discussion about the bank—but it has been prematurely, if not preposterously, forced upon the people. And this we will say, that if forced on the alternative, either to continue the present bank of the United States, with some few modifications of its privileges and powers, or adopt the project suggested by president Jackson in his message to congress, we shall support the bank, though "possessed" of five hundred "devils" more wicked than itself. We are entirely serious in saying, that we would prefer a king to such an institution, as by far the lesser oppression on the people.

While the resolution was under discussion in the assembly, Mr. Otis said—"that the bank had recently attempted to corrupt the public press in the city of New York. One editor was offered $1,000 to take ground for the bank. He indignantly rejected it. Another editor was offered fifty daily subscribers, at $40 a year, to espouse the cause of the bank. Whether the latter offer was accepted or rejected, remains to be seen.

"Mr. Stillwell inquired if the gentleman would name the presses to which he alluded.

"Mr. O. declined to mention names. It was not necessary for the purposes of the debate."

The editors of nearly all the papers in New York, in the absence of the names demanded of Mr. Otis, have very indignantly rejected his accusation. We shall, probably, hear more of it.

THE N. E. BOUNDARY. We have the official papers published by the public authorities in Maine, and they are laid off for insertion at some "convenient season," though containing nothing new that is important. Mr. Van Buren, on forwarding the papers to gov. Smith, says that Mr. Preble, our minister at the Hague, protested against the decision, and had obtained leave of the president of the United States to return home, that he may be "further heard upon the subject;" and intimates, that the decision of the arbitrator will be carefully examined, "in the councils of the executive of the United States," taking occasion to add the hope of the president, that Maine will take no steps with regard to the disputed territory, that may "embarrass the action of the executive branch of this government."

SOUTHERN VIEWS. We copy the following article from the "Charleston Mercury" of the 31st March, and have added our comments in the shape of notes—for some things are said that may be profitably descanted on, though nothing more than the ordinary assertion or rude invective of the anti-tariff press—which we have endeavored to repel.

"Mr. Niles, in the last number of his Register, has a long and earnest exhortation to the tariff party, to act with union and concert for the preservation of the system. Similar appeals have been made, from the halls of congress, by those liberal and national statesmen, Mallary and Dickerson. Mr. N. echoes their assertions, and joins in their entreaties. He contends, with them, that if the duties be reduced the manufacturers will be ruined; and that the national faith, in reliance upon which they embarked their capital in that species of industry, will be violated. (4.) He forgets to inquire what right congress has to support one kind of industry upon the ruin of others, or to elevate and aggrandize a small body of monopolists at the expense of all other classes of the people. (2.) He forgets to ask what right congress had to pledge the national faith to an unconstitutional act, or to bind the government to persistance in a foul and fraudful scheme of sectional legislation. Such questions as these do not suit his purpose. (3.) He sees nothing wrong in a violation of the constitution—nothing oppressive in sacrificing one portion of the union for the benefit of others—nothing dishonest in legalized robbery. (4.) With him the only valuable interest is that of manufactures—the only proper legislation that which shall support it most efficiently. He seems scarcely to realize that there are any other people than manufacturers, of any other property than looms and forges. He appears dreadfully afraid that "a grand and desperate attack is to be made upon the system at the next session of of congress;" and he therefore exhorts the supporters of the tariff to stick together—"the protected must protect—support must be given for support received"—So say Messrs. Mallary and Dickerson. The watchword has been given. (5.) The party must be organized—No inquiry into the merits of the system will be allowed—No hostile resolution suffered—No debate permitted. What if it is defective in some parts—what if it might be improved by judicious alteration—still it is perfect as a whole, and as a whole it must be maintained. No attacking in detail—no insolent investigation of separate items. (6.) This might possibly succeed; and if it should, it would "prostrate the chief workers of iron, and the cultivators of sugar. By detaching the members of congress interested in these, a majority might be obtained to break down the whole system of protection, which indeed can only exist as a system." The party, therefore, must cohere more closely than before. The "combination of interested minorities" must assist each other for the common good. The sugar planter must agree to pay more for his iron because he is himself protected—and the iron master more for his sugar, because the sugar planter makes common cause with him. And so throughout the whole. All the protected must submit to the inconveniences they reciprocally inflict upon each other, in consideration of the immense advantages they derive from their general plunder of the people. A "common sense of danger," or rather a common sense of profit, "must rally all under a common standard—the friends of the system must not permit one link of the chain of their union to be broken. The head may not say to the hand or the foot, the eye or the mouth, I have no need of thee." Here is comfort for the hoping party. Here is evidence of the relaxation and approaching dissolution of the system! Here are the fruits of a returning sense of justice! Not one link—no, not one—shall be stricken from the system. But this is not all. Mr. N. not only exhorts the party to increased vigilance and exertion, but especially recommends the distribution of tariff tracts and pamphlets for the more general diffusion of information on the subject. As a most important branch of this part of the system he modestly hints the propriety of promoting, as extensively as possible, the circulation of his own inestimable Register. (7.) He is "one of the oldest advocates of protection, and one of the most zealous and faithful friends"—But he would not be understood as petitioning for "relief," or as having any view in this suggestion to his own individual emolument. No—not at all. Who would suspect him of such a sordid motive. It is offered, of course, from the purest patriotism—the most disinterested regard to the interests of the party. "The time for action has arrived"—and what more natural or proper than that the champion of the cause should be well supported; the protected must protect each other. Now all this is very well, and if the most thorough devotion to the system can entitle any man to the active gratitude of the manufacturers, surely Mr. N. has a strong claim upon them. But what do the people of the south say to all this? They see the country flooded with appeals to the prejudices and interests of the tariff party—will they make no effort to counteract them? They see preparations making every where to organize the supporters of the system—will they do nothing to organize its opponents? Mr. Niles tells us "the time for action has arrived"—shall it find the people of the south asleep? But we ask pardon for these questions. The people of the south were never more awake or more determined on the course to be pursued. "A great battle is to be fought" says Mr. N.—The people of the south know it, and are ready for the conflict—"One more defeat of the enemy, says Mr. N. and the contest, we trust, will be over forever"—Yes, let the south be again spurned, and trampled—let her petitions and memorials be again thrown aside—her delegates again gagged—her rights again refused—her sufferings again unheeded and scornfully derided—and the contest, we apprehend, will indeed be over,—but not in the sense in which the editor of the Register employs those words." (8.)

*Except the lieutenant governor—three candidates being run.

(1.) I ("Mr. Niles") do not know that I ever suggested a violation of the "national faith" in a reduction of the duties, and would thank Mr. Pinckney to "put his finger" on the place; yet I have no hesitation in saying, that the national discretion, and public justice, would be grossly violated in accomplishing the wild projects of southern politicians. But the "national faith," I must think, is quite as much pledged to protect the labor of free white persons, as that of black working-machines; and that, if the interests of the two comes into competition (though I know no reason why they should), the latter ought, and must, and shall, give way.

(2.) I do not "forget to enquire what right congress has to support one kind of industry at the [pretended] ruin of others," as will be seen below. This cant about "ruin" and "monopolists" is stale and senseless. It was loudly shouted at the first session of the first congress of the U. States, 1789, by which congress a body was given to the protecting system. As to this "ruin"—how was it proclaimed before the passage of the tariff law of 1824? Will Mr. Pinckney refer to the speeches of Mr. Carter, of South Carolina, Mr. Tatnall, of Georgia, Messrs. Garnett and Randolph, of Virginia, and others, with the Charleston memorial of February, 1824—all BEFORE the passage of the "internal tariff bill" for the "waste and decay," the "desolation and reduction to beggary," "the poverty which was grinding to the bone," the "deplorable" state of things, the "pervading gloom" that "extended from the shores of the Potomac to the gulf of Mexico,"—which, certainly, the support of "one kind of industry" had not caused—for this simple, but good reason, that it had not been granted! We believe that the south was distressed previous to the year 1824—for we dare not say that the gentlemen named spoke falsely: we believe that the south is distressed—but the tariff now has no more to do with this distress now, than it had before the tariff existed! The evil lies much deeper—it is in the fearful increase of slaves, the superabundant productions of cotton—the continually increasing pride and improvidence of planters, the progress of idleness, and growing hate of honest free labor—which hate would appear to esteem nothing valuable, unless the impress of negro slavery is made upon it.*

* About three-fourths of the increase of South Carolina since 1820, has been in slaves. The following are paragraphs from some interesting remarks which appeared several months since in the "Charleston Courier."

"As soon as the census is completed, we shall discover to what cause the decline in the value of land is to be attributed. By those violent characters who wanted to conceal the effect of their own avarice and folly, in introducing one family of negroes, and in driving out two of white—in doing all they could to keep up the necessaries of life—in buying up all the land they could, (thus ensuring their own eventual ruin), and asking prices for it which was perfectly prohibitory—in buying negroes to grow cotton, and growing cotton to buy ne-

(3.) "He forgets to ask what right congress had to pledge the national faith to an unconstitutional act," &c. "Such questions as these do not suit his purposes."

Mr. Pinckney is much mistaken—they exactly suit my "purposes," and he shall have answers to them. But is the act unconstitutional? Mr. Pinckney says it is so—I say it is not so; and have as much right to a say in the matter as Mr. Pinckney. Does that gentleman remember that when Mr. Tatnall, of Georgia, swore "by heaven we will not submit to this law"—Mr. Tod, of Pennsylvania, swore "by heaven," that if the bill passed, he should—saying, "put that and that together—my oath against his—Pennsylvania against Georgia." But I have high South Carolina authority to plead against him! That great and good man, WILLIAM LOWNDES, ranking with the soundest and ablest men that ever appeared in the halls of legislation, made no question as to the constitutionality of a protecting tariff, but supported its expediency. The excellent speech of JOHN C. CALHOUN, in April 1816, is now before me—he proceeded quite as far in the principle as "Mr. Niles" has ever gone; and only two of the eight members of congress from South Carolina then opposed the broad ground that Messrs. Lowndes and Calhoun had taken, for the encouragement and protection of domestic manufactures. If South Carolina pleases to change her opinion of the constitution, am I to have a collar put upon my neck with "NULLIFICATION'S DOG" engraved on it? If South Carolina politicians are inconsistent with themselves, must my consistency with myself be disturbed? Must I—

> "As goose to gander, strict obedience keeps;
> Hiss if he hiss, and slumber if he sleeps."

No—Mr. Pinckney! I am a good deal too old for that. I am too much "committed" by one course from the days of my youth to the present time—and my knees are now too stiff to bend to any of the "strange gods" of the day.

(4) "He sees nothing wrong in a violation of the constitution—nothing oppressive in sacrificing one portion of the union for the benefit of others—nothing dishonest in legalized robbery."

Fie, Mr. Pinckney! Nobody honest but yourself, Mr. Pinckney? "Blow the cow's horn, that the kings of the earth may go to their dinners, for his majesty of Congo has dined!"* I would, most respectfully, suggest to Mr. PINCKNEY that Jefferson, Madison, Hamilton, may have been honest men, who would not "legalize robbery;" and I humbly take leave to offer an opinion, that the twenty-six members of the house of representatives, sent thither by the free white men of PENNSYLVANIA, unanimously favoring this pretended "violation" of the constitution—may be as honest people as the twenty-six members of the same house, who have seats therein because of the abundance of "wool and ivory" in the south. It is a singular fact, that the whole vote of Pennsylvania is neutralized by the vote in congress which represents negro slaves. Does it become those who hold this mighty power in making the laws, to charge a still decided majority in congress with a disregard of their oaths? We say, it is the supremacy of impudence, but hardly worth the contempt of an honorable man. The free laboring people of the United States will "speak to" this proscription through the ballot boxes; and those who do not repel it, will well deserve a pair of thick lips and a blackened skin.†

But we shall make a few remarks about this violation of the constitution.

As early as the year 1765, very numerous meetings of the people of the American colonies (now states), were held to encourage domestic manufactures. The necessity of rendering America independent was powerfully urged by FRANKLIN, and all the working patriots of his day—and measures were taken to "prevent the ruin" of the colonies, by supporting the mechanics and manufacturers therein. The "daughters of liberty" as they were call-groes—in glutting the cotton markets of the world—in trying every experiment to discover the minimum of sustenance and the maximum of labor; thus ensuring eventual loss to themselves, and present misery to their servants. By these men all was ascribed to the tariff.

---

"I think the census will prove, that the decline in the value of property is to be attributed to these causes, and the total neglect of the highways of the state. Had means been taken to open the markets of the country for a surplus supply of provisions, the people of North Carolina, &c. &c. would not have levied such enormous contributions on this state. While they have been doing this, the half-starved yeomanry of South Carolina have had nothing to do but patiently await the decline in value of their property, and decamp to the westward, as soon as the neighboring nabob, with his 100 or 200 negroes, would buy them out."

Before the tariff law of 1824, Mr. Carter of South Carolina—a liberal extract from whose speech we have on our desk—said, that the "prodigiously" increased product of cotton had "glutted" every market in Europe with it—that property of all kinds had "depreciated beyond example"—"that estates were sacrificed to pay the last instalments on the bonds given for the purchase money"—"nobody seems disposed to buy what every body is anxious to sell, at any price"—that "estates, once the seats of opulence, are thrown out to waste and decay." These are his own words.

There is no mystery in the distress that Mr. Carter spoke of. It is fully explained in the preceding extracts that we have made from the "Courier." But if the effects of a "prodigiously" increased supply of cotton, in 1823—(173 millions of pounds being exported) were so terrible, what would they have amounted to, had the export of 1830—(264 millions of pounds), happened? Cotton would not have brought more than four or five cents per lb. And how comes it to pass, that a "living price" was obtained for the latter mighty quantity? The "lords of the spinning jennies," as the Roanoke lord of tobacco worms delights to call them, by improved machinery and reduced cost of manufacture, have extended its free use to millions of persons who could only have sparingly consumed it, at the former higher cost of cotton goods. Here is, "a secret worth knowing."

The average export of 1820-1-2, was about 135 millions of pounds—in 1823, 173 millions. In 1811, 92 millions were worth 31 millions of dollars; in 1823, 173 millions only 20 millions of dollars: but in 1825, 176 millions pounds were worth 36 millions of dollars. These great fluctuations in quantity and price have had a thousand times more to do with the "distress" of the people of South Carolina than the tariff—in affording a superabundance, or a very scanty supply of money; and people who have lived sumptuously cannot, or at least, will not, suddenly live closely. Pride makes many beggars. This is no secret.

We have an essay on certain parts of one of governor Miller's messages to the legislature of South Carolina, shewing his preference of slave labor over that of freemen. It has been long prepared, but was mislaid until a few days ago.

---

*The formula of a proclamation made after his colored majesty had washed his royal hands, with which he had just fed himself.

† Many of the anti-tariff writers and editors are so much accustomed to the use of hard terms against all who do not think and speak as they do, that it seems almost natural for them to vomit expressions unbecoming liberal and decent men; but no persons are so sensitive when the "tables are turned" upon them, ever so little. They despise free laborers, and seem to think that all virtue and intelligence is centered in the holders of slaves; hence they possess an unity of action that would be worthy of the highest praise—their cause being so. If the other party to the question had the same unity, the whole matter would be easily settled. We should have no dispute about it.

I shall do all that I can to induce the people to resist such vile accusations made against them. We have had enough of dirty slang. We shall not "return railing with railing," but speak through little mystic pieces of paper, at the polls. At the late great meeting at Philadelphia—the "bone and sinew" of the free laboring people were present, to support the "American System"—and so will they come out every where, and the effects will be seen. The great majority of the people will not be unresistingly called swindlers, and robbers, and perjured knaves, any longer.

ed, assembled at various places, and gave examples of industry by spinning from morning till night—and the "sons of liberty" associated, HANCOCK being at their head, for the purpose of obtaining from the colonial legislatures such "restrictions and excises as might have the happy tendency" of "encouraging the manufactures of our own country." Samples of these proceedings may be found in the last volume of the REGISTER, page 193. Thus it was before the revolution—when the spirit of liberty was pure as mountain air.

[But I shall only give brief sketches—reserving particulars for the use of Mr. Thomas Ritchie, when he shall meet me in the discussion that I have challenged, which I shall soon expect him to do.]

During the revolution, it is well known that congress (and there were some honest men in 1776!), used every possible exertion to encourage domestic manufactures, not only for the supply of immediate wants, but to establish the real independence of the country. We suppose that Mr. Pinckney will not deny this! Well, the war being ended and peace proclaimed, an extraordinary degree of public distress followed—the paper currency disappearing, and all the "hard money" being required to pay for British and other foreign goods imported. This severity of suffering, and on the account stated, induced the patriot sages of that day to reflect upon some general system that might remedy evils not within the reach of the state legislatures; and the legislature of Virginia commenced the noble work which resulted in the adoption of the present constitution; and Mr. Madison, in a pamphlet written by him in 1795, decidedly tells us, that the constitution ORIGINATED in the complaints of the people, that the unequal laws of Great Britain might be counteracted. [See vol. 39, page 263.] And what was done by the first congress under this constitution, Mr. Madison being the leading member of that body of illustrious men? The title of the first bill passed for laying duties on imported articles, declared "the encouragement and PROTECTION of manufactures" to be one of its leading purposes! Will Mr. Pinckney say that this congress "legalized robbery?" IT ESTABLISHED THE WHOLE PRINCIPLE THAT WE CONTEND FOR. If it was constitutional to protect in 1789, it must be constitutional now. The extent of protection is a question of expediency, and Mr. P. I hope, is modest enough to admit—that that must depend on the will of the majority, constitutionally expressed.* Mr. Pinckney, perhaps, may have accidentally heard of a book called "Lloyd's Debates." I advise him to borrow it, that he may know a little more than he does about things which he so ignorantly, and dogmatically, speaks of. He will find that the constitutionality of the protecting system was never doubted, either in the convention which framed the constitution, or the first congress convened under its provisions. And yet "there were giants in those days."

As to the "sacrificing of one portion of the union for the benefit of others," it is an old song, and was better sung in the first congress than ever Mr. Pinckney will sing it, when the bill to establish discriminatory duties on imports and tonnage was under consideration. It was said by a few, and a very few only, that it was no matter who carried away our productions or brought foreign goods to us—that those who worked the cheapest should have the preference. But the great majority of that congress, not having the light of our "free trade philosophers" before their eyes, passed the bill, which finally was so far extended, that, while foreign ships paid a duty of one dollar per ton, on entry, American ships paid only six cents—and the goods imported in foreign vessels, paid ten per cent. MORE duty than those imported in our own. And it was this proceeding that built up our mighty commercial marine—that enabled us to have, (as Mr. Madison and his colleagues saw that it would), a gallant navy—which has caused the stripes and stars of our land to be respected in every sea. At the time of the enactment of the law referred to, nearly all the shipping of the U. States belonged to the eastern states. But, happily, that "one portion of the union" was protected, though the "sacrifice of other portions" was pleaded; and we see the glorious fruits of it. Our tonnage is inferior only to that of Great Britain, and freights are as cheap, if not cheaper, in our own vessels than in British ships. And when the black belt shall extend, as extend it will, from Cape Antonio to the southern point of Trinidad—then will the south feel the wisdom of the first congress in the enactment of protecting laws—though seemingly for the benefit of "one portion of the union," only. But this effect speedily followed the protection granted—the "monopoly" as it was called, reduced the cost of freights!!!

We might add the protection extended to the fisheries, and Mr. JEFFERSON'S opinion on that branch of industry. He did not question the constitutionality of protecting them; but, in his able report, broadly supported both the principle and the expediency of the measure. We might refer also to Mr. HAMILTON'S almost simultaneous report of a general system, for the encouragement and protection of domestic manufactures—but the history of the first years of the constitution, WASHINGTON being president, is filled with such things, and it was reserved for a modern hair-splitting Virginian to discover that those who made the constitution did not understand its meaning—especially Mr. MADISON; who, in his famous resolutions of January 1794, again covered the whole ground that we contend for; and, since that time, has frequently said, in the most distinct and positive manner, that the right and DUTY is in congress to do that which Mr. Pinckney so rudely pronounces dishonest and calls a robbery! But the time has passed when stone walls may be thrown down by the sound of rams' horns. And Mr. P. should recollect, that Mr. JEFFERSON, in his message to congress, Nov. 8, 1808, suggested the idea of "PROHIBITIONS" that our manufacturing establishments might become "PERMANENT."* That then Mr. RITCHIE, the greatest of all expounders of the constitution! was with us—and a certain governor of Virginia displayed a home-made shirt, with all "the pomp and circumstance" of the glorious occasion, to a large number of citizens assembled to celebrate the fourth of July! If further evidence is wanted—will Mr. Pinckney refer to the old congressional reports, inserted in our last number?

(5) "The watchword has been given," &c. and below I am quoted as saying the "time for action has arrived." These are deadly sins in me; but when the opposite party, through the consistent editors of the "Richmond Enquirer" and "Banner of the Constitution," to rally their party, say "now is the time" for the "anti-tariffites to be on the alert, &c. [See present volume, page 60.] Mr. Pinckney thinks all's well! This, we suppose, is "nullificatory" justice and liberality!—that high sense of rectitude which is claimed for the people of the south!

(6) "No attacking in detail—no insolent investigation of separate items." The sentiment contained in these words is several times repeated—for Mr. M. Pinckney has a mortal aversion to sectional "combinations!" Let us see what the "oracle" says on this subject.

---

*John Randolph, however, despises "king numbers." This distinguished aristocrat would out-strip the proud duke of Somersett, if the power were given to him. We intend to publish extracts from one or two of his speeches on this point, and about tobacco, before long, having just had a hearty laugh of scorn at them. And Mr. Pinckney, with his 257,898 white persons, having 315,665 black slaves to keep under in South Carolina, would proclaim that weak state "a nation!" We do not know whether the little state of Rhode Island, with her great capital and prosperous industry, might not command a larger force for ulterior operations than South Carolina.

The duke of Somersett, alluded to, having married a second time, a noble lady, she playfully touched him on the cheek one day with her fan, when he said, "that his first duchess would not have taken such a liberty, though she was a Percy!" This duke was the prototype of the extraordinary minister for Russia.

*This produced an interesting debate in the senate, in which Mr. Giles—yea, WM. B. GILES, late governor of Virginia, spoke favorably of the encouragement of domestic manufactures! We have a copy of his speech at our elbow. His erratic competitor, in many respects—however, has always been a "sheep-kicking" sort of a person, telling congress that "he would go twenty rods out of his way to kick a sheep."

Mr. Randolph on one occasion, in his place in congress said—"we do not govern them [the people of the north], by our black slaves—BUT BY THEIR OWN WHITE SLAVES." I never voted for but one man [Mr. Varnum, as speaker of the house] from that country [Massachusetts], and, so HELP ME GOD, I will never vote for another!"

And he also said, in congress—

"We know what we are doing. We of the south are united, from the Ohio to Florida—and we can always unite: but you of the north are beginning to divide, and you will divide. We have conquered you once, and we can and will conquer you again. Aye, sir, we will drive you to the wall, and when we have you there once more, we mean to keep you there, and will nail you down like base money."

These are precious specimens of the dignity and elegance of the "Virginia orator!" But the facts stated by Mr. Randolph are too true. The people of the eastern, and middle and western states do divide—for persons in them would seem to take the liberty of thinking and acting for themselves; or they are "bought up" being "WHITE SLAVES;" and we might mention one of them who now has five members of his family, besides himself, in public office!—But the south is united on all questions which affect the south; and so far does the CLANNISH spirit go, that, in 1828, only two votes south of the Potomac (except six in North Carolina, specially interested), were found against laying a duty of ten cents per gallon on molasses, though it was admitted by Mr. Gilmer, of Georgia, and others, that they found "it difficult to bring their minds to such a system of legislation."

"One restless sheep cries baa! and all the throng,
"Ewes, lambs, rams, wethers, bellowing, roll along."

It is the supreme of the ridiculous, for the south to rebuke the prevalence of a common spirit in the north. I would not excite sectional jealousies—but for those who have perfected the operation of them, as it would seem even in matters of conscience,† to complain, as Mr. Pinckney does, of my humble exhortations to unity, is laughable—like the case of the frog who swelled himself to rival the size of the ox, and blew himself "sky high!"

The rest of this section of the article is too common for remark—it is of that sort of stuff which an English pattern-card man, or hireling writer, will finish at the rate of several yards in an hour! If I were the enemy of the south, and had the power of selecting some most certain curse to ruin and desolate the south, and render that country one vast field of conflagration and blood—I WOULD TAKE OFF THE DUTY ON SUGAR. But I am a better friend of the south than Mr. Pinckney—and time will shew it.

(7) It is objected that I have recommended the "distribution of tracts"—and as thinking it possible that, to diffuse information, "my own inestimable Register," might be further circulated. The last is a very natural desire—and I am happy to inform Mr. Pinckney, that I have received more than two hundred and fifty new subscribers since the 1st of Jan. last,* and entertain a hope of obtaining not less than a thousand, before the 31st of December! And, as it will give him and Mr. Ritchie much pleasure to learn the fact, I shall add—that about one half of those received are from the "south of Mason and Dixon's line." But my suggestion as to the distribution of tracts was rather the consequence of a like suggestion in the "Richmond Enquirer!" "Now is the time," said a writer in that paper, "for the anti-tariff parties of our community to be on the alert—to be strenuous in their exertions—to disseminate far and wide just principles of political economy"—"in the next congress, in all probability, will the battle be fought"—"Now, then, is certainly the accepted time—the season when the greatest exertion should be made," &c.—These sayings were right in——the "Enquirer;" the editor's orthodoxy—(always orthodox, though "the wind bloweth as it listeth"), sanctifying words which for me to use is pretty nearly treason! And Mr. Pinckney's sneer comes from him with an ill-grace, for in the same paper he inserted a mournful article from the "Banner of the Constitution" (whose editor has been running a race with Dr. Cooper in inconsistency and violence, on the tariff question), exhorting the people to action; and, in describing the melancholy state of the press at Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, he surely recommends his own to counteract the influence of other presses! Mr. Raguet, in the article alluded to, says—"Should the next session of congress pass over without such material reduction, in the duties of the existing odious tariff, as will give assurance of a return, after the extinguishment of the public debt, to an equitable scale of revenue duties, the cause of free trade will, in our humble estimation, be forever lost. Our readers will recollect that we have, ever since the establishment of this journal, favored the belief that the public mind north of the Potomac, was in a capacity of receiving the truths of political science, and that a love for the union would outweigh all the calculations of selfish, local, and ambitious interests, and would lead to such a spirit of conciliation as could not but eventuate in a settlement of the disputed questions, without the further excitement, at the south, of revolutionary feelings. It is, therefore, with reluctance that we now feel ourselves constrained to confess, that our faith in the potency of argument and reason is beginning to waver. The efforts making at the south and southwest, to extricate the country from the trammels of the restrictive system, are not supported, at the north, as they should be; and, strange as it may appear, there exists upon the subject, even amongst those who de-

*Several southern gentlemen who voted for this high tax upon molasses, not only felt ashamed to support a proposition which they knew was wrong in itself, and some of them also doubted the moral honesty of such a "system of legislation;" but if they really believed the imposition of such duties to be UNCONSTITUTIONAL, was not the obligation of their oaths suspended by a question of EXPEDIENCY? Did they not compromise with their consciences? It will require an able sophist to relieve them of this "coalition."

Here we may make a simple remark or two on the general as well as special distinction between the constitutionality and expediency of the tariff. In Mr. Jefferson's administration, the non-intercourse and embargo laws were commended in the south, because they encouraged domestic manufactures—and opposed in the east, because they injured, or destroyed, foreign commerce; but these differences of opinion were the result of questions of expediency only. We have referred to Messrs. Lowndes and Calhoun as warmly and thoroughly supporting the protecting system in 1816. The latter gentleman said that manufactures "produced an interest strictly American, as much so as agriculture"—he was for "affording to ingenuity and industry immediate and ample PROTECTION." Mr. Calhoun could then have had no constitutional scruples, else he was perjured. On the other hand, Mr. Webster is roughly charged as having been against the tariff of 1824, and of now supporting its principle. But what of that? Mr. Calhoun, for example, in adopting the expediency of the protecting system, surely consented to its constitutionality—the last having supreme operation on the mind of an honest man. But Mr. Webster, being against the practice in 1824, and for it in 1828, only shews that experience, as to the effects of the tariff, had changed his opinions concerning the expediency of it—time being the friend of truth. Time, however, has not changed the constitution—it remains just as it was—it admits of no new qualification. That which was inexpedient may become expedient, as happens in the daily concerns of every man's life and business; but that which was constitutionally wrong never can become constitutionally right, the instrument remaining unchanged. We have looked over Mr. Webster's great speech in 1824 against the tariff—without seeing the germ of an argument about its constitutionality—hence there is no more cause of just accusation against him than there would be on a man who advised his friend to delay a journey because it "looked likely for rain"—and afterwards urged him to set out, because there was a clear sky.

* My offensive article was more a following of the lead of the people, than an attempt to direct their proceedings.

pend for their support upon foreign commerce, an indifference which almost indicates a bowing of the neck to the restrictive system, as the settled policy of the country."

We thank Mr. R. for some of these admissions. Again he says—"The redemption of the country from the bonds of the restrictive system will be accomplished, if ever it be, by the sons of agriculture, and it is to that portion of our fellow-citizens to whom we are mainly to look for our rescue."

This is very well in Mr. Raguet—but very wrong, very wrong, indeed, in "Mr. Niles." What, shall "Mr. Niles" corrupt the "sons of agriculture!" That would be too bad. But at least an hundred thousand copies of his "politics for farmers" have been printed. Mr. Raguet, too, made "politics for farmers," catching my title—telling us how that, on every cradle costing ten dollars, the farmers paid a tax of three dollars—though many a better man than either of us has been rocked in a "hollow gum." What became of Mr. R's "politics for farmers?" I never saw one full copy of it. I guess it did not suit the "sons of agriculture"—the growers of grain and wool, who understand "a thing or two" about the tariff.

(8) The conclusion is after the best manner of the "Mercury." Mr. Pinckney is a mighty man—he thinks no more of dissolving the union and making a nation, than a child does of building up or knocking down his little houses of sand. All things are easy to him——but the people of South Carolina will not "calculate the value of the union," though recommended by as pure blooded a factionist as ever figured at Paris, in the days of terror—who, like the witch in the fable, who had lost her dog, would "disturb all hell," to gain the thing he aims at.

SPEECH OF MR. BURGES,

At the dinner given him by a large number of the citizens of New York, March 30, 1831.

Mr. President and gentlemen:—

I thank you, most cordially I thank you. All I could say would tell you a very small part only of those feelings given to me by your expressions of kindness and consideration towards me, and my very inefficient efforts in the public service. From my earliest recollection to the present moment, the approbation of my fellow laborers, has enlivened my hopes, cheered my exertions, and been dear to my heart. Whether guiding the plough, or wielding the instruments of mechanic labor, the employments of my earlier life; whether engaged in forensic toils, at the calls of my friends, or in the service of our common country, so dear to us all, that approbation has been among the most engaging motives. I have fallen behind many, in success, but I have endeavored to keep pace with the foremost, in zeal and diligence. When I look around on these splendid accompaniments, associated by your kindness with those efforts in the cause of the nation, though I must be more, or less, than human, not to feel gratified, and to attempt some expression of that feeling; yet I cannot be vain enough to arrogate all I see, and hear, to myself merely, who am but the inconsiderable occasion, and not the ultimate object, of all these preparations, these displays of national feeling, these genuine oblations to elevated patriotism.

If we have been told, men are born to consume the fruit of the earth, and there be those who might look on all these provisions of the table, and on us as assembled here, with no better purpose than ordinary refection, the mere every day operations of mastication and swallowing, such men may best take their viands by themselves, each one gnawing his bone, and growling his orisons, if he make any in the solitude of his own den. The table has, by the customs of all nations, been consecrated to the purest rites of hospitality. Among the most furious warriors, hostilities cease; truce and peace are for the time, established, the moment they have taken salt together from the same stand. Of all those who dipt their bread, at the same table, in the same condiment, sacred story has told us that one only became a traitor. Should we with warm hearts and glad faces, who are now met together at this table, this altar of good will and patriotic feeling, ever meet again, no matter in what land, or under what auspices, adverse or prosperous, this high ceremonial of kindness and patriotism, could not be forgotten; and we should, in memory of this evening, and of these rites of hospitality, take each other by the hand with higher, and holier ardor of brotherhood.

The hours of refection were, by the wise men of antiquity, devoted to both bodily and mental refreshment; the table was spread not more for the purpose of food, than for conversation; and the public places for those purposes were the great schools of mutual instruction for the commonwealth. Our republican institutions are, as we trust, improvements on the models of both ancient and modern governments; but our admiration of them may not, at all times, equal the wise and patriotic administration of the ancients; and if they deem it important, at the hours of refreshment, to discuss public affairs, and the conduct of public men, it cannot be unwise, or improper in us, to have adopted, in some form or other, this classic custom, established as a part of their free institutions, by the sages and statesmen of antiquity. If you please, then, gentlemen, permit me, for some brief time, to fill up this pause of festivity; and, in exchange for the flow of the goblet, to offer you that of the soul.

The great interests of the nation, the government established by the people of these United States for the preservation and advancement of those interests, and the administration of that government, by the public agents, selected and appointed for that purpose, are all subjects of deep and vital concernment to each one of us, and of the whole nation. What the past was, we all know; what the present is let us inquire, that we may thereby endeavor to provide for the future. The constitution of our country has recently, from the place where I now have the honor to stand, received such exposition and eulogium, and so perfect and finished, as neither to require nor to admit addition, or improvement. The boldest artist of Greece never attempted to give a new excellence to the Minerva of Phidias. Considering the great principles of that constitution, as settled and established, we may securely turn our attention to some of its great provisions, as they have been reduced to practice, under the several administrations of the general government; and inquire how they are sustained, by the present rulers of the land!

When general Jackson was placed in the presidential chair of the United States, the patriots and statesmen of the country, who had been opposed to his election, did console themselves with the hope, that regard for his own fame might induce him to call to his cabinet, the wisest and best men among those who had been friendly to his advancement to that high station. If directed by the councils of such men, his administration might take a character, not adverse to the great interests and institutions, long fostered and established in the country. How sadly they were disappointed, is well known; nor has the disappointment of many of the most zealous and upright of his friends, been less grievous. His cabinet was so selected and arranged, that the whole power and influence of the president, has been brought under the councils, and into the control of the secretary of state. This man has exerted his managing capacities in such intrigues, as to have either brought every other man in the cabinet, into his schemes, or have excluded them from the confidence of the president. The second officer of the government has, by the friends of the secretary, as he admits, but by himself, as all men believe, been driven into hostility with the first; while Mr. Van Buren, securely sheltered behind the name of gen. Jackson, and the presidential character, like little Teucer behind the shield of Ajax Telamon, discharges his arrows at the naked and magnanimous bosom of his great political adversary. Indeed the president has little concern in the administration: so little, that upon the great question of re-election to that high office, which, when free from the control of advisement, he has always declined, his own private secretary, without consulting him, has written a letter to a leading member of the Pennsylvania legislature, assuring him that the president would be highly gratified, if that body would nominate him for re-election. Who has such an interest in this re-election, as Martin Van Buren; and what private secretary, of what other president of the United States, would, without consulting him, have dared to write such a letter?

I am in truth detaining you without necessity; for "you all do know" this man; his wily genius, his crooked counsels, his Machiavelian principles. These principles heretofore planted and forced into growth, in the political hot beds at Albany, have been, by him, transplanted into the open exposure at Washington, and are now flourishing in the invigorating sunshine of the presidential palace. Is the nation likely to receive healing from their leaves? Let us inquire.

First of all, how has the secretary managed our foreign relations; and to what good purpose, either of economy, interest, or national honor? Nearly all our foreign ministers in Europe have been recalled; but if they have been replaced by better, much better men, and our interests thereby advanced to an amount,—equal to the enormous cost of these removals and appointments the people may have no cause of complaint. It is said that France has appointed commissioners to ascertain the amount of spoliations on American commerce and navigation, committed by her cruisers, during the revolutionary government. This, so far as it indicates a spirit of remuneration, is well; but it can lead to nothing which has not long been known as a matter of record, both to the government of France, and in the department of state at Washington. These spoliations were done by order of Napoleon, and by his corsairs, on the high seas and in the sight of all nations. The ocean blazed with the conflagation of our ships. That military despot commanded these atrocities to be perpetrated, that he might compel us to unite with him, in his crusade, against the nations of the earth. Ever since the final abdication of this man, the people of France have been desirous of doing us justice; but they contend that they have an unadjusted claim against us, under the Louisiana treaty of cession. Under that treaty, a right of entry, into all the ports of that state, was forever secured to them, on the terms of the most favored nation. This right, as they hold, was by them purchased, and a valuable consideration paid for it, in the cession of that territory; and, accordingly, when that territory became a state in our union, if other nations purchased a right of entry into those ports, by granting a reciprocal right of entry into their ports, to American ships, France was under no obligation to grant such a reciprocity, for such a right of entry; because she had already purchased it by the cession, and had it secured to her by treaty. Our government has always contended against this construction, and denied this right to France; and, in a correspondence between Mr. Adams, when secretary of state, and the French minister, then near the United States, the French construction of that treaty was ably contested, and the American construction as ably supported. It still remains unsettled, and, until adjusted, or waived by France, all commissioners, appointed by either, or both governments, can make no final progress in settling the claims of American merchants on the French government. What time will ever come more propitious than that which has for the last six months been passing, for our government to institute an able and efficient mission to meet plenipotentiaries on the part of France, for the settlement of this great national question, and for the removal of this only obstacle between American merchants, and their long delayed rights of remuneration? Never will the French people, hereafter, be more anxious to conciliate those of the United States; and never will Lafayette, the brother in arms of Washington, the illustrious friend of the American people, have a higher or more controlling influence in the councils of France. Like all the surviving worthies of our revolution, he is standing on the verge of life: he and they are not yet immortal, and they must soon pass from this world of dust and shadows, to that of realties and imperishable glories. Why has not this auspicious time been seized? Why has it been suffered to pass without exertion, and probably without attention, on the part of our government? No former administration ever had in hand such a golden opportunity. We have no intimation from the men in power that any effort has been made, or intended, to improve it.

Have our relations with England been made more prosperous by the exchange of ministry at the court of that country? It is said triumphantly that the West India trade has been recovered. Ever since the close of our revolutionary struggle, up to the close of the last administration, Great Britain has claimed, and exercised the right of regulating all trade with her West India colonies, by the orders of the king in council. During all that time, the United States, both under the confederation, and under the present government, have demanded as a matter of right, due to national comity, that this trade, between these colonies and the United States, should be regulated by treaty, and permanently settled between the two nations. Has this point been yielded by Great Britain? Has a treaty been made? No; but the secretary of state has for us, yielded the right to demand it. The trade is regulated now just as Great Britain has always regulated it, by her own laws; and we have agreed to receive as a boon, what is in reality a favor granted to her. Before this concession, the British West India colonies consumed quite as great a quantity of the products of our country as they can have done since. The commerce was as great though not direct; the navigation was exclusively ours; and if the indirect transportation was more costly, it was because it gave more employment to our own tonnage, and being paid by those colonies, was a real benefit to our navigation. For much of the proceeds of our exports were received in specie, and employed to purchase cargoes in New Orleans; and the trade was thus by its indirectness not made onerous to us as it was to them.

What then have we gained by the restoration of this trade? Our vessels can carry nothing to the West India colonies under this restoration, which cannot be carried thither in British vessels; but in the indirect trade, much reached those colonies, transported, nearly to them, by our own vessels, which cannot be admitted into them now even in British vessels. The restored commerce is, therefore, so much less than the commerce, given up in exchange for it. How does it affect our navigation? Commercial men have told me, that already one third of the transportation of our own productions is done by British tonnage. This was to be expected. For British vessels, freighted from Liverpool to New York, being compelled to go to the West Indies for a freight home, will take cargoes of American produce on freight to those countries at a cheaper rate than our vessels can afford to do it. If this does not secure the whole transportation to British tonnage, the other parts of the arrangement certainly will effect this. It was agreed, that the British government should, whenever they might choose to do so, lay an impost duty on all products of our country, when imported directly from the United States, into these West India colonies; and, at the same time, exempt the same products from such impost, if imported from her colonies on this continent. So soon as this impost shall have been laid on the products of the United States, they cannot reach the West India colonies in American vessels; because the duty will compel them to be transported thither, from the colonies on the continent. We may chance to carry a part of them, in competition with the British, to these colonies, but our vessels cannot carry freights, thence, to the West India colonies. Transportation between colony and colony, is a part of her coasting trade, which Great Britain will no sooner relinquish, than we shall relinquish to foreigners, our coasting trade between one state and another.

In this arrangement for this restoration of the West India trade, the agreement on the part of Great Britain, not to impose any other, or higher duty on our products, when imported into the West India colonies, in American, than if imported in British vessels, did not extend, as they understood it, to their colonies on this continent. They will, accordingly, place an impost duty on all such produce, imported into those colonies, in our vessels; and thereby transfer all our commerce, with all these colonies, whether island or continental, from our navigation, which had the whole transportation of it under the indirect trade, to British navigation, which will have the whole under this triumphant restoration. This is exactly what the British politicians have claimed, as a matter of right, ever since the first moment of our independence; and it is what all patriots of the United States, since the revolution, have refused to yield, until Mr. Van Buren, in a manner "the most frank and friendly" to Great Britan, did, by the agency of Mr.

Louis McLane; request and receive the privilege of surrendering up this right of transporting our own products in our own vessels, to the British government, for the use and encouragement of British tonnage. It is, therefore, manifest, that although, when the West India trade was lost, as it has been often alledged by the late administration, we had and enjoyed both the commerce and the navigation; yet now, when it has, under the auspices of Mr. Van Buren, been restored, we may hold some part of the commerce, but we must lose the whole navigation. No matter if it destroy the mercantile rights of the people, it subserved the purposes of the secretary. The report of this great restoration, reached this country on the eve of important elections; and, that it might seasonably arrive at the most distant point of operation, was at the noon of Sunday, and the hour of intermitted devotion, officially announced from the cabinet at Washington. The long shadow of this glory of our diplomacy reached Maine, and effected that object; but Maryland was too near the scene of this plot, to be deceived, and therefore, she nobly performed her duty to the nation.

We should have less cause of mortification, had our right been surrendered with a spirit, less subservient to England, and in a manner, not quite so prostrate. Money might have been sacrificed and the thing forgotten, but that the upright republican spirit of America, which like William Penn, has ever stood with covered head before the English throne, should, by such men, be taught to truckle, and fawn at the foot of royalty, is not among the minor grievances of the times; and cannot pass away "like the summer cloud without the special observance" of the American people. Nor is the surrender of our rights rendered more tolerable by another element united with the servile spirit, wherewithal it was made. In all our most ardent contests, for principles, or for power, heretofore had in the nation, a noble dignity in our foreign ministers of either side, has learned them to hold our party controversies, like those among brothers, sacred and as family secrets; and they scorned, by mingling them with our diplomacy, to betray and divulge them to the vulgar eye of foreign nations. What has the secretary of state been pleased to do? He has instructed our minister, at the English court, to claim the high consideration of that government to the present, by gossipping a full disclosure of its irreconcilable hostility of the past administration.—How must the haughty statesman of England have regarded this reform in American diplomacy; or that secretary of state, under whose dignified administration it was made? Our only hope is from the healing power of time. The wound, which to-day all may see in the trunk of the oak, will by two summers growth become cicatrized, and be seen no more.

Have our relations with Russia, been conducted in any manner, more profitable and dignified? You have seen how the hon. Mr. McLane has restored the West India trade by his diplomacy at the court of England, but may God grant, that the American people may never see, how the hon. Mr. Randolph sustained our national character, at the Russian court! The debate in the house of representatives of the United States, on the mission of this gentleman, was printed, and may have come under your eye. If so, that, and the pithy remarks just delivered by the hon. gentleman in the chair, must have put you quite fully in possession of the character of that distinguished mission. If you please, gentlemen, I will just state two collateral facts, which improve the color, but do not change the feature of their character. Although, at the time of that debate, it was unknown to me, and to those associated with me in the discussion, yet was it officially known at the department of state, that Mr. Randolph had, when he left St. Petersburg, taken his passports with him, and thereby, according to all the forms of diplomacy, entirely relinquished his ministerial character at the imperial court of Russia. With a knowledge of this fact, what man on earth, other than Mr. Van Buren, could have placed in the presidential message to congress, the "hope that this gentleman would by any improvement of his health, again repair to St. Petersburg, and resume the discharge of his official duties?" The other fact of which I would remind you is, that before the president approved the act, appropriating $18,000 for the benefit of Mr. Randolph, and in payment for his diplomatic services, the friend of that gentleman, in Virginia, had, in the public papers, and by his direction, announced him as a candidate for election to the next congress. "He should, (as it was stated), be detained abroad until after the election." Detained for what cause? The election takes place usually in April; but Mr. R's diplomatic year would not terminate till June. He must tarry out of the country, until he has earned, by a full year's exile, his full year's salary. His quarterly allowance for returning would be earned by coming home; and this he directed his friends to promise that he would do, before the next session of congress. How could the secretary advise the president to approve that appropriation, when it was so manifest, that this minister was prolonging his absence, not to settle national controversies, or to win diplomatic victories, but, like a good general, to achieve a successful retreat, and effectually secure his baggage and plunder!

Attempts were made during the last year, to extend our relations to another European power. A treaty of some sort was made with the imperial Turk of Constantinople. For this purpose, commissioners were appointed, which, although the president might appoint in the recess, yet because this appointment was not ratified by the advice and consent of the senate, in session for many months before the conclusion of this commission, the whole proceeding was clearly extra official; and was not only so considered by the two able and distinguished senators from Virginia, but was by them pronounced to be an invasion of the rights of the senate and a flagrant violation of the constitution. The ostensible object of this negotiation was to open to American navigation and commerce, the trade of the Black Sea. This the Russians contend, that they have already effected for all nations, by the treaty of Adrianople. They had, sword in hand, opened to themselves a passage through all the defences both of nature and art; and descended and spread themselves out on that plain, where, in former times, the Greek and the Hun contended for empire. Here, other powers interposed, or the Turks had been driven once more beyond the Bosphorus. It was believed, that if the czar of Russia reached, and ascended the throne of Constantinople, the balance of Europe might tremble, and the beam itself lose its level. The emperor of Russia terminated the war by treaty with the grand seignior, secured among other things, a free passage through the Bosphorus, to all nations in amity with both the high contracting parties. Christian nations hold all to be in amity, who are not in a state of declared hostility; but the Turk regards all Christian nations as enemies, which have not, by treaty with him, obtained the relations of amity. Our treaty with the sublime porte was formed, on our respectful submission to the moslem construction of the treaty of Adrianople; and intended to bring us within the provisions of it. This treaty was in part ratified, and in part rejected by the senate; and thereupon the secretary of state sent a requisition to the house of congress, requiring an appropriation for the purpose of a most splendid plenipotentiary mission to the Turkish court, accompanied by all the oriental train of barbaric pomp; and carrying in hand fifty thousand dollars as a present to the grand seignior, either to purchase our relations of amity with the Turk, or to pay for the fine Arabian stud presented by him to the great man of the new world, and which, as I learn, is at keeping in this city. It was thus managed, that this modern argonautic expedition was to be fitted out, not like that of the ancients, to bring home from the shores of the stormy Euxine, but carry out to those regions the golden fleece. For some small quantity of trade, more or less, the republicans of the United States, the disciples of the cross, must be made to bow to those of the crescent; and our "mountain nymph, sweet liberty," compelled to turn her pure and vestal eye on the gorgeous saloons, and voluptuous harems of a military despotism. We were, in some degree, preserved from the dishonor of this new, and splendid project of state patronage, by a distinguished senator from Massachusetts, who succeeded in reducing the lofty dimensions of the plenipotentiary mission, down to a charge d'affaires. Could he have brought the thing to a mere consulate, or commercial agency, it might have satisfied all the requirements of trade, and ceased to be odious to our national feelings.

If, under the advisement of the secretary of state, we have lowered our heads to foreign nations abroad, who might call us to some account for a departure from etiquette, we have, under the same councils carried ourselves highly and haughtily enough, to those dependent "remnants of once mighty nations," at home, placed, by the fortune of war, and the inexplicable revolutions of human events, in a condition of pupilage and guardianship to the American people. How have these our wards and pupils been treated? How have the high and holy relations of guardians, and instructors to them, been kept, and preserved by us? We stand pledged to the whole Christian world, by the declarations of our ancestors, repeated by us, in every most solemn form, to civilize, and instruct the aborigines in the great principles of our benign religion. By the obligations of the most sacred treaties, and for a full, and valuable consideration in broad lands, ceded to the U. States, our government has, at various times, covenanted with these tribes and nations, to pay them annuities; to guarantee to them their respective governments, and laws, and territories; and to defend them in the quiet possession, and peaceable enjoyment of all these, their great original and natural rights. From the commencement of our peaceable relations with them up to the close of the last administration, these covenants had been fully and sacredly observed and kept, by the government of the U. States. Mechanics, and farmers have sojourned among them, to teach these people the great fundamental arts of civilized life. By holy men, who have taken up their abode among several of these nations, they have been taught letters and arts; and above all, learned the divine precepts of the Christian religion. The annuities, due to each nation and tribe by treaty, have, with good faith, been paid into their public treasuries, to be disbursed according to their own laws and customs. So early as 1802, by a statute of the United States, and called ever since, the intercourse law, a line of demarcation was drawn between their lands and territories, and those of the U. States or the several states and territories. By this law all mankind were excluded from these lands, unless by consent of the owners, and a license for that purpose first obtained. How have these people profited by these benefits? I will call your attention more particulary to the Cherokees, because their nation has been most improved, and their present condition does most interest the sympathies of the world. These people have abandoned the chase for subsistence, and become cultivators of the soil. They raise flocks and herds; grow corn and cotton, and have established household manufactories for most of their own clothing. Such other kindred arts are cultivated among them as are necessary for this state of improvement. Under the advisement and instruction of Mr. Jefferson, they have succeeded in establishing a republican form of government; and have enacted wise and wholesome laws. A bank, and a treasury, manage their currency and finances; a press promulgates their constitution and laws. One native Cherokee has invented an alphabet of their language; and another, a scholar, a Christian, edits a public paper, printed in our and their language and letter, published for the information of their people, and received and read in most of the states in this union. In half a century after letters were brought to this people by pious and learned missionaries, they have reduced their laws to writing in their own alphabet and language. A like achievement cost the Greeks not less than 600 years. The school-house and the meeting-house have been built by their villages, as our pious ancestors reared the like buildings in ours. In the one their children are taught in our language and their language; in the other, their whole people meet together, on our Sabbath, in the name of the Saviour of the world, to worship the God of the whole earth.

So were our trusts as guardians to them, religiously observed and kept; and so have they profited and improved as pupils and wards to us, under our teachings and protection. O! how unlike, for our glory, and their prosperity, is the present to the past. The president of the United States, soon after his inauguration, bade the Cherokee delegation, then in Washington, assure their people, from him, that he would protect them against the demands of Georgia, and the intrusions of all persons. Mr. Van Buren had not then entered the department of state, or assisted the president by his advice. The next winter they were told by the same high functionary, that the lands in their possession, were, beyond question, their own; but that he could not interfere with the laws of a sovereign state, or secure them against the jurisdiction of Georgia. That state had not then expressly laid claim to the lands of the Cherokees; but their legislature had passed laws abolishing their government, abrogating their laws, and subverting their national character. These laws went into operation in June, 1830. The Cherokee lands are owned by the nation; and each individual owns nothing but his improvements on the soil. When the laws of Georgia had abolished the Cherokee nation, the lands, as their politicians reasoned on the case, were left without an owner; and, as they say, lying within the limits of that state, became, at once, as a thing dereliet, the property of that republic. Perhaps the gold, discovered in the Cherokee mountains, has dazzled the moral perceptions of these good men. Be that as it may, they last autumn seriously contended, that the Cherokees had no right to their own lands; and have thereupon enacted laws, ordering them to be surveyed, and parcelled out for distribution, by lottery, or otherwise, among a people, who, if they have any title to them, have obtained it by their own legislation. When the Cherokee delegation arrived in Washington, the last winter, and applied to the president again for protection, against the outrages daily committed on them, they were told by him, that all had been done that could be done; and they had no other course but to migrate beyond the Mississippi.

What can have changed the conduct of the president from a solemn assurance of protection, to a total desertion of all the rights of these unfortunate people? Who is his adviser—the keeper of his conscience? The secretary of state. The lands, laws, government, the whole nation of the Cherokees, have been sold by this heartless cabinet minister, to the infatuated politicians of Georgia. To favor and carry into full effect, this scheme against the Cherokees, a most flagrant injustice has been practised against all other Indian nations and tribes to which our government owes annuities. To deprive the Cherokees of the pecuniary power of contending with Georgia, these annuities, amounting yearly to more than $545,000, have, by an order from the war office, been directed to be paid, not to the nations and tribes as the several treaties covenant that they shall be paid; but to the head men, warriors, and common Indians, in a ratable proportion. In some of the tribes there are more individuals than there are dollars to be paid; and how can they receive the money from an agent, who does not know one from another; who could not, therefore, safely distribute the annuities without assembling them all together, nor then, without a scale, graduated with the respective proportions to be paid to each grade of character in the tribe. In truth, the project must result in a double fraud; one on our own government, which puts the money into the hands of agents, who can never produce any voucher that they have paid it over, and therefore will keep the most of it in their own coffers; and the other, to the Indian tribes and nations, which, by this project, can receive not a cent of their annuities for any purpose common to the whole people. Our conduct is without a parallel. What can be found in the history of our own, or any civilized country, so cruel in practice, so utterly without the pale of any theory of moral principle? This is not a question of national interest, but of national morality and character. The adviser of these measures, brings a calumny on our good faith in the great forum of the world; and we must, unless by a great national disavowal, stand condemned before all mankind.

Let us turn to a part of the administration, less odious, because its errors, or frauds fall on ourselves alone, and do not affect the rights and interest of any other people. The great national establishment for the transmission of intelligence, is among the most important of our country. It deeply concerns things, the most dear, and valuable to us. The mail moves not only much of the wealth, and information of the people, but their political concernments are greatly in the power of those engaged in its movements. The late post master general administered that establishment with great ability and with a success higly satisfactory to the nation. When called to the office by Mr. Monroe, as well as when continued in it by Mr. Adams, he had full permission to conduct it on his own proposed principle, "to appoint no deputy, clerks or assistant, but for official merit, and to displace no one for but official delinquency." Although gen. Jackson, when he first took the presidential chair, gave him the same tolerant rule of appointment and removal; yet, as it was, in a few days announced, that the post office establishment would, by a rule of the administration, be arranged into the cabinet, he found himself compelled to resign. He left the office, rich in funds, laid up from its own revenue; well supplied with skilful and diligent clerks; and supported by two assistants, either of whom was fully competent to conduct the whole establishment.

How has it been conducted by his successor? No branch of the administration disclosed a more rancorous political intolerance. Four or five hundred removals and appointments have been made, comprehending assistants, clerks and deputies; and when it has been proposed, in the senate of the United States, to inquire into the causes of these changes, it has not been shown by the friends of the administration, that they were made for official delinquency. The establishment has been arranged into the cabinet; and the same regency principle which has directed our relations with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes, has controlled this.

Under the principles of present economy, the funds of the establishment have been exhausted, without any new benefit to the people. The whole business of removal and appointment was conducted by Mr. McLean, assisted by two clerks at the annual cost of $1,400. This business is now the most important branch of the establishment: it is arranged into the bureau of appointment, with a special agent of the secretary at the head, and with such a train of preparation in clerks and contingencies, that the whole costs the country $8,500 annually. Other parts of this service are equally prodigal and expensive. Clerks and extra calls for labor and salaries, are nearly doubled under this new arrangement. It was last year ostentatiously published to the nation, that the contracts for transporting the mail had been made at a price much below the former consideration given for that work; but recently the discovery has been made that much more than the amount saved by the written contracts, had been expended in extra allowances to those liberal contractors who were instructed to underbid their competitors, with an assurance of remuneration for this efficient aid given to the great political projects of the establishment. These remunerations have, in some instances, exceeded the amount agreed to be paid under the contract. The mail from Washington to Baltimore is transported, by contract, for $1,800; but the extra allowances amount to $3,200.

The conductor of the post-office establishment was so fully aware of the effects of a disclosure of this profligate fraud upon the revenue of the people, that, when called upon, early in the month of May, 1830, to lay a statement of the contracts and allowances before the senate, he delayed that duty until near the close of last February. When, at last, sent in, it was, as of course, referred to the committee on post-offices and post roads; kept by that committee until within three or four days of the adjournment, and then laid on the table with a motion that it be printed, which was, of course, accordingly ordered. Before the delivery of this document to the printer, the hon. Mr. Clayton took it up for a short examination. He discovered, that all the allowances, about $50,000, were set down, as having been made by Mr. Bradley, the assistant post-master general under Mr. McLean, who had managed the establishment for a few days, after it was left by that gentleman, before the arrival of Mr. Barry. He was, beyond measure astonished; for Mr. Bradley had stated, on examination, under oath, I believe, that he had made no such allowance. Mr. Clayton called on him for explanation. He repeated his former statement, and requested that Mr. Grundy and Mr. Holmes would go to the post office and examine the books. Here the unprofitable works of darkness were brought to light. The letters containing the statements of these allowances; the dates when they were made; the erasure of the name of Wm. T. Barry, and the insertion of the name of Abraham Bradley; the confessions of the clerks, who had been taught and directed to commit this double forgery, all conspired to make such an impression of this fraudulent and profligate transaction on the mind of every senator, that, upon the request of Mr. Bradley, that distinguished body, without a dissenting voice, rescinded the order to print this report; and thereby told the nation, that, in their opinion, it was fabricated and false. Time would not admit further investigation in the senate, nor was it admitted in the house; for a friend of the secretary, who had given notice that he should there call up the post office bill, did, when this discovery was made, prudently omit to do so.

This establishment is utterly insolvent. Its concerns have been, as we have seen, most fraudulently conducted; and, under the advisement of the cabinet, it is modeled into a system of political espionage. Every deputy post master is directed to insert in his return the title of every newspaper, received at his office for distribution. By this return, Mr. Hobbie (not the post master general, for he is laid up out of the combat) can place under the eye of Mr. Van Buren, the name, and he knows the political character of every newspaper, read in every city, town, village and neighborhood in the whole country. Will an independent and free people, always endure such lookers into their own affairs? Spies upon their fire-side amusements? Let them once know their injuries, and they perfectly understand, and will diligently apply the constitutional remedy.

The president has, under the same advisement, placed a deep censure on the bank, and currency of the United States. This was advised by Mr. Van Buren, doubtless to give to the banks of this city, the expectation on the overthrow of that of the United States, of receiving and disbursing the national funds; and thereby to reconcile them to the system of guarantee, which he had placed upon their transactions. This might have produced some effect, had the subtle poison been vended, without the antidote. The splendid scheme of a treasury bank at Washington, so dazzled his imagination, that he could not exclude every glimpse of it, from the message; and thus, what he might have gained by his proposed destruction of the bank of the United States, was placed beyond his reach by a disclosure of the political mystery, which was to be raised up in its place.

The constitutionality of the United States bank is questioned by the secretary in the message; and he further alledged, that this bank has failed to establish a sound and uniform currency throughout the country. The constitutional question has been settled by the supreme court. What does Mr. Van Buren intend by a sound currency? He should mean, and therefore, for once, I will believe he did mean, a currency, equal in value to the silver and gold coin of the United States. Every bank bill of any amount, which may, on demand, at the place where it is payable, be converted by exchange into gold or silver coin of a like amount, must be equal in value to such amount of coin. May not this be done with every bill of the United States bank? No man will deny the fact. If, then, such coin be a sound currency, such bank bills must be equally a sound currency. This allegation against the bank is, therefore, unfounded, and must have been made, either without a knowledge of the facts, or with no intention to state them correctly. Is not this bank currency quite as uniform as a gold and silver currency? Will not a bank bill, at New Orleans, and payable in that city, exchange for as much gold and silver coin, as a bank bill of equal amount, payable in New York, can be exchanged for, in this city? Will not a one hundred dollar bill, at New Orleans, if payable there, exchange for one hundred silver dollars, or for ten eagles; and will a one hundred dollar bill, at New York, if payable there, exchange for any greater or any less number of dollars or eagles? What then does the great financier of the state department, intend by a want of uniformity in this United States bank currency?

Perhaps he objects, because the bank does not promise to pay, and actually pay its bills of one branch, at any, or all other branches. Should it do this, the same objection might be made, unless it also promised to pay, and actually did pay them, at any or all other places. He, who could not get one thousand silver dollars for a bill of that amount of the New York branch, if he called for it at the branch in Boston, would have no more reason to complain of the refusal, than if at Worcester, or Pawtucket, he might want the like accommodation, and not be able to obtain it. The objection raises a question of exchange, and not of currency; and lies with more weight against coin than against the United States bank bills. Indeed such bills are almost as much more near to uniformity than coin, as they are more easily transmitted from place to place, than a like amount in gold and silver could be transported. Imagine, for a moment, that our whole currency was gold and silver coins, if any man at Providence desired to invest $10,000 at New Orleans, must he not, unless he could purchase a bill of exchange, payable in that city, transmit, at whatever cost of risk and labor, the whole amount of coin to that place? In fact, in all countries destitute of the accommodation of bills of exchange, or a bank with collateral branches, gold and silver is worth just as much less, in the place where it is not wanted than it is in the place where it is wanted, as it will cost to transport it from the one to the other. Any amount of gold and silver is, in truth, like every other commodity, of the same uniform value, only at the same time and at the same place. The nature of things cannot be reversed; and we must govern our institutions according to their laws. Until we can abolish time and space we cannot abrogate or exchange that subtle mystery of trade which seems to be too evanescent for the matter of fact intellect of the president; and yet too well known and established to be improved in its condition by the Achitophel of state.

The bank of the United States has, by the skill and diligence of its president and directors, done more in this behalf, than could have been effected by any other and different establishment. In 1828, that bank, and its various branches, transmitted, in bills of exchange, bank and treasury drafts, nearly $64,000,000. This was done at a cost to its customers and to the nation, very little exceeding $250,000.

When we look back to the chaos of currency, over the whole country, except New England, during the war, and until this bank was established, all mercantile men must, with indignation regard the attempt made to overthrow this institution. It cannot suspend specie payments, without paying twelve per cent. on all bills, not so paid on demand. No loan by this bank, to a state, can exceed fifty thousand, nor any one to the United States go over five hundred thousand dollars, unless, by law, admitted to make them larger. If, at any time hereafter, the pressure of war might call for heavier loans under such laws, and this bank, like the bank of England, during the great struggle of that country with nearly all Europe, should be pressed, by demands, until authorised by congress to suspend specie payments, still bills of this bank would be as those of the bank of England were, a uniform, though depreciated currency. The revenue of the United States paid in those bills, would be uniformly paid in all parts of the country; nor could the inequality, not to say injustice of former times be renewed, when such payments were made in a currency at a par with specie, in New England, and in one at a discount of twenty-five per cent. at Washington.

This political war of the state department against this bank, has not been declared, because it does not fully meet the purposes of its establishment; but because this cannot be, and different institutions might be made subservient to the political purposes of the secretary. He would displace this and establish another at Washington. It must be there, and without branches, or the constitutional objection could not be avoided. It is to be established, not on capital, but on the revenue and credit of the government. Does not the government disburse all the annual revenue for the annual expenditure? They have done so, and more also, during the last two years; they have drawn upwards of two millions of dollars from the amount of savings laid up by the economy of the last administration. Can those, who have no revenue beyond their expenditure, and not quite enough for that purpose, have sufficient credit on which to establish a bank? A bank cannot operate any more than a ship, or a manufactory, or a farm, without capital. With capital a prudent man may obtain some extension of that capital by credit; but none but adventurers ever undertake to establish any branch of business without capital, and upon mere credit.

If this treasury bank be a bank without capital, it will not be likely to be sustained by deposits. It is to be an institution for transmitting the funds of government, to have a few officers, who may "sell bills of exchange to private individuals to a moderate premium." Does not this disclose the great secret of the establishment? Who will be these private individuals to be accommodated at small premiums? Doubtless the same description of men, some of whom, have been accommodated with small offices. That species of patronage has been all worked up. All these offices are discounted; God only knows at what premium; and unless some office can be established to discount money, or bills of exchange, the great trading mystery of political buying and selling, must be at a stand. Why, gentlemen, let this bank but once be opened, and customers, who have left every other department of the government, without accommodation, will again be seen in crowds, pressing towards Washington. Place this great carcass of pecuniary patronage out in the sunshine, and from all the different regions of our country, birds of every wing, and every beak, will snuff the prey; and rush on to the "mad carnaval," filling and darkening the air, with their clamour and their flight.

Not only the revenue, but the credit, of the nation is to be placed in the hands of "a few officers;" and these men, directed by the same spirit, which has distributed all the offices in the gift of government, will soon purchase, for their employer, all that portion of our liberties, and all that mass of power, which either revenue, or credit can purchase. The people would in a few years, find themselves blessed with an empty treasury, a new debt, and be in the control of a man, governed by no more principle, than he has ever displayed patriotism.

Man can endure many things, from rulers endowed with great purposes, and lofty conceptions of national advancement. Napoleon was less odious to the French people, though no less a tyrant, than the subtle, crafty, low minded eleventh Louis. The imperial chief, even in the midst of his despotism, planned and executed many great and enduring works of improvement, for the common benefit of all France. The man, under whose advice our government is now administered, has a mind for intrigue, and is proud of this character; but can have no conception of the great projects of great minds, for national benefit. He has, accordingly, advised the president to reject our whole system of internal improvement, and place his veto on every legislative provision proposed to him for that purpose.

No country on earth, is so capable as ours, of an extended internal improvement; nor could any thing more increase our commerce with foreign nations, than cheapening transportation, and encouraging commerce among the several states. The constitution has conferred on congress, the same power to regulate the one as the other. More than 100,000 miles of domestic navigation, by rivers and lakes, may be united by a few improvements in these, and by uniting them by a less extent of canal than is completed, or in progress towards completion. These, when finished would bring 4,000,000 of square miles of our territory, in the interior, to within ten miles of western transportation. The west and the east, the north and the south, would be united; and such a tide of commercial intercourse be constantly flowing through every region of it, that the demagogues of disunion must become discouraged by the very aspect of its movements, and give up their contest against patriotism. Foreign commerce has contributed largely, by impost on its commodities, to discharge the great national debt, contracted by the expenditure of two wars. The people have patriotically sustained the system of revenue: and the whole nation has a right to expect the surplus of that revenue, after discharging that debt, will be appropriated to the great purposes of improving the internal commerce and navigation of the country. They have a right to expect, that the system will not be abandoned, when the purposes of war are subserved; and that, if sustained at its present rate of productiveness, and faithfully applied, the country will, in twenty years, exhibit a condition of internal transportation and commerce, of highways, rail-roads, canals, rivers and lakes, without a parallel on this globe.

What could have induced the secretary, to advise the president, against his former opinions, and his senatorial course not seven years before, to this inconsistent scheme of placing a veto against this great system? Is the fame of Clinton hostile to his repose; and does he regard each new canal, as a new monument to the great founder of that system in our country? He may be at peace. Van Buren's and Clinton's fame, belong to different hemispheres. The exhalation, raised from the bog, by the influence of the sun, never brightens into visibility, until that luminary is below the horizon, and the world is in darkness.

The secretary, by his advice to the president, has, in his last message, introduced a principle into our system for the encouragement and protection of our national labor and capital, intended doubtless to be subversive of the whole. No one thing, as he says, should receive encouragement and protection until it be entitled to receive it alone, and if no other article were so entitled. Why, gentlemen, if men lived individually and alone, each man must provide for himself, but when they are in communities, the body politic must cherish each and all its members. What wise man would neglect his feet or his hands, his head or his heart, unless each one of them might be entitled to the same attention if separated entirely from the other parts of his body?

Our system of encouragement originated in our system of revenue. It begun by an impost at about seven per cent. on imported commodities. It was raised, from time to time, as the wants of the country required, until, during the last war, duties were doubled. When the war was closed these duties were reduced; but because great interests required it, these duties were not reduced to their former level; and, in some instances, the principle of protection was introduced into the revenue system. Such interests have multiplied, and the protecting principle has been extended. Under this revenue system, thus modified, immense interests have been fostered, and have grown up in every part of our country.

A great problem is before the nation. Can we, when the national debt is paid, reduce our revenue system down to seven per cent. and thereby leave all these immense interests at the mercy of European competition; and to be swept away in two or three years by the overwhelming capital of France and England. The sugar culture of Louisiana now employs about $45,000,000; produces annually about 100,000,000 pounds of sugar. Will you reduce the duty on sugar from three cents the pound to seven per cent. on the value? Do it; every planter is ruined, and the whole state made bankrupt. It is admitted by intelligent men in the southern states that such a measure would reduce the productive value of all property south of the Potomac, at least twenty-five per cent. What would be the fate of cotton, rice and tobacco? If a reduction of duty to seven per cent. did not directly injure these great interests, the converting at once all the sugar-raising land and labor to the growing of the other three great staples of southern agriculture, must, of necessity, so crowd the markets of the world with those products, as to reduce them at least one-fourth part in their market value. Destroy the sugar trade by this modification of the revenue system, and the wreck of that overthrow would be like one burning ship, driven by wind and currents on a whole anchored fleet. Would not this endanger their safety, if not effect their destruction.

Under the same system of revenue, great interests have grown up in the middle and northern states; in wool, in cotton and woollen cloths, in iron, in hardware, and in a great number of mechanical productions. Reduce impost to seven per cent. and is there not enough surplus production in Europe, which must be sold, at some market, and at any price, to overwhelm all these various descriptions of trade, and bring all these interests to a level with those of the south? Could the laborer, the mechanic, the farmer, the manufacturer, the merchant, or either of them, escape from his full share of this ruin? Ships would remain, and mariners; and importation might be continued and pressed upon our markets; but let men remember that the more any one can produce himself, the more can he, and will he purchase, and consume of the productions of some others, if they will receive his productions in exchange. The working men of this nation cannot, will not, support, or even endure a system of political policy, which excludes the products of their own labor from the markets of their own country. A great orator and statesman of antiquity has said, "it belongs to our humanity, not to permit the interests of each other to suffer; and it concerns our wisdom to know, that the great interests of the many cannot be ruined, and the republic remain in safety.

No very good reason can be given, for changing a system, sustained and improved under every former administration, since the founding of the government. Have we not prospered under it? Our production is constantly increasing; for it requires a constantly increasing tonnage, to transport all the varieties of it to market. In 1815, we had about 1,100,000 tons, in the foreign and domestic trade. At the close of 1828, this tonnage had augmented to a fraction less than 1,800,000 tons. A great improvement favorable to the transporting capacity, has been made in our vessels; since the last war, both in their size and structure. The parcels of our bulky exports are more closely packed; better stowage is made in our ships; and they are so navigated, as to make more passages in a given time, now, than they made fifteen years ago. Nautical men and merchants have assured me, that all these circumstances do add to the efficiency of our nominal tonnage at least twenty per cent. over and above what the like amount of nominal tonnage could transport, in a given time, in 1815. This will raise our tonnage, in effect, up to nearly, 2,164,000 tons; and to almost double the amount of it, at the close of last war. Our vessels are as constantly employed, now, as they were then; and, consequently, we transport, and therefore produce, nearly twice as much, annually, as we did in 1815.

There was a time, when we not only paid for our imports, all for which we could sell our exports, but we often owed a balance, in money, over and above that amount. At this time, our import of consumable commodities, though not decreased in quantity, or cost, has been fully paid for by a part only of our exports, and for the balance, gold and silver, in coin or bullion, have been imported. This was never the fact before. We are in the prosperous condition of the farmer, who, when he has sold his crops, at market, and purchased all his supplies for the year, finds a fair balance in cash, in his pocket, to carry home. The quantity of gold and silver, in the country, from this cause, is much greater than at any former period of our history. The whole amount is variously estimated; by some at thirty, some at thirty-five, and by some as high as at forty millions. Are not these things, this increased production, and this money balance, strong marks of our progress in wealth, and of the soundness of our system of policy, heretofore established? It is the effect of manufacturing production, in aid of agricultural; and both uniting to furnish mercantile employment. The course of the English people, has been the same. In 1710, they exported about six million sterling, to all the world. In 1780, after a period of 70 years, they had double the amount, and exported about twelve millions; but manufacturing by machinery was invented in England, about that time; and this has so rapidly increased her production, that in 1824 she exported nearly sixty-four millions sterling.—Great Britain has prospered under her system of encouragement and protection; and none of the theories of her wise men, could induce her to relax it, in effect, to the amount of one penny, on any of her own productions. Why should our wise man induce us to abandon our system, and thereby sacrifice our prosperity?

Theories of free trade fill the books of some men; but hitherto, they have governed the practice of no community; nor been recommended, by any statesmen of the old world, for the use of his own country. They seem to belong to some supposed possible state of society, not to any practicable condition of working nations. Indeed, so long as equality, among different communities, is desirable, and they all differ so much, in lands, population, capital, skill, and advancement in the arts of production, nothing but laws, wisely adjusted to their several conditions, can, in these respects, give them that equality. We have given the world, and gone before all nations in giving it, the only system of free trade, which will probably ever be established. Our productions are sent out to all markets; and they go to the consumption of all nations, without any, the least, export duty, for the benefit of our own revenue.

The adversaries of the union, and of our national advancement, have instituted a kind of political knighthood, and associated themselves as champions of state rights. The secretary is laboring to place himself at the head of this order; and, as he has said, to restore the "lost rights of the states." What, I pray, are these lost rights of this fair and lovely sisterhood, in search and for the restoration of which, this man of many labors and many wiles has been so valiantly errant, from north to south? State rights! what are they, and how have or can they be invaded by the parental government instituted by the people of the United States? By the constitution each state holds a guarantee from the United States, for securing to her a republican form of government. Is this among the wrongs of any state; or is it one of the private griefs of individual ambition? The two houses selected by the people of the United States, and in congress assembled, have the power to declare war, to raise and support armies and navies, to establish post offices and post roads, to lay and collect imposts, to make and to fix the value of coins, to regulate commerce, foreign and domestic, to make all laws necessary for these purposes, and to do all these for the general welfare.

No one of these states has the power to do these things, or either of them. Each state has the power to enact, adjudicate, and carry into execution, all laws necessary for the preservation of the life, property and liberty of all persons within its own territory; but the United States has no power to do these things, or any one of them. What state has lost any one of these rights; or when have the United States arrogated the power to control or impair any, the least of them, in one of its parts? The powers of the sun in the solar system are not more distinct from those of the earth, or any other planet, than are those of the United States and of the several states, each progressing in its own sphere, cherished and encouraged by the general government. The warfare of these champions is not to recover rights of which the states have been despoiled; but to plunder from the government of the United States those powers, which the people, for their own general welfare, have, by the constitution, intrusted to its management.

The present administration, sworn to support this constitution, and, therefore, to execute the laws, does not seem disposed to extend the construction of either, so as to bring them into conflict with any of the laws of some of the states. Among the grievances of the times, this is not the least considerable. If the powers of the United States are ever destroyed, if the union is ever dissolved, these disastrous events will be produced, by an administration, which under the advisement of such a secretary, shall refuse to execute the laws. The times are indeed ominous. The direction, and impulse, given by the policy of other administrations, to our national affairs, has hitherto kept them in a condition of some prosperity. We have not been carried on, in our progress, by the counsels, but in despight of the measures, of our present rulers. It is probable, we can float, and make some progress, for two years more, if they do not scuttle the ship. We must manfully look at the dangers, and wait for our sure, or constitutional relief. If the heavens be portentous, and the whole hemisphere dark with clouds; the wind is setting into the right quarter; the wreck is swiftly driven before it; clear sky will soon be seen above the mountains, and the bright sun in the west, give us a glorious safety.

In the hope of this gentlemen, I will close my remarks, and relieve your kindness from further attention, by giving you

The city of New York—Rich, populous and hospitable; the London of the new-world—what may be her opulence, what her population, when her commerce and its kindred labours, encouraged and protected, like those of London, shall annually reap two harvests, one from the ocean and one from the land!

PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS, &c.

AT ALBANY.

At a meeting of the democratic republican members of the senate and assembly of the state of New York, held in the assembly chamber, on Monday evening, February 21st, 1831, pursuant to notice. The hon. Edward P. Livingston, lieut. governor, was chosen president, hon. N. S. Benton, of the senate and hon. G. R. Davis, speaker of the assembly, were appointed secretaries.

On calling the roll of the members of the two houses, twenty senators and ninety-one members of the house, answered to their names.

Mr. Gansevoort, from the committee appointed for that purpose, reported the following resolutions, which being read were unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That the president of the United States has discharged the duties of his exalted station, with an ability and energy which merits the approbation of a great, intelligent and free people; and that the firm stand he has taken in favor of the rights of the states as independent sovereignties, and his adherence to the principles established by the illustrious Jefferson, have added lustre to his distinguished character, and given him new claims upon the gratitude of the American people.

Resolved, That general Jackson, in consenting to be a candidate for re-election to the office of president of the United States, has yielded to the wishes of the democracy of the union, and furnished additional evidence of his attachment to his country.

Resolved, That the re-election of general Andrew Jackson will strengthen the cause of liberty and free principles, advance the happiness of the people, and promote the best interests of the republic.

Resolved, That this meeting do hereby nominate Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee, as a candidate for re-election to the office of president of the United States, and that we will cordially unite with our democratic brethren throughout the union, in using every honorable means to sustain this nomination.

Resolved, on motion of Mr. Otis, That the proceedings of this meeting be signed by the president and secretaries, and a copy thereof transmitted to the president of the United States.

Resolved, on motion of Mr. Lawyer, that a copy of the foregoing proceedings be transmitted by the secretaries to each of the senators and members of the house of representatives of the congress of the United States.

Resolved, that the proceedings of this meeting be published.

EDWARD P. LIVINGSTON, president.

N. S. Benton, }
G. R. Davis, } secretaries.

AT BOSTON.

The most numerous legislative political convention we have ever witnessed (says the Boston Courier) full two hundred members as we are informed having been present,—assembled at the state house, Thursday evening, February 17. The convention was called to order by hon. James Fowler, of Hampden county. George Blake, esq. of Boston, was appointed chairman, and J. P. Robinson, esq. of Lowell, secretary. The convention then proceeded to nominate

Messrs. Lincoln and Winthrop for governor and lieut. governor of the state. After which—

The convention proceeded to nominate

HENRY CLAY OF KENTUCKY,

as a candidate for the next presidency of the United States, which nomination, after some discussion upon the expediency of a nomination as this time, was made unanimously; the gentleman who had expressed doubts as to the expediency of acting at this time, having avowed himself convinced by the disposition manifested by the meeting, that the time to act had arrived.

The convention then proceeded to the appointment of a committee to nominate a central committee, and it was voted that the several county delegations be requested to meet and to elect chairmen of county committees, and to report the same to the committee named for the selection of a central committee.

A committee was also appointed to draft resolutions and an address. The convention then adjourned till Thursday next, at 7 P. M. to receive the reports of its committees.

IN PENNSYLVANIA.

At a meeting of a large majority of the members of the senate and house of representatives of Pennsylvania, a letter was addressed to the president soliciting him again to be a candidate for the high place that he holds, as follows:

Harrisburg, 3d February, 1830.

To his excellency Andrew Jackson, president of the U. States:

Sir—The undersigned, members of the legislature of Pennsylvania, having convened in order to express their opinions in relation to the next presidential election, beg leave to communicate their entire satisfaction and continued confidence in your administration of the government of this union. They believe that it is conducted upon principles of sound policy, and which are eminently calculated to promote the interests and harmony of the confederacy. They are therefore highly gratified that you have again consented to yield to the anxious solicitations of your fellow citizens in becoming a candidate for re-election. No event could tend so much to the union and harmony of the great republican party of these United States; and consequently to the best interests of our beloved country. In speaking these sentiments we are confident, that we are only giving utterance to the feelings of the democratic citizens of Pennsylvania. We are, very respectfully, your fellow citizens,

JACOB M. WISE, and others.

REPLY.

Washington city, February 9.

Gentlemen: Your communication of the 3d instant, reached me yesterday. The kind terms in which it announces your approbation of the principles and measures which it has been the object of my administration of the general government to promote, cannot be otherwise than cheering and acceptable to me.

Notwithstanding the hope I had entertained of retiring from the cares of office to the more peaceful walks of private life, after the termination of the four years for which I was elected president—a hope which many public considerations, as well as my own feelings, had concurred in sustaining as neither inconsistent with a proper regard for the interests of the republic, nor with that maxim which you have quoted, that dedicates to its will the services of all its citizens; I am yet ready and feel bound to relinquish it, after the declarations which I have received from so many respectable organs of the public sentiment, that its indulgence would conflict with the welfare of our common country, and disturb the harmony of the great republican party of the union.

I can therefore only add, in reply to the communication which you have been pleased to address to me in behalf of democratic Pennsylvania, that as she was the first to call me from my chosen retirement, I will be among the last to take any steps that may be calculated to retard the prosperity of those interests which are identified with the progress and durability of our common institutions; and if my continuance in office another term be thought essential, that my services are at the disposal of the people, as they have been heretofore.

I pray you, gentlemen, to be assured, that I appreciate justly and most gratefully the generous confidence with which Pennsylvania reviews my past conduct, and vouches for the character of that which it may be my lot hereafter to exhibit as a public servant.

With earnest wishes for your happiness, individually and collectively, I subscribe myself your friend and fellow citizen.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Messrs. Jacob M. Wise, W. G. Scott and others, members of the Pennsylvania legislature.

IN CONNECTICUT.

At a meeting of delegates from various parts of the state, friendly to the American system and the election of Henry Clay to the next presidency of the United States, held at Hartford, 23d Feb. 1831, hon. Roger Huntington, chairman, and Romeo Lowrey and John A. Rockwell, esquires, secretaries—the following, among other proceedings were had—

Resolved, That we deem it no less the duty than the privilege of freemen to deliberate upon the affairs of their common country and unite in all proper efforts to elect for their rulers such men as are honest, capable and faithful to the constitution.

Resolved, That the industry of our citizens constitutes the wealth of the nation, and its protection its true policy.

Resolved, That as the congress of the United States has power to provide for the general welfare and common defence, we deem it of the first importance to the nation that this power be exercised in the promotion of internal improvements.

Resolved, That we entirely disapprove of the course pursued by the president in relation to the American system, the national currency, and the treaties existing with Indian nations.

Resolved, That we consider Henry Clay to be pre-eminently qualified for the presidency of the United States and that we recommend him as a candidate for that office at the next election.

Resolved, That we consider the independence of the federal judiciary, and the control of the supreme court over the decisions of state tribunals in all questions arising under the constitution, laws and treaties of the United States as necessary to the preservation of the union.

IN OHIO.

The following is a copy of the letter addressed to the president, by fifty two members of the Ohio legislature, with his reply:

To his excellency Andrew Jackson, president of the U. States.

The undersigned, with their fellow citizens of Ohio, have seen with much satisfaction the administration of the general government restored to correct constitutional principles. Your course as the chief magistrate of the nation, observant of those principles, and firm in adherence to them, we assure you is approved by a majority of the people of Ohio, although accident has given a different appearance.

But it is not sufficient for your own glory, or the permanent interest of our common country, that the administration of the general government should, through your agency, have been restored to soundness in principle, it is necessary that the salutary direction now given, should be continued, that the blessings of our free institutions may be fully developed; and to accomplish this, no measure is more important than your re-election, because, from no other measure can we calculate to secure all the advantages which have been gained, by the victory achieved; we, therefore, in behalf of the majority of the citizens of Ohio, (whose wishes we believe we represent) solicit you to be again a candidate for the presidency. Respectfully yours.

[Here follow the names of the fifty-two administration members of the general assembly.]

Columbus, January, 1831.

Washington city, February 9th, 1831.

Gentlemen: Your communication of January last was received a few days since. I am truly grateful for an expression of feeling and sentiment so kind and indulgent, as that which it conveys in behalf of the principles which it is my object to promote in conducting the administration of the general government. To carry with me into retirement such an evidence of the approbation of my fellow citizens at the close of the four years for which they had elected me president, was the highest mark of my ambition; and one, which, if I were so fortunate as to reach, I had never anticipated would subject me to any future calls in the service of my country.

The desired amendment of the constitution, so as to give to the people a direct vote in the choice of president, and limit his term of office to one of four or six years, with other public considerations, afforded me a ground on which I thought that my own anxious wishes to retire could be indulged without disappointing the expectations of my friends, or conflicting with any public interest. Considering, however, the numerous declarations which I have received from large portions of my countrymen, in various quarters, that my continuance in office another term is necessary to their harmonious and successful co-operation, for the complete accomplishment of those measures of improvement and reform which have been commenced under my administration; I feel it to be my duty to yield my personal wishes to their solicitations.

I pray you gentlemen, to except this expression of my gratitude for the favorable manner in which you have communicated your views on this occasion; and believe me, with great sincerity, your friend and very obedient servant, ANDREW JACKSON.

Messrs. Thomas Rigdon, John Cochran and others.

IN MAINE.

At a republican convention, each county being numerously represented, held at Portland on the 22nd Feb. 1831, Eliakim Scamman was called to the chair and Elijah L. Hamlin and Hosea Ilsley appointed secretaries, and the business of the meeting opened by an address to the throne of grace by the rev. Dr. Tyler. After which a grand committee of twenty-five was appointed to select and recommend a suitable person as candidate for governor, &c. Peleg Sprague was agreed upon as the candidate for governor, and John Holmes and Erastus Foote appointed to attend the great national republican convention which is expected to be held at Baltimore, in December next.

Many warm resolutions were adopted at this convention, but we shall only take those which more immediately relate to the "record," as follows:

Resolved, That in the protection of American industry, the coaster, the fisherman, the farmer and the mechanic, from the competition of foreign nations, we recognise the principles which were contended for in the American revolution; and that we are the friends of an American System, such as has been supported from the formation of the confederacy by Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe—believing in the words of Jefferson, that "we must now place the manufacturer by the side of the agriculturalist."

Resolved, That we have no doubt that the construction of the constitution given by Jefferson, Madison, Monroe and Adams, as to appropriations for internal improvements, was a sound and proper construction.

Resolved, That, concurring in the eulogium pronounced by Mr. Van Buren, in the capitol at Albany, N. Y. viz:—"The life of Henry Clay has been one of renown; for his early, unremitted, and eloquent services under the banner of the constitution, he has the gratitude of republicans"—we add, we have the highest confidence in his patriotism, ability, and sterling integrity.

Resolved, That we concur in the proposal for holding a national convention to nominate a president of the United States; and we recommend to the several conventions in this state composing congressional districts, the selection of some suitable person to represent them in whatever place said convention may be called.

AT PHILADELPHIA.

We have already in page 91, given some account of this great meeting. The following are the resolutions that were adopted:

Resolved, That the policy and the conduct of Andrew Jackson, as president of the United States, have more than realised the apprehensions of his opponents, and by their contrast with professions voluntarily made, and with pledges solemnly given, must have disappointed all who supported his election from motives of patriotism, or who deemed him qualified by habit, temper, principle, knowledge or understanding, for the executive chair.

Resolved, That this conduct and this policy have degraded the character of the general government, have jeoparded the existence of our most valuable institutions, and have made it indispensable to the great interests of the country, that a statesman of sound principles and of undoubted patriotism, ardently devoted to the preservation of the union, and deeply imbued with the principles of the constitution, be selected as a candidate for the presidency at the ensuing election.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this meeting, the principles and the practice, the magnanimous spirit and the manly patriotism, the political experience and the distinguished public services of Henry Clay, entitle him, above all others, to the confidence of his fellow citizens, and qualify him to fill with dignity and with usefulness, the high station of chief magistrate of the union.

Resolved, That we will cordially unite with our fellow citizens throughout the country, who perceive the weakness, despise the hypocrisy or abhor the principles of the present administration, in promoting the election of Henry Clay as president of the United States.

Resolved, That we are friends of the American System, comprehending as it does, the union of the states, the support of the constitution, the protection of the industry of our fellow citizens in every branch, the promotion of internal improvements, the preservation abroad of self-respect and national honor, and the maintenance at home of the great republican axiom, that the will of the majority, constitutionally expressed, is the law of the land, which ought not to be intercepted in its free exercise by the signification of executive wishes, nor nullified by executive vetos, but upon the most urgent motives; and we are the friends of Henry Clay, because he is a sincere, ardent, efficient and true friend of the American System, and has at all times sustained it in peace and in war, at home and abroad, in public and in private, with unwavering constancy and resolution.

Resolved, That we cordially concur in the opinions expressed with so much unanimity by both branches of the legislature of this commonwealth, upon the great leading interests of the United States, as being essential to the prosperity, happiness and independence of the nation, and especially to the welfare of Pennsylvania, and we heartily approve of the firm and manly stand taken by a great majority of the Pennsylvania delegation in congress against the projects of the administration at Washington, directed to the destruction of those interests, and we hope, that seeing as they must now see, that the power and influence conferred by the support of general Jackson, have been and continue to be employed to overthrow the settled policy of the state, they and the whole people of Pennsylvania, will also perceive that his further support would be irrational and suicidal.

Resolved, That this meeting approve of the proposed national convention of the friends of the constitution, and the institutions of our country, to be held in the city of Baltimore, on the second Monday in December next, and that the said convention be requested to nominate a suitable candidate for the office of vice president, to be placed before the people in conjunction with Henry Clay for the office of president of the United States.

Resolved, That the conduct of the president of the United States, in seeking among the confidential discussions in the cabinet of a former president, materials for a personal quarrel with the vice president, for the honest expression of opinions which the country had a right to claim from him, and thus exhibiting the offensive spectacle of discussions between the two highest officers of the government, displays in the opinion of this meeting, an unbecoming indulgence of selfish and vindictive feelings—an oppressive abuse of the influence of his station, a departure from personal dignity and official decorum, and are an unconstitutional disregard of the rights and duties of others, which, whether originating in the workings of his own uncontrolled passions, or instigated by artful and designing favorites, are equally to be deplored and condemned.

Resolved, That the citizens of Pennsylvania be requested to meet in their respective congressional districts to nominate delegates to represent them in the proposed national convention.

Resolved, That the following named citizens, be a committee to correspond with the friends of Henry Clay throughout the union with power to fill any vacancies that may occur in their body, or if they deem it necessary, to add to the number thereof.

John Sergeant,	Charles Penrose,
Samuel Richards,	Mark Richards,
John S. Warner,	John Johnson,
Lawrence Shuster,	Adam Woelper,
John Scholefield,	Jacob Mayland,
William Fitler,	Joseph McIlvaine,
Josiah Randall,	Mathew Carey,
David Paul Brown,	Thomas C. Rockhill,
Samuel Brashear,	Edward Ingersoll,
James Harper,	Joseph Akin,
J. P. Wetherill,	Jacob B. Lancaster,
Benjamin Tevis,	Edward Haydock,
John B. Trevor,	R. A. Parrish.

Resolved, That the proceedings of the meeting be published in the newspapers of the city of Philadelphia.

JOHN SERGEANT, president.

Samuel Richards,
John S. Warner,
Lawrence Shuster,
} vice presidents.

Attest—

John Scholefield,
William Fitler,
} secretaries.

IN MISSOURI.

At a meeting of the working men of St. Louis, the following among other resolutions, were adopted—

Resolved, That the present is a crisis in the political relations of our country, which demands, that the whole laboring classes of the community upon whom rests the entire fabric of our government, should rouse themselves from their apathy; and, coming forward with all that manly independence which belongs to them, should assert and maintain those political rights, which through their own supineness, have been too often usurped by demagogues and political speculators; and always keeping principles in view, regardless of individual names, should unite their efforts to banish from our national councils, those men who prefer British workshops to our own, and who, rather than submit their prejudices to be controlled by the majority, threaten us with a resort to nullification, and a repeal of the union.

Resolved, That, in our opinion, a tariff of duties on foreign importations, not only for the purposes of revenue, but for the protection of domestic ingenuity and industry, is both constitutional and judicious, and merits the first place in the councils of the nation.

Resolved, That internal improvements, by opening and improving new channels of intercourse to commerce and intelligence, is not only the most profitable, but also the most judicious disposition of the surplus revenue of the country: and, therefore, deserve the hearty support of all who wish well to our country's institutions.

Resolved, That we view with alarm and the most poignant regret, the silent and insidious, but no less determined efforts of some of our national representatives, in attempting to effect the destruction of the American System, as encroachments on the long settled principles which have mainly contributed to that high and enviable degree of prosperity which attends our country.

Resolved, That a well regulated judiciary is the most efficient safeguard of any people—that the supreme court of the United States stands pre-eminent among the institutions of our country for the beneficial influence it has exerted; and that any attempt by any of the constituted authorities, to lessen its influence, or curtail its effects, is a dangerous experiment, and merits the just reprehension of the American people.

Resolved, That, in the exercise of the elective franchise, without respect to particular men, or party distinctions, we will give our undivided support to those men whose conduct, hitherto, and whose zeal and talents, assure us of the administration of the government, in future, upon what we deem its true principles.

☞ As connected with the meeting of the members of the legislature of Pennsylvania, the letter addressed by them to the president and his reply, as given above, there is a circumstance which has caused no small degree of excitement that we ought to preserve some account of.

Soon after the meeting was held, the Harrisburg Intelligencer stated that one of the senators had received a letter, (the day before the meeting) from the private secretary of the president, and franked by the president, having relation to the nomination of gen. Jackson, for re-election. The fact was equivocally, but yet very roughly, denied, and the editor of the "Intelligencer" persevered and sustained his assertion. But we shall not go through the history of the case, which resulted in the following exculpatory article:

From the United States' Telegraph, of March 3.

It having been charged that the proceedings of the members of the Pennsylvania legislature, and their letter to the president, originated in the suggestion of the president, through his private secretary, that gentleman has made us the following communication on the subject.

Mr. Donelson to the editor of the Telegraph.

Gen. Green: A letter which I addressed, on the 29th of January last, to gen. Krepps, a member of the legislature of Pennsylvania, having been alluded to in several public prints as written at the instance of the president, for the purpose of procuring his nomination by that body, I feel it to be due to the president, as well as to myself, to give the letter itself to the public, as the best corrective of so gross a misrepresentation of its true character and object. This would have been done as soon as I heard of the notice which had been taken of the letter in question, in the Intelligencer of the 21st printed at Harrisburg, but, having no copy, I was obliged to wait until I could obtain one from the gentleman who held the original.

It will be seen that it is an answer to one from general Krepps; which I understood as dictated by a desire to know whether I would consider the president embarrassed by a written communication from his friends in the Pennsylvania legislature, expressive of their approbation of the course of his administration, and of their wish to treat him as a candidate for re-election; and that, as gen. Jackson had been already placed by a preceding article in the Globe, and by the language of his friends generally here, within the principle of the inquiry; it is impossible that my response to it can afford the slightest ground for the assault to which he has been subjected on account of it.

I will only add, that my answer to gen. Krepps was written without consultation with the president, or any one else; and, if it was franked by the president, that he did not know any thing of its contents. With these remarks, I request you to insert the letter, a copy of which is herewith enclosed.

Mr. Donelson to Mr. Krepps.[*]

January 29, 1831.

Dear sir: Your letter of the 25th instant reached me yesterday. In a statement in the Globe, published about a week since, you will perceive that the president stands on his old ground in relation to the question of his being again a candidate for the suffrages of the people. I cannot, therefore, see any impropriety in the steps which you intimate are about to be taken by a committee of the Pennsylvania legislature, for the purpose of obtaining a declaration of his sentiments. The president would, no doubt, feel it a most grateful compliment to be thus assured that the course of his administration has not disappointed the wishes of Pennsylvania, to whose partiality and early support he is so much indebted.

Believe me, with great respect, your ob't serv't,

ANDREW J. DONELSON.

A true copy of the original in my hands, February 28, 1831.

JAMES KREPPS.

[The letter was franked by the president—and it was that probably which induced gen. Krepps to shew it to numerous persons.]

The letter of Mr. Donelson is in reply to one from general Krepps—this letter has been loudly called for, as well as his rejoinder to Mr. D. but neither of them has been published.

Another letter from Mr. Donelson, which is stated to contain something like a "solicitation" that general Jackson might be re-elected, and also franked by the president, is decidedly stated to have been sent to a gentleman of Alleghany county, Maryland—who lately conducted a press favorable to the election of general Jackson, but who has retired from that place. This letter has not been published, but its existence is not denied.

[*] Originally, written Kupps, from a misreading of his name.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 8—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, APRIL 23, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1022

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞The article on rail roads, has extended to a great length, but we hope will not prove tedious to those interested in such things—and what reflecting man is indifferent about them? Our purpose was to render the subject familiar—how far we have succeeded in this, the reader will determine. A large number of additional facts might have been added.

☞We have carefully made up a summary of the very late news from Europe, to preserve a history of events. The Poles, though driven by the Russians, were not destroyed. They have shewn a spirit worthy of the liberty which they seek.

☞There is no such thing on earth as perpetual motion—and it is established that the best organized and most happily fitted machine, though long kept a-going by oiling and repair—must, at last decay. Nothing is immortal this side the grave.

The seemingly "iron" constitution of the editor begins to require oiling and repair. The first, in part, may (as it has been), be accomplished in the approbation of worthy men, and a faithful, and steady and prompt public support—but in the second, the "patient must minister to himself," in the present case—by a plain and frugal subsistence, wholesome exercise, and, more than all, RELAXATION. To the first and second, the third is about to be added, so far as it may without any great neglect of duty, in short occasional excursions from home—that being the only means of keeping the editor from his desk, while able to sit at it—from the desk at which he has been seated an average of ten hours, for every "working day," in the twenty years past.

Having prepared for the press the leading article and miscellaneous matter for this day's paper, the editor retired for a few days, intending to be at his post in time for the next publication; and if in this, or other like proceedings hereafter, any small default should for a while appear, it will be excused in that necessity which is beyond his regulation or will. It is hoped, however, that no material alteration will take place in the manner or matter of the "Register," from arrangements made.

DISSOLUTION OF THE CABINET! However much it was expected that an explosion would take place in the cabinet at Washington, it was not thought that it would become general, and the announcement of it came upon us like a clap of thunder in a cloudless day. We have given the "officials" so far as they have reached us—on which every one will speculate for himself. Mr. Berrien is absent, but the National Intelligencer, learns, that he has also tendered his resignation, and says that it is understood that Mr. Barry, postmaster general, tendered his resignation also, but that the president prevailed on him to remain in office.

The U. S. Telegraph states that Mr. Ingham and Mr. Branch, were requested by the president to resign.

The new cabinet, it is said, will thus be made up—

Edward Livingston, a senator of the United States from Louisiana, secretary of state.

H. L. White, a senator of the United States from Tennessee, secretary of war.

Levi Woodbury, late senator of the United States from New Hampshire, secretary of the navy.

Louis McLane, late senator of the United States from Delaware, and now minister to England, secretary of the treasury.

ROLLIN C. MALLARY, for many years a member of the house of representatives of the United States from Vermont, and recently re-elected to the same honorable place, died in Baltimore on the evening of the 15th instant, in the 47th year of his age. He had been very ill for some time before the adjournment of congress, after which he was removed to the house of a near relative and friend in this city, where every kindness was bestowed on him—and he soon after had great comfort in the attendance of his lady, who proceeded hither for that purpose. His remains were deposited in a vault on Monday morning last, in the presence of a not numerous but very respectable assemblage of citizens (because of the shortness of the notice of such intention), the following being the pall-bearers—Mr. Archer, chief justice of the Baltimore district; Mr. Stewart, mayor of the city; Mr. Moore, president of the second branch of the city council; Mr. Morris, president of the first branch of the city council; Mr. Howard, member of the last congress, and his old friend, the writer of this notice and editor of the "Register."

Mr. Mallary was among the elder members of congress, and, for the last five or six years, chairman of the very important committee on manufactures. By close examination and deep study, he had made himself exceedingly well acquainted with the multifarious concerns of this great branch of industry; and he was always on the alert to take care of its interests. His labors in this committee, especially in 1828, were indeed severe, and much impaired his general health. His fidelity to the trusts reposed in him was never surpassed—he was prompt in debate, always ready with his facts, and oftentimes very powerful; while the mildness of his manners, his manifest honesty and frankness, the assurance of his freedom from wilful misrepresentation or chicanery, always gathered to him the confidence of those who generally thought and acted with him, and disarmed his opponents of that bitterness which has so often, and too freely, entered into debates on the tariff question. He was steady at his post—and, emphatically speaking, one of the very best business-members of the house. His decease is a national loss; but we hope that his bereaved relatives may find consolation in the good name that he left behind him, and in a happy assurance that the "charity and good deeds" which so strongly marked his course, have ascended before him like a sweet smelling savour, to HIM who decides justly—in mercy.

BALTIMORE. From many long walks through different parts of our city for exercise, we have great pleasure in believing, if the building of new houses and repair of old ones, is evidence of prosperity, that this city, for about twenty-five years, has never been so prosperous as now. The large amount of labor employed in our various workshops and factories, and in providing materials—and on our great public works, have packed the people too thickly. We want many houses—worth from 100 to 300 dollars a year, for the accommodation of productive persons; and these, in turn, furnish a mighty market for farmers, graziers, gardeners, &c. thanks to the "American System." And besides, the ship-yards are resounding with the merry notes of the carpenter's hammer. The people are becoming "as busy as nailers," though the foreign trade does but little for us.

By a communication in the "American" we observe that, within the last 40 days ending on the 10th April, there had been exported from Baltimore, 110,000 barrels flour, 30,000 bushels wheat, 5,000 hogsheads tobacco—the whole worth about a million of dollars: 65,000 barrels of the flour and 20,000 bushels of wheat, went to England, 25,000 barrels and 10,000 bushels to the eastern states, and 20,000 to South America. But as these seem to make the whole amount, we apprehend a mistake. Did not one barrel of flour go to "the West Indies?"

MARYLAND AND PENNSYLVANIA. We have copies of two letters which passed between the Maryland commissioners and a committee of the legislature of Pennsylvania, concerning the obstructions in the Susquehannah, by the dams erected at Shamokin, Nanticoke and Duncan's island. The committee rather denies that the law of 1801, declaring the river "down to the Maryland line to be a public highway" was a compact with Maryland—but if so, it must be shewn that Pennsylvania has placed the navigation in a worse state than it was before the act was passed, "and Maryland would have to show that the construction of a dam in her own territory was not an example for this state (Pennsylvania) to follow." It is added that, the canal commissioners—"not as arbiters, but as agents, of the state" had been directed to examine the dams and report the result, for the future action of the legislature, if necessary. In reply, the commissioners complain that the matter has been referred to the "wrong-doers themselves"—say that the "notoriety of the losses sustained" had placed the subject beyond all doubt—they insist on the compact, and protest, in the name of the state of Maryland, against the proceeding, calculated to produce delay, and which submits the arbitration "to an ex-parte tribunal, itself implicated as authors of the inflicted injury."

As to the dam alluded to by the committee of the legislature of Pennsylvania, as having been erected in Maryland, it is well known that it was built for the sole purpose of improving the navigation of the Susquehannah, and has that effect; but the Pennsylvania dams have no reference to an improvement of the navigation of the river, being for feeders of canals, which pass out of the valley of the Susquehannah—and hence the set-off has been seen with no little surprise. That the dams complained of do obstruct and much endanger the navigation of the river, unless when at an extraordinary height, is a matter just as notorious as that the Chesapeake and Delaware canal has its western entrance through Back Creek*—which in the right of our "sovereignty" to redress our own grievances, and preserve the breed of oysters and terrapins from total ruin by Philadelphia fishers of good things—we shall have to fill up—"thats flat!"

We are a little apprehensive that the coal mining interests on the waters of the Delaware, Schuylkill, &c. have a good deal to do in this matter—though at the cost of other coal interests in Pennsylvania, from whence, by way of the Susquehannah, Baltimore has obtained much, and expected a full supply of Anthracite coal, cheaper than it can be brought from Philadelphia.

If Pennsylvania dams the river to promote her interior trade, we may dam Back Creek to keep the trade that yet descends it! The other day, twenty-three vessels, fully laden, arrived at Philadelphia from Port Deposit. Now, if Back Creek were dammed, their cargoes would have reached Baltimore! Every good rule works both ways—and the happiness of society depends on mutual and just concessions.

NEW YORK CITY ELECTION. We mentioned in our last, that "Old Tammany had grasped his tomahawk and mounted his war horse with a great shew of fight," in readiness for the election of charter officers in New York. The contest terminated, after three day's battle, on the 14th inst. more votes being taken than ever before was received—upwards of twenty-five thousand—every man being brought into action! The political character of the new corporation is yet contested by the adverse parties—but the "regular" caucus ticket for aldermen, appears to have been defeated in 9 of the 14 wards—and the board of assistant aldermen is about equally divided; but the anti-Tammany caucus members seem to have a decided majority in joint ballot. Every inch of ground was severely contested. Much feeling is expressed at the activity of the United States, state, and city officers, on this occasion.

---

* It was stated only a few days ago, that an ark or raft, in attempting to get through the shute in the Susquehannah near Clark's ferry, passed over the dam and all on board, to the number of thirteen persons, were drowned.

PENNSYLVANIA. Gov. Wolf has been burned in effigy by those who were formerly his friends, in Somerset county, for dismissing two men from office and conferring their places on one man—about 100 persons in a letter addressed to him having previously pronounced his conduct "as despotic and an infringement on the rights of man." So rewards and punishments are not acceptable, in all cases!

RICHMOND is represented as being very lively, by arrivals of produce from the upper country. Well Mr. Ritchie tell us whether the market for it is in "the" West Indies, or New England?

ASTONISHING PRESUMPTION! Mr. Robinson, a member of the British parliament, has had the astonishing presumption to differ with Mr. Cambreleng, a member of the congress of the United States, as to the augmentation of American tonnage, which he speaks of with much and fearful hostility. Let Mr. Cambreleng send a copy of his book to Mr. Robinson! If the latter shall believe the things stated therein, he will find no cause to be jealous of us!

LIBERALITY! The British deluge our cities with paupers—many of them being transported at the cost of the parishes, and dropped down among us to be fed by our labor,—or starve; and yet disparage our country, because that we have so many poor in our cities! All such persons, instead of being allowed to eat our bread, should be forced to seat themselves at the doors of the British consuls, and remain there, until relieved. This foul business requires a strong corrective. Let the humanity of any proceeding on the subject rest where it should. An American vessel would not be allowed to land a cargo of worn-out negroes in England—nor should we permit the sweepings of her poor houses to be thrown upon us. We are plagued enough with her pattern-card men and smugglers, and custom-house-oath-makers.

O'CONNELL's letter puts his withdrawal of the plea of "not guilty" on the ground that, admitting the facts charged, he is guilty of no offence in point of law. He cites lord Coke to prove that a proclamation cannot create an offence—cannot make that a crime which has not been made so by an existing law. Indictments conclude contra formam statuti; but who, he says, ever heard of one concluding contra formam proclamationis? He ridicules the idea that he, a lawyer, well acquainted with criminal law, and studiously seeking to avoid coming within the reach of the law, should unwittingly transgress it. He says, also, that the charges in his indictment are contradictory and absurd. If he has offended against the proclamation, he did not evade it, and if he evaded, he could not have offended against it.

GREAT NEWS! The London Morning Chronicle of the 18th February says—

"We have received New York papers to the 19th ult. They state the expectation of a great crisis at Washington, in regard to American legislation; several of the states having lately passed local laws in opposition to the enactments of the general congress at Washington."

☞ The British know but little more of our system of government, in its operation and spirit, than they do of the code of laws that exist in the moon. They are like our friend Ritchie—they find a crisis, or a "mare's nest" in every political excitement.

THE NEW POPE. His eminence, D. Maurus Capellari, cardinal prefect of the propaganda in Rome, who has recently been elected pope, takes the name of Gregory XVI. He is 66 years old.

The last pope, who had the title of Gregory, being the XV. was consecrated in the year 1621. The first, if we mistake not, was St. Gregory, surnamed the great, consecrated 3d September, 509, and held the holy see 13 years, 6 months, and ten days. [U. S. Gazette.

RIO JANEIRO. Bags of coffee exported in 1827, 350,000; in 1828, 369,147; in 1829, 376,107; in 1830, $91,785. Cases of sugar in 1827, 19,644; in 1828, 19,035; in 1829, 18,864; in 1830, 22,488. Hides in 1827, 329,320; in 1828, 207,268; in 1829, 351,893; in 1830, 266,719.

In 1830 there were also exported 397 boxes, 11,199 barrels, 15,641 bags of sugar; 17,879 rolls of tobacco; 1,984 seroons of cotton, and 666,613 ox horns.

LIBERIA. This colony goes on prosperously—25 substantial dwellings have been erected at Monrovia in 5 months, and many others were in progress. The commerce of the town is now considerable, and the native tribes begin to feel the influence of the settlement, many persons wishing to come under its laws. The re-captured Africans have wonderfully improved—they have a house of public worship and a Sunday school, both which are zealously attended by them. Mr. Mechlin, the present governor of the colony, speaks in high terms, of the good morals of the people.

CHINA. A Canton newspaper contains a curious proclamation by the emperor of China, enumerating the sacrifices to be made for the ocean of affluence poured on the head of the emperor, (the suppression of the late rebellion in China), the following is an extract.—"The five great mountains and four great rivers of China are to be sacrificed to, by special personages sent by his majesty, the same is to be done to the tombs of emperors of all preceding generations, and to Confucius, at his native place in Shantung province; temples and tombs of ancient emperors and kings are to be sought out and repaired by governors of provinces; the parents of deceased civil and military officers are to receive titles of honor, generals and subalterns who have fought for their country are to be forgiven all misdemeanors; the students at the national college are to have a month's holliday." (Here follow long details of the largesses to the military and police, and the pardons to all except capital offenders; roads to be repaired, hospital to be endowed, widows, fatherless children and childless old men, to be carefully attended to.) "The great potentate who receives from heaven and revolving nature, the government of the world, commands that these things should be published in such a way that all under the canopy of heaven may hear them."

Wherefore, in order to give publicity to the above order in this accidental portion of what is under the canopy of heaven, we have caused the above to be published in our Gazette wishing long life to the great potentate. [U. S. Gaz.

SEIZURE AT NEW YORK. From the Boston Courier. Extract of a letter to the editor from a friend at New York, dated Tuesday evening—"A package sale of cloths, was held at one of our auction houses on Saturday, and before the goods were removed by the purchasers, an officer of the customs stepped into the store and said to the auctioneer, "we will take possession of these goods, if you please." The cloths, I understand belonged to one of the "drab gaitered gentry," who it is said had from three to five thousand pieces in his store. This morning a purchaser applied to him for some cloths, and, to his astonishment, found that the Yorkshireman had none for sale. His chambers and lofts were all cleared out. It is presumed he found a civil call from some officer of the customs, and took the "precaution to remove his goods."

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT. John H. Jacocks to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue for the port of New Haven, in the state of Connecticut, vice William Baldwin, deceased.

John Haywood to be surveyor and inspector of the revenue for the port of Windsor, in the state of North Carolina, vice James Palmer, deceased.

Donelson Caffery to be collector of the customs for the district of Teche, and inspector of the revenue for the port of Franklin, in the state of Louisiana, vice John B. Murphy, resigned.

David Porter, of Pennsylvania, to be charge d'affaires of the United States at the sublime porte.

William Carroll, of St. Helena, to be consular commercial agent of the United States at St. Helena.

George F. Brown, of Virginia, to be consular commercial agent of the United States at Algiers.

Thomas B. Marshall, of Tennessee, to be marshal of the United States for the western district of Tennessee, vice Robert Purdy, deceased.

Edmund Christian, of Virginia, to be marshal of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, vice John Pegram, deceased.

George Strobel, of Pennsylvania, to be consul of the United States for the port of Bordeaux, in France, vice Daniel Strobel, resigned.

Thomas Irwin, of Pennsylvania, to be judge of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania, vice William Wilkins, resigned.*

William P. Duval, of Florida, whose commission expired on the 17th of this present month of April, to be governor for another term, in and over the territory of Florida.

Appointments by the secretary of the treasury.

Joseph Sewall, John D. McCrate, and William Richardson, to be commissioners of insolvency for the district of Maine.

Samuel Cushman, Daniel P. Drowne, and Jotham Lawrence, to be commissioners of insolvency for the district of New Hampshire.

John Beach to be commissioner of insolvency for the district of Connecticut.

Benjamin Elliott, Martin Strobel, and James Jervey, to be commissioners of insolvency for the district of South Carolina.

Richard W. Habersham, Richard R. Cuyler, and Mordecai Meyers, to be commissioners of insolvency for the district of Georgia.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT. Comptroller's office, 9th April, 1831. SIR—The secretary of the treasury has referred to me an opinion of the attorney general, with the president's approval, by which it is decided that foreign merchandise may be exported for the benefit of drawback, in the manner prescribed by law, to any foreign port or place situated to the westward or southward of Louisiana, although such port or place be in the dominions of a foreign state immediately adjoining the United States.

You will be pleased, accordingly, to allow a drawback on foreign merchandise thus exported, provided that all the regulations of law (to be thus entitled) be complied with. Respectfully, JOS. ANDERSON, comptroller.

James N. Barker, esq. Philadelphia.

THE TARIFF. From the National Gazette of April 7 —"The reproach of unsteadiness is sometimes cast, in consequence of a degree of compromise or concession, which may, not unfrequently, be indispensable for the accomplishment of all-important ends, or which is merely just submission to unalterable results. One of the ablest of statesmen has written, that "men run into errors from both extremes, of laxity and inflexibility; from seeing too much as well as seeing too little;" and that "the most subtle refiners are apt to miss the true point of political wisdom, which consists in distinguishing between what is absolutely best in speculation, and what is the best of things practicable in particular conjunctures." We advocated considerately the principles of free trade, and deprecated the restrictive system. But a high tariff, or, as it is generally understood and represented, the protection of domestic manufactures, being, manifestly, the choice of the great majority of the people, and, we may add, the fixed choice, we discern no rational alternative but acquiescence, and the approval of such reductions or modifications as events and experience shall render desirable in the opinion of those who can decide the national policy. This view of the case is widely different from a scheme of undermining the tariff, or destroying it piecemeal; of espousing it in theory, as constitutional and prudent, with the purpose and hope of sacrificing it to its mortal enemies by means of the jealousies and rivalry of its friends.

"Besides, there may be higher national objects at stake, which cannot be saved without yielding more or less in the tariff question. The constitution and the union, and the judiciary and the currency, in themselves and as preservatives, are paramount interests. We trust that they cannot be ruined, or sensibly injured, by any set of functionaries; and our trust arises from the belief that the people will interpose in due time—will themselves break any infatuation into which they may have fallen with regard to the merits or harmlessness of particular men. Whatever is done to the detriment of the constitution, whether by contracting or perverting its powers, is eminently mischievous to the country. That instrument might be regarded as almost a dead letter, unless its spirit and energies possess the servants to whom its interpretation and execution are committed. The chief of those fiduciaries is the president: he should understand it thoroughly, and observe it religiously; his responsibility is peculiar, and more comprehensive and direct than that of any sovereign in any limited monarchy. If that officer happens to be incompetent, or froward, or like "a pawn on a chess-board, to be moved about at will, and on whom the conduct of the game is not to be charged," there is more incongruity, more irresponsibility indeed, than in the monarchical system; and there would be more danger, if greater reliance could not be placed on the sagacity and power of the people, and the facility of emblazoning the facts and sounding the alarm."

* So Mr. Irwin is appointed "after all."

STEAM BOAT CASE. A case was tried at the last term of the superior court, before judge Oakley, in which the owner of the sloop Montgomery was plaintiff, and the proprietors of the steam boat North America were defendants. The sloop in going up the river, was struck by a flaw of wind near Polipel's island, which rendered her unmanageable, and, in this situation the North America ran over her. The sloop was run ashore on the flats and taken to Tarrytown, where she was repaired. The question submitted to the jury was, whether the result was owing to bad management on the part of those navigating the sloop, or a want of precaution in those who had charge of the steam boat; it being assumed that the latter was to be regarded as being always before the wind. The judge charged that this rule was always to be reasonably applied. The jury as is general in cases of the kind, gave a verdict against the stronger party; finding 250 dollars damages for the plaintiff.

[N. Y. Com.

THE CHEROKEES. The Phœnix of the 26th ult. contains further particulars of the oppressive operation of the laws of Georgia, and cruel conduct of some of her citizens. In addition to the persons whose arrest we mentioned some days since, it appears that the party under col. Nelson took up the rev. John Thompson and Mr. Wm. Thompson, making six persons in all. The last mentioned person was thrown into jail, but subsequently discharged and permitted to return home; he being in fact residing in Carrol county, out of the nation, when he was arrested. On arriving at Lawrenceville, four of them were brought before judge Clayton by a writ of habeas corpus, and the two clergymen, Messrs. Worcester and Thompson, were discharged, on the ground that they were agents of the general government, one being a missionary and the other a postmaster. This was the ground taken by the judge himself; the prisoners' counsel studiously avoiding to make any such suggestion. The others were bound over to appear at court in September, when it is supposed a conviction will be pushed. The Phœnix very pertinently remarks on this transaction as follows:

"We were very much surprised to hear that the missionaries were discharged on the ground of their being agents of the government. Who ever thought of such a thing before? It shows that a judge may twist a law into whatever shape he pleases, if policy makes it necessary, for we are confident the greatest hostility was directed against the missionaries, and that the law was intended particularly to embrace them. We know it was so understood in Milledgeville and elsewhere. If the missionaries are agents of the government, as judge Clayton has decided, then the public may rest assured gen. Jackson will reform them out. If he could, he would like to do it very well; but it is a matter of thankfulness that they are not his agents, and are still out of his hands."

The Cherokees appear to be suffering much in their property, by a band of white thieves, called the "Poney-Club"—who steal their horses and cattle and other moveables, burn their fences, &c. and they are now defenceless.

The Georgia surveyors are running their lines, to divide the whole country into sections of nine miles square.

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MANUFACTURERS. Napoleon Bonaparte offered a premium of three millions of francs to the person who should discover some material, the production of France, that should in all respects answer as a substitute for indigo. In consequence of this stimulus, M. Souchon, a practical chemist and dyer, expended a fortune in experiments, which finally resulted in the discovery of a method for fixing the color of Prussiate of iron, even more permanently than indigo blue. With this preparation he has succeeded in dying green, blue blacks, and black, at an expense of little more than one-third that of indigo colors, and said to be in every respect equally fine and permanent.

We learn that Mr. Arnold Buffum, of this state, during his residence at Paris, effected a contract with Mr. Souchon, for the communication of the process to him, to be introduced into the United States, and that he has recently received a full explanation of the method, by which this important desideratum is effected.

The colors are said to resist the action of both acids and alkalies, and when worn for years, (as we have seen stated by a mercantile house of high standing in Paris), will present no whitened appearance on the seams, or at the pockets and button holes of garments; the colors there remaining unchanged.

The fact that this substitute, if found successful, will not only diminish the expense and increase the permanency of the best colors in cloths, but that the preparation of the material will give rise to a valuable branch of manufacture in our own country, shows the importance of the discovery, if it will be really what it is represented.

Samples of cloth dyed by this process, may be seen at this office. [Prov. Am.

RAIL ROADS. At a time when the desire to make rail roads much interests the mind of enlightened individuals in every state of the union, and some thirty or forty roads are being made, or about to be begun—we have thought that a few desultory facts and remarks on this invention, (among the most important of modern times), may not be unacceptable to our readers, though so much has been said on the subject—for rail roads, we think, associated with steam power, are about to accomplish a much greater revolution in the future affairs of men and nations, than steam, itself, has yet brought about in the present condition of things.

The making of rail roads, in their now improved state, is the result of the experience of scientific and practical men, chiefly aquired within the last five years: and economy, safety, power, speed, and usefulness, in making and fitting them, and suiting the carriages to them, have all mightily advanced even within two years. The idea of locomotive steam wagons seems to belong to our late countryman, Oliver Evans, deceased. As early as the year 1781, he declared the power of steam, and suggested its use for propelling wagons. In 1786, he petitioned the legislature of Pennsylvania for an exclusive right to use steam wagons in that state; and, as steam, itself, was then very little understood, he was regarded as pretty nearly insane. In 1804 he had practically shewn the correctness of his opinions, in the building of a large flatt, or scow, having a steam engine of five horse-power on board, to clean the docks at Philadelphia—and, placing temporary axletrees and wheels under it, he propelled it, by the engine, from his works to the Schuylkill, (between one and two miles, we believe), over the ordinary roads—then launched it, and, with a paddle wheel at the stern, drove it down the Schuylkill and up the Delaware to Philadelphia—the weight of the scow, with its engine, &c. he estimated as equal to 200 barrels of flour, or 20 tons. It was objected that the motion of the scow was too slow to be useful—but the engine was weak, and the fixtures, being rough and temporary, caused much friction; but Mr. Evans offered a bet of $3,000 to run a steam wagon, on a [common] level road, against the swiftest horse that would be produced; and at about this time he suggested the use of steam wagons to the Philadelphia and Lancaster Turnpike Road Company, shewing that one such wagon would do the work of 10 common wagons and 50 horses, on that road. In 1805 he published a book describing his steam engines, and shewing how they might be applied against the current of the Mississippi. In 1812 he offered to make a steam wagon to travel on rail ways 15 miles an hour, on the "condition, that he should have double price if running with that velocity, and nothing for it, if it should not come up to that velocity." And in the same year, 1812, he said—"One step in a generation is all that we can hope for. If the present shall adopt canals, the next will try rail ways with horses, and the third generation use the steam carriages." But adding, "why may not the present generation, who have already good turnpikes, make the experiment of using steam carriages on them?" And further, "I do verily believe that the time will come, when carriages propelled by steam will be in general use, as well for the transportation of passengers as goods, travelling at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, or three hundred miles per day." These facts are derived from a publication made by Oliver Evans dated "Ellicott's Mills, on the Patapsco, November 13, 1812, and printed, (at Mr. E's expense), very soon after, by the present editor of the "Register," as an addendum to the 3d vol. of this work. But the copies fell short, and all of the 3d vol. have not this now interesting article added. And the editor well remembers to have heard the same Oliver Evans, in his (the editor's) father's house, sometime in 1787 or 1788, declare, that "the man was then living who would see the Ohio and Mississippi covered with steam boats, and the child born who would travel from Philadelphia to Boston in one day," by steam boats or wagons. The remembrance is perfect, because, being a child, he long regarded Mr. Evans, (who was a friend and frequent visiter of his father), as "cracked" because of such opinions. This remark of Mr. Evans was made in a conversation concerning Fitch and Rumsey's steam boat, which had just then arrived at Wilmington (40 miles), from Philadelphia, in which the editor had made an excursion of 14 miles, up and down the Christiana. This was the first steam boat in America, if not the first boat that ever was regularly fitted for the application of steam. She had three paddles at her stern—the largest being in the middle: they were dipped into the water and forced outward, by a crank—the two small paddles dipping as the large one rose.

We have among our extensive collection of fugitive pieces, a short sketch of Mr. Rumsey, who died at London in 1795, while explaining one of his mechanical inventions before a public body—but know not whence it is derived. It asserts, that in 1784, he projected the idea of a steamboat, commenced its execution in 1785, and carried it into effect (at Philadelphia) in 1787. In 1792 he put a steamboat in motion against the tide of the Thames, at London, and the people were filled with the idea of steam vessels of war! But his own poverty and the want of patronage, kept him back—he was indeed, much pressed to obtain a subsistence, and dragged out a weary life, too often the fate of men of genius; and on the evening of the 20th Dec. 1796, being in the committee room of the society of arts, in the Adelphi, and explaining a model to the company, he was attacked with a violent pain in the head, which almost immediately caused his death. To this account is attached a deposition of Nicholas Orrick, taken before William Little, a justice of the peace, for Berkley county, Virginia, and dated 24th Nov. 1787, saying, that James Rumsey informed said Orrick, in the year 1784, that he was "projecting a boat to work by steam." The subsequent progress of steam is well known—or, at least, it is unnecessary to give a detailed account of it here.

These brief remarks, we hope, though familiar, perhaps, to a few persons, will interest many; and the opportunity was well-suited to offer them.

The "Richmond Enquirer," on making some extracts from our article about rail roads in the "Register" of the 26th ult. asks certain questions in a good spirit—which we are happy to see has visited Mr. Ritchie, and to which we heartily respond. Speaking of the results on the Liverpool and Manchester rail road, he says—"it is through a level country, and that the difficulty and expense must, of course, increase with the elevation of the ground." Instead of taking up Mr. Ritchie's questions, we shall briefly give some information that we have concerning this road; being inclined to the belief—that a more difficult route for one, of the same distance, could hardly be selected—the passage even of the "Point of Rocks," on the Potomac, being a small matter compared with several of the natural disadvantages overcome on the Liverpool and Manchester rail way, as will soon appear. But we must write with a "running pen," and rather hint at things than pretend to describe them, else this article would extend to an unreasonable length. The "Liverpool Mercury" of the 17th September last, (see vol. 39, of the REGISTER, page 213), contained a long account of this road, on which we shall chiefly rely, with some additions from other authentic sources.

The company to make this road was formed in December 1825, or rather re-formed, and the capital proposed to be raised was £510,000—say 2,264,000 dollars. The act of incorporation was passed 27th April, 1826. The various parliamentary expenses on both sides, were nearly 70,000 pounds, say 300,000 dollars, for the progress of the bill was impeded by those interested in the canals, hitherto used for the transportation of goods between the two places. The first point of operation was at Chat Moss, the draining of which was commenced in June 1826. The year 1827 appears to have been occupied in financial operations, and 1828 in obtaining an additional act of parliament to alter the line of the road, &c. In 1829, the company was allowed to raise an additional capital of £127,500 in 5,100 shares of 25*l.* each, the holders of the former 100*l.* shares having the right of taking up the new shares of 25*l.* So the capital was 2,827,000 dollars—and soon after, the making of the road was commenced, with great energy and power.

We shall trace the line of the road, commencing at Liverpool. It passes through a tunnel under the town more than a mile and a quarter long. The tunnel, at its least dimensions, is 22 feet wide and 16 high. In the last distance of 1,980 yards the road rises 3-4 or an inch in a yard, or, in one mile and 230 yards, one hundred and twenty-three feet, to overcome, in part, the rise at Edge Hill—and yet, in some places, the roof of the tunnel is 70 feet below the natural surface of the ground! At the end of the tunnel there is an area 50 yards long and 30 yards wide, cut out of the solid rock, that principally forms its walls, which are forty feet high! Another tunnel, from a different part of the town, 290 yards long, enters this area. There is also a third tunnel, but its length is not stated. Here are placed two stationary engines to draw loaded wagons up the rise of 125 feet, in 1980 yards—their chimneys are each 100 feet high. The total cost of the tunnels was £44,768. To get out of the area spoken of, it is obvious that there must be cuttings of the rock forty feet deep, which seem to extend about half a mile—where the road is carried through a "deep marl cutting" (number of feet not stated), and reaches Olive Mount, whence there is an excavation through the solid rock, of seventy feet deep and two miles long! Next comes a great embankment, from 15 to 45 feet high, and from 60 to 135 feet wide at its base, extending two miles—this embankment is supported by large walls of stone, some of them 14 feet thick. The next two miles is through a nearly level country. At Ram Hill, the rail way is crossed by the Manchester turnpike road, over a beautiful and massy bridge. It appears to be lofty, but the height is not given. Proceeding onward, Parr Moss is reached. This moss, or bog, was originally 20 feet deep, the embankment was 25 feet high, but settled down to five feet, the desired height above the surface. Parr Moss is three-quarters of a mile long. Next the road is carried over the valley of the Sankey, by a viaduct of 9 arches, each of fifty feet span, the height of the parapet being 70 feet. The foundations of this great fabrick of solid masonry rest upon piles driven from 20 to 30 feet in the earth. The viaduct is approached by "stupendous embankments," and vessels sail in the canal, seventy feet below it—it cost 45,208 pounds, and is 14½ miles from Liverpool. A little way on, there is another valley, a "lofty embankment," and a stone viaduct 160 feet long. Next is the "great Kenyon excavation," out of which 800,000 cubic yards of earth and stone were taken! Thence the road passes under three handsome bridges, and arrives at the Brosely embankment, 1½ miles long and from 18 to 20 feet high. After crossing the small creek Gless it reaches the famous Chat Moss. This huge bog is so soft that cattle cannot walk upon it, and "an iron rod, laid on its surface, will sink to the bottom by the effect of its own gravity!" This bottom is from 10 to 35 feet deep, The line across the bog, is four miles and three quarters long. The road over it was finished on the 1st January 1830, and passed by the Rocket locomotive on that day. Leaving this moss, there is another high embankment, a mile long, when the road passes over the Worsley canal, by a stone viaduct of two arches. It then soon goes under six bridges, and next crosses the river Irwell by a stone bridge, 63 feet wide and 30 high—then over 22 large brick arches and a bridge to Water street, Manchester, being 31 miles from the area at Liverpool, mentioned above. Besides culverts and foot bridges, there are sixty-three bridges, of which 30 are under the turnpike roads, 28 over them, 4 over bronks, and 1 over the river Irwell. Twenty-two of these are of brick, 11 of brick and stone, the rest of brick and wood, or stone and wood, and 11 of wood only. There are several inclined planes on the road. The rails at the mouth of the great tunnel are 46 feet higher than the rails at Manchester.—The whole quantity of earth excavated was more than three millions of cubic yards—and the weight of the rails, 4,000 tons. The cost of the road up to May 1830, was 739,165*l.* 5*s.* and there would yet be required to finish it, build warehouses, &c. 80,834*l.* 15*s.* more—in the whole 820,000 pounds, or 3,640,000 dollars, or at the rate of about 113,775 dollars the mile.

This brief summary will shew Mr. Ritchie how much he misapprehended the route of this road. It is one of the wonders of the world, the difficulties of the undertaking being considered; and must satisfy the editor of the "Enquirer," that rail roads may be made ANY WHERE; which takes in the subject of one of his queries—and a very important one too. The great cost of the Liverpool and Manchester rail way, is, however, a matter of only secondary consideration—indeed, cost is of no importance at all, if the money disbursed yields sufficient profit or interest upon it; of which we shall say something below, as applicable to the value of the stock of this rail road and the canals hitherto used for the transportation of goods between the two places.

We shall now proceed to give a summary account of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, in which we hope to answer another query of the "Enquirer," as to the cost of such roads, in general.

After leaving the depot in Baltimore, the first object worthy of special remark is the "Carrollton viaduct." This is a magnificent granite structure, 65 feet high, 300 feet long, and contains 10,995 perches of masonry, 25 cubical feet to the perch. It has one grand arch of 80½ feet, and a small one for the passage of a road; and its entire cost was $58,016, inclusive of some money that was paid for the privilege of draining a mill pond. Next we have the deep cut. The earth here was so tough that a great part of it was loosened by gunpowder! Its greatest depth is 70 feet—its length about ½ of a mile; and 310,250 cubic yards of earth were excavated from it.* The cost was 122,118 dollars, including tools, &c. Next, in order, we have the great embankment over Gadsby's run. The level of the road is here 57 feet above the natural surface of the ground. The embankment contains 210,101 cubic yards, much of which was brought from a long distance—the entire cost (we speak in all such cases without reference to the rails), was 65,584 dollars.

*Solid rock would have been less difficult to remove than a large part of this earth, such was its toughness. The strongest man could not drive a sharp pick two inches into it. Holes were bored, and tens of thousands of loads blasted by gunpowder. For a considerable time the work in this cut was pursued day and night, by two sets of hands.

On arriving at the Patapsco, the road passes some distance along the left bank of the river, a rocky, rough and very romantic country; but the rocks cut down were used, as it were on the spot, to fill up the river-side of the road. The reduction of the rocks was no small job—for, in one place, the road passes through the "Buzzard rock," which is 58 feet high. The scenery in this part partakes liberally of the "sublime and beautiful"—in the spring and summer, it is much like that on the Green Mountains, on a reduced scale. We now soon reach the "Patterson viaduct"—seated in a wild country, to which its structure is tastefully adapted. It is a noble edifice, having two arches of 20 feet each, and two of 55—being 560 feet long and 46 above its foundations. Its exterior is undressed, or rustic. Many of the blocks of granite used in its construction weighed 7 tons—they were transported a considerable distance on temporary rail ways. It contains 9,610 perches of masonry, and cost 35,553 dollars.

These are the chief things, but there are several other deep cuttings, lofty embankments, many culverts, some of them quite large, and a few more small bridges, before we reach the mills—and there we cross the "Oliver viaduct," over a ravine and the Frederick turnpike road, having three arches of 20 feet span, its whole length being 115 feet. This is a solid, substantial and beautiful granite structure, and just beyond was the famous "Tarpeian Rock," placed at the exact spot to afford materials for building this bridge and filling up the abutments!

The following summary may contain all that it is necessary to say in this place, as to the part of the road described:

The first division, (including the "city division" of a little more than a mile) is 7 miles long. The road commences at an elevation of 66 feet above the mid-tide of the Patapsco, at Baltimore. The second division is 6 miles.

The cost of the graduation of the first division was $62,780 per mile—of the second division only 12,446 dollars. The first division is as nearly a level as a drainage of the water from the deep cuts would allow—the second rises 96 feet; so that, at Ellicott's mills, the rails are 162 feet above mid-tide.

In the first division (or 7 miles) 709,376 cubic yards were excavated, and 621,754 cubic yards of embankment made—together 1,331,130 cubic yards, and costing 310,568 dollars, inclusive of tools and implements.

There are 47,300 perches of masonry on the 13 miles, which cost 225,313 dollars. That on the first 7 miles cost $5 52 per perch, that on the last 6 miles, only $3 78. This may serve, in part, to shew the greater difficulties near the city, with the greater cost of materials, &c. A remark which, as to the first thirteen miles of the road, compared with certain other divisions now nearly completed, will strike our readers with much force in the sequel.

The whole cost of the graduation and masonry from Baltimore to Ellicott's mills, 13 miles, 22 poles, was $607,762—or, per mile, 46,496.

The second division, extending from Ellicott's mills on the south side of the Patapsco, 11 miles 219 poles, has cost for graduation only 88,253 dollars, or 7,551 per mile. Five bridges were necessary for this division—the whole quantity of masonry 9,857 perches, costing 28,880 dollars, at $2 93 per perch, or 2,471 dollars per mile. The whole cost of graduation and masonry is 10,022 dollars per mile.

The third division, extending 17 miles, 107 poles, is also nearly finished. The cost of its graduation is 5,756 dollars a mile. The whole quantity of masonry in this division will be 10,276 perches, at 2 09 per perch, 21,578 dollars; four bridges are required, and several culverts. The graduation and masonry will cost only 7,001 dollars per mile.

The whole cost of graduation and masonry on the 42 miles and 30 poles of the road nearly finished, or ready for the rails, is $846,280, or an average cost of 20,104 a mile. The graduation of the first four miles of the road cost more than the whole of the 2nd and 3rd divisions, 28 miles—and the graduation of the first six miles of the road more than the remaining thirty-six miles! This shews the peculiar difficulties that had to be overcome near Baltimore; and it is calculated, that the first thirteen miles, for graduation and masonry, will cost more than the next 53 miles. The cost from Ellicott's mills to the "Point of Rocks" will not exceed 8,500 dollars a mile; and this, we are assured will fully equal the average cost of graduation and masonry to the Ohio, unless at two or three particular places. The Alleghany sections will be crossed at no higher expense than the ordinary rate—because inclined planes will be used wherever needed; but the cost of the power to ascend them, will, of course, be somewhat increased.

The facts and figures stated above are chiefly derived from the report of Casper W. Weaver, esq. the superintendent, to the president and directors of the company.

By the report of the assistant engineer, Mr. James P. Stabler, to the chief engineer, Jonathan Knight, esq. the cost of a single track of rails, laid upon long blocks of granite, (now used instead of wood), has been 5,115 dollars per mile—but, for reasons assigned, he says the future cost will not exceed 10,000, for a double track, the mile. We then see that the fair average cost of making the rail road, all ordinary difficulties being encountered, will not exceed 18,000 dollars a mile, for a double track of rails.

Mr. Knight has reported a partial survey and estimate concerning the famous "Point of Rocks," which pass is a "bone of contention" between the rail road and canal company.

The "Point of Rocks" is that part of the Cotoctin mountain by or through which the Potomac has forced a passage. Its perpendicular height over the bed of the river, or the line of the rail road, is not stated. The following estimates, (and having great confidence in Mr. Knight's accuracy and experience, they must be accepted as a close approximation to truth), will prove highly interesting to those who wish to ascertain the relative cost of rail roads and canals, in equally difficult places.

"Lower Point of Rocks.

Canal, independent line, length 3,023 feet	=	$45,766 30
Rail road, independent line, length 3,427	=	12,470 40
Amount of both		58,236 70
Canal, conjoint line, independently constructed	=	65,459 30
Rail road, conjoint line, independently constructed	=	20,875 00
Amount of both		86,334 30
From which deduct the amount of both on the independent lines, equal to		58,236 70
And the increased cost of both on the conjoint locations, if constructed independently, will be		28,097 60
Canal, conjoint line, constructed conjointly, and using the redundant materials from the rail road		46,885 95
Rail road, conjoint line, and furnishing the redundant materials to the canal		20,875 72
Amount of estimate of proper cost of both conjointly, equal to		67,761 67
From which deduct the amount of both on the independent lines, equal to		58,236 70
And the estimate of the real increase of cost of both works, on conjoint location and conjoint construction, is		9,524 97

This sum, being assessed or added, either in equal parts, or in such other proportion as the two companies may agree upon, to the estimated cost of the independent, or first lines, (to wit: canal $45,766 30, rail road $12,470 40), will show the estimates of the cost of the canal and rail road respectively, at the Lower Point of Rocks; both together amounting to $67,761 67."

There is a like calculation as to the "Upper Point of Rocks," shewing that the canal "independent line" will be 2,133 feet long and cost 23,123 dollars; and the rail road "independent line" 3,107 feet and cost 9,745 dollars. It is hardly worth while to give the whole table. The result is, that the cost of the conjoint line, conjointly constructed, will be $37,908.

There is also a similar calculation of "Miller's Narrows," and "Harper's Ferry Narrows." The canal "independent line" of the former will be 3,052 feet long and cost $30,028, the same line of rail road, 3,500 feet long and 16,878 dollars—the conjoint line of both, conjointly constructed, 45,472 dollars. At "the Harper's Ferry Narrows," the canal "independent line" will be 1,126 feet long, and cost 28,102 dollars; the same line of the rail road 1,100 feet, and 5,556 dollars: the conjoint lines conjointly constructed, 33,154.

[It may be proper to add, that all these results were the joint efforts and calculations of Mr. Knight and of judge Roberts—the latter on behalf of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company.]

From these estimates it manifestly appears, that the rail road may pass these difficult points for a great deal less than the canal. Thus—

	INDEPENDENT LINE.
	Canal.	Rail road.
Lower Point of Rocks	45,766	12,470
Upper ditto	23,123	9,745
Miller's Narrows	30,028	16,878
Harper's Ferry Narrows	28,102	5,556
	127,019	44,649

But these passes being made by conjoint lines, conjointly constructed, will cost considerably less, than the two lines, made and constructed independently. The statements made are sufficient for a comparison of costs, which it is our present purpose to shew. We understand that the cost of the locks on other masonry required for the canal through these passes, is not included in the estimates. There is a fall of about 40 feet in them.

We may here observe, that the idea generally entertained of passing through bodies of rock, are very erroneous. Rocks yield readily to the force of gunpowder, and their removal is far less difficult than deep cuttings, or lofty embankments, of earth. The "Buzzard Rock" 58 feet high, and the "Tarpeian Rock" of much greater height and extent, were cast down and smoothed with much less expense than it cost to remove an equal number of cubic yards of earth from the deep cut. The "Tarpeian Rock" was about 69 feet high, and otherwise of huge dimensions. The road has passed directly through it; but so happily was it located and fitted for the purpose, that the whole expense of cutting through it, and of building the "Oliver viaduct" adjacent to it, which is 115 feet long, that the cost of both was less than 23,000 dollars, exclusive of the value of a great quantity of stone obtained for sills of the rails, and other purposes.

We do not see that any thing further is necessary as to the cost of rail ways. The fair average is about 18,500 dollars a mile, for graduation, masonry, and two tracks of ways, fitted in the best manner, and firmly placed on long continuous blocks of stone!

The great expenses incurred near Baltimore had a bad effect on the general popularity of rail roads—but there were many special reasons for this, besides the natural difficulties of the route. The want of knowledge, to be acquired only by experience, must have considerably increased the cost of the first seven miles—for so it must be in all new and great enterprizes of this kind, and so it was on the Liverpool and Manchester rail way, although there was so much practical knowledge of such works in England.. The viaduct over Gwinn's Falls might have been built for about half the money it cost;—but the people wished to have a "lion" near the city, and they are gratified with an edifice that will stand as a "monument of the arts." There was also much money expended because of the desire of the city authorities, and the people, as to a particular location and elevation of the road, within the bounds of the city. All these added together, would make a large reduction from the cost of the first seven miles of the road—but few persons have been able either to make such allowances, or to esteem the peculiar difficulties that we had to contend with. And who shall calculate the value of the experience gained by the president and directors, and the highly responsible and valuable officers and agents, acting under their orders, in the various departments of this noble work? We have paid for this experience, but no just complaint can be made about the dearness of its cost.

Power on rail roads now comes into consideration—and it seems that we may climb lofty hills very easily, without the use of extra power, though stationary engines, or extra horses, may be necessary to pass the peaks of the mountains.

It is abundantly proved on the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, that 10 miles an hour may be obtained by horse power,* and that an ascent of 20 feet in a mile may be gained without any material addition to the labor of the horse. A rise of 138 feet in a mile on a rail road is regarded as equal to the exertion required on the best LEVEL turnpike road, the weight moved being equal. The load of a horse on our rail road, parts of which rise 20 feet in the mile, is put down at 35 or 40 passengers, proceeding about 10 miles an hour.

The rise of this road, except in the Alleghany mountains and at Parr's Spring ridge (the latter only two or three miles), need not exceed 25 ar 30 feet in a mile—and no extra power will be required, though the velocity may be a little lessened.

With locomotive engines, commodities and passengers will be transported at the same rate—15 miles an hour being at present thought the most expedient rate, all things considered. A locomotive drawing 30 tons on a level rail way, 15 miles an hour, will draw 7½ tons, at the same speed, up an ascent of 55 feet in the mile.

We have seen that 200 barrels of flour, which, with the cars and passengers, weighed 30 tons, have been drawn from Ellicott's mills to Baltimore, 13 miles, in 1*h.* 55*m.* or very nearly seven miles an hour, by one horse, relieved at the middle distance—neither horse being "distressed." The first horse made his 6½ miles in 46 minutes, having a descent of 96 feet in the whole road; but the second horse required 75 minutes to do the same distance, on that part of the road which is a general level, but has several ridges at the rate of 18 or 20 feet in the mile, to drain off the water; and in the deep cuts, particularly, the latter horse was much impeded by the prevalence of a very strong wind, "dead" against him and his mighty load, in eight wagons! A gentleman, who is rather under than over the ordinary strength of men, unless because of the energy of his mind, moved, back and forth, from a "dead rest" one hundred barrels of flour, and the weight of the wagons, &c. being added, a whole weight equal to that of one hundred and fifty barrels of flour, in the presence of many persons—on a level part of our rail road.

It is the opinion of two gentlemen who ought to know the fact as well, if not better, than any other individuals in Baltimore, (and they were consulted by us), that the passenger-barges which ply on the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, with their usual load of persons and their baggage, do not weigh much more than 30 tons. But it will require three teams of five horses each to drag one of these barges through the canal, or 13½ miles, at the rate of six miles an hour, and the horses, at the end of their stages, will appear exhausted. It is admitted that they work to a disadvantage—for, be the tow-line ever so long, their power cannot be directly applied; but this disadvantage cannot be remedied on canals. Here we see that, if regard be had to weight and time, two horses will travel thirteen miles on a rail road, in considerably less time than fifteen horses will proceed the same distance on a canal—and yet another relay of horses would hardly bring up the time lost; the resistance of the water rapidly increasing as velocity is gained. But if the load were reduced to 10 or 12 tons, with which any "smart" horse will travel seven miles an hour, the traces being slackened one-half the way—or, with quite as much ease as he would proceed in a light gig on the best level turnpike road—what force would give such high speed on a canal?

At the ordinary rate of the travel of heavy wagons from Baltimore to the Ohio, it may be assumed that one horse, averaging the power of those commonly used in these wagons, is equal to the draft of from 60 to 80 tons, even where the road shall rise 20 feet in a mile. It has been stated in one of the reports of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company, that the power of a horse was equal to the traction of 30 tons, 2½ miles an hour; the same horse could accomplish much more on a rail road, as we shall soon see.

In exemplification of the increased power necessary to gain velocity in transportations by water, we offer the following: In 1828, the writer of this made the whole passage from New York to Providence, in the Washington steam boat, by the power of one of her engines operating only on one wheel, at the rate of eight miles an hour, the full speed of the boat, working two wheels, being only ten, as the commander informed us; and it was suggested, that if the working-wheel were reduced one-half its power, the boat would still make six miles an hour, which, we think, is very probable. That is, one-fourth of the power required to gain 10 miles, is equal to a gain of six miles, because of the resistance of the fluid through which a steam boat must pass. The exploits of the locomotive engines on the Liverpool and Manchester rail way are well known—the 31 miles are travelled without much seeming effort in 1*h.* 15*m.* and the trip, "out and home," 62 miles, was once done in 61 or 62 minutes—or at the rate of a mile in a minute! It appears that the motion at the rate of 24 miles an hour is not attended with any inconvenience, except in looking at stationary objects—that persons read and converse perfectly at their ease. When two engines, travelling at this rate, meet—the effect is described as astonishing; it is like a rushing together of the "wings of the wind," if the wind has wings!

There is one fact exactly to the point. On the Surry rail way, in England, 51 tons, 6 cwt. 2 qr. contained in twelve wagons, were drawn six miles, by an ordinary horse, (taken indiscriminately from a number of working horses) in 1*h.* 41*m.* or at pretty nearly 4 miles an hour—and the horse was stopped several times to shew his power of moving this mighty mass from a "dead rest." The road had several winding parts, but was level. The horse did not appear at all distressed. Would three horses have drawn this load on a canal, at the same speed? We think not.

Again, as to the economy of rail roads—floods, droughts or frosts have but little influence over them. The uncommonly heavy snow storm that we had last winter, interrupted the travel on our road only one day; and, though the winter was uncommonly severe in England, and certain of the mail stages were literally "dug out of the snow," (some of the drivers or guards, perishing before relief came), the carriages on the Liverpool and Manchester road performed their journies as usual. And further, a rise of 24 feet in a mile is as no obstuction to business on a rail road, but this will require three locks on a canal—to pass through the locks, only, requiring as much time as will be expended by travelling nearly 4 miles on a rail road, with a locomotive, at the moderate speed of 15 miles an hour. But the people will not long be contented with that slow motion.

We shall now make a few remarks as to the estimates and cost of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal. From Rock Creek, (which divides Washington from Georgetown), to the Point of Rocks is 47.68 miles, and the real and estimated cost is at an average of 32,474 dollars per mile. About 21 miles of the canal is completed, and the expenditures up to the 1st Jan. 1831, as reported to the legislature of Maryland, amounted to $1,546,214.

The cost of the canal proper, without regard to salaries or incidental expenses, from Rock Creek to the "Point of Rocks," 47.68 miles, is estimated at $1,548,373.* The following shews some of the work "done" and estimated "to be done."

Excavation done	1,889,080	to be done	833,486 cubic yards
Embankment, done	879,815	to be done	584,715 cubic yards
Puddling done	31,529	to be done	40,959 cubic yards
Walling done	159,964	to be done	70,213 perches.

Though in the report to the legislature of Maryland above referred to, the whole disbursement amounts to 1,546,214 dollars up to the 1st of January 1831, the table from which these items are drawn shews that only 970,284 dollars had been paid on account of the canal, (proper), up to the 1st June 1830. And, from a careful examination of the reports before us, we cannot ascertain the real cost of that part of the canal which is completed up to Seneca creek, the distance of which we have not discovered in either of the reports before us, but otherwise understand it to be about 21 miles. Much of that sort of precise information which abound in the reports of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, is wanting in the reports of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company, and we cannot give the particulars that we wished and expected to ascertain, when we took up these papers. The brevity and imperfection of our account of this work, must be excused in the facts just stated.

*A small locomotive engine playing on this road, makes 15 miles.

*Annual report of the stockholders 7th June, 1830.

Whatever spirit prevails elsewhere, the people of Baltimore do not feel that the Chesapeake and Ohio canal is a "rival" to their rail road—except so far as the two works come into controversy at the "Point of Rocks," &c.—which controversy they are willing to adjust on equitable principles, and make these difficult passes by conjoint operations. A competition between the two works, when both are completed to any given point on the Potomac, is not thought of by any of us. Hence there can be no sort of hostility to the canal, except on the account stated. We, certainly, feel no enmity to this canal. We have none even towards the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, which is, really, taking off much of what seemed to be as the natural trade of Baltimore; for the farmers, mechanics and manufacturers should have access to the best and highest market for their products. This is the broad national ground on which we have always stood, and in all things—the public good, as extended to a majority of the citizens, being the supreme object that we have steadily aimed at, since the first publication of the "Register." It is a rule to which no exception can be found.

We shall now present a more immediate view of the comparative cost of the rail road and canal above mentioned—

The whole cost of the rail road, from Baltimore to the "Summit ridge," 42 miles, 30 poles, will be as follows, for graduation and masonry:

City and first division	$607,762	per mile	46,496
Second division	117,133	"	10,022
Third division	121,384	"	7,001
Total	846,279	Av.	20,171

If we add a double track of rails on the whole line, the cost of which, complete, is 10,000 dollars a mile, we have an expenditure of 30,171 dollars per mile. But if we should deduct the extra work in the first seven miles, the cost of the remaining 35 miles will be only about 18,000 dollars a mile—which may be taken as the full ordinary average of the road.

The line of the canal from Rock Creek to the "Point of Rocks," 47.68 miles, will cost, as estimated, $1,548,273, for labor and materials on the canal proper, or at the rate of 32,474 per mile. Special difficulties may have increased this estimated average, but we are not made acquainted with them in the reports of the president and directors of the company.*

For further explanation of the economy of rail roads and canals, the following items are important—

Rail roads, because of accidents and repairs, cannot be calculated as being lost to their purpose more than five days in a year, on an average:* canals, because of floods and droughts and frosts, and the many peculiar accidents to which they are liable, are lost to their purposes, 120 days in the year.† The New York canals, we think, have lost more days annually—and how will it be in the mountain regions, when the Chesapeake and Ohio canal shall reach them?

Say, for the sake of exemplification, that there is a point on the Potomac, one hundred and eighty miles from Baltimore, 600 feet above mid-tide—this whole elevation may have gained in any 24 miles (or less than one-seventh of the distance) of the road, rising 25 feet in the mile, which will not at all interfere, or, at least, interfere so little as to be unimportant, against the speed, or power, or travel on the road: but a canal must have seventy-five locks to ascend or descend this height; and, admitting an abundant supply of water always at command (which is admitting a great deal), the passage through these locks will consume six hours—equal to the travel of ninety miles on the rail road with a locomotive, at 15 miles an hour, or 60 miles with common horse power.

Those who know the whole rise and fall between the waters of the Chesapeake and those of the Ohio, may apply this principle to the facts, and calculate the result for themselves.

Again—there is a limit to the use of canals; only one boat, unless of very small dimensions, can pass through the locks at a time, say 12 in an hour, requiring a great quantity of water. Say, that the lock is 90 feet long, and the boat passed through has 30 tons weight of goods. These are full allowances. The opening and closing of each lock requires the services of two men—the persons in the canal boat, or having charge of the horse to drag it though the canal, being idle. In the 5 m. lost in the lock, at the rate of even six miles an hour, about sixty cars, or brigades of cars, would fully pass over 90 feet of the rail road, and, at 12 tons each, the whole weight would be 720 tons against 30, in the canal. We have fixed 30 tons as the power of draft in a horse, though proceeding only at the rate of 2½ miles an hour,—because it has been adopted by the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company, as a measure of weight and speed—but we have seen that 30 tons were moved 15 miles on the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, very nearly at the rate of seven miles an hour, by one horse, and, at 2½ miles an hour, we have no manner of doubt that one horse will draw from 60 to 80 tons, as before observed. And such is the present confidence in rail roads in England, that three canal companies have petitioned, or were just about to petition parliament, for liberty to fill up their canals and make rail roads in their places!

Franklin told us that "time is money." Passengers will not travel on canals, when they can pass over rail roads, if they have business to attend to, or time has value to them. But further, a package of dry goods weighing 200 lb. worth $500, will be carried, either by the canal or rail road, to the Ohio, for 125 cents. It will require about 15 days on the canal, and, surely, only 3 on the rail road.

Let us see—

Interest on 500$ 15 days, (by canal)	$1 25
Transportation	1 25
	2 50
Interest on $500, 3 days (by rail road)	25
Transportation	1 25
	1 50

*We see it stated in a newspaper, that one mile of the canal, including the cost of the basin at Georgetown, will cost nearly 200,000 dollars—that one mile at the Great Falls cost about 100,000—and that it will cost at least eight millions to reach Cumberland. The utmost cost of the rail road thither will not exceed 5,000,000 dollars. Those concerned are now sufficiently experienced to make pretty certain calculations.

A writer who seems acquainted with the subject, asserts that it will cost $3,600,000 to finish the canal to Harper's Ferry, on the Potomac. The rail road from Baltimore to the same point will cost less than $2,400,000—all expense included.

*We have allowed five days, without any special reason for it. Travelling on the part of our rail road that is finished, has only been interrupted one day, in two years, on any account. But some accidents may happen to bridges, culverts, &c. and, alter a while, some repairs of the rails will be needed.

†The repairs on the Erie and Champlain canals amounted to nearly 1,100,000 dollars in 5 years—say 220,000 dollars a year, or an annual average of about 500 dollars per mile. The cost of superintendence and labor at the locks is also a heavy item, requiring, perhaps, ten times as many persons as would be needed for a rail road of the like extent.

So there will be a saving of one dollar in interest, besides this far greater advantage—that goods, proceeding by the rail road, will be at the market for them, twelve days sooner than if sent by the canal. Merchants and dealers are fully aware of the importance of this.

Here we seem to have arrived at a good stopping place—though our materials for further use remain abundant; and the great length of this article will excuse us from proceeding, however important the facts stated may be. We hope that we have now answered the queries of the editors of the "Richmond Enquirer."

We shall only add, for the present, that the rail road to Ellicott's mills is already much used for the transportation of coal, iron, cotton, and other heavy articles, to the mills, furnaces and factories, and for the products of these mills and factories, &c. to Baltimore—also for passengers proceeding to or from the "Great West," from which heavy wagons now sometimes unlade at Ellicott's, instead of proceeding to Baltimore, their loads being brought to the city on the rail road. The road, and its branch to the city of Frederick, will be in full operation in from 3 to 4 months—and, if the season is good, so far is the work on the line advanced, it is expected that we shall reach the "Point of Rocks" by the 31st Dec. of the present year—which with the lateral road to Frederick, will in all be seventy miles.

There is—or we think that there is, among our thousands of papers and scraps, a particular account of the former cost and amount of transportations by canal between Liverpool and Manchester, with the former and late price of the canal stock, but we cannot lay our hands upon it. It may be sufficient, however, with reference to the comparative cost, or comparative profit of rail ways and canals placed side by side, or for the purpose of accomplishing the same objects, to observe—that the canal stock has much fallen from its former value,* whereas the rail road stock is at cent. per cent. advance—£100 of the investment being worth £200. And all this notwithstanding the enormous sum of money which the road, on account of the extraordinary and truly Herculean difficulties that attended the making of it, has cost—which was much increased because it is intended for four tracks of rails. These facts require no commentary. Their whole explanation is in themselves. It shews what we have said, that cost is of no consideration, in itself—that money always presses itself into profitable investments. Here is a fair and full competition—a rail road against a canal, each equally well fitted to accomplish whatever either mode of transportation can do, for the public convenience or proprietors' profit. We will go to this extent—and venture to say, that transportations of all commodities, easily handled, will soon cost less on a rail road than on a canal. We see that the Majestic steam engine has moved 142 tons, the whole distance between Liverpool and Manchester, 31 miles, at the small cost of five dollars for superintendence, fuel and oil. Is it possible to move so great a weight, even at 2½, instead of 24 miles an hour, the same distance, for so small a cost?

On the subjects last stated, we may add some remarks on a future occasion, and bring out the facts so that he "who runs may read."

—

We are, perhaps, among the first who pronounced an opinion, that transportations on rail roads would probably cost less than on canals—time being altogether disregarded. And since the preceding article was in type, the following exceedingly important facts are presented to us through a late Liverpool paper.

"We have frequently had to detail performances on the Liverpool and Manchester railway, which have excited feelings of astonishment, and some of them, perhaps, a little incredulity, in the minds of our readers. We have now, however, to record a feat which far outdoes all former out-doings, and proves that the full powers of locomotive engines on railways have been, as yet, very little understood. On Friday morning Mr. Stephenson's engine Sampson started from Liverpool with 30 wagons, carrying the following load:

	Tons.	Cwt.
23 wagon loads of oats	82	10
7 wagons loads of merchandise	24	15
Total nett weight	107	5
Tares of the 30 wagons	42	15
Fifteen persons (chiefly directors and their friends)	1	0

Making a gross weight of one hundred and fifty-one tons, (besides the weight of the tender, with its coke, water, &c.) With this enormous load the Sampson moved off, as we have already stated, at ten minutes past eight, and proceeded to the foot of the Huyton inclined plane at the rate of about twenty miles an hour. It was assisted up the inclined plane by three other engines (the Mars, the Mercury, and the Arrow), and arrived at the top in 38 minutes after leaving the station. As the assisting engines pushed behind the load, whilst the Sampson tugged in front it was easy (by observing where the connecting chains were tight, and where slack) to ascertain what portion of the work was done by each; and it was found that the Sampson generally drew sixteen wagons (the gross weight of which would be about 80 tons.) On arriving at the top of the inclined plane, the Sampson stopped five minutes to take in water, and then proceeded to Parkside, where it arrived at 27 minutes past nine; stopped there eight minutes to water, and arrived in Manchester at sixteen minutes before eleven. The whole time of the journey was consequently two hours and thirty-four minutes; and deducting the thirteen minutes employed in taking in water, the nett time of travelling was two hours and twenty-one minutes. From the performance of the Sampson on the inclined plane, no doubt is entertained that it would draw 200 tons on a perfectly level railway. The quantity of coke consumed by the Sampson in this extraordinary journey was 1,376 lbs (12 cwt. 1 qr. 4 lbs.) being not quite one-third of a pound per ton per mile. Adding to this the coke consumed by the three engines which assisted up the inclined plane, the whole expense of fuel would not amount to twenty shillings."

☞ Now here was 108 tons of goods and passengers, carried 31 miles, in 2*h*. 21*m*. at a whole expense for fuel, or the moving power, of only 20*s*.—44¼ cents; and of a sum surely not exceeding ten dollars, for fuel, superintendence, oil, &c. &c. The lading was equal to one thousand and eighty barrels of flour; so the actual cost of transporting one barrel of flour 31 miles, would be less than one cent! WHAT NEXT? WHAT NEXT?

—

Since the above article was prepared, an esteemed friend in whose judgment, means of information, and candor, we have the most implicit confidence, has handed us the subjoined calculation. The result, as he very justly observes, is, indeed, wonderful; and highly interesting to the country.

Coal may be transported from the mines near Cumberland to Baltimore at an expense of only one cent per bushel!!!

The calculation, by which this assertion is proved, is founded on experiments actually made on the Liverpool and Manchester rail road, and those which we have ourselves witnessed on the Baltimore and Ohio rail road.—

A locomotive steam engine will in one day draw from Cumberland, one hundred tons of coal, measuring 3,200 bushels. The road being descending nearly all the way, much more might be accomplished, but our object is to place the calculation beyond question.

The expense may be estimated as follows:

*On the 16th October 1827, the Mersey and Irwell canal—(between Liverpool and Manchester), though dividing £35 per annum, on a share of £100 original cost—was worth £825; but on the 15th Feb. last, though dividing £40 a share, the value of the same stock was only £600. This shews that, though the business between the places had increased the dividend £5, the value of a share had declined £225, because of the yet only partial preparations of the rail road company to transport heavy goods.

Fuel for the engine	5 00
Note—A ten horse engine in Baltimore costs for fuel two and a half dollars per day, and consists of one cord of pine wood—coke or anthracite would not cost more—
Engineer	1 50
Two assistants for engineer, and cars at $1 each	2 00
Oil for cars, engines, &c.	1 50
		10 00
Add for cars, which it is supposed will return empty		10 00
Wear and tear on engines and cars, expense of discharging the coal, and for passing the inclined plane		12 00
Cost of transporting 3,200 bushels of coal from Cumberland to Baltimore, being one cent per bushel!		$32 00

The coal at the mines is valued at one cent per bushel, and as the cars may pass into the mines, this charge would include the expense of placing it in the cars—we have therefore the wonderful result, that the rail road company may deliver coal in Baltimore at two cents per bushel!! The bituminous coal, consumed on the seaboard, is chiefly supplied from Richmond, where the price is 20 cents a bushel for the best, and 16 cents for the more inferior qualities. Were the price reduced, the consumption would greatly increase. Immense quantities might be sold at 12½ cents per bushel, and a large increase of our tonnage would be the consequence.

Some idea of the importance of this article, may be gathered from the following, from an English paper:

"The quantity of coal annually consumed in England and Scotland is estimated at 14,880,000 tons. The consumption of Ireland is not known. London alone consumes annually, an average of 1,800,000; Liverpool, 1,000,000; and Manchester about 600,000 tons. The number of vessels engaged in the coal trade from London to the north of England alone, are estimated at 14,000 tons."

FOREIGN NEWS.

An arrival at New York brings highly important intelligence from Europe—the latest dates are from London to the 20th of March.

POLAND.

The Russians had reached the Vistula, and after some hard fighting succeeded in throwing troops across that river. The Russian and Polish armies had been successively engaged in a series of bloody battles between the 17th and 25th of February. The Poles fought with great courage and desperation. The contending armies were seen from Warsaw by aid of telescopes. The Poles were at first successful, but were defeated in the main battle fought on the 24th and 25th, before Praga. Hostilities were renewed on the 26th, on which day and the 27th, there was much hard fighting, with considerable loss on both sides. The Poles behaved with their usual bravery, but were again compelled to give way. Determined, however, to make their retreat in as good order as possible, they set fire to Praga, in order to interrupt for a time the advance of the Russians. Praga was thus destroyed. Subsequently to these events, it is difficult to ascertain the real condition of affairs, though it is announced by the correspondent of the London Morning Chronicle, in a letter of the date of March the 8th, that the municipal authorities of Warsaw, being no longer protected by their brave army, and being unable to prevent the entry of the Russians, held a meeting at which it was resolved to surrender at discretion, and accordingly waited on the Russian commander and signified their submission. Other accounts state that Warsaw had not fallen, and that general Deibitsch, the Russian commander in chief, had been compelled to alter his plans; that he would not again attack Warsaw, but surround it and reduce it by famine. The Polish account admits a loss of 9,000 men put hors du combat, and that the wounded in the hospitals amount to 3,600. The most authentic accounts in their preceding battles at Dobre, Liff, and Milosnow, state the Polish loss at 600 killed, 1,400 wounded, 250 missing, and one six pounder; that of the Russians, in the same affairs are stated to be 800 killed, 1,700 wounded and 300 missing. The temporary advantages gained by the Poles over the Cossacks, on the left bank of the Vistula, did not deter the forward march of the Russian army. The onward march of general Deibitsch is accounted for on the ground that the troops in the vicinity of the capital, did not present the same spirit of resistance as those of the intervening territory. Independent of the large magazines which fell into the hands of the Russians, they derive great supplies of provisions and forage from the peasantry of the country through which they pass, who keep up an active traffic with the invaders. The successes of the gallant Poles, in their opening engagements, caused great rejoicing at Warsaw, but unfortunately for their liberty and the cause of freedom, their subsequent defeats had cast a gloom over the face of the country. The intelligent correspondent, however, of the London Morning Chronicle thinks that the temporary triumphs of the Russians will not avail, and that the Poles will yet be free. In a battle fought near Grusho, which commenced on the morning of the 10th March and lasted throughout the day, the Poles maintained their ground, and kept the field. In the two armies, 150 pieces of cannon were in action. The Russians are supposed to have lost 10,000 men. Two Russian regiments charged with bayonets, and it is said that the conflict was so terrible and bloody that scarcely 20 men of the two regiments, escaped. At the close of the day the Russians retired to the woods, but renewed the attack on the succeeding day, and after fighting the whole of that day retired at night, again to the woods. General Dwernicki commanded the Poles, and general Geisman the Russians. The latter general very narrowly escaped being taken prisoner. The Poles killed 400 of the Russians, including one lieutenant colonel of artillery and one major, took 2,300 prisoners, including 2 captains, 1 lieutenant, 2 ensigns, many horses, a large supply of ammunition, and 11 pieces of cannon; five of the latter were immediately turned against the invaders.

The loss of the Poles was one assistant surgeon, and 15 men killed and wounded, among whom were major Rosian. The newly raised regiments of young Poles behaved with the firmness of veterans. On the right bank of the Vistula, on the 21st and 22d of February, the outposts of the two armies came to blows. The Russians sent in a white flag, and a parley ensued, which led to a temporary armistice for the purpose of burying the dead. Several letters contradict the report of the fall of Warsaw. Accounts published in the German papers, compute the loss of the Russians at 20,000 men, and that of the Poles at 11,000 killed and wounded. The Russians lost from 5,000 to 6,000 horses by disease and want of provender. Consequently a great part of their artillery were deprived of their means of transportation, and in all probability, in many instances must fall into the hands of the Poles.

A letter dated at Warsaw March 6th states the number of the Polish army, who had been contending with the Russian army, before that city for ten days, to be but 40,000 strong and 60 pieces of artillery. The Russian army consisted of 120,000 men and 200 pieces of cannon. The weather was intensely cold; but nothing could exceed the attentions of the Polish ladies to the wounded. Stores were abundantly provided for them, whereas, on the contrary, the Russians endured every privation which cold and hunger could inflict. The want of provisions had engendered sickness, which was at the above date raging in their ranks. The imperial guard which occupied Warsaw since 1815, under the orders of the Czarowitch has been almost entirely destroyed. Prince Michael Radviwill had resigned the command of the army, and gen. Skryzyneeki, had been appointed generalissimo, and had given much satisfaction. He served with Poniatowski, and it was in the hollow square of his batallion that Napoleon took shelter at Arcisisur Aube, when the regiments of the young guard gave way.

General Deibitsch had offered a reward of 500 ducats for the delivery up to him of any student of the university, and 2,000 ducats ahead for the members of the chamber of deputies. The several divisions of the Russian army which had been engaged were under the command of marshal Deibitsch, generals Pahlen, Rosin, and Geismar, and the division of prince Schachowski had been ordered to reinforce those already before Warsaw. General Chlopicki behaved with great gallantry and was severely wounded.

FRANCE.

Another change in the French ministry has taken place, the former one having retired, it is said, in consequence of a disagreement of opinion with the king, on the question of the intervention of Austria in Italy, in which his intentions were more pacific than those of his advisers.

Paris, March 14.

The official part of the Moniteur contains six royal ordinances, appointing the new ministers:

1. M. Casimir Perrier, secretary of state for the interior, and president of the council of ministers.

2. Baron Louis, to be minister of finance, in the room of M. Lafitte, whose resignation is accepted.

3. M. Barthe, to be keeper of the seals, minister of justice, and president of the council of state.

4. Count de Montalivet, to be minister of public instruction and ecclesiastical affairs, in the room of M. Barthe.

5. Count d'Argout, to be minister of commeree and public works.

6. Vice admiral de Rigny, to be minister of marine, in the room of count d'Argout.

All the ordinances are dated Paris, March 14, and were published in an extraordinary supplement to the Moniteur, at 8 o'clock the same evening. The first is countersigned by M. Sebastiani, the minister for foreign affairs; the others by M. Casimir Perrier.

There was a mob in Paris on the 9th of March, which attacked the house of the Russian ambassador, amid cries of "down with the Russians," and "the Poles forever," broke his windows, and then bent their way towards the chamber of deputies, the members of which they assailed with insulting and seditious denunciations. The national guards acted with firmness in suppressing the riot.

A general war in Europe appears inevitable.

BELGIUM.

The government in this country is organized under a regent who will administer its affairs until a king shall be chosen and installed.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The ministerial plan of reform was introduced into parliament on the 10th March, by lord John Russell. It is proposed, that every borough, with a population under 2,000 inhabitants, according to the census of 1821, shall lose the right of sending members to parliament. This measure disfranchises 60 boroughs. Forty-seven other boroughs, who formerly sent two members, are now to send but one each. The first 60 boroughs disfranchised, takes away 119 members, which together with the reduction of one member on each of the other 47 boroughs, amounts to 168; but these vacated seats are to be supplied by increased numbers from certain of the large counties and cities and towns—so that the whole number will remain about as heretofore. A bill to amend the Scottish representation has been introduced, which fixes the number of members at 50. No measure had been introduced with respect to the representation of Ireland. Mr. O'Connell, in a letter to his countrymen, mentions several of the contemplated provisions of the intended measure, and calls upon them to support it. The plan of reform, generally, had given satisfaction to all except the old tories. Sir Robert Peel had opposed it in an able speech.

SAXONY.

A letter from Dresden states, that the king and co-regent had delivered to the deputation of the convoked states, the project of a constitution, which his majesty and his royal highness had determined to give the nation.

TURKEY.

There had been a great fire at Smyrna, by which an immense quantity of English goods had been destroyed. The city of Aleppo was visited by a very destructive earthquake on the 21st December. Most of the higher buildings were thrown down. The quarter of the town inhabited by Europeans was uninjured.

LATER NEWS.

Another arrival at New York brings London papers to the 23d of March, being three days later than those previously received.

ENGLAND.

On the 21st of March the project of parliamentary reform was taken up in the house of commons, and on a motion for a second reading of the bill on the 2d of April, a debate ensued. The question was determined in the affirmative, by a very close vote, there being 302 for the reading and 301 against it.

Public feeling seems very high in England on the subject of the above measure, and petitions were pouring in from all quarters in its favor, as well as more or less against it. It was feared that should the bill be finally lost, after the high expectations which have been raised, that it might give rise to some disturbances in the kingdom. The prince of Orange had left London for Amsterdam.

POLAND.

The Russians, at the latest intelligence from Poland, had not made any new attack upon the Polish forces. The weather is said to have proved very unfavorable for military operations, in consequence of the thawing of the snow, and the breaking up of the ice in the Vistula.

Field marshal Diebitsch has set at liberty the Polish prisoners of war, giving to each two ducats and a proclamation to the Poles. The governor general and vice governor of Warsaw had resigned. The central forces of Poland concentrated in the villages westward of Warsaw is estimated at about 36,000 regulars, 15,000 volunteers, 5,000 sythemen, (peasants armed with sythes), and 66 field pieces, independent of 10,000 men and 12 guns under gen. Devernicki, in the waiodship of Sandomir. The loss of the Russians since the opening of the campaign is thus stated; killed, wounded, and missing 8,000 men, and 13 guns of various calibre—sick 7,000.

It is stated that the emperor Nicholas has given directions to general Deibitsch not to destroy Warsaw; and a letter published in the London papers of the 22d March, states that an armistice between the Russians and Poles had been agreed upon. The London Morning Herald of the 23d March says that the news from Poland is cheering. The patriotic army is unbroken in spirit, with supplies of all sorts abundant, strongly posted near Warsaw, having also a large force in Praga. The Russians on the other hand, are represented as harrassed by the bad roads, disappointed by the breaking up of the ice in the Vistula, weakened by diseases from the marshy country through which they marched—and to be sickly, irresolute, and dispirited.

ITALY.

German papers of the 14th March contain dates from Milan to the 8th, which state that the Modenese and Austrian troops, under baron Gippert passed the Po on the 5th. The insurgents, as the revolting Italians were called, it is said had been defeated and retired to Novi, which had been taken by the imperial troops. The chiefs of the revolutionary government are reported to have fled, and a new government being organized in the name of his holiness. The Austrian army entered Ferrara and Capri after a battle of nine hours, which the Italian patriots sustained with great perseverance. A brisk cannonade was heard in the direction of Modena on the 9th March, and it was much feared the Austrians had triumphed.

FRANCE.

Paris was tranquil up to the 20th March. The ministry had, in order to be in a situation to put down commotions, assembled an army of 30,000 men in Paris. M. Casimir Perrier had addressed a circular to the prefects of the departments, enjoining them to suppress all tumultuous meetings, but to respect public opinion when temperately and constitutionally expressed. Three journals had already been seized upon trifling charges of having used intemperate language with reference to government. The posting of affiches had been declared illegal. The opening of the ministerial campaign is marked by great boldness, if not temerity. His majesty was going to reside with his family at the Tuileries. General Sebastiani was about to give in his resignation; in consequence of becoming unpopular on account of his construction of the non-intervention doctrine with regard to Austria. It appeared from letters which were found in the bureau which Constantine left behind him on his precipitate flight from Warsaw, and which were read by general Lafayette, in the course of an animated speech which he delivered in the chamber of deputies on the 18th of March, that the emperor Nicholas had determined on hostilities against France and Belgium, or in the language indulged in by the emperor, in an interview with the envoy of the dictator, of bringing these countries to "their reason." The emperor is said to have used this language. "Your insurrection took place at the very moment when all the forces of the empire were on the march towards your fortress, in order to bring the revolutionists of France and Belgium to reason." Marshal Deibitsch is stated by general Lafayette to have observed to the Polish deputy: "We reckoned on a campaign on the Rhine—we will make it upon the Elbe or the Oder, after having crushed you." General Lafayette called upon general Sebastiani, the minister for foreign affairs, to state whether he had not written to Austria stating that France would never consent to see the Austrian troops enter Italy. General Sebastiani signified that he had. General Lafayette enquired what he should understand by the words "France would never consent." Gen. S. replied that "not to consent, and to make war were very different things." Gen. Lafayette rejoined that the French people understood them to mean "I will prevent you." The chamber resolved itself into a select committee.

Orders had been given at Toulon to fit out all the ships of the line, frigates, sloops, brigs and steam boats for sea without delay. They are to be placed on the war footing and manned from the crews lately sent to Brest, L'Orient and Rochfort. The sloop La Bayonnaise, capt. Tevrin, had sailed with the utmost despatch with a special messenger—destination unknown.

SPAIN.

Despatches had been received from Madrid, at Paris, and rumor said that a popular insurrection had broken out in the capital with so much violence and success that Ferdinand had been obliged, with some troops of his guard, to fly towards Lisbon, and that Calomarde, his favorite, had lost his life; that Cadiz and the Isle of Leon were decidedly in favor of the constitutionalists; and that general Longa, was shut up in the Castle of Valencia, where the people had obliged him to take refuge. Ten thousand men is said in one account to have assembled in the inaccessible mountains of La Ronda, another account fixes their number at from 3 to 4,000. A report was prevalent in London on the 22d March, that an express had arrived which brought intelligence of Cadiz being in possession of the insurgents. This report was thought premature.

HAYTI.

We hear of an extensive rebellion or revolution in this island, and the president, Boyer, was about to take the field at the head of his army. The country is represented as in a much distressed condition, and great poverty.

SOUTH AMERICA.

We still have accounts of the marching of troops and of battles in Columbia, and the poor people are plundered and murdered by successive hordes of armed men, under different chiefs.

The shore provinces and those of the interior of the Rio de la Plata are at war. Assassinations were frequent at Monte Video. Such events are too common to be worth detailing. As one general puts down or kills another general, a third rises to battle with the second general, and a fourth general to contend with the third.

STILL LATER NEWS.

By another arrival at New York, intelligence from Liverpool to the 25th, and London to the evening of the 23d March, has been recived, being a day later than that by the previous arrival.

ENGLAND.

It was reported, that, in consequence of the small majority of the ministers on the motion to refer the "reform bill" to a second reading, the parliament would be dissolved after the transaction of some special business. This report, the London Globe of the 23d March, says, there was some reason for believing to be well grounded. The London Courier of the 22d thought it probable that the opponents of reform would gain a temporary triumph; but its conductors look to a dissolution of the present parliament, and consequent appeal to the people, as certain correctives of the evil.

IRELAND.

A commercial house of note is said to have failed in Dublin, and that the parties had raised all the money they could and absconded.

FRANCE.

The "O. P. Q." correspondent of the London Morning Chronicle, thinks that the people of France will not submit to the non-intervention policy of the government, and speaks in decided terms of reprobation of the domestic policy of the present ministry.

An American lady, a native of the state of New York, who is now in Paris, has, in a very interesting letter published in the New York Commercial, given a very full view of the present political condition of France. Her opinion of the present king, and his ministry is by no means favorable. The government she thinks, having lost its strength, the confidence of the people, and its authority being daily trodden upon, must, before long, in the common course of events fall. While she thinks it not improbable that the next turn in the political wheel, may convert France into a republic, with Lafayette at its head, she considers it quite within the range of possibilities, that he and his whole family may yet need an asylum among us.

BELGIUM.

A portion of the Belgian ministry had resigned at the date of the latest advices, and the friends of the prince of Orange were increasing.

ITALY.

Three columns of Austrian troops had arrived in the interior of the Italian states.

SPAIN.

Tranquillity had been restored. The insurrectionists had been shot without mercy.

POLAND.

A letter from Warsaw of the 10th March states that general Dwerniki, had gained another victory over the Russians near Lubin, and that it was almost certain a revolution had broken out in the Ukraine, Volhynia, Podolia and Lithuania, and that the Russian army had retreated from their position near Praga in confusion.

The official journal of Warsaw, states, that the Russians who entered Putowy, pillaged the houses, set fire to the buildings, violated the women, and made prisoners of the men; and this without any thing to enrage them, the inhabitants having furnished them during their stay with all that they demanded.

BRIEF NOTICES.

[Omitted last week.]

Ohio. The rapid and powerful population of this state would remind us of the days of Cadmus—except that men do not spring up armed to destroy one another. It is stated in the Zanesville Messenger, and it is a very singular fact, that there was but one native born citizen of the state of Ohio, in the last house of representatives. Of seventy-one members, forty-two were from Pennsylvania and Virginia.

But what is there so very remarkable in this? How many natives of Ohio have reached the age requisite for a member of the legislature?

Elopement of a nun. Sister Gertrude, chief instructress in the academy kept by the nuns at Georgetown, D. C. having disguised herself, lately left the institution in open day, and found refuge in the house of the mayor of Washington, gen. Van Ness, whose lady is her first cousin, where she has resisted all entreaties for a return.

Wonderful escape. A lad at Portland, Maine, 13 years old, alarmed in his sleep, rose from his bed and made battle (with a chair) against what he supposed was a person who had broken into the house, for robbery and murder;—but finding, as he thought, defence insufficient, he drove out the sash with the chair, and jumped out of a three story window—and, though he fell on a "picket gate" which was dashed to pieces, he sustained no other damage than some laceration of his arms, and was doing well!

Maine. The legislature of this state adjourned on the 2d inst. sine die, after a session of three months, having passed 126 acts and 96 resolves.

Mr. Sprague, of Maine, who was nominated as the National Republican candidate for governor, has declined being a candidate for that office.

The Pennsylvania legislature adjourned on the 5th inst. after a laborious session of four months, in which an unusual proportion of important business was despatched.

Steam boats. The violent gale felt on the Chesapeake on the 8th and 9th inst. amply proved the safety of steam-boat navigation—for though houses were blown down on the shore, at several places, they were not injured—except that one of them broke her chain cable; after which she forced the gale with the power of her engine, and, though not gaining one mile in seven hours, (though a "fast boat") suffered no other damage. Two or three other steam boats made their trips as usual.

No harm was done to vessels in the harbor of Baltimore, but those at New York suffered much by the gale. The names of thirty-seven are given that were partially damaged, some of them sunk. The houses, fences, &c. suffered, at Philadelphia, as well as New York.

Martin Brown, who commanded a company under gen. Stark, at Brandywine, and fought at Saratoga, and remained in service during the whole of the revolutionary war, lately died at Rochester, N. Y. in the 88th year of his age—an excellent and much beloved old man.

American bull. In Spring street, New York, is the following curious sign: "Washing and Ironing and Going out to Days Work, done in the Back Room"

James Lloyd, late a distinguished senator of the U. States, and a gentleman very highly esteemed by all classes of society, died at New York, on the 5th inst. aged 61 years.

Died, on the 23rd ult. in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, John Hill, aged between 123 and 127 years. He was born in England, enlisted under George 1, being 21 years of age, and served in the British army 21 years, and was wounded in the head at Gibraltar, and in the leg on Illinois river—the latter was a running sore at the time of his death. He remained in America and settled in Lancaster county. At 100 years old he could do a regular day's work.

Lots of bacon. One establishment at Cincinnati has on hand 100,000 pounds of hams and shoulders; another had "barrelled and baconed" eight thousand hogs during the last winter.

Broom corn. The farmers about Northampton, Massachusetts, intend engaging largely in the growth of broom corn this season. $20 per acre for one crop is given for land properly prepared, and about $12 for land which was well manured, and bore a good crop last season.

Unity in action! It is stated in the Barnstable Patriot that the fourteenth child of Mr. Ealathiel Nickerson, was lately married by the same clergyman who had united all the others to their different helpmates, and that the fifteenth will probably soon be settled in a similar manner. All his children are settled around him.

Lafayette forty years ago. In "the travels of John Ledyard," a work now of long standing, is the following account of Lafayette in 1786:—"I took a walk to Paris this morning, and saw the marquis de Lafayette. He is a good man this same marquis. I esteem him, and even love him, and so will all do, except some few, who worship him. I make these trips to Paris often—sometimes to dine with this amiable Frenchman, and sometimes with our minister, who is a brother to me. You know how much I owe the amiable Lafayette; will you do me the honor to present my most grateful thanks to him? If I find in my travels a mountain as much elevated above other mountains as he is above other men, I will name it "Lafayette."

Insolvent debtors. The number of insolvent debtors discharged under the present act up to the end of 1829, amounted to 51,000; debts, four millions sterling; assets, one farthing in the pound; expense of discharge, £25 each prisoner. Only 65 out of every 1,200 'estates' produced any assets at all! The annual salaries of the four commissioners amount to £11,254. This is one of the fit occasions for repeating, that the whole system of arrest for debt serves no other purpose than to maintain pettifogging attorneys, to cherish indolence and inattention in sellers, to keep alive the breed of swindlers, to foster tricks, lying, and extravagance, and to impose a heavy burden on the honest and punctual part of the community. [London paper.

Increase of debt and taxation. George the third reigned 59 years, 33 of which were passed in war, and 25 in peace. "The debt," at his accession, was £120,000,000; at his demise, £820,600,000! George the 3rd found the annual charge of taxation £6,000,000, and left it £60,000,000, including the expenses of collection. [Ibid.

Law case. The following curious case will shortly be brought before the tribunal of Pau:—Two peasants of Marlans having cleft an old oak, found in a hollow part an immense toad and a treasure, consisting of 600 crowns, some double Louis-d'ors, and a great number of quadruples. The good luck of the villagers soon became known to the public. The proprietor of the tree claims the treasure, and has commenced an action to recover it. The coin bears the effigy of Louis XV. and the date of 1770. [Paris paper.

Isaiah Thomas, L. L. D. aged 82 years, the venerable and the good—the father of printers in America, died at Worcester, Massachusetts, on the 4th inst.

Quick sailing. The fine schooner Fan Fan, Alexander, arrived at Baltimore last week, from Havana, after an absence of only twenty-one days. She made the passage out in eight days, lay seven days in the port of Havana, and made the return passage in six days.

Taverns, &c. There are in the city of Baltimore 178 taverns, and 571 shops licensed to retail spirituous liquors, as stated in the returns filed in the mayor's office —total 749.

Hidden treasure. A large quantity of Roman coins, amounting to about 2,000—15 of gold and about 1,000 of silver, the rest copper, have lately been discovered in the arrondisement of Vienna, department of Isere, France, in consequence of the tearing up of a willow tree by the roots, in a hurricane. There were also several medals, gold and silver cups, some gold rings and a copper sword, mounted with silver. It is supposed that this treasure was deposited in the place where it has just been discovered after the battle between Septimus Severus and Albinus, at the hill of Breese, above Trevoix, when the army of Septimus Severus was totally routed, and Albinus killed himself to avoid an ignominious death.

Yankeyism. A boat of seven tons, and two men (being master, mate and crew), lately arrived at Savannah, from Providence, R. I. on her way to St. Augustine. Are such as these of those whom the governor of South Carolina regards as slaves?

"Their march is on the mountain wave."

Indian justice. The Columbus Enquirer, of the 19th March, furnishes the following:—

"Most of our readers have heard of the death of the unfortunate major Brady, formerly a member of the legislature from Randolph county, who was killed by a ball discharged from a rifle at Hitchcte creek, about a month ago. The assassin was soon discovered to be an Indian of the Oswitche tribe, living among the Creeks, by the name of Tom, a perfect outlaw in character even among his own people, and the same desperado who had previously killed Mr. Mayo, and shot at and wounded Mr. Thompson. We are happy to say that he has paid the penalty of his bloody crimes, and fallen by the same fell weapon with which he had done such dreadful execution upon his innocent victims."

He was shot by a party of about thirty Creek Indians, who had been some time in pursuit of him at Boykin's ferry, on the Chattahochie.

Chesapeake and Delaware canal. One hundred and eighty vessels passed through this canal last week, and at the beginning of the present a very large number were waiting their time to enter.

Philadelphia inspections for the quarter ending 31st March—125,851 bbls. and 4,948 half barrels, superfine flour, 6,446 bbls. scraped do. 3,719 condemned do. 267 bbls. middlings, 1,625 do. rye flour, 1,789 barrels and 701 hhds. corn meal, 31 barrels condemned do.

Hydrophobia. Mr. Lewis Drumright, who had been bitten by a dog, on the 29th Dec. last, which proved to be mad on the 31st of the same month—and who then received the best medical advice and assistance, and, it was hoped, was cured—shewed symptoms of the disease on the 24th March, ult. and died a horrible death on the 26th, perfectly in his senses and fully aware of his terrible condition. The sight of water, on the slightest agitation of the air, threw him into most violent spasms.

The Savannah, Ogechee and Altamapa canal, was completed some time ago, and there was a late celebration of a "meeting of the waters," at which Mr. Waine, one of the members of congress from Georgia, gave the following toast—

Andrew Jackson—His victories over the enemies of his country give him an immortal name in its history, and his victories over the enemies of the constitution and the sovereignty of the states, will make our union perpetual.

[This evidently alludes to the veto of the Maysville road bill. Does any one pretend that that bill was rejected on constitutional grounds?

N. Y. City bank. A person named John Ellis, alias William John Murray, has been arrested at Philadelphia, who was probably concerned with Smith in the robbery of the City bank. He is a Scotchman, and made a vigorous attempt to escape the clutches of the officers.

Wheeling. It is believed that more houses will be built during the present than in any former season. The situation of the town is such as to insure its steady advancement.

A dinner was given to governor Metcalfe, of Kentucky, by the citizens of Maysville, as a mark of their approbation of his able and consistent course as a friend of the American System.

THE CABINET DISSOLVED.

From the National Intelligencer.

Washington city, 7th April, 1831.

Dear sir:—Four days ago I communicated to you my desire to relinquish the duties of the war department, and I now take occasion to repeat the request which was then made. I am not disposed, by any sudden withdrawal, to interrupt, or retard, the business of the office. A short time will be sufficient, I hope, to enable you to direct your attention towards some person, in whose capacity, industry, and friendly disposition, you may have confidence, to assist in the complicated and laborious duties of your administration. Two or three weeks, perhaps less, may be sufficient for the purpose.

In coming to this conclusion, candor demands of me to say, that it arises from no dissatisfaction entertained towards you—from no misunderstanding between us, on any subject; nor from any diminution, on my part, of that friendship and confidence, which has ever been reposed in you.

I entered your cabinet, as is well known to you, contrary to my own wishes; and having nothing to desire, either as it regards myself or friends, have ever since cherished a determination to avail myself of the first favorable moment, after your administration should be in successful operation, to retire. It occurs to me, that the time is now at hand, when I may do so, with propriety, and in proper respect to you. Looking to the present state of things—to the course of your administration, which, being fairly developed, is before the people, for approval or condemnation,—I cannot consider the step I am taking, objectionable, or, that it is one, the tendency of which can be to affect or injure a course of policy by you already advantageously commenced, and which I hope will be carried out to the benefit and advancement of the people.

Tendering my sincere wishes for your prosperity and happiness, and for your successful efforts in the cause of your country. I am, very truly, your friend,

J. H. EATON.

To Andrew Jackson, president of the United States.

Washington city, April 8, 1831.

Dear sir: Your letter of yesterday was received, and I have carefully considered it. When you conversed with me the other day, on the subject of your withdrawing from the cabinet, I expressed to you a sincere desire that you would well consider of it; for, however reluctant I am to be deprived of your services, I cannot consent to retain you contrary to your wishes, and inclination to remain, particularly as I well know that in 1829, when I invited you to become a member of my cabinet, you objected, and expressed a desire to be excused, and only gave up your objections at my pressing solicitation.

An acquaintance with you, of twenty years standing, assured me, that, in your honesty, prudence, capacity, discretion, and judgment, I could safely rely and confide. I have not been disappointed. With the performance of your duties, since you have been with me, I have been fully satisfied, and, go where you will, be your destiny what it may, my best wishes will always attend you.

I will avail myself of the earliest opportunity to obtain some qualified friend to succeed you; and, until then, I must solicit that the acceptance of your resignation be deferred. I am, very sincerely and respectfully, your friend. ANDREW JACKSON.

Major J. H. Eaton, secretary of war.

From the Washington Globe, Wednesday, April 20.

It will appear, by the publication in our columns of to-day, that the secretary of state has tendered his resignation to the president, who has accepted it. The grounds upon which this step was taken are so fully and distinctly stated in the correspondence, that comment on our part is unnecessary.—On the 7th the secretary of war tendered his resignation to the president; and yesterday, the secretary of the treasury and secretary of the navy handed in theirs; all of which have been accepted. From this it is inferred that a new organization of the cabinet is to take place.

Washington, April 11th, 1831.

Dear sir: I feel it to be my duty to retire from the office to which your confidence and partiality called me. The delicacy of this step, under the circumstances in which it is taken, will I trust, be deemed an ample apology for stating more at large, than might otherwise have been necessary, the reasons by which I am influenced.

From the moment of taking my seat in your cabinet, it has been my anxious wish and zealous endeavor to prevent a premature agitation of the question of your successor; and, at all events, to discountenance, and if possible repress the disposition, at an early day manifested, to connect my name with that disturbing topic. Of the sincerity and the constancy of this disposition, no one has had a better opportunity to judge than yourself. It has, however, been unavailing. Circumstances, not of my creation, and altogether beyond my control, have given to this subject a turn, which cannot now be remedied, except by a self-disfranchisement which, even if dictated by my individual wishes, could hardly be reconcileable with propriety or self-respect.

Concerning the injurious effects which the circumstance of a member of the cabinet's occupying the relation towards the country to which I have adverted, is calculated to have upon the conduct of public affairs, there cannot, I think, at this time, be room for two opinions. Diversities of ulterior preference among the friends of an administration are unavoidable; and even if the respective advocates of those thus placed in rivalship be patriotic enough to resist the temptation of creating obstacles to the advancement of him to whose elevation they are opposed, by embarrassing the branch of public service committed to his charge, they are, nevertheless, by their position, exposed to the suspicion of entertaining and encouraging such views: a suspicion which can seldom fail in the end, to aggravate into present alienation and hostility the prospective differences which first gave rise to it. Thus, under the least unfavorable consequences, individual injustice is suffered, and the administration embarrassed and weakened. Whatever may have been the course of things under the peculiar circumstances of the earlier stage of the republic, my experience has fully satisfied me, that at this day, when the field of selection has become so extended, the circumstance referred to, by augmenting the motives and sources of opposition to the measures of the executive, must unavoidably prove the cause of injury to the public service, for a counterpoise to which we may in vain look to the peculiar qualifications of any individual; and even if I should in this be mistaken, still I cannot so far deceive myself as to believe for a moment that I am included in the exceptions.

These obstructions to the successful prosecution of public affairs, when superadded to that opposition which is inseparable from our free institutions and which every administration must expect, present a mass to which the operations of the government should at no time be voluntarily exposed:—the more especially should this be avoided at so eventful a period in the affairs of the world, when our country may particularly need the utmost harmony in her councils.

Such being my impressions, the path of duty is plain: and I not only submit with cheerfulness to whatever personal sacrifices may be involved in the surrender of the station I occupy; but I make it my ambition to set an example which, should it in the progress of the government be deemed, notwithstanding the humility of its origin, worthy of respect and observance, cannot, I think, fail to prove essentially and permanently beneficial.

Allow me, sir, to present one more view of the subject:—You have consented to stand before your constituents for re-election. Of their decision, resting as it does upon the unbought suffrages of a free, numerous, and widely extended people, it becomes no man to speak with certainty. Judging, however, from the past, and making a reasonable allowance for the fair exercise of the intelligence and public spirit of your fellow citizens, I cannot hesitate in adopting the belief that the confidence, as well in your capacity for civil duties, as in your civil virtues, already so spontaneously and strikingly displayed, will be manifested with increased energy, now; that all candid observers must admit their utmost expectations to have been more than realized.

If this promise, so auspicious to the best interests of our common country, be fulfilled, the concluding term of your administration will in the absence of any prominent cause of discord among its supporters, afford a most favorable opportunity for the full accomplishment of those important public objects, in the prosecution of which I have witnessed on your part such steady vigilance and untiring devotion. To the unfavorable influence which my continuance in your cabinet, under existing circumstances, may exercise upon this flattering prospect, I cannot, sir, without a total disregard of the lights of experience, and without shutting my eyes to the obvious tendency of things for the future, be insensible. Having, moreover, from a deep conviction of its importance to the country, been among the most urgent of your advisers to yield yourself to the obvious wishes of the people, and knowing the sacrifice of personal feeling which was involved in your acquiescence, I cannot reconcile it to myself to be in any degree the cause of embarrassment to you during the period which, as it certainly will be of deep interest to your country, is moreover destined to bring to its close, your patriotic, toilsome and eventful public life.

From these considerations, I feel it to be doubtedly my duty to resign a post the retention of which is so calculated to attract assaults upon your administration, to which there might otherwise be no inducement—assaults of which, whatever be their aim, the most important as well as the most injurious effect is, upon those public interests which deserve and should command the support of all good citizens. This duty, I should have discharged at an earlier period, but for considerations, partly of a public, partly of a personal nature, connected with circumstances which were calculated to expose its performance then to misconstruction and misrepresentation.

Having explained the motives which govern me in thus severing, and with seeming abruptness, the official ties by which we have been associated, there remains but one duty for me to perform. It is to make my profound and sincere acknowledgments for that steady support and cheering confidence which, in the discharge of my public duties, I have, under all circumstances, received at your hands, as well as for the personal kindness at all times extended me.

Rest assured, sir, that the success of your administration, and the happiness of your private life will ever constitute objects of the deepest solicitude with your sincere friend and obedient servant,

M. VAN BUREN.

The president.

—

Washington, April 12, 1831.

Dear sir:—Your letter resigning the office of secretary of state was received last evening. I could indeed wish that no circumstance had arisen to interrupt the relations which have, for two years, subsisted between us, and that they might have continued through the period during which it may be my lot to remain charged with the duties which the partiality of my countrymen has imposed upon me. But the reasons you present are so strong, that, with a proper regard for them, I cannot ask you, on my own account, to remain in the cabinet.

I am aware of the difficulties you have had to contend with, and of the benefits which have resulted to the affairs of your country, from your continued zeal in the arduous tasks to which you have been subjected. To say that I deeply regret to lose you is but feebly to express my feelings on the occasion.

When called by my country to the station which I occupy, it was not without a deep sense of its arduos responsibilities, and a strong distrust of myself, that I obeyed the call; but, cheered by the consciousness that no other motive actuated me, than a desire to guard her interests, and to place her upon the firm ground of those great principles which, by the wisest and purest of our patriots, have been deemed essential to her prosperity, I ventured upon the trust assigned me. I did this in the confident hope of finding the support of advisers, able and true; who, laying aside every thing but a desire to give new vigor to the vital principles of our union, would look with a single eye to the best means of effecting this paramount object. In you, this hope has been realized to the utmost. In the most difficult and trying moments of my administration, I have always found you sincere, able and efficient—anxious at all times to afford me every aid. If, however, from circumstances in your judgment sufficient to make it necessary, the official ties subsisting between us must be severed, I can only say that this nececessity is deeply lamented by me. I part with you only because you yourself have requested me to do so, and have sustained that request by reasons strong enough to command my assent. I cannot, however, allow the separation to take place, without expressing the hope, that this retirement from public affairs is but temporary, and that if in any other station, the government should have occasion for services, the value of which has been so sensibly felt by me, your consent will not be wanting.

Of the state of things to which you advert, I cannot but be fully aware. I look upon it with sorrow, and regret it the more, because one of its first effects is to disturb the harmony of my cabinent. It is, however, but an instance of one of the evils to which free governments must ever be liable. The only remedy for these evils, as they arise lies in the intelligence and public spirit of our common constituents. They will correct them—and in this there is abundant consolation. I cannot quit this subject without adding that with the best opportunities for observing and judging, I have seen in you no other desire than to move quietly on in the path of your duties, and to promote the harmonious conduct of public affairs. If on this point you have had to encounter detraction, it is but another proof of the utter insufficiency of innocence and worth to shield from such assults.

Be assured that the interest you express in my happiness is most heartily reciprocated—that my most cordial feelings accompany you, and that I am, very sincerely your friend, ANDREW JACKSON.

P. S. It is understood that you are to continue in office until your successor is appointed.

Martin Van Buren, secretary of state.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 9—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, APRIL 30, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1023

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞To check frauds on the revenue, it has been proposed at Middletown, Con. and approved by a meeting at New York, to hold a convention of woollen manufacturers at the city of New York, on the 17th of May next—and preparatory to which a meeting of such manufacturers has been called to be held at Albany, on the 5th.

☞There is another mass of foreign news, of which we have made a careful abstract, to keep up the history of events. It will be gladly seen that the Poles, instead of being overwhelmed as we feared, were pressing upon their barbarian invaders, who were alarmed by risings of the people in their rear, and suffering excessively from the inclemency of the season. Strength to the arm that strikes in the name of liberty—perish the invaders—let Poland be free!

We incline to the belief that some degree of "reform" will take place in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland—though, perhaps, not immediately. The public expectation is up—and something must be done. Belgium is in a much disordered state—anarchy appears to prevail. France is buckling on her armor, and, we think, will surely come into contact with Austria, in Italy, at some new and bloody Marengo. The emperor wants humbling. The small bands of constitutionalists appear to be put down in Spain. The monster of Portugal is glutting himself with the best blood of the people. The jealousy and fears of the great powers alone suffer this wretch to have dominion. The news from other states has not much interest. We regard a general war as inevitable.

There has been much alarm in the island of Antigua, because of revolutionary movements among the slaves—but they were quieted, after the conflagration of several plantations and the arrest of some of the principal actors in them. The white population was in a state of terror for 48 hours.

PRICE OF STOCKS, FLOUR, &c. On the 31st March, consols, at London, were worth only 76 3-4 7-8. Money was scarce and the market "feverish." United States 3 per cents were 85½; bank shares £26 10*s.* to £27. A rumor that gen. Clausel had accepted the command of the "army of the Alps," to view the operations of Austria, helped to reduce the price of British stocks, and advance that of the American in market.

The last weekly average price of wheat was 71*s.* 8*d.* so that the duty remained at the lowest point; but a fall of price and rise of duty was expected in two or three weeks. The corn market was dull and declining. Flour was worth from 34*s.* to 37*s.* for the best, duty paid. The very latest account says that it had declined from 1*s.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* per barrel, and was dull.

We think it most likely that the usual luck will attend speculations in flour for the British market; but, though ninety-and-nine times suffering loss, some will "go" the hundredth.

The new duty on cotton had not yet taken effect. The demand was brisk—upland 5 3-8 to 6½; Orleans 5¾ to 7 3-8.

It appears rather extraordinary that exchange on England has risen considerably within a few days past—notwithstanding our increased exports to that country and the well-known desire entertained in Europe for investments in the United States. It may be caused by an expected rise in the price of British manufactures—which, indeed, has taken place in many important articles; and will become general, if there shall be an extensive war, whether England speedily embarks in it or not.

THE POLITICAL EXPLOSION. Various, and strange, and wild, are the constructions put upon the late retirement of Messrs. Van Buren and Eaton, and the dismissal of Messrs. Ingham and Branch; and it is also firmly reported that Mr. Berrien, the attorney general, will resign—leaving only Mr. Barry, the post master general, for the new "cabinet,"* being the first incumbent of that office who was considered an official adviser of the president—or "cabinet minister."

To the correspondence between Messrs. Eaton and Van Buren and the president, published in our last, we now add the letters of Messrs. Ingham and Branch, and the replies thereto—which, it will be remarked, are in the same set words to the latter. Common fame had decidedly stated for about or more than two months past, that their official days were numbered; but why Messrs. Van Buren and Eaton retired, is wrapped up in a mystery which the public mind has not yet been able to penetrate.

It might have been expected that the long letter of the secretary of state would have drawn aside the veil—but he has thickened it. The Pythia never delivered her oracles in more ambiguous terms. We have read and re-read it—it "means any thing or nothing." The doctrine of "non committal" was never more happily exemplified. The words used had better been written in the ancient hieroglyphics of Egypt—for then, at least one man, Champollion, could have given their sure interpretation to the people. Mr. Van Buren has long maintained a high reputation for incomprehensibility in his political movements—and here is indisputable evidence of his talent in the obscure. During his late excursion, the editor conversed with at least fifty gentlemen (of both parties), seeking information; and, though several of them stand high in the public estimation and are ripe scholars—one, and one only, of the whole went further than to say, that he fully understood a certain, and small, part of this official paper. But for our part, the whole is hidden from our obtuse intellect—and we must wait a moving of political elements to comprehend an event which must be regarded as an important one.

There is something very remarkable in the dates of Messrs. Eaton and Van Buren's letters compared with those of Messrs. Ingham and Branch—the first being of the 7th and 11th April, and the latter of the 18th to the 20th. Is it possible that the secretaries of the treasury and of the navy could have been kept in ignorance of the resignations of the secretaries of state and of war, the long period of about ten days—all the parties being on the spot? Yet such would seem to have been the case—or such ignorance is affected; and clearly shows that the "cabinet" was ill-tempered and in a state of open quarrel, justifying the previous reports that we had on this subject. And it is extraordinary that Messrs. Ingham and Branch, highly complimented by the president for their "integrity and zeal," have been turned out, because Messrs. Van Buren and Eaton resigned. Direct contradictions might be brought, were the statements authentic and there is a confusion in the whole transaction that confounds the understanding. But we have neither time nor inclination—and it is not within the range of subjects which we have proposed for political discussion, to enter into certain examinations of these proceedings which others may freely indulge in. We regard them as such that we have a right to comprehend, and only complain that they are incomprehensible. The only one of the new cabinet [illegible] except that, I regret much that certain examinations of the new ministers will be more thoroughly understood and more critically appreciated than the last—however strongly the present unprincipled conspiracy of the United States may prove in favor of the principles and industry of the people.

*We quote the word "cabinet," and as a republican protest against the term as now used. It was not so in the days of Washington or Jefferson. It goes to shew a power which the constitution never contemplated, which may relieve the president of that direct and solemn responsibility that belongs to the high office which he holds. Heaven forbid that the time shall arrive, when persons named to office by the president shall relieve the president of his responsibility to the people—and render him, like a king of England, incapable of doing wrong. We do not recollect that the words "my cabinet" were ever before officially used by a president of the United States—and cannot believe that they were; but do know that we have often offered our humble protest against even the ordinary use of the term, as a running into that kingliness that we have always hated. The secretaries are only as the clerks of the president—presumed to have no will or power in themselves, except specially delegated. Their opinion may be required, but the president has no obligation even to ask it.

It is said that Mr. Livingston has exchanged the place of secretary of state, for that of minister to France. Mr. White will decline that of secretary of war, however it may be offered. Of Messrs. M'Lane and Woodbury, for the treasury and navy, we hear nothing but there is a report that Mr. Dickerson, late a member of congress from Pennsylvania, will supersede Mr. Berrien, as attorney general—it being necessary, it seems, that the latter will be invited to resign, a bee should not receive a learning what has happened.

The resignation or dismission of the late "cabinet" has produced an extraordinary sensation in the parts of the country and nobody knows "what to make" of the proceeding though some have affected to understand it. The country was completely surprised.

RHODE ISLAND. Though Messrs. Burges and Pearce were elected to congress by very large majorities, the governor and senate of this state were friendly to the administration, from local causes, or an indisposition to change; but at the late election, returns from all the towns being in except one small one, Lemuel H. Arnold received 5,574 votes, and James Fenner, the "dickerson" candidate 2,824, the governor and the members of the general assembly standing "clear" and 26 "dickson." In Providence, Mr. Arnold had 851 votes—gov. Fenner only 120. The national republican list of senators had about the same majority as the governor.

NEW YORK. The legislature of this state adjourned on the 26th inst. after a session of 113 days, having passed 325 acts, chiefly of a private nature—incorporating several banks, and permitting the establishment of seven new ones.

SOUTH CAROLINA. The seat in congress lately held by Mr. Martin, appointed a judge, is to be supplied by Mr. Felder, the candidate of the union party, who handsomely beat Mr. Preston, the nullification candidate. It was a fair pull between the parties.

WOOL AND WOOLLENS have advanced greatly in price, because of the mighty armies supplied with new clothing in Europe. Wool, of a good quality, is now worth 62 cents a pound, in the New England states—says the N. E. "Farmer."

GOLD—EXTRAORDINARY.—We have substantial confirmation for the rumors of the last eight or ten days of the great original deposit of gold discovered in this county. The account almost exceeds belief, and surpasses any thing of the kind in the history of mining. The land on which the gold was found, about 15 or 20 miles east of this place, was purchased two or three years ago by a Mr. Carlton, from Virginia, for the purpose of mining, who, after spending his time and money for a year or two, relinquished the undertaking as unsuccessful. Lately, however, the work was pursued by others, which has eventuated in the discovery of the extraordinary rich deposit, to the 2d instant. The whole amount of gold obtained is variously stated to be from 75 to 120 pounds, but from the statement of a gentleman who was called upon to make a probable estimate of the weight and value, it is supposed there is at least one hundred pounds of gold all obtained in one day. The gold was found in a small space, two or three feet below the surface, in grains and masses weighing from ounces and pennies to pieces of five, seven and eight pounds. There was no rock discovered, or sign of any, but the laborers came suddenly upon the whole mass of gold, deposited as it were in a nest, and imbedded in a very red clay.

On pursuing the labor of digging during the past week, we understand that no more discoveries have been made—this rich deposit being entirely insulated, promising no continuance of the extraordinary development. The value of the gold, it is estimated, will not come under $90 00, after being separated from all extraneous substances. Charlotte Journal.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT. MESSAGE OF THE GOVERNOR OF PENNSYLVANIA—VETO OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, AGAINST THE PASSAGE OF THE MAYSVILLE ROAD BILL, AND HIS APPROVAL OF CERTAIN BILLS PASSED AT THE LAST SESSION OF CONGRESS.

We publish in page 136, a curious and valuable document, being a message from the governor of Pennsylvania approving a bill entitled, "an act to continue the improvement of the state by roads and canals." It is curious—because that gov. Wolf has seen fit to shew his reasons for approving this bill, a proceeding of unusual occurrence, and, as we think, altogether uncalled for; and valuable—because of the leading motive of his approbation of it. He thought the provisions of the bill constitutional, and, very properly, gave up "his judgment" to that of the two houses of the legislature, and said—"believing as I do that the constitution NEVER contemplated that the negative upon all laws with which it has armed the executive, should be interposed in a case circumstances like the present—A QUESTION OF MERE EXPEDIENCY." Gov. Wolf is right. The constitution of Pennsylvania, like that of the United States, confines the origin of all revenue bills to the house of representatives, though they must also be passed by the senate; and, as it is the special business of the legislature to provide the ways and means of the government, it is impossible for any reasonable to believe that the governor, or president, may properly forbid the application of them to constitutional purposes: thus, on a question of "sheer expediency," a president of the United States, by his individual caprice, may set aside the judgment and defile the best matured opinions of 178 members of the senate and house of representatives, if the small minority of 17 members, in the senate, shall stand by their veto—two thirds of both houses being required to pass a bill without his consent. We say it is impossible that the framers of the constitution ever contemplated a case like this, or that any true republican can sanction its practice.

Yet the power of the veto is wisely given to the president, though it does not exist in several of the states, the governors having nothing to do with the passage of the laws—as in Virginia, Maryland, &c. This power was mainly designed to preserve the integrity of the executive authority against legislative encroachments; for it is believed by the soundest statesmen, that a popular disposition to reduce the influence of the executive, should be as well guarded against as individual propensities to add power to power, until ending in despotism; and hence the numerous checks upon both which a sound discretion has provided. And also, the right of veto should remain, because that the president, consulting the law officers provided for the purpose,—or proceeding further and taking the opinion of the chief justice of the supreme court, may deem a bill, which has passed both houses, unconstitutional; and in this case, we hold it proper that he should forbid the accomplishment of it. For these purposes only was the president of the United States invested with this very delicate power. President Jackson is the first that ever used it on a question of "sheer expediency"—which gov. Wolf could not do, notwithstanding he high and tempting example set before him, though equally disapproving parts of the bill submitted to him, and for the same reason mainly urged by the president against the passage of the Maysville road bill. The governor of Pennsylvania has thus left the responsibility of the proceeding where it should rest—on the representatives of the people, not presuming that he knew more of the interests of the state than the collected wisdom of its legislative bodies, drawn from all parts of the commonwealth! The right of disbursing public money naturally resolves itself into the power of those who pay it, in all liberal governments. Even in Great Britain, the king never ventured a veto against a money bill; and it is a hundred years or more since the British king forbade the passage of any bill. As the house of commons is called upon for supplies, the king does not question the propriety of parliamentary appropriations of money. But with us, who believe not in the "divine right of kings"—who are sure that "angels have not descended to govern us," the great republican principle involved is of the highest dignity. We cannot consent that one man shall set aside the ordinary legislative acts of 173, coming direct from the people and equally responsible as himself—that one shall command the current of the public expenditure of moneys raised by public taxation. The power to assess such taxes is of the same nature as that of disbursing them. The public good may be as well endangered by withholding, as in constraining, the payment of money. The sovereign power is shewn equally in either—and it is the will of the people of the United States that this sovereignty should have existence in their representatives, who are immediately accountable to them for the use or abuse of it. Without this, they would be no better, nor any worse, than those of France, when it was the custom of Englishmen to call Frenchmen "slaves"—because the "king wills it," was the formula of the laws; or those of Spain, wherein "I the king" settles all disputes, grapples all the public resources, and uses them at his own good pleasure. It was the duty of the people of France, and is the duty of those of Spain, to bill the king's treasury—but the heavenly right of the king to direct the expenditure of the money!

This is a plain, practical, republican view of the subject—it is the view which the governor of Pennsylvania has taken of it; but which, it is hardly possible for us to believe, presented itself to the mind of president Jackson, when he placed his veto on the Maysville road bill—for if it had, he must have thought himself specially delegated by DIVINE PROVIDENCE to "protect the people from themselves." We cannot—dare not—impute a notion so preposterous to a president of the United States. And, though that message had but little of the straight-forwardness of gen. Jackson—though it says much about the constitutionality of such appropriations, neither affirming nor denying such constitutionality, and discusses a variety of topics, relevant or irrelevant, to the question at issue, as if to conceal under a cloud of words the disputed points———still it is manifest, as we shall shew below, that the main objection to the passage of the bill was founded on "SHEER EXPEDIENCY," and nothing else.

And, in the sessions of 1823-4 and 1824-5, gen. Jackson, being a member of the senate, voted, we believe, for every like appropriation bill that came up for decision—"in the teeth" of the "state-rights"-members from Virginia, &c. and against Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Branch, now members of his "cabinet," but supported by Mr. Eaton, now secretary of war.* The national debt was then much greater than it is now—the means of the country for its prompt liquidation less abundant; yet so he voted, and left no doubt on the mind of any man as to his opinion on the constitutionality of such appropriations, or of his belief in the propriety and expediency of them. And it is hazarding nothing to say, that, if he had not so voted, he would not now have been the chief magistrate of these United States. Among the bills passed, his vote being recorded in the affirmative, was one authorising a subscription to the stock of the Chesapeake and Delaware canal.

That part of the veto message which clearly shews the quo animo that influenced the president, follows the paragraph in which he says—"anxious that my constituents should be possessed of my views, on this, as well as on all other subjects, I shall state them frankly and briefly." Then succeeds a paragraph about a "diversion of the funds set apart for the payment of the national debt," the state of the treasury, and a reference to the bills which had passed, or were then before, or reported to, either house, containing appropriations of money—all which the president thinks would make an excess of ten millions of dollars over the treasury receipts, unless the payment of the national debt be postponed, &c. Here we see that it is altogether a matter of money, a question of "sheer expediency"—that the constitutionality of the appropriation was thrown in the back ground; that the veto was to restrain the will of the people, as expressed through those whom they had delegated to represent them in congress.

This is conclusively proved by ten or eleven pages of statements which accompanied the message—all about money. We shall recapitulate them; and, while acquitting the president, personally, of all agency in getting them up, and regretting that he adopted them, must wonder at the "high-pressure" principle of them, and the gross *blunders that abound to swell their aggregate to nearly the "ten millions," which the president speaks of.

1. An account of the state of the treasury—shewing the probable receipts and demands upon it in the year 1830.

2. A statement of the appropriations made by bills which had passed both houses, up to the 17th May, 1830. The general aggregate was $11,988,505—being less than the usual amount. This included all the ordinary appropriation bills, with 367,112 dollars for the improvement of harbors and rivers, and 296,800 for surveys and internal improvements—both which were suffered to die "a natural death," if we remember correctly, for want of the president's signature.

3. Bills depending on amendments between the two houses—436,544 dollars; of which there was in the "light house bill" 394,844—which bill, also, the president refused to sign, though it was passed.

4. Bills pending that would probably become laws—1,197,366 dollars. In this amount was included 500,000 dollars for removal of the Indians, &c. 172,815 for the engineer, ordnance and Q. M. general's departments, 83,000 for the public buildings, 75,000 to improve the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and many small items.

5. A statement of certain lands "contemplated by bills before congress, to promote certain improvements." We do not see what this matter had to do with the state of the treasury or the Maysville road bill.

6. Bills that have passed the house and were pending in the senate—376,685 dollars. The Maysville road bill, ($50,000), was included in this aggregate.

7. Bills in the senate that had not passed that body—5,784,127 dollars: thus made up—5,000,000 as indemnity for French spoliations—300,000 to the Delaware and Raritan canal—275,000 to the Baltimore and Ohio rail road; leaving only 159,127 dollars to all other propositions. We must think that no individual expected the five million bill to pass at that session!

8. Bills that have passed the senate—1,275,201 dollars. In this list is included 100,000 dollars for the Louisville and Portland canal, and 90,000 for the Rockville turnpike road—neither which bills, though they passed both houses, were approved by the president.

9. Bills in the house of representatives, not yet passed either house—2,085,271 dollars. In this amount is included 60,000 for the Charleston rail road;—115,000 for repairs of the Cumberland road; 250,000 for public ware houses; 67,580 claims of James Monroe; 56,647 rail road from Baltimore to Wilmington; 120,000 Blackstone canal company; 200,000 Delaware and Hudson canal; 100,000 Mrs. Decatur's claim; 51,000 Morris canal; 300,000 Savannah canal company; 100,000 Wheeling and Belmont bridge. Of this whole statement, the bills that passed probably did not amount to more than 2 or 300,000 dollars.

We have also a recapitulation of these bills that were pending in either house, or had not at all been acted on, as follows:

Appropriations in bills that had passed the senate	1,275,201
Appropriations in bills that had passed the house	376,856

*This article was prepared three or four weeks ago.

*This is not, perhaps, the most correct term that could be used—but it is the mildest. The items put down are true, but the inferences deducible from them are abusive of the public intelligence.

Appropriations in bills in the senate, not yet passed	5,734,127
Appropriations in bills in the house, not yet passed	2,085,271
	9,471,284

The "high pressure" alluded to is in putting every thing into the aggregate, however dark or distant the prospect of an appropriation being made—such as the five millions for claims against France, descending even to items of 40 or 50 dollars for a pension, the apprehension of a post-office robber, claims without a name, horses lost, and many other two-penny things. We shall show the "gross blunders."

The following items are all duplicated in these statements—indeed, we think that some of them may be counted three times, for the aggregate! It was a shame to present such a paper to the president of the United States.

Pay interpreter in Louisiana,	$2,335
Citizens lost property by Indians,	32,324
Refund money to Lucy M. Lipscomb,	100
Money illegally obtained from S. C. Whittin,	950
Service as counsellor and taking depositions,	249
Removal and exchange of land with Indians,	500,000
Mount part of army for protection to Iron-tiers Missouri and trade with Mexico	52,500
Services and supplies revolutionary war,	200
Ranger	240
Expenses defending suit on part of U. S. by A. Claxton, M. C. navy,	6,136
Pilot on board Vixen,	380
Pension children Corbit,	30
Horses lost, &c.	130
Horses do.	165
Supplies of troops, &c.	3,758
Ship captured at Gibraltar,	16,400
Drawback on teas,	168
Boat captured by the enemy,	1,500
Horses,	230
Horses, &c.	161
Loss on light houses, &c.	4,666
Fences destroyed, &c.	427
Prize money, E. Moore, &c.	780
Appropriations engineer, ordnance and Q. M. general's departments,	172,815
Moiety proceeds vessels forfeited,	245
Reward apprehending robber post office	50
Penalty recovered in name U. S. R. Enos,	103
Destruction of houses, &c. widow Dupre,	8,996
Code laws, District Columbia,	6,500
Purchase Peters' reports,	2,400
Debenture certificate,	755
Apprehension of pirate,	400
Horse,	45
Services exploring beyond Mississippi,	1,344
Services Indian treaty,	625
Boat captured by enemy, &c.	700
Houses injured,	650
Property destroyed,	281
Do. Do.	450
Carry into effect Indian treaties	41,500
Indian depredations,	3,041
Horses lost,	230
Treaty West Cherokees,	21,176
Public buildings,	83,000
Pea Patch, Delaware bay,	41,621
Cherokee claims,	4,565
Arkansas militia,	580
Estimate additional post routes,	86,000
Boat lost, &c.	750
Property destroyed,	223
Indian depredations,	1,200
Repay advances by Miami exporting Co.	8,585
Wm. H. Harrison, additional compensation,	1,025
Improve Ohio and Mississippi rivers,	75,000
Missouri militia, &c.	9,085
	1,197,367
Now if to this we add only the forced item of five millions for claims on France	5,000,000
We have	6,197,367

Which deducted from the 9,471,284 dollars above stated, leaves only 3,274,017 dollars, as small an amount as ever, perhaps, of what we shall call, (for distinction sake), speculative bills, remained over at a long session of congress, for several years past. Thus dwindles the terrific amount of 9,471,284 dollars into an ordinary affair.*

In the session of 1829–30, the sum of 851,000 dollars was appropropriated for fortifications. What would have been thought of any intelligent member of congress who should have objected to such appropriation, because that, besides the mighty sums yet needed to complete the fortifications actually commenced, the secretary of war reported, at the same session, that 11,726,948 dollars will be required for other works contemplated? Might not some assurance, as to the limit of appropriations for internal improvements, be found in the practice of congress from the beginning? By a table inserted in page 112, it appears that the whole amount paid for these objects, since the organization of the government to 21st December, 1830, was only $5,310,930—2,443,420 of which was on account of the Cumberland road! Was it apprehended that no discretion remained to guide the representatives of the tax-payers—that the strong arm of the executive must be interposed to correct the ignorance or prodigality of congress? Heaven help the nation, when this shall be the case?—when the will of the chief magistrate, on a question of expediency, shall be applied to break down the will of a majority of the people, and of their delegates, constitutionally assembled in congress.

At the late session, the president signed the general bill appropriating large sums of money for the improvement of harbors and removing obstructions at the mouths of rivers; also a bill appropriating much money to certain roads and other works of internal improvement, among which was the sum of 200,000 dollars for improving the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, though at the former session he had refused his sanction of the appropriation to the Louisville and Portland canal, round the falls of the Ohio. It will require a great deal more acumen than we possess, to separate these things in their principle. There is no difference in their principle. Both were equally matters of "sheer expediency"—and of expediency only!—in which we certainly agree with gov. Wolf, that "the constitution never contemplated" an exercise of the veto. This is republican ground—the only admissible ground in a free country, on which a chief magistrate may stand.

Of a matter of conscience—a well entertained doubt as to the constitutionality of a bill submitted to the president for his approbation, no reasonable and reflecting man, who respects the obligation of an oath, will presume to speak except in the most delicate manner; for the honest support of one's own opinion necessarily involves a decent respect for that of every other man: but we repeat it, that the house of representatives has the original authority to place money in the treasury, and, with the concurrence of the senate, must have the natural and unalienable right to disburse it, being sole judges of the expediency of their appropridtions. It is thus in Great Britain—thus in France, and in every other country having a representative body; and never until May 1830, was an opposing opinion entertained in the United States.

As to the particular merits of the Maysville road bill, we care nothing—but the Rockville road bill, being within the original design of the Cumberland road, had special claims to consideration. It was however, put upon the same footing, and its passage forbidden. Nor does it matter whether the practice sanctioned for so long a period, of appropriating money to assist in making internal improvements, be expedient or not—we insist upon it, that that expediency is a question for the determination of the people and the states represented in congress, only. And whatever may be the opinion of the strongest stickler for what are called "state rights," we think that there is no respectable and responsible man who will dare meet the broad ground of the matter under consideration, and assert a rightful power in the president to arrest the will of a majority of both houses of congress, in the manner stated. No ministry that ever existed in Great Britain could have remained in power ten days after such a proceeding on the part of the British king—for every true John Bull would have asserted the right and power of parliament in the case; and, whatever might be the opinions of individuals, *all would have combined in asserting the "omnipotence of parliament." We mean no personal disrespect to the president—we must feel certain that he was unaware of the odious features in the statements that we have referred to,—and cannot do otherwise than believe that he yielded up his own judgment to the wishes of those round about him.

*In his last annual message to congress he speaks of internal improvements surveyed, or projected, which will cost ninety-six millions of dollars! Mr. Hemphill's review of that message, in his report to the house of representatives, is admirable, and shall soon have an insertion.

GRAVITY OF THE LAW. We find the following report of a law case in an English paper. There is no putting one's finger in a pie without bringing the majesty of the law into the exhibition. [Galaxy.

"The king vs. Penny. This is one of those cases which shows the absurdity of the prevailing system in the administration of the law, that of employing a most cumbrous and costly machinery to the execution of a very trifling object. The court was occupied this day for nearly two hours in the investigation of a charge—a very solemn one, indeed—namely, the stealing of a piece of gooseberry pie by an urchin of 14 years of age. The indictment went on, in its solemn strain, to set forth, that Thomas Penny, late of White Parish, laborer, on the 7th of June last past, in the 10th year of our sovereign lord king George the fourth, with force and arms, at the parish aforesaid, the dwelling house of John Batten, there situate, lying and being, feloniously did break and enter, and one piece of pudding, of the value of one penny, and one half a pint of gooseberries, of the value of one penny, of the goods and chattles of the said John Batten, in the same dwelling house, then and there feloniously did steal, take, and carry away.—Such was the indictment. The boy was found guilty."

INTERESTING LAW CASE. The following is from the "American Traveller," published at Boston, and we are glad to see the decision on the case. Persons are so often treated as "live lumber" by the proprietors of stages and steam boats, that every man injured performs a public duty in bringing them to "judgment." The injury in the present instance, was caused by the nut of one front wheel coming off, which it was within the power of the proprietor or driver to have prevented.

Important to stages owners. An interesting case was on Monday decided in the supreme court of this state, sitting in this city. It was a prosecution against the proprietors of the Boston and Providence Citizens' line. The plaintiff took passage in one of their coaches, and on Boston neck, was overturned, thrown under the carriage, had his leg severely fractured and was otherwise injured. An action for damages resulted yesterday, in a verdict for the plaintiff of fifteen hundred dollars.

The counsel for the defendants argued that the overturning of the coach was an accident, which no care could have avoided, and the injury was owing to the carelessness of the plaintiff.

The judge in his charge very clearly pointed out the responsibilities of the proprietors of stages. They are bound to prepare proper accommodations for passengers; to have good and sufficient coaches, horses, harness and drivers—to keep them always in such repair that full dependance can properly be placed upon them—and in case of the overturning of the coach, running away of the horses, breaking of the harness, or breaking down of the carriage, and injury thereby occurring to passengers, the proprietors are liable, unless they can prove the accident to have arisen from causes wholly without the control of the driver. But it is not sufficient that the agents of the proprietors are properly directed; they must carry their orders into execution. If a carriage break down while upon a smooth road, the presumption in law (as laid down by the judge) is, that it arose from neglect on the part of the owner of the stage, and the burden of proof lies with the stage proprietors to rebut the charge.

The result of this case is of great importance to the public, whether interested in stages as proprietors or passengers. Decisions have been made in England which have established the principle of responsibilities of stage and steam boat owners; but we have now for the first time a decisive opinion upon this subject, and learn the law in this commonwealth to be the same in this respect, as that of England. Accidents in steam boats and stages have become too frequent, and it is full time that the public are informed that the law will afford them some relief against the carelessness of stage drivers and steam boat engineers. Loss of limb, or a maim for life, it is true, cannot be compensated by pecuniary restitution; but as great expense and loss of time are always attendant upon extensive injuries, it is some satisfaction to know that a remedy in law lies against the employer of reckless drivers.

BRIEF NOTICES.

The Susquehannah. From what we see stated, it is probable that the value of articles descending this river in the present year, may amount to about ten millions of dollars—the noble stream, except at the dams, having been in uncommonly good order for rafts and arks.

The U. S. ship Peacock, capt. McCall, arrived at Boston from Havana, a few days since, with two of the pirates of the brig Orbit on board.

The steam boats Tri-Color and Stranger have lately exploded on the western waters, by which more than twenty persons lost their lives—among them the captain of the former and ten of the hands of the latter. Those whose business it is to take care of the lives of others, will be taught the necessity of attending to their duty, by such terrible effects upon their fellows.

Doings of editors. Joseph C. Melcher, editor of the Chillicothe Evening Post, has been sent to the penitentiary for three years, for stabbing, with intent to maim, J. F. Woodside; and Jacob Elliott, editor of the Kentucky Statesman, lately shot George Roberts, a member of the legislature. The quarrels originated in politics, though all the parties were of the same creed!

Cotton twine. The Mobile Register mentions a sample of very handsome bagging twine, fabricated from cotton, which possesses great strength, and appears to have every other requisite for the purposes intended to be served.

[Hadn't we better import twine from England or the East Indies?]

The "Odd Fellows" of Baltimore, celebrated their anniversary in this city on Tuesday last, and dedicated their new and magnificent hall, in Gay street. About 500 were computed to be in the procession, with their banners and other ornaments; and made a very respectable and imposing show. One oration was delivered in Trinity church by James L. Ridgeley, esq. and another after the dedication of the hall, by T. Y. Walsh, esq. The number of this association in Baltimore is said to exceed 1500.

Daniel H. Miller, esq. late a member of congress from Pennsylvania, and president of the bank of Penn township, died suddenly at his house in Penn township [Philadelphia] on Sunday night last, in the 48th year of his age. He was a worthy man.

Governor Don. The Washington Telegraph contains a correspondence between A. P. Hayne, U. S. navy agent at Gibraltar, and governor Don, the commander of that fortress, which does the latter much honor. It appears that during a storm which occurred on the 16th January last, the U. S. sloop of war Boston, lying in the bay of Gibraltar, lost three of her anchors, and the navy agent having been unable to procure others at private sale, represented her critical situation

*The incomprehensible explosion of the "cabinet," weeks after this article was prepared, may have had its origin in the Maysville road message—or rather in the principle assumed in it. It is well known that it alarmed many of the original and best personal friends of the president, and cast him for support chiefly on those who had been his original and most bitter opponents—the old "radical" or "Crawford party."

to the governor, with a request that she might be furnished with anchors from the king's arsenal. Immediately on the receipt of the letter, the governor directed that the anchors should be supplied without delay, which was accordingly done, and the safety of the ship thereby secured.

Abolishment of imprisonment for debt. The senate of the New York legislature passed the bill for this purpose to a third reading on Friday week. Two amendments were made to it as passed by the house of assembly. One, postponing the operation of the law in reference to all debts now contracted, till the 1st of March, 1832; the other is—making persons who may receive the goods of fraudulent debtors, with the intent to defraud any creditor, liable to the punishment provided in the bill for fraudulent debtors themselves.

The Pennsylvania legislature postponed the consideration of the same subject for the present.

Large and valuable cargo.—The British ship Marchioness of Queensbury, takes to Liverpool the largest cargo ever shipped from Charleston. Her exports, are 2,252 bales of cotton, making 704,342 lbs. and valued at $72,000, in addition to 300 barrels of turpentine.

Mr. Madison has given one hundred dollars to the African Colonization society.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Since our last there have been two arrivals at New York from England bringing London advices of the evening of the 31st of March.

ENGLAND.

The "reform bill" has undergone two discussions in the house of lords. The first discussion was opened on the 28th March, by lord Wharncliffe, who moved the presentation of certain papers. In answer to certain observations made by him, earl Grey stated that nothing short of a restoration of a proper influence of the people in the house of commons would satisfy their expectations, or meet his wishes. Lord Sidmouth and the earl of Eldon considered it out of order to discuss a bill which was not upon the table. Lord chancellor Brougham thought it strange that the lords opposed to reform should sit patiently for two hours listening to a speech against the bill, and never find out that the discussion was out of order until one of its friends rose to support it. Lord Durham, the duke of Richmond, lord Plunkett and the lord chancellor each advocated the measure. The duke of Wellington replied to them, and was himself replied to by lord Grey. The discussion was renewed on the 30th, when lord Farnham took occasion to declare his utter dissent to the whole plan of ministerial reform. He was replied to by earl Grey.

The question of a dissolution of parliament was still unsettled, and it was said would depend upon the fate of the "reform bill." Should that be rejected, its dissolution would immediately take place.

In reply to a question put in the house of commons on the 30th, relative to the Spanish refugees at Gibralter, lord Palmerston declared that the relations between England and Spain were of the most amicable kind, and that the governor of Gibraltar had been directed to enforce the fortress regulation, which prohibited foreigners from residing there without a special permission from the secretary of the colonies.

The chancellor of the exchequer had brought forward a motion authorising the king to issue exchequer bills to the amount of £50,000, for temporary relief in Ireland.

Mr. C. W. Wynn had vacated the seat of secretary of war, and his place was filled by sir Henry Parnell.

IRELAND.

Mr. Stanley had introduced a bill to amend the representation of Ireland. It gives five additional members. It had undergone considerable discussion, and been ordered to a second reading on the 18th of April.

The famine in many parts of Ireland was truly distressing. A meeting had been held in London, at which the lord mayor presided, to devise temporary means of relief. Several persons had died from starvation; and, in the parish of Westport alone, there were on the 24th of March 31,904, persons wholly destitute of food.

Mr. Maurice O'Connell, the son of the member for Waterford, had been elected a member of parliament to represent the county of Clare, in the room of Mr. O'Gorman Mahon. On the second day of the election, Mr. William V. Mahon, brother to O'Gorman, fought a duel with W. S. O'Brien, a member of parliament.

FRANCE.

The speech of the president of the council, Casimir Perrier, on applying for a new credit of one hundred millions, was considered warlike. Immediately on taking his seat, the deputies crowded around him, and M. Manguin is said to have asked him if it was true that 80,000 men of the confederation of the Rhine were marching against the Luxembourg. The president of the council replied, that "France was preparing to support under all circumstances, her pretensions either in the north or south."

The Journal des Debats contained the following, which, it is said, may be considered official.

"The Austrians entered Bologna on the 20th."

"The provisional government and the Italian patriots always intended to retire at the approach of the enemy, for the purpose of not exposing an open city to the horrors of war."

"All who were capable of bearing arms retired to the Appenines, the passes of which could be easily made the seat of a desperate resistance."

"It appears that the entrance of the Austrians had been determined by the enterprise of the patriots, who, according to a letter from Vienna, had attempted on the 9th of March an attack upon Rome, from which they were repulsed."

"We are assured that a diplomatic note has been addressed to the Austrian cabinet to announce that France will not tolerate a longer residence of the Austrians in Bologna."

An express had arrived in London from Paris, and it was understood that the French minister will invite tenders of 15,000,000 de rente, or 300,000,000 francs of capital.

The London Courier denies the right assumed by Austria to interpose for the protection of the Italian states; regrets that it has by its interference given the French reasonable pretext for war. It also considers that the Austrian government has shewn a disregard of good faith, which, if presisted in, may lead to calamitous results to Europe.

The new French ministry were taking strong measures of precaution to preserve internal tranquility. They have commenced their labors by sezing upon the press, as in the early days of July. La Quotedienne, La Tribune and La Revolution, have been seized at the instance of the king's attorney general, for having dared to give utteranec to liberal sentiments.

The president of the council in a sitting of the deputies on the 28th of March, declared that the present government of France were disposed to maintain the relations of peace, but that it wished to be placed in a position to be prepared for the alternative of war, and, therefore, demanded authority to raise, in the event of France going to war, 100,000,000 of francs. The amount required to meet the exigencies of peace is but 50,000,000 francs. He begged the chamber to see "only in these measures of precaution—an extreme vigilance—one which re assumes all the interests represented there." "The inquietude of these interests, he said, proceeded from the doubts entertained upon the resolution of government; upon the conditions of peace which they desired, and upon the chances of the war, to which some thought they would be reduced. Let us prove to them, said he, that leaving nothing to hazard in our preparations of strength, we leave nothing equivocal in our guaranties of peace."

An article under date of Paris, March 29th, represents that the most deplorable distress reigned in all branches of trade. One hundred and thirteen bankrupteies had been counted, and innumerable others were on the eve of being declared.

General Clausel has arrived at Toulon from Algiers. A charge d' affaires from the United Italian States, had arrived at Paris. Petitions were daily presented to the king of the French, in favor of the Poles and Italians, urging him to aid them in their sacred struggle for liberty. Chateaubriand had written a pamphlet to promote the cause of Henry V. but so far no printer had been found to publish it.

SPAIN.

Several bands of the constitutionalists had been captured, and a supplement to the Lisbon Gazette asserts that the discomfiture of the whole of the constitutionalists had been effected.

Accounts from Madrid of the 18th March state, that the Spanish government had received a despatch from the captain general of Estramadura, announcing the arrival of count de Bourmont at Badajos, on his way to Madrid, to consult with the Spanish ministry for the establishment of the regency of Henry the 5th in Spain, as well as for the approaching arrival of the dutchess of Berri and her son the captain general notified to count Bourmont that they would not be permitted to proceed to Madrid, but must go to Portugal.

A military commission had been appointed at Madrid, owing to the critical situation of that town, caused by the great number of inhabitants from the various provinces taking refuge in Madrid.

PORTUGAL.

Don Miguel has again resumed his executions. He had gratified his cruel appetite for the spilling of human blood by causing seven respectable, and, doubtless, innocent individuals, inhabitants of Lisbon, to be executed in the most cruel and murderous manner. A majority of their judges declared them innocent, that there was no evidence made out of crime for which they ought to suffer death. To this Don Miguel returned for answer that they were constitutionalists and should suffer death, and purposely lett town for Mafra, 24 miles from Lisbon, to prevent solicitations for pardon. It is asserted that the duke of Cadaval, on his knees, implored his majesty to pardon or even respite them; he left the room in a violent passion, declaring that they should suffer at the time appointed. The manner of their execution is almost too horrible for particular narration. They were executed on the 15th of March; and to the last moment declared their entire innocence. Others had been transported.

BELGIUM.

The greatest alarm pervaded the town of Brussels on the 28th of March. A horde of miscreants, who, it was said, had been paid by well known individuals, had been let loose upon the town, and were committing the most disgraceful acts of disorder and pillage. Reports existed of an Orange complot of conspiracies at Brussels and Antwerp. A colonel Borremens, in a drunken carousal, had proclaimed his intention of proceeding to meet the prince of Orange with his regiment. He had been arrested and made some revelations implicating others. His regiment had planted a tree of liberty, maltreated some of their officers, and marched to the prison where their colonel was confined, and demanded his life. Order was restored on the 29th, though the people were still without confidence. On this day the congress met and elected its officers. Several arrests had been made, and amongst the rest general Nypels. The overthrow of the present government was spoken of, as also the establishment of a republic. The prince of Saxe Coburg was to be proposed in the congress of Belgium as monarch.

A Brussels paper states that a heavy cannonading had been heard in the direction of Ghent and Antwerp—the cause had not been ascertained. A change of ministry was about to take place; the resignation of the minister of war had been accepted. The council it appears were divided on the subject of peace or war, but it was not ascertained that the ministerial change resulted from this circumstance.

POLAND.

It would appear that since the last advices, the army of Deibitsch thought more of its own safety than any thing else. The Messager des Chambres of the 23d March, states that provisions had failed, the roads were impracticable, and that the Russian army were perishing by degrees. Already says this print, it flies the environs of Praga, leaves its positions in all quarters, even abandoning its artillery in many places. General Kreutz and prince Adam de Wurtemburg saved themselves by post-horses. The thaw of the Vistula had greatly increased the wretched condition of the Russian army. General Dwernicki is represented as pursuing the Russians with great fury; and it is stated that new levies were raising every where to give the final blow to their invasion. On the 9th of March, a corps of Cossacks, who were covering the retreat of the Russians, were dispersed. The Russians, it appeared, still occupied the frontiers with between 15 or 20,000 infantry, cavalry and artillery. The breaking up of the ice in the Vistula had carried away three pontoons of the bridge over that river on the 11th of March. News had been received on the 10th of March, that general Dwernicki's division of the Polish army had again broken a Russian battalion and taken two cannon. A letter says that he had captured 16 pieces of artillery. The report of insurrectionary movements in Podolia and Volhynia is again repeated, and it is added that in the first named province the nobility and their dependants had raised en masse, and assembled 15,000 cavalry, which force advanced to Kamiraz, the capital, and disarmed a Russian regiment of infantry. The direct accounts from Warsaw are to the 21st March inclusive, at which date the city was in the best state of defence, every possible means had been adopted to impart strength to it. Among other preparations to insure the invaders a warm reception, mines had been sprung in several of the streets, doors and windows had been barricadoed, and walls built across the streets, by which the city was divided into separate fortified quarters.

LEGISLATURE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR.

Approving of the bill, entitled "An act to continue the improvement of the state by canals and roads."—Read in the house of representatives, March 21, 1831.

To the senate and house of representatives of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

GENTLEMEN:—The bill, entitled "An act to continue the improvement of the state by canals and rail roads," has been in my possession since the 12th instant, and has received that deliberate consideration to which the magnitude and importance of its provisions entitle it, and which our constituents had a right to expect it would receive before it should be approved and become a law.

In the message transmitted to the two houses at the opening of the present session of the legislature, the propriety of confining the appropriations for objects of internal improvement for the current year to the connecting links of the main route from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, with a view to complete a connected line of communication between those two important points, was pressed upon the attention of the legislature, from an honest conviction on my part that the substantial interests, as well as the true policy of the commonwealth would be best promoted by pursuing that course. And that, at most, in addition to the completion of the main line, the north and west branch divisions of the canals should be extended into the coal regions towards which they severally tend, in order that the utility and public advantages of these several public works might be tested at as early a period as possible, and that they might soon be made to contribute, in some measure, to the increase of the revenue of the state. The commencement of any new project of improvement was at the same time deprecated and considered, then as now, as being entirely impolitic; as tending to embarrass and delay the operations of the government in completing any portion of the public works, and as manifestly calculated to produce an effect which, instead of infusing confidence into the public mind, that some advantages will be speedily realized by the public, and that the treasury will soon receive some return from these improvements, as an earnest that the sums which have from time to time been drawn from it have not been expended in vain, would tend to dampen the ardor with which our citizens were heretofore animated in favor of, and to impair their confidence in, a system of improvements which, if conducted upon right principles, would not fail to inspire both.

But although such were, and still continue to be, the convictions of my own mind, a majority of the legislature has thought proper to pursue a different course, and to authorise, by the bill now under consideration, the commencement of two new routes of canal, of no inconsiderable magnitude, (should they be carried to the extent contemplated), and liberal appropriations have been authorised with a view to those objects.

Inasmuch, however, as this is a question involving no constitutional principle, nor presenting a case glaringly inexpedient, but exhibiting the naked question in how far it is expedient at this time to enter into new contracts; to what extent the commencement of new projects of improvement shall be authorised, and the amount of money necessary to carry them into effect, about all which there may well exist an honest difference of opinion, I feel myself bound by the respect which I shall always entertain for the opinions of the legislature, when fairly expressed, to yield my judgment to theirs, believing, as I do, that the constitution never contemplated that the negative upon all laws with which it has armed the executive, should be interposed in a case circumstanced like the present—a question of sheer expedience.

The question of the great difficulty, and which is calculated to create more embarrassment in the operations of the government, in relation to the system of internal improvements, is that relating to a fund for the payment of the interest on the public debt. The same difficulty would have existed, however, to a certain extent, if the bill in question had never been passed. A crisis has been produced in the affairs of the commonwealth, which must be met by those entrusted with the concerns of the government, and the direction of its affairs: and although it has been brought about by no act of ours, it will nevertheles be our duty to meet it honestly, and with firmness, and to provide the means to guard against any injurious effects or consequences which it might otherwise be calculated to produce. If justice to the public creditors, as well as a proper regard for the faith and credit of the commonwealth would have required that an adequate source of revenue for the payment of interest should have been provided, under the circumstances in which we were placed before the passing of the bill now under consideration, it can scarcely be necessary to remind an enlightened legislature of the additional obligation imposed upon them by the provision of the bill which gave rise to this communication, to provide an ample interest fund.

With a firm reliance upon the integrity and patriotism of the members of the legislature of Pennsylvania, to whom this communication is addressed, and feeling assured that the faith and credit of the state are objects of their anxious solicitude, I have every reason to believe that this legislature will not consent to separate, until it shall have provided such ample means for raising a revenue as will place the credit of the commonwealth forever hereafter on a basis which cannot be shaken.

Under these considerations, and under a firm conviction that a contrary course would be productive of consequences destructive to the best interests of the commonwealth, I have this day approved and signed the said bill, entitled, "an act to continue the improvement of the state by canals and rail roads," and directed the secretary of the commonwealth to return the same to the house of representatives in which it originated.

GEORGE WOLF.

Harrisburg, March 21, 1831.

THE CABINET RESIGNATIONS.

From the Washington Telegraph of the 22d and 23d inst.

Washington, April 18, 1831.

SIR: In communicating to me, this morning, the information of the resignation of the secretary of state and secretary of war, together with the reasons which had induced the former to take this step, you were pleased to observe that this proceeding was made known to me as one of those whom you had associated with you in the administration of the government, and you suggested that I would, after a few days reflection, have a further conversation with you on this subject. But, in recurring to the brief remarks made at the time, as well as to the letter of resignation of the secretary of state, which you were good enough to submit for my perusal, I have not been able to ascertain what particular matter was intended to be proposed for my reflection, as connected with this event. Under these circumstances, and being desirous of avoiding the possibility of misapprehension as to your views, I would respectfully inquire whether the measure adopted by the secretary of state and of war, is deemed to involve considerations on which you expect a particular communication from me, and, if so, of what nature.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant, S. D. INGHAM.

To the president of the U. S.

Washington, April 19, 1831.

Sir: I am gratified to find myself entirely relieved, by the distinct explanations at the interview to which you invited me, to-day, from the uncertainty as to the object of your communication yesterday, which I had referred to in my note of last evening; and have to make my acknowledgements for the kindness with which you have expressed your satisfaction with the manner in which I have discharged the duties of the station to which you had thought proper to invite me, and your conviction of the public confidence in my administration of the treasury department. I beg leave, however, to add, in my own justification, for not following the example of the secretary of state and secretary of war, in making a voluntary tender of the resignation of my office, as soon as I was acquainted with theirs, that I was wholly unconscious of the application, to myself, of any of the reasons, so far as I was apprised of them, which had induced them to withdraw from the public service. It, therefore, seemed to be due to my own character, which might otherwise have been exposed to unfavorable imputations, that I should find a reason for resigning, in a distinct expression of your wish to that effect; this wish has now been frankly announced, and has enabled me to place my retirement on its true ground.

I have, therefore, the honor of tendering to you my resignation of the office of secretary of the treasury of the United States, which you will be pleased to accept, to take effect as soon as my services may be dispensed with consistently with your views of the public interest.

I seize the occasion to offer you my thanks for the many testimonials I have received of your kindness and confidence, during our official connexion, and especially for the renewed assurance this day of the same sentiment. S. D. INGHAM.

His excellency Andrew Jackson, president U. S.

Sir: Late last evening I had the honor to receive your letter of that date, tendering your resignation of the office of secretary of the treasury. When the resignations of the secretary of state and secretary of war were tendered, I considered fully the reasons offered, and all the circumstances connected with the subject. After mature deliberation, I concluded to accept those resignations. But when this conclusion was come to, it was accompanied with a conviction that I must entirely renew my cabinet. Its members had been invited by me to the stations they occupy—it had come together in great harmony, and as a unit. Under the circumstances in which I found myself, I could not but perceive the propriety of selecting a cabinet composed of entirely new materials, as being calculated in this respect at least, to command public confidence and satisfy public opinion. Neither could I be insensible to the fact that to permit two only to retire, would be to afford room for unjust misconceptions and malignant misrepresentations concerning the influence of their particular presence upon the conduct of public affairs. Justice to the individuals whose public spirit had impelled them to tender their resignations, also required then, in my opinion, the decision which I have stated. However painful to my own feelings, it became necessary that I should frankly make known to you the whole subject.

In accepting of your resignation, it is with great pleasure that I bear testimony to the integrity and zeal with which you have managed the fiscal concerns of the nation. In your discharge of all the duties of your office, over which I have any control, I have been fully satisfied; and in your retirement you carry with you my best wishes for your prosperity and happiness.

It is expected that you will continue to discharge the duties of your office until a successor is appointed.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your most obedient servant, ANDREW JACKSON.

Samuel D. Ingham, secretary of the treasury.

Washington, April 19th, 1831.

SIR: In the interview which I had the honor to hold with you this morning, I understood it to be your fixed purpose to re-organize your cabinet, and that as to myself it was your wish that I should retire from the administration of the navy department.

Under these circumstances, I take pleasure in tendering to you the commission, which, unsolicited on my part, you were pleased to confer on me.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, yours, &c.

JOHN BRANCH

To the president U. S.

—

Washington, April 19th, 1831.

SIR: Your letter of this date by your son, is just received—accompanying it is your commission. The sending of the latter was not necessary; it is your own private property, and by no means to be considered part of the archives of the government. Accordingly, I return it.

There is one expression in your letter to which I take leave to except. I did not, as to yourself, express a wish that you should retire. The secretary of state, and of war, having tendered their resignations, I remarked to you, that I felt it to be indispensable to re-organize my cabinet, proper,—that it had come in harmoniously, and as a unit; and as a part was about to leave me, which on to-morrow would be announced, a re-organization was necessary to guard against misrepresentation. These were my remarks, made to you in candor and sincerity. Your letter gives a different import to my words.

Your letter contains no remark as to your performing the duties of the office until a successor can be selected. On this subject I should be glad to know your views.

I am, very respectfully yours.

ANDREW JACKSON.

The hon. John Branch, secretary of the navy.

—

Washington, April 19th, 1831.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of this date, in answer to mine of the same.

In reply to your remark that there is one expression in my letter to which you must except, I would respectfully answer that I gave what I understood to be the substance of your conversation. I did not pretend to quote your language.

I regret that I misunderstood you in the slightest degree; I, however, stand corrected, and cheerfully accept the interpretation which you have given to your own expression.

I shall freely continue my best exertions to discharge the duties of the department, until you provide a successor.

I have the honor to be, with greatest respect, your obedient servant, JOHN BRANCH.

To the president U. S.

—

Washington, April 20, 1831.

SIR: Late last evening, I had the honor to receive your letter of that date, tendering your resignation of the office of the secretary of the navy.

When the resignations of the secretary of state and secretary of war were tendered, I considered fully the reasons offered, and all the circumstances connected with the subject. After mature deliberation, I concluded to accept those resignations. But when this conclusion was come to, it was accompanied with a conviction that I must entirely renew my cabinet. Its members had been invited by me to the stations they occupied—it had come together in great harmony, and as a unit. Under the circumstances in which I found myself, I could not but perceive the propriety of selecting a cabinet composed of entirely new materials, as being calculated, in this respect at least, to command public confidence and satisfy public opinion. Neither could I be insensible to the fact, to permit two only to retire would be to afford room for unjust misconceptions and malignant misrepresentations concerning the influence of their particular presence upon the conduct of public affairs. Justice to the individuals whose public spirit had impelled them to tender their resignations also required, then, in my opinion, the decision which I have stated. However painful to my own feelings, it became necessary that I should frankly make known to you my view of the whole subject.

In accepting your resignation, it is with great pleasure that I bear testimony to the integrity and zeal with which you have managed the concerns of the navy. In your discharge of all the duties of your office, over which I have any control, I have been fully satisfied; and in your retirement you carry with you my best wishes for your prosperity and happiness. It is expected that you will continue to discharge the duties of your office until your successor is appointed.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your most obedient servant, ANDREW JACKSON.

John Branch, secretary of the navy.

POLITICS OF THE DAY.

From the Richmond Enquirer of April 2.

We understand that Mr. Tazewell has written a letter declining the honor of a public dinner which was offered to him in this city. We have heard so much of this manly and beautiful composition, that we hope in the course of a few days to be favored with an opportunity of laying it before the public. It is said to be eminently modest in its manner; liberal in its language, and creditable to his feelings as a politician and as a man. Mr. T. we are told, seems to be duly impressed with the dangers of discord in the republican party—and his expressions are entirely calculated to allay them. He avows, it is said, every hope that the principles he has maintained in the senate will receive the approbation of Virginia, expresses his gratitude for the invitation so kindly extended to him—thinks he has only done his duty—and declines the honor which has been offered to him. He is said to declare, among other things, that although he shall be prepared at all times, to stand by the constitution, and to do his duty, yet in these times of high political excitement, he will do nothing to fan the flame of party strife.—Such is reported to us as the substance of a letter, written in the finest spirit, and in the happiest style of its author. It is calculated to render much service both in Virginia and in the other states. It will remove many unfounded prejudices—reconcile the friends of the administration, and disappoint the hopes of the opposition.

☞ Now, after such a "flourish of trumpets" what might we not expect, except from our knowledge of the arts of this able editor to forestall public opinion? The same paper of the eighth April gives the letter as published below. It is a very good letter and a proper one—but compare it, with what Mr. Ritchie said of it! There is hardly any likeness between them.

THE CORRESPONDENCE.

We are favored with the following correspondence between the committee (all with one exception members of the H. of D.) and the two senators of Virginia.—The spirit of Mr. Tazewell's letter is as fine and admirable as we anticipated in our paper of the 2nd. These are "seasons of high party excitement"—and while Mr. Tazewell holds his own constitutional opinions, and knows how to maintain them with his distinguished abilities, he feels the necessity of allaying instead of exasperating the excitement of the moment.—He recommends firmness, as well as moderation—We respect the sentiment:

Richmond, March 26, 1831.

SIR—We have been deputed as a committee on behalf of a number of the members of the present general assembly, and citizens of Richmond, to invite you to partake of a public dinner, to be given at this place, at such time as will suit your convenience. An early auswer is desired.

Yours, very respectfully,

T. W. GILMER,
WM. O. GOODE,
TH. MILLER,
P. WILLIAMS, jr.
B. W. LEIGH,
R. N. VENABLE,
J. LYONS,
} Committee.

To Littleton W. Tazewell, and John Tyler, esqrs.

Norfolk, March 28th, 1831.

GENTLEMEN—I have this moment received your letter of the 26th instant, inviting me to partake of a public dinner to be given in Richmond, by a number of the members of the present general assembly, and citizens of Richmond, at such time as will suit my convenience; and in compliance with your request, I immediately answer it.—I hope I need not say to any of you, gentlemen, that it will give me much pleasure, at all times, to meet you and any others of the members of the general assembly, or of my friends of the city of Richmond, upon any ordinary occasion, when we may freely interchange our friendly greetings and salutations, and frankly communicate to each other our thoughts and opinions, upon any and every subject—but I hope you will excuse me for declining to accept an invitation to a public dinner, although it is proposed to be given by even such persons.

I will not affect ignorance of the kind and generous feelings that have prompted some of my countrymen to offer me, and through you too, (in whom I recognise, much valued friends) this testimonial of their regard and esteem, and undiminished confidence. Believe me, these feelings are properly appreciated by me. They speak directly to the heart; and inspire such gratitude as I may not attempt to express. You must pardon me, however, for suggesting, that those feelings, and the causes by which they are produced, constitute of themselves, a strong objection to our meeting at this time, upon any such occasion as that to which you invite me.

Public dinners, given to public men, in seasons of high party excitement, are not well calculated to sweeten the natural acerbity of party feelings. Many are the causes of agitation at this time, which we ought to hope may be but accidental and temporary. For my own part, I will not abandon this hope until I am constrained to do so.—While it yet lingers with me, I wish not to fan the flame of discontent, further than my duty may require. I should find it difficult, perhaps impossible, to avoid this, was I to comply with your kind request now.—Therefore, I again pray you to excuse me yourselves, and to make my excuse acceptable to those by whom you have been deputed, for declining this.

Each of you who know me well, will perfectly understand the single motive that dictated this ungracious refusal of your proffered kindness. To others, with whose acquaintance I am not honoured; I beg you to say, that I am truly sensible of their kind and generous regard, which has induced them to offer me this proof of their favorable consideration and approbation, at this particular juncture. If I needed any stimulant to urge me on in the straight-foward path of my duty, I should find it in this.—But as a representative of Virginia, I can never forget what is due to her; and will ever strive to maintain her rights and interests; in striving to maintain the federal constitution, such as she believed it to be when she adopted it. She asks nothing more; and will not be content with any thing less than this.

I am, very respectfully, gentlemen, your most obedient servant, LITTLETON W. TAZEWELL.

To Messrs. T. W. Gilmer, William O. Goode, Thomas Miller, P. Williams, jr. B. W. Leigh, R. N. Venable, and J. Lyons.

—

Gloucester, April 3, 1831.

GENTLEMEN—Your letter bearing the date and post mark of the 26th March, conveying to me on behalf of a number of the members of the present general assembly and citizens of Richmond, an invitation to partake of a public dinner, to be given in Richmond, at such time as would suit my convenience, did not reach me until last evening, a circumstance which I the more regret, as you express solicitude for an early answer. Proceeding, as does this manifestation of respect and confidence, as well from those who now compose the constituent body, to which I am responsible, as from many of my former constituents of the city of Richmond, it pains me to forego the honor of your invitation. The illness of a member of my family leaves me no alternative, but to decline it. Need I express to you, gentlemen, the deep impression which your communication has made upon me?—I cannot be insensible of the fact that it has originated in the approval of the humble part which I have borne in certain recent political transactions—and no higher or more acceptable reward can be offered me on this side the grave. From it I shall derive an additional inducement to continue in the open and manifest path of duty with an unfaultering step. Poorly would any man deserve to represent the state of Virginia, who would permit himself by any motive however urgent, to abandon the political doctrines which she has uniformly and unceasingly maintained; and on the preservation of which, in my settled conviction, depends all that is most dear and sacred amongst men.

Be pleased to make my acknowledgments acceptable to those whom you represent, and receive for yourselves jointly and individually, the assurances of my profound respect. I have the honor, to be, gentlemen, your most obedient servant, JOHN TYLER.

To Messrs. T. W. Gilmer, William O. Goode, Th. Miller, P. Williams, jr. B. W. Leigh, R. N. Venable, and J. Lyons.

GEN. BLAIR AND DR. COOPER.

Washington city, 17th Dec. 1830.

Rev. Reuben Tucker: DEAR SIR—I enclose you a sophistical, perhaps I should say, blasphemous document, written, as I am informed, by Thomas Cooper, president of the South Carolina college, signed "A Layman."

I am perfectly at a loss to conjecture the object of Dr. Cooper, in writing such a piece, unless it be to raise a quarrel with the people of South Carolina in order to furnish himself with a pretext for running away and leaving them—for, surely, it would be a bad comment on the morality of South Carolina, that any man should avow and publish such doctrines, and yet be sustained and cherished by that community.

I am myself opposed to the suspension of the mail on the Sabbath—not because I fear such a measure would lead to "an union of church and state," but because I think the transportation of the mail on Sunday and every other day, absolutely necessary to the prompt and safe administration of the government. But to deery the preaching of the gospel, and ridicule public worship, requires a degree of hardihood, impiety and misanthropy that I had hoped no man in South Carolina could entertain. I am glad that he is not a native of our country from whom such sentiments have emanated. He denies that we have any scriptural authority for public prayer. But how stands the fact? Let any one read St. Mark, 11th chap. and 17th verse; St. Luke, 11–1—22–40; the acts of the apostles, 1–24—3–1—4–31, and they will find not only ample authority for public prayer but find that it is taught and enjoined, as a duty, by Christ and his disciples, both in precept and example. No doubt many other texts of scripture can be quoted as positive authority for the practice, but it is quite unnecessary to search them out.

Because our Lord condemned and repudiated all ostentatious and hypocritical prayer in public, such as was resorted to by the Pharisees with great insincerity, merely "to be seen of men," and to impose upon them —because, I say, Christ censured this kind of base hypocrisy; Dr. Cooper takes it for granted that he forbade "public prayer, both by his words and by his practice." This, to say the least of it, is a strange result, and one to which no man of common sense and common honesty can come, after reading the scriptures.

I sincerely believe there is "a divine reality in the Christian religion." I wish this belief to acquire strength daily if possible; that I may at last die in it without doubt or wavering.

I therefore, for one, thank no man for attempting to shake our faith in the Divine authenticity of Christianity, or in the efficacy of public prayer and preaching. Nor can I regard him as a good citizen or a patriotic man that would do so. Admitting the whole theory of the Christian religion to be fabulous and fictitious, all must agree that it forms an excellent system of morality, and constitutes the strongest cement of civilized society.—Very few, even of the few who profess to be governed by "a sense of honor," are restained by its rules. The laws of human enactment are, for the most part, easily evaded; and was it not for "the dread of an hereafter"—the apprehensions of "a future reckoning," most men would be "devils incarnate."

But I am neither so vain or so arrogant as to volunteer a defence of public prayer and preaching. If these holy practices need a champion to protect them from the unhallowed attacks of infidelity, a much abler one will be found in you and other ministers of the gospel. I merely wish to protest against such sacrilege, and to disclaim the policy of fostering, in the bosom of our community, a man capable of such profanation.

Yet it seems that such a man is cherished and patronized by our state legislature. He is placed at the head of our college, and charged with the instruction of our youth. He presides over and controls an institution, that virtually governs the state. He, forsooth, must dictate the politics and policy of South Carolina, control her most important elections, and shape her destiny. I believe his unwarrantable interference and tampering in the late intrigues, by which judge Smith's re-election to the senate of the United States was defeated, is no secret to any body.

I will only add, further, that if he is to be continued in his present situation, and permitted to go on instilling heterodox ideas and infidel doctrines into the minds of his pupils, South Carolina (to say nothing of political consequences), may soon "claim the palm" from revolutionary France, on the score of immorality and atheism.

I remain, dear sir, your friend, and humble servant,

JAMES BLAIR.

—

Columbia, Jan. 19, 1831.

To the editor of the Camden Journal:

SIR—I observe in your paper, a letter from general Blair, accusing me of being the author of an ANONYMOUS pamphlet published at Washington, and which he considers is of an infidel tendency.

I cannot help regarding general Blair with some astonishment in this new character of defender of the faith, and so forth, and I congratulate the clergy on this precious acquisition of an advocate so exemplary for his theological knowledge and still more so for his moral conduct!

This imputation is too manifestly a political attack, for any doubt to exist of the nature of it, either in my mind or in that of the public.

General Blair is quite welcome to impute to me any thing whatever that he thinks proper. With a man of gen. Blair's character, I cannot condescend to enter into any explanation or controversy. I am sir, your obedient servant, THOMAS COOPER, M. D.

—

Washington city, 4th Feb. 1831.

To the editor of the Camden Journal:

SIR—I have just seen in your paper of the 24th ult. a letter addressed to you by "Thomas Cooper, M. D." in which he says I "accuse him of being the author of an anonymous pamphlet, &c. &c." Although he does not deny being the author of that pamphlet, yet as such denial might be inferred from the tenor of his letter, it may be necessary I should give my authority for imputing it to him.

I was informed by two respectable members of congress from the south, who are friends and admirers of Dr. Cooper, that "a pamphlet written by him and worth its weight in gold, was sold in the post office," who recommended me to buy and send some of them to my constituents. I called on the postmaster in the capitol and purchased near a dollar's worth of those pamphlets before I knew their character and contents. The postmaster told me he understood them to have been written by Dr. Cooper, and that a large bundle of them had been brought into the office addressed to one of the members alluded to. The same gentlemen informed gen. Tucker the honorable John Campbell and others, Dr. Cooper was the author of this pamphlet,—and one of those gentlemen has conversed with me this evening on the subject, and still represents Dr. Cooper as the author. For obvious reasons I do not wish to publish their names, but I will communicate them to Dr. Cooper privately,—whenever he demands them.

Those pamphlets have been bought by numerous persons, and sent in various directions through the country. Having unwittingly purchased those pamphlets, I concluded to send them to such of my constituents as professed religion,—and, lest I should be regarded as assenting to the heterodox sentiments contained in them, I accompanied each pamphlet with a few lines expressive of my opinion and disapprobation of the production.

Dr. Cooper characterizes my letter as "a political attack." So far from intending any such thing, it was written to an individual unconnected with politics, without the least intention of publication, and I reluctantly assented to its publication, at the request of that individual and others, rather than recede from a public avowal of the views and principles it contained.

Dr. Cooper "regards me with astonishment in this new character of defender of the faith and so forth." No wonder. I should regard myself with astonishment were I so vain and presumptuous as to assume that high and sacred character. But I have not done so—on the contrary I positively disclaimed any such pretension. "I merely protested against such sacrilege, and repudiated the policy of fostering in the bosom of our community, and continuing at the head of our college a man of such dangerous principles, and capable of such profanation." The Dr. therefore, was premature in his ironical "congratulations of the clergy on this precious acquisition of an advocate so exemplary for his theological knowledge, and still more so for his moral conduct!"

Although I am not conscious of being more immoral than men are generally, I acknowledge, nevertheless, that I am a very great sinner. I am fully aware of my unworthiness to approach that awful and Holy Majesty in whose sight the angels of heaven are impure—and I am conscious of my dependence on that merciful and benevolent Mediator, of whose aid and intercession this old Anti-Christ, (Dr. Cooper), would deprive me.

But the Doctor "cannot condescend to enter into any explanation or controversy, with a man of my character." Is it possible! Perhaps it is because I cannot add to my humble name the letters "M. D." of which he seems so proud—or, probably it is because I have never stained the Ermine or disgraced the seat of justice, that I am so obnoxious to this old political prostitute. I have never aspired to any other character than that of an honest man: and this even my enemies will award to me. I was born and raised, and have lived my whole life, in the district I now have the honor of representing in congress, and I challenge Dr. Cooper, or any other individual to establish any transaction of my life which would be considered criminal or dishonorable before the most punctilious tribunal. Until this is done, the public will consider his insinuations as false as the source is base from which they have emanated.

Dr. Cooper may consider this quite a convenient mode of giving this matter the "go by," but the public will require something more. The people will hold him responsible for the doctrines and principles he is charged with having promulgated, and will require some "explanation" about the pamphlet in question. But I, forsooth, must go through various gradations of life, and become quite a different character from what I am at present, before "Thomas Cooper, M. D." can condescend to give me any explanation concerning it. Perhaps if I had been scouted out of England—discarded from the judicial bench of Pennsylvania—scourged from that state by the lash of public justice, and the hootings of the people, and at a certain period had been the bosom friend of Marat, Le Gendre, and the bloodiest of the bloody butchers of revolutionary France, and could have been so fortunate as to have Cobbett to vouch this for me, Dr. Cooper might "descend to a controversy with me." But as I cannot aspire to such attainments, or hope for such a high distinction of character, I must take my leave of "Thomas Cooper, M. D." forever. Very respectfully, your obedient humble servant, JAMES BLAIR.

—

Columbia, February 21, 1831.

To the editor of the Camden Journal:

SIR—General Blair is very angry that I will not father some strange pamphlet published anonymously, five hundred miles off, and which seems utterly unknown in the district where I live. I do not choose to father any anonymous pamphlet; but general Blair is quite welcome to impute to me all the pamphlets of that description which have been published for a twelve month past, or which may be published for a twelve month to come. Whoever wrote the pamphlet, evidently meant it should stand or fall by its own intrinsic merits or demerits, without any personal sanction whatever; and the author seems to have sent it to Washington, because the wisdom of the nation is there congregated; where bad arguments, or inaccurate facts were most likely to meet the exposure they deserved. At any rate, I much wish general Blair would have the goodness to republish that pamphlet verbatim et literatim, that the public here may know what it really is.

General Blair calls me many hard names, and is very abusive. All this is right enough; it is the mode of warfare that suits his habits and character, it will not suit mine. Those who know me, will laugh at his abuse; those who do not know me, will require better evidence in support of it than general Blair's assertions.

General Blair gives himself a very excellent character in his reply to me. I sincerely hope he deserves it. I wish it had rested upon more unexceptionable authority; for no man is quite competent as a witness in his own favor. Great wits they say have bad memories, and therefore general Blair may possibly need to have his memory refreshed by some of his constituents as to the particulars and circumstances of the following cases, viz:

The state v. James Blair: Lovick Young v. James Blair. also as to the situation in which general Blair left the sheriff's office: also as to the unfortunate cause that prevented general Blair from proceeding to Washington at the second session, as a representative of that district, after having succeeded against judge Brevard. I am, sir, your obedient servant,

THOMAS COOPER.

THE CHEROKEE NATION vs. THE STATE OF GEORGIA.—JANUARY TERM, 1831.

From the National Intelligencer.

Opinion of the supreme court of the United States, delivered by chief justice MARSHALL, on a motion of the Cherokee nation for a writ of injunction and subpœna against the state of Georgia.

This bill is brought by the Cherokee nation, praying an injunction to restrain the state of Georgia from the execution of certain laws of that state, which, as alleged, go directly to annihilate the Cherokees as a political society, and to seize, for the use of Georgia, the lands of the nation which have been assured to them by the U. States in solemn treaties repeatedly made and still in force.

If courts were permitted to indulge their sympathies, a case better calculated to excite them can scarcely be imagined. A people once numerous, powerful and truly independent; found by our ancestors in the quiet and uncontrolled possession of an ample domain, gradually sinking beneath our superior policy, our arts and our arms, have yielded their lands by successive treaties, each of which contains a solemn guarantee of the residue, until they retain no more of their former extensive territory than is necessary to their comfortable subsistence. To preserve this remnant the present application is made.

Before we can look into the merits of the case, a preliminary inquiry presents itself. Has this court jurisdiction of the cause?

The third article of the constitution describes the extent of the judicial power. The second section closes an enumeration of the cases to which it is extended, with "controversies" "between a state or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects." A subsequent clause of the same section gives the supreme court original jurisdiction in all cases in which a state shall be a party. The party defendant may then unquestionably be sued in this court. May the plaintiff sue in it? Is the Cherokee nation a foreign state in the sense in which that term is used in the constitution?

The counsel for the plaintiffs have maintained the affirmative of this proposition with great earnestness and ability. So much of the argument as was intended to prove the character of the Cherokees as a state, as a distinct political society, separated from others, capable of managing its own affairs and governing itself, has, in the opinion of a majority of the judges, been completely successful. They have been uniformly treated as a state, from the settlement of our country. The numerous treaties made with them by the United States recognize them as a people capable of maintaining the relations of peace and war, of being responsible in their political character for any violation of their engagements, or for any aggression committed on the citizens of the United States by any individual of their community. Laws have been enacted in the spirit of these treaties. The acts of our government plainly recognize the Cherokee nation as a state, and the courts are bound by those acts.

A question of much more difficulty remains. Do the Cherokees constitute a foreign state in the sense of the constitution?

The counsel have shewn conclusively that they are not a state of the union, and insisted that individually they are aliens, not owing allegiance to the U. States. An aggregate of aliens composing a state must, they say, be a foreign state. Each individual being foreign, the whole must be foreign.

This argument is imposing, but we must examine it more closely before we yield to it. The condition of the Indians in relation to the United States is perhaps unlike that of any other two people in existence. In the general, nations not owing a common allegiance are foreign to each other. The term foreign nation is, with strict propriety, applicable by either to the other. But the relation of the Indians to the United States is marked by peculiar and cardinal distinctions, which exist no where else.

The Indian territory is admitted to compose a part of the United States. In all our maps, geographical treaties, histories and laws, it is so considered. In all our intercourse with foreign nations, in our commercial regulations, in any attempt at intercourse between Indians and foreign nations, they are considered as within the jurisdictional limits of the United States, subject to many of those restraints which are imposed upon our own citizens. They acknowledge themselves in their treaties to be under the protection of the United States; they admit that the United States have the sole and exclusive right of regulating the trade with them, and of managing all their affairs, as they think proper, and the Cherokees in particular were allowed by the treaty of Hopewell, which preceded the constitution, "to send a deputy of their choice, whenever they think fit, to congress." Treaties were made with some tribes by the state of New York, under a then unsettled construction of the confederation, by which they ceded all their lands to the state, taking back a limited grant to themselves, in which they admit their dependence.

Though the Indians are acknowledged to have an unquestionable and heretofore unquestioned right to the lands they occupy until that right shall be extinguished by a voluntary cession to our government, yet it may well be doubted whether those tribes which reside within the acknowledged boundaries of the United States can, with strict accuracy, be denominated foreign nations. They may, more correctly, perhaps, be denominated domestic dependent nations. They occupy a territory to which we assert a title independent of their will, which must take effect in point of possession when their right of possession ceases. Meanwhile they are in a state of pupilage. Their relation to the United States resembles that of a ward to his guardian.

They look to our government for protection, rely upon its kindness, and its power, appeal to it for relief to their wants, and address the president as their great father. They and their country are considered by foreign nations, as well as by ourselves, as being so completely under the sovereignty and dominion of the United States, that any attempt to acquire their lands, or to form a political connexion with them, would be considered by all as an invasion of our territory, and an act of hostility.

These considerations go far to support the opinion, that the framers of our constitution had not the Indian tribes in view, when they opened the courts of the union to controversies between a state or the citizens thereof, and foreign states.

In considering this subject, the habits and usages of the Indians, in their intercourse with their white neighbors, ought not to be entirely disregarded. At the time the constitution was framed, the idea of appealing to an American court of justice for an assertion of right or a redress of wrongs had, perhaps, never entered the mind of an Indian or of his tribe. Their appeal was to the tomahawk, or to the government. This was well understood by the statesmen who framed the constitution of the United States, and might furnish some reason for omitting to enumerate them among the parties who might sue in the courts of the union. Be this as it may, the peculiar relations between the United States and the Indians occupying our territory, are such, that we should feel much difficulty in considering them as designated by the term foreign state, were there no other part of the constitution which might shed light on the meaning of these words. But we think that, in construing them, considerable aid is furnished by that clause in the eighth section of the third article which empowers congress to "regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several states, and with the Indian tribes."

In this clause they are as clearly contra-distinguished by a name appropriate to themselves, from foreign nations, as from the several states composing the union. They are designated by a distinct appellation, and as this appellation can be applied to neither of the others, neither can the appellation distinguishing either of the others be in fair construction applied to them. The objects to which the power of regulating commerce might be directed, are divided into three distinct classes—foreign nations, the several states, and Indian tribes. When framing this article, the convention considered them as entirely distinct. We cannot assume that the distinction was lost in framing a subsequent article, unless there be something in its language to authorize the assumption.

The counsel for the plaintiffs contend that the words "Indian tribes" were introduced into the article, empowering congress to regulate commerce, for the purpose of removing those doubts in which the management of Indian affairs was involved, by the language of the ninth article of the confederation. Intending to give the whole power of managing those affairs to the government about to be instituted, the convention confined it explicitly, and omitted those qualifications which embarrassed the exercise of it as granted in the confederation. This may be admitted without weakening the construction which has been intimated. Had the Indian tribes been foreign nations in the view of the convention, this exclusive power of regulating intercourse with them might have been, and most probably would have been, specifically given, in language contra-distinguishing them from foreign nations. Congress might have been empowered "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, including the Indian tribes, and among the several states." This language would have suggested itself to statesmen who considered the Indian tribes as foreign nations and were yet desirous of mentioning them particularly.

It has been also said that the same words have not necessarily the same meaning attached to them when found in different parts of the same instrument. Their meaning is controlled by the context. This is undoubtedly true. In common language, the same word has various meanings, and the peculiar sense in which it is used in any sentence is to be determined by the context. This may not be equally true with respect to proper names. Foreign nations is a general term, the application of which to Indian tribes, when used in the American constitution, is at best extremely questionable. In one article in which a power is given to be exercised in regard to foreign nations generally, and to the Indian tribes particularly, they are mentioned as separate in terms clearly contra-distinguishing them from each other. We perceive plainly that the constitution in this article does not comprehend Indian tribes in the general term 'foreign nations,' not, we presume, because a tribe may not be a nation, but because it is not foreign to the United States. When afterwards the term 'foreign state' is introduced, we cannot impute to the convention the intention to desert its former meaning, and to comprehend Indian tribes within it, unless the context force that construction on us. We find nothing in the context, and nothing in the subject of the article, which leads to it.

The court has bestowed its best attention on this question, and after mature deliberation, the majority is of opinion that an Indian tribe or nation within the United States is not a foreign state in the sense of the constitution, and cannot maintain an action in the courts of the United States.

A serious additional objection exists to the jurisdiction of the court. Is the matter of the bill the proper subject for judicial inquiry and decision? It seeks to restrain a state from a forcible exercise of legislative power over a neighboring people asserting their independence, their right to which the state denies. On several of the matters alleged in the bill, for example, on the laws making it criminal to exercise the usual powers of self government in their own country by the Cherokee nation, this court cannot interpose, at least in the form in which those matters are presented. That part of the bill which respects the lands occupied by the Indians, and prays the aid of the court to protect their possessions, may be more doubtful. The mere question of right might perhaps be decided by this court in a proper case with proper parties. But the court is asked to do more than to decide on the title. The bill requires us to control the legislation of Georgia, and to restrain the exertion of its physical force. The propriety of such an interposition by the court may be well questioned. It savors too much of exercise of political power to be within the proper province of the judicial department. But the opinion on the point respecting parties makes it unnecessary to decide this question.

If it be true that the Cherokee nation have rights, this is not the tribunal in which those rights are to be asserted. If it be true that wrongs have been inflicted, and that still greater are to be apprehended, this is not the tribunal which can redress the past or prevent the future.

The motion for an injunction is denied.

The Cherokee Phenix accompanies the publication of the opinion with the following remarks:

"The court has decided that the Cherokee nation is not a foreign state in the sense of the constitution, and, of course, as a nation, cannot maintain an action in the courts of the United States. This decision places us in a peculiar situation. While most of the rights for which we have contended are most explicitly acknowledged and conceded by the court, we are at the same time considered to be in a state of "pupilage," unable to sue for those rights in the judicial tribunals. This is certainly no enviable position. Having rights, important rights, but no redress, except it be in the executive and congress of the United States, and those have already proved but a broken reed which has been piercing us to our very vitals. When we say that we have no redress in the courts of the union, we mean in our national capacity, for so the court has decided; and when it is said by the court that it cannot exercise jurisdiction, we presume it is meant original jurisdiction, for that was the question before them. It was only by considering the Cherokee nation a foreign state, in the sense of the constitution, that it could have exercised jurisdiction and awarded the writ of injunction. Whether the Cherokees as individuals can receive protection from the supreme court in its appellate jurisdiction, is a question we are not capable of answering. We must leave that to futurity."

INSOLVENT DEBTORS.

LAW OF THE UNITED STATES.

An act for the relief of certain insolvent debtors of the United States.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That any person who was an insolvent debtor on or before the first day of January last, and who is indebted to the United States for any sum of money then due, which he is unable to pay, unless such person be indebted as the principal in an official bond, or for public money received by him, and not paid over or accounted for according to law, or for any fine, forfeiture, or penalty, incurred by the violation of any law of the United States, may make application in writing under oath or affirmation, to the secretary of the treasury, for the purpose of obtaining a release or discharge of the said debt; which application shall state, as near as may be, the time when the applicant became insolvent, how soon thereafter he made known his insolvency to his creditors, the cause or causes, and the amount of such insolvency; and, also, all the estate, real and personal, which the said applicant owned at the time of his insolvency, and the manner in which such estate has been disposed of; and what estate, if any, he has since owned, and still owns.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the secretary of the treasury is hereby directed to transmit to the district attorney of the United States for the district or territory within which the said applicant shall reside, a certificate copy of said application, with such instructions as he may think proper; and it shall be the duty of the said district attorney to lay the said copy of such application before the commissioner or commissioners of insolvency, to be appointed by virtue of this act, and to appear and act before them as council in behalf of the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the secretary of the treasury is hereby authorised and directed to appoint any number of commissioners of insolvency he may think proper, not exceeding three in each judicial district or territory of the United States, who, before they enter upon the duties of their appointment, shall severally take an oath or affirmation before one of the justices of the supreme court, or before any judge of a district court of the United States, that they will faithfully execute the trust committed to them: and it shall be the duty of the said commissioner or commissioners to proceed publicly to examine the books, papers, and vouchers of each of the said applicants; and they, or either of them, shall also be authorised to examine each of the said applicants, or any other person or persons, upon oath or affirmation, touching the said application: and it shall be the duty of the said commissioner or commissioners to make a report, in writing, to the said secretary, of the result of their examination in each case, therein particularly stating, as near as may be, the time when the applicant became insolvent, how soon thereafter he made known his insolvency to his creditors, the cause or causes, and the amount of such insolvency; and, also, all the estate, real and personal, which the said applicant owned at the time of his insolvency, and the manner in which such estate has been disposed of; and what estate, if any, he has since owned, and still owns.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the secretary of the treasury, after he shall have received the report of the said commissioner or commissioners, shall proceed to examine the circumstances of each case; and, if it shall have been proved to his satisfaction that the said debtor is unable to pay the said debt or debts which he owes to the United States; that he hath done no act fraudulently to deprive the United States of their legal priority; that he has not been guilty of any fraud, nor made any conveyance of his estate, real or personal, in trust for himself, or with an intent to defraud the United States, or whereby to expect any benefit or advantage to himself or family; then, and in that case, the said secretary may compromise with the said debtor, upon such terms and conditions as he may think reasonable and proper under all the circumstances of the case, and may execute a release to him or her for the amount of the said debt or debts which he or she may owe to the United States; which said release shall contain a recital that the foregoing particulars have been satisfactorily proved to the said secretary: Provided, however, That the said release shall be rendered null and void, if it shall at any time be ascertained that the said insolvent debtor hath obtained the same upon false suggestions.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That if the said insolvent debtor, or any other person, shall falsely take an oath or affirmation, under this act, he or she shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall suffer the pains and penalties in that case provided.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That each of the said commissioners of insolvency shall receive five dollars per day for each day they shall be actually employed in the performance of their duty under this act; which sum, together with the actual expense incurred for office rent and all other contingencies, provided the same shall not, in the whole, exceed two dollars per day, shall be apportioned by the several applicants by the said commissioner or commissioners, under the direction of the secretary of the treasury, according to the time occupied in the investigation of each case, and each of the said applicants, immediately after the investigation of his or her case shall be completed, by the commissioner or commissioners, and before the report shall be transmitted to the said secretary, shall pay his or her respective proportions of the same: and it shall be the duty of the said commissioner or commissioners, to transmit with his or their report, in each case, a statement, under oath or affirmation, to the said secretary, of the time actually occupied in the investigation thereof, and the amount which they shall have received from the said applicant.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the compensation to be paid to the district attorney of each district and territory shall be five dollars for each day he shall be actually employed under the provisions of this act.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the secretary of the treasury to report annually to congress the names of the applicants under this act, and the nature and amount of the debt or debts due from each to the United States; and also, the names of those who shall have obtained releases, together with the terms of compromise in each case.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the sum of five thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue in force for three years and no longer.

ANDREW STEVENSON.
speaker of the house of representatives.
JOHN C. CALHOUN,
president of the senate.
Approved, March 2, 1831.
ANDREW JACKSON.

Treasury department, 28th March, 1831.

Persons intending to apply for the benefit of the act entitled "an act for the relief of insolvent debtors of the United States," are hereby notified that the persons entitled to relief under said act are those who were insolvent on or before the 1st day of January, 1831, and were indebted to the United States in a sum of money then due which they are unable to pay, and who are not indebted as the principal on an official bond, or for public money received and not paid over or accounted for according to law, or for any fine, forfeiture or penalty incurred by the violation of any law of the United States. Applications for a release or discharge under the act must be made in writing, under oath or affirmation, and forwarded to the secretary of the treasury, stating, as near as may be, the time when the applicant became insolvent, and when he made his insolvency known to his creditors, the cause of such insolvency, and the amount thereof, and also all the estate real and personal, owned at the time of such insolvency, with a description of the same; and also the manner in which such estate has been disposed of, that is to say, by furnishing a list of the insolvent's creditors at the time of his insolvency, with the amount then due to each; the sums since paid, and the balances still remaining due to them respectively, also the sums since paid and balances remaining due to other persons not creditors at the time aforesaid; and what estate or property, if any, owned at the time of his becoming insolvent, or which he has since acquired a right to, has been conveyed or transferred to any other person, with intent to be applied directly or indirectly to the use or benefit of such insolvent or his family, and also a statement of all the estate if any, and the disposition and condition thereof, which he has since owned or still owns. It may be observed, that the statement aforesaid should be confined exclusively to facts, and arranged in as simple and intelligible a form as possible, unaccompanied by any argument or prolix narrative.

As all the facts upon which the decision of the secretary of the treasury is to be made, must be previously examined and reported upon by the commissioners, no communication other than the application referred to in the first section of the act can be received at the department, except through that channel.

S. D. INGHAM, secretary of the treasury.

STATISTICAL ARTICLES.

Extent, population, revenue, and debt, of the principal states in Europe, 1829.

BY PRESIDENT VON MALCHUS.*

	Superfices.	Population.	Revenue.	Debt.
	Geographical sq. miles.
Russian empire	6,002,774	60,367,000	£17,420,000	£35,550,000
Austria	194,448	32,838,900	13,940,000	78,100,000
France (without its colonies)	161,376	32,500,000	39,020,000	194,400,000
Great Britain (ditto)	88,560	22,129,035	51,500,000	819,600,000
Prussia	80,240	12,552,278	8,149,000	29,701,000
The Netherlands	19,136	6,116,635	6,590,000	148,500,000
Sweden	126,960	2,900,000	2,170,000
Norway	92,768	1,050,132	354,000	252,100
Denmark	16,364	1,981,014	1,238,000	3,729,000
Poland	36,668	4,035,700	1,306,000	5,740,000
Spain	135,180	13,909,000	6,420,000	70,000,000
Portugal	27,552	5,013,950	2,110,000	5,649,000
Two Sicilies	31,792	7,414,717	3,521,000	18,974,000
Sardinia	21,840	4,033,966	2,750,000	4,584,000
States of the church	12,976	2,483,940	1,238,000	17,142,000
Grand Duchy of Tuscany	6,920	1,300,000	623,400	1,234,000
Switzerland	11,686	2,037,080	448,000
Ottoman Empire in Europe	160,000	9,476,000	2,475,000	3,667,000
Bavaria	22,160	4,037,017	2,973,000	11,311,000
Saxony	5,568	1,350,000	1,009,000	3,300,000
Hanover	11,620	1,537,500	990,000	2,384,000
Wurtemberg	5,744	1,535,400	851,950	2,505,000
Baden	4,384	1,141,727	901,290	1,670,000
Hesse (Darmstadt)	2,960	697,901	537,260	1,134,900
Hesse (Electorate)	3,328	708,000	476,000	220,000

BRITISH EMPIRE.

From Malte Brun.

Countries.	Square miles.	Total Square miles.	Population	Total Population
Great Britain and Ireland	110,000		23,500,000
Ionian Isles, Malta & Gibraltar	6,000		320,000
Total in Europe		116,000		23,820,000
Indostan	1,103,000		123,000,000
Ceylon	20,000		1,000,000
Total in Asia		1,123,000		124,000,000
Cape of Good Hope, Isle of France, Sierra Leon, St. Helena	124,000		300,000
Total in Africa		124,000		300,000
New Holland, Van Diemen's Land, &c.	3,500,000		3,000,000
Total in Oceancia		3,500,000		2,000,000
Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, N. F. Land, Hudson's Bay, &c.	3,000,000		2,500,000
Demerara, Jamaica, Bahamas & Antilles	24,000		1,030,000
Total in America		3,024,000		3,536,000
Total		7,837,000		153,656,000

*This table is founded, as far as possible, upon official documents; and probably no individual can have enjoyed better sources of correct information than one who was successively minister of finance to the former king of Wesephalia and the present sovereign of Wurtemberg.

THE PATENT OFFICE.

From the N. Y. Evening Post.

"The list of patents granted in the United States during the last year has been published. The whole number of inventions produced by the fertile mechanical genius of our people within that period is 544, of which 190, more than a third of the whole, have been furnished from New York. New England, with a population somewhat lower, has been less prolific—having taken out but 146 patents, 52 of which were granted to citizens of Connecticut. Deducting the patents sent to New York and New England, only 208 are left for the other states of the union. Of these 88 were sent to Pennsylvania, 24 to Maryland, 26 to Virginia, and 8 to New Jersey. Ohio, with her large population, does little credit to her New England origin in having obtained but 19. The number of patents sent to the other states is not worth mentioning. None have been taken out for Illinois and Missouri, and but one each in the states of Mississippi and Alabama. The agriculturalists of the west are too much occupied with the tillage of their fertile soil, to bestow much attention upon the handicraft labors which occupy their brethren of the Atlantic states.

"The task which has called forth the greatest number of attempts of our mechanicians during the last year is that of perfecting the threshing machine. Thirty-seven threshing machines have been produced, the greater number of which were invented in this state. The ploughshare has received thirteen new forms, there is a new machine for shelling corn, two for cutting straw, and though we are concerned to see that no additional engine for paring apples has been invented, yet one has been contrived for gathering them. Eight spinning jennies and spinning machines have been patented, six machines for making hats, six stoves, seven steam engines, seven grist mills, and about a dozen contrivances relating to rail roads. The washing and churning machines, also, which has so long perplexed the ingenuity of our people to bring to such a state of perfection as to save much ungrateful and fatiguing labor to the operator, have received their usual number of annual improvements. Nineteen churning machines and twenty-one washing machines have, within the year past, been added to the catalogue of the hundreds which were invented within thirty years previous. The North Carolina gold mines have given occasion to eight new methods of separating gold from earthy mixtures. Mr. John Low, of this state, has invented a bedstead, the utility of which we cannot doubt, since it is called the Metamorphosic Alleviator; and Mr. Amable J. Brasier, of Philadelphia, has discovered a method of turning potatoes into sugar, or, as he terms it, of saccharifying them."

THE INCLINED PLANE.

From the New York American of Dec. 16.

Morris canal—first boat through Newark. The inclined plane being completed, on Friday last we had the pleasure of witnessing the passage of the first boat through our town. About ten o'clock the car descended from the summit of the plane into the water of the canal behind the hill which stretches along the north side of the town, until there was a sufficient depth of water upon the floor of the car to float the boat on. The large and beautiful boat Dover, of Dover, consigned to Mr. Jonathan Cory, was then towed into the car and secured. The water was now let in upon the large wheel at the summit, and the machinery set in motion, under the direction of major Douglass, the enterprizing engineer. The cable-chain, one end being attached to the car and the other to the machinery, began to tighten—then the car, with the boat securely housed within its frame, having about two hundred persons on board, rose majestically out of the water. In one minute she was upon the summit, which she passed apparently with all the ease that a ship would cross a wave of the sea. The scene presented to the spectators from the bridge below the plane, when the bow of the vessel rose upon the summit from behind the hill for the first time, was indescribably grand and beautiful. As the forward wheels of the car commenced their descent from the top, the boat seemed gently to bow to the spectators and the town below, which she was now about to enter for the first time, when down she came, amidst the shouts and cheers of the multitude collected to view the wonder—a boat sixty feet long sailing over a mountain seventy feet high, without any visible agent being employed to propel her forward, the large wheel and all the other machinery being under ground and concealed from view. There was no interruption to her progress at the summit, her advancing motion being constant and regular from the time she left the water on one side of the hill until she again entered it on the other. In six and a half minutes she descended from the summit to the level of the town and re-entered her native element—thus passing a plane 1,040 feet long, overcoming a descent of 70 feet, and advancing forward 770 feet in six and a half minutes. The boat was then floated out of the car and drawn by two horses and as many boys as could get hold of the tow-line, through the town to the lock near the river, where she took in a quantity of iron and returned again and ascended the plane in the afternoon, meeting and passing the boat Maria Colden about midway of the plane, the one ascending and the other descending at the same time. The whole exhibition was not less grand than novel, and will form an important era in the annals of our town.

The boats are now passing up and down the inclined plane every day.

CHURCH REFORM—IN ENGLAND.

From the Journal of Commerce.

A very animated debate took place in the British house of lords on the evening of February 10th, relative to church tythes, non-residence of clergy, &c. It would seem from the number of petitions which are pouring into parliament on this subject, that the people of England are growing weary of the abuses which so extensively prevail in this department of the public service. There is need enough of reform, both for the sake of the church and the tax-payers. Religion never flourished—that religion we mean, which will stand the test of the final day—when its followers reposed on beds of roses; when its ministers either possessed or desired a superabundance of the good things of this life; when the pulpit was coveted as a medium of earthly aggrandizement, wealth, or any other thing whatever, save an honest desire to promote the best interests of men. We know well that many clergymen of the church of England are examples of piety and every good work; and if there are too many of the contrary character, it is a natural consequence of the circumstances in which they are placed.

We have before us a statement, from which it appears that the clergy of England and Ireland (meaning those of the established church) receive annually £8,896,000 from 6,000,000 hearers, while the clergy of all the christian world besides receive only £8,852,000, from 198,000,000 hearers! A petition recently presented to his majesty* from a clergyman in Somersetshire, states, "that whilst the average income of the bishops is ten thousand pounds a year, in addition to great patronage, there are nearly three thousand curates whose stipend is less than £90 a year, and more than four hundred of whom receive less than £50 a year. That, whilst certain offices of deans, canons, prebends, &c. not found in scripture, and unknown to the ancient christain church, but which are of popish origin, and deemed useless by almost all persons, are receiving annually many thousands a year from the funds of the church for no adequate service, there are many of the working clergy reduced to abject poverty, obliged to subsist on charity, and even to receive the cast-off clothes of their compassionate neighbors." And in respect to non-residence, lord King remarked in Parliament on the occasion above referred to, that in 1813, as appeared from official returns, "there were only 4,183 residents, out of 10,558 clergymen."

The amount of tythes belonging to livings in the gift of the crown, the bishops, and the ecclesiastical corporations, is estimated by an English writer at £81,250,000; and of tythes belonging to livings in the gift of individuals, at £48,000,000. Total tythes £129,250,000.—Estates in England £30,000,000, in Ireland, 18,200,000. Total value of church property in England and Ireland, £177,450,000.

Can it be wondered that such a train of evils should awaken the earnest solicitude of those who daily suffer by them? In any other country but England, they would create a revolution. And even there, it is impossible to say that the patience of the people will endure much longer. Both the government and higher clergy seem to be aware of this; and a partial reform will be undertaken immediately. It is stated that the archbishop of Canterbury has prepared a bill to regulate the tythe system, and render the distribution of ecclesiastical revenue more equal. "We trust," says the paper from which we quote this remark, "that his grace will not stop here. The most crying evil in the church is the system of pluralities; and we would recommend petitions to his majesty, as head of the church, to abolish them altogether. This would not be revolution, but reform; for in the early ages of the church, in popish times, be it remembered, the abomination of pluralities was loudly condemned, and in many instances, absolutely resisted by the primates."

* "His majesty" who?—Ed. Reg.

DANISH WEST INDIES.

From the New York Evening Journal.

New privileges of the blacks in St. Croix. A friend in St. Croix has favored us with the Regierings Avis of the 17th ult. containing the following decree in Danish and English. Our friend observes that "the translation is obscure, but that in fact the decree is considered as announcing the removal of all disabilities heretofore lying upon the free blacks, and raising them to a level with the whites. This view is justified by the recent appointment of a free black to the office of military aid to his excellency gov. Van Scholten, and the admission of another free colored man to practice in all the courts, this person having previously received the requisite degrees from the university at Copenhagen. Some think this measure ill-advised, and certainly ill-timed. One intelligent gentlemen stated the possible ground of it to be, a desire on the part of Denmark to follow out the philanthropic policy which she claims to have been the first to exhibit towards the blacks. She was early in abolishing the slave trade, and now she would be early in extending all immunities to the free colored people. How much of the new decree emanates from the court in the mother country, or whether it be the expression of the views of the present governor alone, it is perhaps impossible to say, since the governor is quite plenipotentiary here, and is supposed to have much influence at home. He is known to have had for some time in view a measure of the kind now brought forward; and to have had conversations on the subject with some of the English statesmen whom he visited in London, many months ago."

TRANSLATION.

His majesty the king has been most graciously pleased, on my humble report of the 9th Jan. 1830, to determine the respective relations of his majesty's free colored subjects in these colonies, with regard to themselves, in their reciprocal stations, in which they ought to stand as a community both with the public and the administration.

His majesty is perfectly convinced, that the period has arrived in these colonies, when those wrong and prejudiced views, which had drawn a distinguishing barrier between two burgher classes of these Islands (who are both his majesty's subjects and both equally dear to him) are now done away with: and that an upright and commendable conduct in the free colored class shall hereafter meet with perfect acknowledgment from each and every one.

In the different public stations, I have, and now do fill here, I have with sympathetic feeling and attention noticed, how the former prejudices of a social approach, towards the free colored inhabitants, have gradually diminished; and how with the willing feelings of justice, those whose deserving conduct in that class have been acknowledged and duly appreciated.

With his majesty's most gracious authority, it is that I hereby make public this royal decree. I do this with the fullest and perfect confidence, that all and every one consider, and the free colored population will acknowledge this his majesty's paternal mark of solicitude. My stay here, at the present time, will be too short for me to witness even the beneficial effect thereof; but I must assuredly rely upon my return here to be satisfied of the same. And we will congratulate ourselves of this other proof, amongst many, which our gracious monarch has so clearly shewn the world, that the welfare of his subjects has ever been the constant aim of his best endeavors: which may God in his mercy, long prosper, and let him, for years to come, reap the rich fruits thereof.

The above mentioned most graciously sanctioned report, will be published, by advertisment in the Gazette.

General-government of the Danish West India Islands, St. Croix, the 14th March, 1831.

P. V. SCHOLTEN, Kaalud.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 10—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, MAY 7, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1024.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞The report concerning the Liverpool and Manchester rail way, is a most interesting document, and comes in good time to support our facts and speculations on the subject at large. It will be read with deep interest—for it leaves not a "loop to hang a doubt upon" as to the ability of this invention to accomplish mighty results—"beyond the dreams" of those who were regarded as almost infatuated, only twelve months ago, because of their belief in the power to be acquired on rail roads.

☞Mr. Pinckney, in the "Charleston Mercury" of the 22d ult. made a feeble reply to my remarks on one of his articles in that paper of the 16th ult. He apparently shrunk from the facts which were presented; but it is a little remarkable, that he charges me with "scurrility!" He takes precious care, however, not to let his readers see the proofs of it, in giving to them honest and fair extracts from the "Register." Take an example:

I said—

"But the 'national faith,' I must think, is quite as much pledged to protect the labor of free white persons as that of black working machines, and that, if the interests of the two come into competition, (though I know no reason why they should), the latter ought, and must and shall give way."

Which Mr. Pinckney thus serves to his readers:

"He [Mr. Niles] plainly tells us, that 'the labor of free white persons, (meaning the tariff states), ought to be protected'—and that 'if their interests come in competition with those of black working machines, (meaning the southern or slave holding states), the latter ought, and must and shall give way."

The gentleman is heartily welcome to make any comments that he pleases on what I said—but my words need not his interpretation—and, especially, when thus ungenerously given. He calls it a "menace. I intended only to say, what Mr. Pinckney will not dare to deny—that the interests of the citizens of the United States "ought, and must and SHALL," have preference over those of negro slaves, if coming into competition. It was "we the people" who won the independence of this country and established its constitution—and it is "we the people" who must defend both. Negro slaves will herein do less than horses or oxen; nay, they will waste and divert the strength of freemen—as the archives of the war department, concerning troops posted at certain places, will abundantly shew. But I shall dismiss this subject. Mr. Pinckney may thank his own rudeness for the original reference to it—and even now, by his interpretation of my meaning, he builds up states—"free sovereign states" of "black working machines," who are not of "the people," and have no more direction of the affairs of government than stocks and stones.

"What constitutes a state?
Not high raised battlement or labour'd mound,
Thick wall or moated gate;
Not cities proud, with spires and turrets crown'd;
Not bays and broad-arm'd ports,
Where, laughing at the storm, rich navies ride,
Not star'd and spangled courts,
Where low-brow'd baseness wafts perfume to pride.
No:—MEN, HIGH MINDED MEN,
With powers as far above dull brutes endued
In forest, brake, or den,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude;
Men who their duties know
But know their rights, and knowing DARE MAINTAIN,
Prevent the long aim'd blow,
And crush the tyrant while they rend the chain:
THESE CONSTITUTE A STATE. Sir William Jones.

I mentioned the honored name of William Lowndes, and said that he made no question as to the constitutionality of a protecting tariff, but supported its expediency;" and Mr. P. says—

"And as to Mr. Lowndes—does the editor of the Register mean to insinuate, that because Mr. Lowndes "did not question," he, therefore, admitted the constitutionality of the protective policy, or would, if he had lived, have sanctioned the extent to which it has since been carried? If he does, he neither appreciates the principles, nor understands the character of that lamented man. During our last war, manufactures had sprung up at the north and east; and, after the return of peace, Mr. Lowndes, in common with the whole people of the south, generously agreed so to regulate the tariff as, without injuring or oppressing other and more important interests, might afford them such protection as would prevent their being crushed by foreign competition. And now, because Mr. L. whilst magnanimously voting the manufacturers moderate protection, "did not question the constitutionality" of that proceeding, he is claimed as a supporter of the prohibitory policy. But it is well known to all who know any thing of Mr. Lowndes, that he was in principle and in practice, a decided advocate of free trade doctrines—as is evident from his speech against an increase of duties in 1820, published by Mr. Niles himself in his Register for that year—and we hazard nothing in saying, that had his valuable life been spared, his voice would be raised as firmly as any in opposition to the system now fixed upon the south."

The reader will please to bear in mind that I introduced the name of Mr. Lowndes to support the constitutionality of protecting domestic manufactures; and, most certainly, I meant to do more than "insinuate," that, because he did not question the constitutionality, but supported the expediency of such protection, his high authority was incontestibly placed on my side of the argument: for, without SHEER PERJURY, had he deemed a protecting tariff unconstitutional, he could not have voted for it. But Mr. Pinckney admits all that I claimed. His mode of reasoning, however, is like that of the man who made a large hole for the use of his big cat, and a little one for the accommodation of her kitten. Would Mr. Lowndes, asks Mr. Pinckney, "have sanctioned the EXTENT to which it [the protection of manufactures] has since been carried?" I cannot tell—but as Mr. Lowndes was a wise and good man, and a sound republican, preferring the good of the majority and submitting to the people's will—I think that he would; but, whether he would or would not, is altogether unimportant, further than his opinion, on a question of expediency only, might be entitled to respect. The constitution is not measured by weight, like a bale of cotton—nor by length, like a piece of cloth. Mr. Pinckney, with peculiar modesty, had pronounced a protecting tariff to be unconstitutional—but now he resolves the question of constitutionality into one of pounds, or yards, or cents—the right to protect manufactures being determinable by the extent of the protection. What an argument is here!

It is clearly admitted, that a construction of the constitution is a matter of expediency! Strange doctrines these, for this champion of state rights! Mr. P. says, that Mr. Lowndes generously agreed to afford manufactures "SUCH PROTECTION as would prevent their being crushed by FOREIGN COMPETITION." This is all that the most zealous of us desire—we ask nothing more than what Mr. Lowndes was willing to grant us—and, were he now living, there would be no difference in principle between us. If Mr. Pinckney shall review what he has written, he will find that, with a frankness unknown to himself, he has established the fact which I suggested. But "we cannot break a butterfly on a wheel" as Mr. Ritchie says, at every "momentous crisis!"

I am referred to Mr. Lowndes' speech on the tariff bill before the house of representatives in 1820, and have looked it over with pleasure. The exact period when the notion of the unconstitutionality of protecting tariff laws was invented, I do not remember; but in 1820, neither Mr. Baldwin, who introduced a bill of this description, nor Mr. Lowndes, who opposed its passage—uttered one remark on that subject. The latter gentleman clearly, and, indeed, in almost every paragraph of his speech, admitted the right of congress to protect manufactures, and agreed as to the expediency of doing so—but differed with Mr. Baldwin as to the extent to which protection should go. It was, I think, not until a year or two afterwards, that a famous hair-splitting Virginian first found out that all his predecessors in congress, from 1789 to that day, had incorrectly construed the constitution of the United States! and yet this gentleman, himself, before and since his discovery, has voted for many protecting laws. When France laid a duty of 18 dollars per ton, on American vessels—who thought it unconstitutional for us to lay a duty of 18 dollars per ton on French vessels? And, as England levies a duty on our flour and many other articles, prohibitory in its operation—is it possible that we may not levy a like duty on the productions of England? But it is an insult to the understanding of our readers to press such a question. The very beetle, when trodden upon, has its right to save itself, if it can.

Again—

The editor of the "Mercury" says—Mr. Niles "admits the distresses of the south. But then 'the tariff has nothing to do with them,' and they are altogether owing to 'pride and improvidence, the progress of idleness,' and such like causes. The people of the south, no doubt, will duly appreciate this information respecting the causes of their sufferings; but we apprehend that they will still ignorantly persist in their own ideas upon the subject, and foolishly persevere in their efforts to destroy the system, the wisdom, and admonitions, and 'friendship' of Mr. Niles to the contrary notwithstanding."

I did not admit "the distresses of the south," though believing that it was distressed—no more, however, than it was previous to 1824, if Messrs. Carter, Tattnall, Randolph, Garnett, and other members of congress, are worthy of credence—some brief references to whose speeches I made. They said that "waste and decay," "desolation and beggary," "a poverty that was grinding to the bone" and a "pervading gloom extended from the shores of the Potomac to the Gulf of Mexico," &c. The tariff, surely, had nothing to do with these things, for it had not yet an offensive existence. And in 1828, before the passage of the last and most "ruinous" law, Mr. McDuffie said—

"That the northern states, comparatively destitute of natural advantages—having no staples of exportation to support their commerce—exhibit all the indications of a young, growing, and flourishing country; while the southern states, with natural advantages such as never fell to the lot of any other country, and with an industry which never relaxes its efforts, are in a steady progress of deterioration, exhibiting all the indications of premature decrepitude and decay. A traveller in passing through the southern states will be struck with the wretched appearance of towns and villages almost in ruins—the melancholy memorials of departed prosperity."

What caused these things? Not the "abominable tariff"—for that of 1824 was ineffective; and the protection afforded so moderate, that southern gentlemen are generally disposed to agree that so much protection as was contained in it, may still be granted. Was not "the distress," then, in the fearful increase of slaves—"the pride and improvidence and progress of idleness," which Mr. Pinckney so severely denounces me for having alluded to? How can the tariff have injured the south? The demand for every southern commodity has been mightily increased—the price of every manufactured article, (protected), has been diminished. To THOSE GENERAL ASSERTIONS THERE IS NO EXCEPTION. But let this fact be noted—while the price of iron and all its ordinary manufactures, has much declined, because of the duties, or "taxes," as they are called, on importatinns of them—steel, and its chief manufactures, remain at about the old ante-tariff prices, because the encouragement given by existing laws has not been sufficient to establish a domestic competition in them. Does the tariff then cause "the distress" of the south? We shall shew some of the causes, (through particular examples), why the northern states "exhibit all the indications of a young, growing and flourishing country," as asserted by Mr. McDuffie: why the southern "exhibit all the indications of premature decrepitude and decay" we leave it to Mr. Pinckney, and the "free trade philosophers," to find out and specially prescribe for.

The town of Adams, in Berkshire, Massachusetts, contained 1,836 inhabitants in 1820—and in 1830, had 2,648; increase 812, or at the rate of 45 per cent. nearly. The whole area of this town (or township) is only about 22,400 acres. It contains two villages—Adams and North Adams. The first has seven cotton and woollen factories, with several tanneries, &c.—North Adams has nine cotton and woollen factories—one extensive calico printing establishment, and another is about to go into operation—three blast furnaces, many tanneries, &c. and 130 dwelling houses. Rents are as high in this village as in the city of Troy, at which latter place its business seems chiefly to centre. About 500 persons are employed in the cotton and woollen factories only, producing 1,500,000 yards of cloth annually. There is yet much valuable water-power unoccupied. The influx of population has latterly been so great, that the present inhabitants of the town are supposed to exceed three thousand!

But, it will be said, the prosperity of Adams is caused by the "legalized robbery," as Mr. Pinckney has it—of the tariff laws. Stop a little, and we shall see.

This town annually exports about 400,000 pounds weight of cheese, worth $24,000, with large quantities of butter, cattle, sheep, swine, and other articles of provisions, not required for the supply of its own inhabitants. The whole proceeds of agriculture in this little town of 22,400 acres, notwithstanding so large a portion of the laboring population is engaged in manufactures, cannot fall short of being worth 150,000 dollars a year. Here is a beautiful specimen of the "American System"—of the policy of placing "the consumer by the side of the producer," as Mr. Jefferson said we ought to do.*

Can this be possible?—a southern cultivator will ask. Yes. Take the following cases in proof—

"In 1825 the Massachusetts Agricultural society's premium was conferred on E. Hersey Derby, esq. of Salem, for the greatest quantity of vegetables raised for consumption on his farm of about 14 acres of land. The following is his statement:

Cabbages at 56 lbs. per bushel	1,503
Pumpkins, 7 ox-cart loads	294
Potatoes	415
Mangel wurtzel	2,036½
Sugar beets	274
Russian radish	90
English turnips	1,026
Bushels,	5,638½

"John Warren, of Westborough, Worcester county, on a farm of forty-six acres, produces annually,

50 tons English hay
6,000 lbs. pork and beef
1,100 do. butter
2,500 do. cheese
300 bushels corn and wheat."

The latter instance may not be regarded as an extraordinary affair. Many thousand farmers in New England, rear large and respectable families, pay all their debts and taxes promptly, and live independently, well clothed and comfortably housed and provided for, and lay up money, on farms of 50 acres. The idea is, that these people labor severely. This is a great mistake. They have much leisure—because they do not waste time. With them, there is "a place for every thing, and every thing is in its place." Their horses and cattle, tools and implements, are attended to with clock-like regularity—nothing is put off till to-morrow which can be done to-day. Economy is wealth, and system affords ease. These men are seldom in a hurry, except in harvest time. And in the long winter evenings or severe weather, which forbids employment out-of-doors, one man makes corn brooms, another shoes, and a third is a carpenter, cooper or tailor—and one woman spins, another weaves, a third plaits "Leghorn bonnets" and a fourth makes lace. Little children, and the aged and infirm, knit stockings! And the families thus occupied are among the most healthy, cheerful and happy in the world. It is easy with them to reduce their wishes to their means, if inconvenient or imprudent to extend their means to their wishes. These are "the sort of people" who fought at Lexington and Bunker's hill, Bennington and Saratoga. Two hundred yankee freeholders were on board the frigate Constitution, when the flag of the enemy descended in homage to her power.*

* The single article of cheese exported, gave an average value of nearly ten dollars per head for every inhabitant of the town of Adams. Cotton and rice are the chief articles prepared for export in South Carolina—and if the inhabitants of that state were as productive as those of the town of Adams—(cheese, ONLY, against cotton and rice)—the exports of South Carolina would amount to 5,810,000 dollars a year, which is perhaps, not less than two-thirds of the average value of the whole annual product of S. Carolina, proper, exported.

As before observed—let Mr. Pinckney fill up the other side of the picture which Mr. McDuffie sketched, in 1828. If I deserve reproof for charging the "premature decrepitude and decay" of the south to the preference of slave labor over that of freemen—to prodigality, idleness, and that perversity of judgment which dishonors a "working" white man—I may challenge a shewing of the causes of that distress which Messrs. Carter and Tatnall spoke of in 1824, and Mr. McDuffie so vividly described in 1828. I only ask, that Mr. Pinckney and those of the same school, may not hate that prosperity which they will not labor to possess.

HIGH-PRESSURE, AGAINST THE TARIFF! The following is from the Columbia, (S. C.) Times, addressed to the editor. We copy from the "Charleston Mercury."

Mr. Editor—A friend of mine, well known to you, purchased a pair of pantaloons and a coat in London last fall. He gave for them there, ready made, 22½ dollars. Wanting a similar coat and pantaloons made in Columbia, the price asked was 55 dollars.

Another friend of mine, also well known to you, wanted paint to paint his house this summer. He purchased 12 kegs of white lead, each weighing 50 lbs. for 3½ dollars per keg, making 42 dollars. The duty on white lead imported, is 5 cents per lb. so that on an article whose real value, when imported, is 12 dollars, he had to pay 30 dollars duty. No wonder, Mr. Wetherill, who manufactures this article very extensively in Philadelphia, was one of the committee lately appointed in that city, to support Henry Clay and the American System! No wonder the tariff men and their friends, the submission-men, cry out patience, patience! let us wait a few years longer, and all will come right! Every year of patience adds to their wealth, and our poverty. The wonder is, that any people whatever will shew themselves such tame and senseless slaves, as to submit to these arrant impositions, so long and so patiently as the south has done. But the spirit of the south is cowed; it gives up to the determined overbearing of the north; and provided we are allowed to talk big, we are now content to pay largely for the privilege. We were really more courageous when we suffered less.

The present crop of cotton now ready for market may keep up its price; but the crop of the present year now growing, will not bring the planter more than six and a quarter cents at Christmas next. The question now is, whether we shall or shall not have a constitution in spite of the usurpations of the general government: As this is a mere theoretical discussion, we are content to throw the burden of deciding it on our children; and as we do not fight for ourselves, we leave the contest to them, when they will be still more reduced than we are, to poverty in pocket and poverty in spirit; but before this year is out, another question will arise, such as, can we raise cotton with any profit? If not, what are we to raise with our slave labor? Whatever that produce may be, will it allow us to educate our children, or will it buy us broad cloth coats, or enable us to paint our houses with white lead taxed at 250 per cent. on prime cost by the tariff, in favor of Mr. Wetherill and a few other manufacturers? If 12 dollars pay a tax of 30 dollars, how much will 100 dollars pay? Answer, 250 dollars. CALCULATION.

It is by such silly and extravagant, or wontonly erroneous statements, that the people of the south have been deceived almost into a spirit of resistance to the laws of the United States. And it seems nearly useless to detect and expose them—for those to be acted upon are permitted to see only one side of the question; and the chasing away of one misrepresentation only makes room for another, more wicked than the first. Besides, truth travels slowly. It was said by Fisher Ames, that "falsehood proceeds from Maine to Georgia, while truth is pulling on his boots." The "freedom of the press" is practically denied to the people of these states—for, if even disposed to pay for and read certain newspapers which present other views than those deemed orthodox by the ruling politicians, they are hooted at and driven from their purposes.—We have good reason to believe that so it has frequently happened, in respect to the "Register."

It is said that such a coat and pair of pantaloons as cost only 22½ dollars in London, would cost 55 dollars, in Columbia. Let us examine a little.

The highest duty that can be paid on a square yard of broad cloth is 180 cents the square yard, equal to 270 for the running yard. It takes three yards of such cloth to make a coat and pair of pantaloons—it is possible, then, that the duty may amount to 810 cents—say 9 dollars, the duty on the "trimmings" being added.—This is the utmost amount. We shall state the matter fairly.

Cost of a coat and pantaloons at Columbia	$55 00
ditto ditto London	22 50
Extra cost at Columbia	32 50
Deduct all the duties	9 00
And there yet remains!	23 50

How shall we make up this amount? The wages of first rate tailors are quite as high in London as in Baltimore—but let us suppose that the London tailor "works for nothing and finds himself." The cost of making a coat and pair of pantaloons, in the best and most fashionable manner at Baltimore, is ten dollars. Deduct the whole of this, and there yet remains 13½ dollars to be accounted for in the extra profit of the merchant—a profit of thirteen and a half dollars on an original investment of 22½, (admitting that the coat and panta-

---

* A New England farmer having finished his attention to autumnal duties, thought of going to Europe to dispose of the timber cut from his last new field, as captain and owner of his sloop. His eldest sons received the following orders, to be observed during his absence: "John, you may work in the smith's shop till you have iron shod the plough, and the cart-wheels you have made, after which you may either build a saw or grist mill for yourself, on your own place. If I should not return in three months, you may repair and adjust the old quadrant, and take charge of the old sloop, after you have new decked her. Joseph will help you spin the new rigging the sloop will want, after he has finished the loom for your mother to weave a top-sail; on which, after turning the rounds for the spinning-wheel, he may plough the old field, and then go on a voyage to Labradore for cod, or a whaling to Falkland's Island, just as he likes. You must take command of the sloop yourself, load her for the West Indies, unless you find that governor Phillips's last prices will do for young stock and provisions, if so go to New Holland, and I shall be home, God willing, to welcome your return. My son Joseph, it is time to leave off making wooden clocks and fiddles; tan the hides and make shoes for the family." This is not beyond the character of the people, however it may not agree in the minutiæ with any known incidents. [Blodget's Economica.

loons were gratuitously made in London)—or a gain at the rate of one hundred per cent. on the cost of the cloth, only. Credat Judeas Apella! This story is so monstrous that it devours itself—unless, indeed, the merchants and tailors of Columbia are swindlers of the "first magnitude!"

The next is equally ridiculous. We shall bring out the facts that belong to it.

In 1816 the duty on white lead was 3 cents per lb. and the price 13.

In 1827 the duty was 4 cents, and the price 11.

In 1831—at present, the duty on white lead is 5 cents per lb. and, its price 9½ cents per lb.

In all cases we speak of manufacturers' prices.

Now, if the worthy gentleman had painted his house, as stated, in 1816, he might have paid 18 dollars, in "taxes," on the 600 lbs. of lead required, if he preferred the foreign material, and the whole cost would have been 78 dollars; but now, while he may pay "taxes" to the amount of 30 dollars, on the lead used, the whole cost of it will amount to only 57 dollars: so that while his "taxes" are increased 12 dollars, his actual expenses will be reduced 21 dollars. Here is a queer oppression, practised by "Mr. Wetherill!" He has "imposed" 21 dollars into the pocket of this bawling anti-tariff man, and is abused for it.

But the whole story is a jumble of arrant nonsense. We might well call it by another name. It is said, that 12 kegs of white lead weighing fifty pounds each, were purchased for 8½ dollars a keg. "That's one!" The lowest selling price is 9½ dollars the hundred, not 7. Again it is said, that the "real value when imported," of these 600 lbs. or 12 kegs of lead of 50 lbs each, was 12 dollars! "That's two!" and a "thumper."

We have before us the "London Trade List"—(the most valuable publication of its kind in the world), of the 29th March, which informs us that the lowest quality of pig lead, (out of which the white lead is made), was £13 the fodder. The fodder, at London, is 19½ cwt.—say 2,000 lbs. as near enough for the calculation. Thirteen pounds sterling are equal to 57 dollars 72 cts.—or about 2 7-8 cents per lb. We are not acquainted with the manufacture of white lead, but know that it causes a great waste of the material, as well as casts out all its impurities, which are of a heavy amount. But it is enough, that the raw material, at London, costs almost one-third more per lb. than the wise and honorable gentleman of S. Carolina has assigned for the manufactured article, in America! And besides the labor of the manufacture and loss of weight, a large quantity of oil is used, the price of which is about 90 cents at Baltimore, and we presume it cannot be less in London. This oil weighs 7½ lb. to the gallon, and therefore costs 12 cents per lb. And hence, while dry white lead sells for 8 cents per pound, such lead, ground in oil, is worth 9½. The labor of grinding in oil is not of much account, because of the machinery and power used. The advanced price is mainly to pay for the oil.

That the price of cotton will be reduced to 6½ cents per lb. we have long believed—but when, we shall not venture to say. Had the quantity of the last year's growth been produced, it would hardly have sold for four cents per pound, if no improvements had been made in the machinery used in its manufacture, within the last 10 or 15 years. These improvements, which so wonderfully reduce the price of cotton goods, have enabled the people to consume twice or thrice as much of them as they did 10 or 15 years ago. We dare not venture to prescribe limits to scientific power—we think, however, that the present cost of manufacturing cotton cannot be much reduced. If so, the product of cotton must stop where it is, or a much lessened price ensue. But the means to produce cotton are rapidly increasing—and if the present laborers employed in cultivating the cane were turned over to the making of cotton, its price would fall, in one year, to 6½ cents, in the United States, unless the supplies of other countries were severely and suddenly reduced. It costs much less to make cotton in Brazil, of equal or superior quality, than it does in South Carolina and Georgia. The South Carolina writer is full of "fight"—he talks it bravely. But he means only to commit a felo de se. He, and those who think with him, are the only persons in danger. With the spirit of a scorpion, he seems disposed to sting himself to death. Let him make a "calculation" on that.

Sugar has declined in price just as the domestic supply has approached the home demand. Whenever there is a short crop in Louisiana, it rises—when a large one, it declines. Such is the immutable law of trade. If it were so that a new demand for 100,000 hhds. were made on the West Indies, the price would advance in a greater sum than the amount of the duty now charged, and we should really pay a tax of at least 3 cents per lb. on sugar, for the benefit of foreigners. No practical man, we think, will doubt the force of this suggestion. It is derived from gentlemen capable of appreciating the effects of scarcity and supply; and the cultivation of sugar in the United States being destroyed, every body will know it, by feeling.

"The tyger preys not on the tyger brood, Man only is the common foe of man!"

As before stated, we are suffering much from some reforms that have been made in the post-office department; and our patience is severely exercised by late frequent complaints of subscribers, who, for many years past, received their papers with strictest regularity. We have ample proof, also, that some of our packages have been opened and plundered—thefts of the "Calhoun correspondence" having been specially committed. The strength and care with which the "Register" is packed, has often elicited the public approbation of worthy and respectable postmasters—and, while not claiming exemption from errors, we feel justified in saying that many do not, and cannot, take place, because of the system which was long since adopted, and is now invariably pursued.

But on Monday last, we had a new and rather extraordinary cause of complaint, in the receipt of a letter from a worthy postmaster in a distant state, with the seal broken, and its contents (only five dollars), taken out. Thus, one postmaster has not only violated his oath and become a thief, but committed an outrage and robbery on a fellow-officer, whose frank, any reasonable man might suppose, might have caused that letter to have been respected. Hence the motto prefixed.

It is not pleasant to speak of such things—but difficult to bear them without some excitement, knowing the amount of depredations upon our private property and political rights have greatly increased in the last two years. The "monster party," should never have entered into the post office department. Its organization is too delicate and important to be submitted to the influence of "rewards or punishments," except for good or evil actually rendered in the administration of its affairs. Every body feared what has happened, when the post master general was introduced into the "cabinet"—and Mr. McLean retired, because he would not be made the instrument of disorder and dishonesty, in dismissing competent and faithful officers, because of their private political opinions, only. We have recently lost many subscribers, from the impossibility of sending their papers safely to them, and on routes hitherto remarkable for fidelity and promptitude.

POST MASTER CUNNINGHAM. The following account of the trial of this lately appointed postmaster, is copied from the "American."

The United States vs. Mortimer Cunningham.

The grand jury at the present session of the circuit court U. S. found bills against the above party, late post master at Abingdon, in Harford county, Md. for felony, and for a misdemeanor. The felony charged consisted in secreting and embezzling letters containing bank notes and stealing the notes. The misdemeanor consisted in embezzling, detaining and opening letters.

The indictment for felony was first called for trial, and a jury was empannelled on Monday, the 18th inst. the accused party having and exercising the right to challenge not exceeding twenty. The argument terminated on Tuesday, the 26th inst. and the jury, not being able to agree, came twice into court. On the third time, after being confined about thirty hours, they returned a verdict of not guilty.

The prosecution gave evidence that five notes which had been put into two decoy letters, were stolen by the accused. This proof was attempted to be repelled. But it was necessary for the prosecution, in order to obtain a verdict of guilty, to satisfy the jury that these notes, or some of them, were genuine. Four of them were admitted to be forgeries; one of them it was contended, on behalf of the government, was genuine, although the bank had failed. But this particular one was not produced, being alleged to be in the possession of the accused. The evidence of its genuine character was not deemed to be conclusive enough to warrant a verdict of guilty on an indictment for felony.

The trial for the misdemeanor is fixed by the court for the 12th instant.

The counsel engaged were N. Williams, district attorney, for the U. States; U. S. Heath and R. Johnson, for the accused.

[A paragraph is "going the rounds of the papers," and saying, without qualification, that Cunningham was acquitted.]

THE LATE "RESIGNATIONS." The retirement of Mr. Van Buren from the office of secretary of state, is not yet generally understood. The editor of the "Telegraph," some weeks ago, declared, in substance, that his weight was heavier than even the great popularity of gen. Jackson could bear; and he said, "we fear that the embrace of Amos Kendall, Martin Van Buren, William B. Lewis, & Co. will be the embrace of death"—of the "republican party;" and, in the doings of those named, Mr. Green predicted the removal of Mr. Ingham—which, indeed, was plainly pronounced in the "New York Standard" and "Philadelphia Inquirer"—papers charged, (we know not how justly), with being under the direct influence of Mr. Van Buren. Concerning these reports, the "Richmond Enquirer" expressed a hope that Mr. Ingham would "neither be removed nor retire, without good cause, independently of all party considerations." And the "Globe" the present official paper, of the 9th of April, said—"The Intelligencer copies articles into his paper from the Pennsylvania Inquirer and Norfolk Herald, the latter positively asserting that the hon Samuel D. Ingham has been removed from the treasury department." Instead of correcting the mistake, the Intelligencer says 'the fact reported if it have not happened, may be on the eve of accomplishment.' Now, why did not the editor declare the truth plainly, and say it had not happened, and that there was not the slightest indication given at Washington authorising the belief that such a thing was in contemplation, much less on the eve of accomplishment." But in nine days after, the president invited Mr. Ingham to resign. And on the 19th, the very day of his resignation, the "Richmond Enquirer" solemnly pronounced, "the story about the president's intending to remove Mr. Ingham as utterly false."

On this same subject, the Philadelphia "Sentinel" of the 13th April, said—"It is a fatality which generally attends the fomenters of mischief, that over-anxiety to effect their objects is the means by which they are detected and defeated. This is likely to be the result of the movements of the combination against the secretary of the treasury. The democracy of the state, whose feelings in reference to this valued officer have been misrepresented, are aroused, and are determined by unequivocal manifestations of their real opinions, to put down both the machinations and their authors. Of this wholesome state of public feeling, the proceedings of the democrats of Luzerne county, which we publish to-day, is an evidence.—We have no doubt but that similar expressions will be heard elsewhere, to the confusion of the insidious enemies of the party, who are struggling to divide the Jackson democracy of the state.

"These mean intriguers know well that Mr. Ingham is identified with the best feelings of the party; they know that there is a spirit and feeling among his friends that would not quietly submit to his proscription, and hence their eagerness, through the aid of private spleen in our own ranks, to shake the confidence of the president in one of the best and ablest of his cabinet. The same intuitive sagacity that has heretofore sustained general Jackson against secret management, as well as open assault, will render all these notable schemes harmless. The acknowledged head of the democratic party, raised to that enviable position by the voluntary and unsolicited confidence of the people, will be the last to follow the wishes of his enemies in order to divide his friends. He will view, as the whole party ought to view, the originators of any efforts to divide us, as enemies, let them assume what name or what guise, for the time being, that may be most convenient."

And yet at this very time, if the dates of the letters are correct, Mr. Ingham was kept in ignorance of so important an event as the resignation of Mr. Van Buren, which happened on the 11th; shewing, at least, that he had no part in the confidence of the president.

Another paper, speaking of Mr. Ingham, says—"To effect Mr. Calhoun's purposes, he will keep his present post as a spy in the enemy's camp, until kicked out."

In the "Philadelphia Inquirer" of the 20th April, was published a letter dated Washington the 16th, bearing strong evidence that it was written by Mr. Amos Kendall, in which Mr. Duff Green is described as worse than a "midnight thief or highway assassin"—adding, "But I did not sit down to comment on his conduct in this instance, so much as to state a few truths within my own personal knowledge of him [Green] and his worthy coadjutor, the secretary of the treasury, Samuel D. Ingham."

It is manifest from the correspondence, that Mr. Ingham forced the president to request his resignation—alias, to dismiss him; for he would not take the hint given in the first conversation, though it appears to have been a pretty broad one.

Mr. Branch had no thought of being discharged, two or three days before he was asked to resign—for, we are informed, that he had obtained the key of a house in Washington, with a view of renting it, for a new residence.

In regard to Mr. Van Buren, the "New York Courier" has said—

"Well indeed may Mr. Van Buren be called 'the great magician,' for he raises his wand, and the whole cabinet vanishes."

And the "Albany Argus," "Richmond Enquirer," and several other papers, highly compliment him for resigning—but do not assign any intelligible reason why, except that a "great source of suspicion has been dried up," as Mr. Ritchie says.

From the Globe of the 4th inst. "The editor of the Intelligencer seems to doubt whether we are 'informed of the details of this revolution,' and especially, as on the ninth of April we stated that 'there was no indication' that Mr. Ingham would be removed from office. We have never pretended to know more of the motives which have produced the resignations than is apparent from the letters laid before the public. These are very intelligible to persons who wish to understand them. With regard to Mr. Ingham, what we said was true to the letter. No indication had been given by the president against him individually, as had been intimated by the press in Pennsylvania and elsewhere; nor do we believe that singly he would have been 'extruded,' as the Intelligencer has it. His leaving the cabinet is but a consequence of that general movement, which the president's best and most disinterested friends IN THE CABINET* thought a necessary sacrifice to the unembarrassed action of his administration. The editor of this print did not, however, pretend to speak of the private intentions of the president, but of the public indications at Washington. Of the president's purposes we did not presume to say that we were informed, or to know of the matter more than was apparent to others. If at any time we should do this, we will never mislead the public; but the Intelligencer must not suppose, from the late marvellous discoveries of a certain press, that the editor of a newspaper supporting the administration here, becomes, ex-officio, a cabinet counsellor."

The Charleston Mercury of the 29th April, says of the correspondence—"It will be seen that the motive of the president, in desiring Mr. Ingham to withdraw, was 'to prevent unjust misconceptions' in relation to the retirement of Mr. Van Buren—or, in plain language, to prevent the continuance of Mr. Ingham in office from being regarded, as it certainly would have been, as a victory by that gentleman over those of the cabinet to whom he and his friends are understood to be opposed. The reader will be struck with the difference, in every point of view, between this correspondence and that between Mr. Van Buren and the president. Mr. Ingham's letters are as plain and perspicuous as Mr. Van Buren's is ambiguous: and the president's reply, though civil and respectful, is evidently constrained, and totally destitute of that warmth of approbation which he had bestowed upon Mr. Van Buren The fact is, that the president found himself obliged to give up Mr. Van Buren as a sacrifice to public feeling and public opinion, but that, in yielding to this necessity, he determined that Mr. Van Buren should not be sacrificed alone. Hence his request to Mr. Ingham to resign—hence the warmth of his language to Mr. Van Buren, whom he reluctantly yielded to prudential considerations—and hence his cold civility to Mr. Ingham, whom he compelled to resign, to gratify Mr. Van Buren, and in order that that officer, in retiring himself, should at least have the pleasure of dragging his opponent in his train. It remains to be seen how this proceeding will be relished by the democracy of Pennsylvania. For his own sake, (as well as for the interests of the treasury which have never been more ably managed, than by Mr. Ingham) we could have wished that the president had not dismissed him, or, at all events, that he had not avowed, as plainly as he has done, that his motive in dismissing him, was to save the feelings, if not to serve the purposes, of the late secretary of state. We fear that the plain declaration of such a motive for such an act, will not be approved by the people generally, and particularly by those of the state of Pennsylvania."

---

* This is rather a strange admission. Mr. Ingham's retirement was not then, on the desire of the president, so much as because of the advice of his "friends in the cabinet." As above quoted, Mr. Van Buren raised his wand, and the whole "cabinet" vanished!

The quotations will shew, (and for that purpose we have made them), that the proceedings at Washington are not understood. It is said—on what we presume is good authority, that an exposition of these proceedings will shortly appear. If so, it shall be laid before our readers, though we do not intend to "meddle nor make" in this matter, except in the registry of proceedings.

Mr. Verplanck. The friends of literature and the arts at New York have given a public dinner to Mr. Verplanck, because of his exertions in congress to place literary property on a secure and permanent footing—for which the new copy-right law, framed on his suggestions, is regarded as well fitted. The dinner was given at the City Hotel, and many of the most distinguished literary gentlemen of New York were present.

Mr. Nourse, late register of the treasury—dismissed and charged with being a "public defaulter," and proceeded against with much harshness, has obtained a second, and, probably, final judgment in his favor, (by the unanimous decision of the circuit court of the United States for the District of Columbia), by which it is established that the government owes him twelve thousand three hundred and thirty-one dollars!

Rhode Island. The following are the returns of votes at the late election for a governor of this state—

			Majorities.		Whole
Counties.	Arnold.	Fenner.	Arnold.	Fenner.	numb.
Providence	1,856	1,215	641	000	3,081
Newport	718	330	388	000	1,048
Washington	421	797	000	376	1,218
Kent	557	384	173	000	941
Bristol	228	151	75	00	379
	3,778	2,877	1,277	376	6,667
			376
Total majority			901

Washington. A great political meeting of the people of this city was held at the City Hall on Tuesday last, Nathan Smith was appointed president, Jacob A. Bender and R. C. Weightman, vice presidents, and Peter Force and George Sweeny secretaries—Gen. Walter Jones, Philip R. Fendall, Richard S. Coxe, Ignatius Mudd and Geo. Watterson, were appointed a committee to prepare suitable resolutions. The committee retired, and soon returned and reported sundry resolutions containing uncommonly severe censures on the present administration, and lofty compliments on Mr. Clay, as a candidate for the presidency.

U. S. Bank. The New York Gazette says, "We understand that on the receipt of the news from Washington of the resignation or dismissal of the secretaries, the U. S. bank stock rose one and a half to two per cent."

"Nullification." This word is becoming contemptible in the south. There will soon be a grand scuffle to shake off the paternity of it. Some Englishman will probably be made the "scape-goat." The people of South Carolina will speedily wash their hands of it—new considerations of the value of the union will be had, throwing into "the abomination of desolation," all "calculations," about it.

Susquehannah trade. The Harrisburg Chronicle prefers a heavy complaint against Philadelphia dealers, because having, in some degree, obtained a command over the trade of the Susquehannah, they have reduced the price of flour 25 cents the barrel less than it was, at the same time, selling for in Baltimore. The Philadelphia market was hitherto a shade higher than that of Baltimore—because, perhaps, of the generally dearer cost of transportation to the former;—now the cost of carrying flour, which descends the river, to either market, is said to be about the same.

Mr. Maury. The New York Daily Advertiser mentions that "Mr. Maury, late consul at Liverpool, visited the Merchants' exchange yesterday. He was received most cordially by a great number of gentlemen who had the pleasure of his acquaintance in England, and was introduced to many who had long transacted buisness with, but had never seen him. We believe no gentleman has visited the exchange, who has ever received so much respect as did this gentleman. Mr. M. is about 85 years of age, appears in good health, walks straight as a young man of twenty, is active and intelligent, and would not be taken to be more than 65 or 70. He was appointed consul at Liverpool under gen. Washington, and has filled the office with great fidelity under all the various administrations of our government until gen. Jackson came into power, when he was removed. It is believed that the government have never had a more faithful officer abroad. The kindness and services afforded to his countrymen have been proverbial; and during the late war with Great Britain when Americans were ordered away, the confidence and honorable character of Mr. Maury induced the government to permit him to remain unmolested. We understand Mr. Maury is on his way to his native state, Virginia, where he intends to spend the remainder of his days.

A public dinner was given to Mr. Maury, at New York, on Thursday last.

National calender for 1831. A second edition of this very valuable annual, published by the correct and indefatigable Mr. Force, of Washington, has just issued from the press, with some additional and important matter. This is the most useful work for common reference ever compiled, as to the government and affairs of the United States.

Dinner to gen. Chambers. At a meeting of some of the neighbors of Mr. Chambers, one of the senators of the United States from Maryland, a very respectable committee was appointed to invite him to a public entertainment, as a token of respect for the talents and dignity with which he has represented the state—and, the invitation being accepted, between two hundred and fifty and three hundred gentlemen assembled at Chestertown on the 27th ult. to honor the distinguished guest. After partaking of a rich and plentiful dinner, the following among other toasts were given, and drank with much applause, a fine band of music from Baltimore being present to give glee to the occasion.

Our country—The virtue and patriotism of her citizens are the best security for the stability of her republican institutions.

The union—The Palladium of our liberty, safely lodged in the temple of public opinion.

The constitution of the United States—A beacon illuminating the political horizon—a monument of the genius and patriotism of its framers.

Universal suffrage and universal education—may the rights acquired by the one, be secured by the lights conferred by the other.

The motto of the "National Republicans"—"Not the glory of Cæsar, but the welfare of Rome."

Our guest—The honorable Ezekiel F. Chambers. We highly approve of the talented and dignified course heretofore displayed by him in the senate of the United States, which has already been acclamated by his re-election to that honorable station, and his known patriotism and perseverance in well doing, hold out a sufficient guaranty for continued and increasing usefulness.

After the annunciation of this sentiment, the general rose and addressed the meeting in an able and appropriate speech. In conclusion, he offered the following sentiment:

The state of Maryland—She can have no hope for good beyond the union. May her sons ever be as successful in averting the approaches of danger to their civil liberty, as they have been in expelling their foreign enemies from her soil.

His excellency Daniel Martin, governor of Maryland. A man against whom his political enemies have no charge and his political friends prefer him to a king.*

Henry Clay—The Richmond of our cause, around whose standard the national republicans with confidence rally.

The American system, or agriculture, commerce, manufactures and internal improvements, the firm basis of actual independence.

Daniel Webster—The triumphant champion of the constitution and able nullifier of southern nullification.

James Madison—Co-operator in the formation and exposition of the federal constitution, and a modern mentor to nullifying politicians.

John Quincy Adams—The statesman, scholar and republican, superior to the malevolent machinations of his enemies, and too honest for political intrigue.

Lafayette—The world his country, mankind his care.

The federal judiciary—Our dividing wall between civil freedom and anarchy.

Many others were given, and the late Rollin C. Mallary was gratefully remembered—as "an able supporter of the best interests of his country," and his decease accounted "a national loss"—as it is.

Our much valued fellow citizen, col. Thomas Emory, being warmly toasted, returned thanks and gave the following sentiment:

The people of the United States. Seldom wrong—and when from honest feeling they happen to err, they are not long righting themselves.

A good many of the rest of the volunteers were pointed or highly spiced. Mr. Clay was often complimented, and the "American System" earnestly recommended—which has afforded us peculiar pleasure; because that, in general, our brethren of the Eastern Shore, not having felt the beneficial effects of that system, were, until lately, opposed to its principle. And Dr. G. W. Thomas offered the following:

"Matthew Carey, and Hezekiah Niles—Posterity will do justice to their talents, patriotism and perseverance, in advocating that system best calculated to support the republic."

In the name of his old and venerable friend, and on his own behalf, "Hezekiah Niles" sincerely returns thanks, and heartily wishes for every gentleman present, and the whole American people, a long continuation, and increased extent, of that unparalleled prosperity which hundreds of thousands of happy free people now enjoy, and acknowledge to be the result of PROTECTED INDUSTRY—in enhanced prices and a surer market for the products of agriculture, and in a much reduced cost of manufactured articles: a problem less comprehensible to "free trade philosophers" when first broached, than the mysteries of Isis—but now familiar, through practice, to the mind of millions, though all will not confess its palpable solution. But they will soon confess. Virginia will take the lead in breaking down the suicidal prejudicies of the south—she will be a thorough tariff state before many years. The largest and best part of her territory is exceedingly well fitted for the associated labors of agriculture and manufactures—having a delightful and healthy climate, luxuriant soil, rich in its mineral productions, and great water-power; but more than all, blessed with an invaluable free population, not ashamed to hold the plough or the hammer. The new constitution, though not proceding so far as it should, has rendered important benefits to these people—the bone and the sinew and the pride of the state. Their influence has already been so powerful, that Virginia has resolved to "mend her ways—to do more and talk less; and the moment when it shall be really manifested to the wisdom of her legislators, that it is better to transport two hogsheads of tobacco to market over a good road or improved water navigation, for one-tenth of the expense and labor which it now requires to roll one hogshead to market, over stumps and stones and through the mud—just notions of political economy will prevail, and scientific power have a preference over that of slaves.

*The name of the late governor is Thomas King Carroll.

BRIEF NOTICES.

Newspaper debts. The editor of the Washington Telegraph, states that the arrearages due him from subscribers have "swelled to the sum but little, if any, short of eighty thousand dollars."

Quadrature of the circle. James D. Woodside, of Washington city, announces that he has discovered the means of obtaining the exact superficial contents of a circle, by a trifling calculation: that he has communicated his discovery confidentially to several persons, and made application for any reward that may be offered for it in Europe.

Rapid travelling. Passengers who left New York on Thursday the 28th ult. at half past 3 o'clock, P. M. arrived in Baltimore next day, by the Charles Carroll, at a quarter past 4 o'clock, making the passage from New York to Baltimore in twenty-four hours and forty-five minutes.

[This seems pretty rapid—but the distance will soon be done in several hours less, when the rail roads now making shall supercede the canal, and the usual travel over common roads in New Jersey. At present, no time being lost, the distance between New York and Baltimore may be made in less than twenty hours, without hurry. It will be done in less than 10 hours.]

Royal decorum. The dutchess of St. Albans, formerly Mrs. Coutts and originally Miss Mellon, an actress, is excluded from the invitations given by the queen of England to the nobility. [We presume this is the lady who was cautioned about her costume.]

"A Yankee trick!" Lucien Hankes, a lad in Hartford, aged 17, has constructed a beautiful high pressure steam engine, which, with the furnace, occupies but two feet in length.

Another!! Pigs of lead have been sold in Missouri, in which large parcels of ore in a crude state, were neatly covered with good metal. "Wooden nutmegs."

"Distressing." The article copied into the "Register" from the Indiana "Times," as to the freezing to death of a whole family in the great prairie of Illinois, is pronounced wholly unfounded by the "Illinois Intelligencer."

A blind legislator. M. A. Rodenbach, a member of the national congress of Belgium, is completely blind. He dictates his speeches to an amanuensis at his home, brings them with him to the sessions of the congress, and there requests a member to read them for him.

Liberia. There arrived at the American colony in Africa, from 9th to 29th January, one ship, seven brigs, and three schooners, besides vessels belonging to the colonists. Among them was a brig from France, a ship from Liverpool, and three brigs and a schooner from the United States. Some of the colonists are said to be worth from $10,000 to $15,000. [N. Y. Jour. Com.

Asbestos. The Georgia Courier says that Asbestos abounds in Hall and Habersham counties, and suggests its application to the manufacture of bank bills, public records, &c.

Mr. Adams, late president of the United States and his lady, passed through Baltimore on the 28th ult. on their way to their residence in Massachusetts. Mr. A. was called upon by many persons during his short stay in this city.

A live fur seal, weighing about 120 lbs. was lately caught in the Connecticut river, near Haddam island.

Rice. The culture of this great staple article in South Carolina was introduced by accident. It is said, about the year 1695, a brig from Madagascar, touching at Charleston on her way to England, anchored off Sullivan's island. The captain invited Landgrave Smith on board, and presented to him a bag of seed rice, with information of its growth in the east, its excellence for food, and its amazing increase. The governor divided it among his friends, who made experiments with it, which fully answered expectation, and from this small beginning arose one of the great staple articles of South Carolina and Georgia.

Gold. A piece of gold weighing 2,255 dwts.—or 9 lbs. 4 oz. 15 dwts. was brought to town on Tuesday last, from the place mentioned by us last week. It was the largest and purest piece taken out, and was bought in this place for $1,921. We understand it is intended to be sent to England, as a specimen of what our mines can produce, and as an object of curiosity.

[Charlotte, N. C. Jour.

Vermont. The votes given at the fourth balloting for member to congress from the vacant district in Vermont, were for Mr. Swift 3,818, Mr. Bailey 3,751, and 499 scattering. So there must be yet another trial of strength.

"Candle ends." The London Morning Herald states, as a curious item of expenditure in the charges of ministers at foreign courts, a charge of lord Cowley, ambassador to Austria, of £1,827, "for putting his household into mourning on the death of George the fourth," &c. Another for sir C. Bagot, ambassador to the court of the Netherlands, for "putting himself and suite into mourning," on the like account, &c. £1,170 9*s.* 10*d!* Charges, like these, if preferred in this country, would startle some of our most radical spirits of reform.

Mr. Burges, the distinguished representative in congress from Rhode Island, was originally a mechanic, having served an apprenticeship at the coopering business. This fact we learn from an article in the Providence American, which says:—"After carrying on the business for some time, he left it, got a collegiate education, studied the profession of law, became a member of the state legislature, chief justice of the supreme court, professor of oratory and belles lettres in Brown university, and a member of congress. In every capacity in which he has acted, he has been the same indefatigable laborer that he was in his cooper's shop. He was there thought to be a first rate workman; and the people of Rhode Island still believe him to be a first rate workman."

Money. The Pennsylvania state loan of $2,483,161, for the prosecution of internal improvements, has been taken by the bank of Pennsylvania at a premium of six per cent.

Explosion of a pair of bellows. This morning about 8 o'clock, the inhabitants in the vicinity of Eldridge street, were considerably alarmed by a sudden report, which shook the houses in the neighborhood. It proceeded from the steam engine manufacture of Mr. William T. James, No. 45 Eldridge street, which was caused by the bursting of the bellows used in his establishment. The explosion broke the beams, and threw the flooring entirely off of them. No lives were lost, although if it had happened one minute sooner, a number would have been killed. [N. Y. Com. Ad.

Silver mines. It is said, "there are strong indications of silver mines in Henry and Patrick counties of Virginia." A gentleman was in this city with specimens of the ore, which he takes with him to Philadelphia, as he is going there on other business. It is a species of friable stone. By subjecting it to the test of a common blacksmith's furnace, we understand a piece of the stone of about the size of a goose's egg was made to yield about the quantity of a ninepence. [12½ cents.] [Rich. Com.

Origin of broom corn. It is stated in Watson's Annals of Philadelphia, that the original cultivation of broom corn in this country, originated with Dr. Franklin; the doctor accidentally saw an imported whisk of corn in the possession of a lady of Philadelphia, and while examining it as an article of curiosity, saw a seed which he planted, and thus originated the abundant and lucrative crops which are so beautifully spread over our meadows in the season of vegetable life.

Mr. Monroe, late president, has received the $30,000 allowed by the late act of congress, on a settlement of his accounts.

Self illustration. In the Jamaica house of assembly, a motion being made for leave to bring in a bill to prevent the frauds of wharfingers, Mr. Paul Phipps, member for St. Andrew, rose and said—"Mr. Speaker, I second the motion; the wharfingers are to a man, a set of rogues; I know it well; I was one myself for ten years."

Making biscuit by steam. By the machinery at Portsmouth, England, under Mr. Grant's superintendence, 160,000 pounds of biscuit can be manufactured in twenty-four hours, constituting a day's rations for the crews of twenty sail of the line; and with eight or ten such pieces of machinery, biscuit rations may be daily manufactured for 160,000 men, being the greatest number of seamen and marines employed during the hottest period of the war.

River fisheries. The seine haulers on the Potomac, are represented to be doing a better business than they have done for several years past. 100,000 and 50,000 herrings have been repeatedly taken at a single haul, at several of our nearest landings, during the current week.

[Port Tobacco Herald.

The new pope has confirmed the nomination of several bishops for the new American states, in despite of the interference of Spain.

Ship letters. More than 16,000 were lately received at New York in ten days. One vessel brought out 3,094 from Liverpool, another 2,520 from Havre.

Coal. The quantity of coal annually consumed in England and Scotland is estimated at 14,880,000 tons. The consumption of Ireland is unknown. London alone consumes annually an average of 1,800,000; Liverpool, 1,000,000; and Manchester about 600,000 tons. The number of vessels engaged in the coal trade from London to the north of England alone, are estimated at 14,000 tons.

Died, at Troy, N. Y. captain James Anderson aged 81 years—he commanded a company at the battle of Lexington and Bunker's Hill. He was a volunteer soldier during the greater part of the revolution.

THE PRESIDENT—AND THE "CABINET."

The following articles from the "Richmond Enquirer," if not to be regarded as semi-official, must be accepted as near views of the health of the president, and of his reasons for certain late events which have so much excited the public attention.

Extract of a letter from Washington, dated 18th April, 1831.

"In your paper of Saturday, just received you say"—

"[We have letters from Washington, but no accounts of the president's illness—we may undertake, therefore, to pronounce the report to be unfounded."]

I am a little surprised that your friends, while writing to you from this place, should make no mention of the president's health. Perhaps the omission may be accounted for by the facts, that the president has not suffered under any constitutional attack; and, that though he has been greatly annoyed by the recent irritation and wrankling of an old sinister wound, he has not abated from the daily discharge of his laborious official duties on that account. His sufferings, however, have been known to his physician, (Dr. Symm), and to his friends; and while receiving visits from the former, he has been compelled, for the moment, to decline the visits of strangers, who continue to make him daily calls of civility and good feeling. The report, therefore, of his ill-health could not fail to go forth in an aggravated form. And as it is public interest alone, friendly or otherwise, that gives currency to rumors of any kind, the same interest, looking to honest ends, calls for a correct statement whenever a mistake is made.

"A wound which the president receeived some years ago, in the left arm, midway between the shoulder and the elbow, was, no doubt healed up without sufficient examination for extraneous matter that might be lodged in it. A considerable lump has remained in the part ever since, but being deep seated, has given little or no annoyance till lately. Having now worked its way, by the efforts of nature, near to the surface, it has consequently became more sensitive, as all such cases do—a fact, well known to surgery. The insidious matter will, ere long, develope itself to be a portion of lead, whereof brave men are liable occasionally to receive unceremonious, as well as unmerited lodgments. Or, it may be a worthless fragment of his vestments, worn for the good service they promised, without apprehension of the evil to which they might be turned. Except for this, I never knew the president in finer health, or more buoyant spirits. And, as far as I know, every thing in the executive relations, is going on well and harmoniously—excepting also, for all future time, the political derangement, the downfall and eternal oblivion, that are rapidly confounding and obliterating the stupendous ruins of the————

[This round-about account is thus explained—that the wound which gen. Jackson received in his terrific rencontre with col. Benton, now a senator of the United States from Missouri, at Nashville, several years ago, has broken out afresh and become troublesome.]

Extract of a letter, dated, Washington, April 25th.

"I had a very free conversation with the president yesterday on the subject of the new cabinet. It was mentioned, in my presence, that the appointment of Mr. Livingston was objected to by some of the friends of the administration—and with that spirit of frankness which characterises him on all occasions, he entered very freely into the reasons which induced him to make this appointment. Some of these I will state to you. In the first place, I must remark to you that the story of Mr. Livingston being once a defaulter, is misunderstood. The president examined into that matter some time ago when he turned his attention towards nominating him as minister to France. Mr. Livingston has documents in his possession to prove, that not one cent of the money ever came into his hands. The bonds on which suits were instituted, were collected by his deputies and agents and squandered by them whilst he was sick in bed, where he had been confined for three months. The money notwithstanding, has been paid up by him, and his accounts closed some time ago; as the comptroller informed me this morning.

"The president stated, that when Mr. Van Buren first communicated his wish to resign, he had made it his business to cast about and see where he was to find his successor: That he found the subject full of difficulty: That it was all important to him at this period of the world, that he should have a man at the head of the state department who was well versed in the principles of maritime and international law: That the prospect before us gave an importance to those qualifications now, greater than at an ordinary period, as in the event of a war in Europe, we must expect to be drawn into discussions again upon those subjects:—That he thought it also important to have a man, if possible, whose public course had been such as to make him well acquainted with the diplomatic history of the world—that he thought it also indispensable to have a man at the head of the cabinet who belonged to the old republican school, and with whose disposition and habits he was well acquainted. That Mr. Livingston had acted as his aid at New Orleans, in difficult times—that he knew him well, and the value of his services: That his reputation abroad as well as at home, as a profound jurist, and as a gentleman of accomplished erudition, united to his habits and profession of life, seemed to point him out as peculiarly fitted for the place for which he was selected: That it was true Mr. Livingston and himself differed upon some points; but that he could not expect to get a cabinet who would coincide with him upon all points—and that it would be for him to give the rule, and for his secretaries to execute his views as he had done heretofore.

The president frankly stated, that in his friend, judge White, he had the most unlimited confidence, and that he had invited him in the most pressing manner, to take charge of the war department, whose duties he was highly qualified to discharge. Among other reasons, on account of his extensive and familiar acquaintance with our Indian affairs, that are so important to the peace and tranquility of our country at this time. But nothing could have induced judge White to take charge of the state department. His pursuits in life had allowed him no opportunity of becoming acquainted with its duties, in the first place; and in the second place, his retiring habits were such that he could not be prevailed upon at this time of life, to adapt them to that constant intercourse which the head of the state department must have with foreign ministers, foreign agents, &c. and with the forms and etiquette necessary to be observed in it, &c.—And with all, it was absolutely certain that judge White would not have listened to the suggestion for one moment, of taking the state department: That he had considered the pretensions of many others of the friends of the administration, and could not see where he was to find one better suited for this place, upon the whole, than Mr. Livingston.

"The president remarked that nothing gave him more unfeigned pleasure, than for his friends frankly and openly to state to him, at all times, any objections they might have to his course upon any and every point. That he estimated them the more highly, the more unreserved and frank they were with him. All he asked was, that they would not break out into complaints upon first impressions, but would look at the matter all around, before they decided and then they would readily admit the difficulties with which he had to contend. Those that had been spread before him for the last two years, he thought, ought to entitle him to some indulgence on the part of his friends—They ought to wait and judge the tree by its fruit. He did not despair at all of realizing yet, all the expectations of the country.

"He would continue to administer the government upon the principles of Thomas Jefferson, so far as his duties were concerned; and to preserve the union and liberty of the country, as far as it was in his power. The sincerity of this declaration, no unprejudiced or honorable man would deny, who knows the character of gen. Jackson, and have witnessed on this occasion the spirit and manner with which it was made."

[Mr. Ritchie, after stating that the preceding letter had been submitted to his "discretion,"* resolved to publish it, though it might "provoke the strictures of the opposition;" and, indeed, it opens a wide field for remarks that we shall not indulge in. We preserve it only for itself. Mr. R. still says, "we repeat that we entertain objections to Mr. Livingston, as secretary of state"—"we do not hesitate to say we would have preferred Mr. White to Mr. Livingston. But the reader will see what the president himself says upon the subject. We differ with Mr. L. on certain points. The president says, that he differs from himself—and that it will be his province to give his secretaries the rule, and their's to acquiesce. The people, therefore, all look to him—and from his integrity of purpose and firmness of character, they will hope for the correction of any eccentricity into which any of his secretaries may be betrayed."

*The remarks of the senior editor of the "Enquirer" are more curious than the statements in the letter itself, It seems that it was submitted to his "discretion." Mr. R. would have felt much offended at a suggestion that its insertion had been commanded—why then tell us that he was left free to publish or suppress it? The close of his paragraphs about the "eccentricity of any of the secretaries," is curious enough, though we remain ignorant as to the particular wanderings which he fears.

POPULATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

☞The returns for 1830 are not official, and some of them are acknowledged imperfect, but they are sufficiently near the truth to induce us to present our readers with the interesting table that follows—which has been made up with much care, according to the information afforded. The aggregate differs in a small amount from another which we have seen published. We do not decide upon the exact correctness of either, but, surely, prefer our own.

When the official statements are presented to congress, we shall give the returns by counties, with comparative views, to shew the progress of our population.

Names.	1830.			1820.			Increase per cent. 10 years.	1830. Representative number.	Estimated in 1822 for 1830.				Representatives.		Unrepresented fractions.
	Free whites.	Slaves.	Total.	Free whites.	Slaves.	Total.			Free.	Slaves.	Gross No.	Representative No.	Gain per cent.	Present.	Ratio of 50,000.
Maine	398,255	.....	399,462	297,421	.....	298,335	34	399,462	372,919	.....	372,919	372,919	25	7	8	49,462
New Hampshire	268,910		269,533	243,236	.....	244,161	10	269,533	280,785	.....	280,785	280,785	15	6	5	19,533
Massachusetts	603,094	.....	610,100	516,419	.....	523,287	17	610,100	575,616	.....	575,616	575,616	10	13	12	10,100
Rhode Island	93,631	14	97,210	79,413	48	83,059	17	97,205	91,365	.....	91,365	91,365	10	2	1	47,205
Connecticut	289,624	23	297,711	267,181	97	275,248	8	297,688	289,048	.....	289,048	289,048	5	6	5	47,698
Vermont	279,780	.....	280,665	234,846	.....	235,764	19	280,665	271,129	.....	271,129	271,129	15	5	5	30,665
New York*			1,934,496	1,332,744	10,088	1,372,812	40	1,983,495	2,031,762	.....	2,031,762	2,031,762	48	34	38	33,495
New Jersey	300,226	2,246	320,779	263,365	7,557	277,575	15	319,881	319,211	.....	319,211	319,211	15	6	6	19,881
Pennsylvania†	1,312,253	381	1,350,361	1,018,985	211	1,049,398	29	1,350,173	1,343,229	.....	1,343,229	1,343,229	28	26	27	174
Delaware	57,605	3,305	76,739	56,318	4,509	72,749	5½	75,417	76,569	2,000	73,569	77,769	8	1	1	25,417
Maryland	291,093	102,878	446,913	260,022	107,398	407,350	10	405,771	324,873	110,000	435,873	391,873	7	9	8	5,771
Virginia*	697,000	465,000	1,207,783	602,974	425,153	1,065,366	14	976,000	691,250	470,000	1,161,250	973,250	9	22	19	26,000
North Carolina	472,433	246,462	738,470	419,200	205,017	638,829	15	639,835	455,488	260,000	715,488	611,488	12	13	12	39,885
South Carolina	257,898	315,665	581,478	231,812	251,783	490,309	19	455,212	283,151	295,000	578,151	477,855	15	9	7	5,212
Georgia	296,614	217,470	516,567	189,566	149,656	340,989	52	429,589	236,236	190,000	426,236	350,236	25	7	7	29,587
Kentucky	518,678	165,350	688,844	434,644	126,732	564,317	22	622,707	558,612	175,000	733,612	663,612	30	12	12	22,707
Tennessee	537,930	142,379	684,822	339,727	80,107	422,813	62	622,070	460,797	110,000	570,798	526,798	35	9	12	28,070
Ohio	928,093	.....	937,679	576,572	.....	581,434	61	837,679	988,437	.....	988,437	988,437	70	14	18	37,679
Indiana	338,020	.....	341,582	145,758	190	147,178	132	341,582	331,150	.....	331,150	331,150	125	3	6	41,582
Illinois	155,176	746	157,575	53,788	917	55,211	185	157,277	193,238	.....	193,238	193,238	250	1	3	7,277
Missouri	112,065	24,820	137,427	53,988	10,232	66,586	106	127,499	141,465	25,000	166,465	156,465	150	1	2	27,498
Mississippi*			97,865	42,176	32,814	75,448	40	85,000	60,227	45,000	105,627	87,627	40	1	1	35,000
Louisiana	89,191	109,631	215,575	73,383	69,064	153,407	40	171,722	99,429	100,000	199,429	159,429	30	3	3	21,722
Alabama	190,171	117,494	309,206	85,451	41,879	127,901	142	262,210	197,500	140,000	337,500	281,500	125	3	5	12,218
Michigan ter.	30,848	27	31,128	8,591	.....	8,896	250		53,376	.....	53,376		500
Arkansas	25,667	4,578	30,383	12,552	1,617	14,273	110		55,638	30,000	85,638		500
Florida	18,385	15,500	34,725	unknown.	unknown	10,000
Columbia	27,635	6,060	39,858	22,614	6,377	33,039	20		32,951	10,000	42,951		30
		1,940,029	12,834,936		1,531,436	9,660,265				1,962,000	12,778,812			213	223

*New York and Virginia near the real amounts; but not officially stated. There is no particular return from Mississippi.

†There is some mistake in Pennsylvania, as it regards slaves. It is impossible that they could have increased since 1820. The "totals" in the preceding columns, include the free persons of color.

REMARKS ON THE PRECEDING TABLE.

The latter division of the table—separated by a double rule, shews certain estimates made by us in 1822, of the probable population of the United States in 1830, on which we shall offer a few remarks.

The estimates for the New England states shew, in every case, New Hampshire excepted, a considerable amount under the real number, though there was an excessive emigration from Massachusetts and Connecticut, especially, in 1821, 1822 and 1823, to distant places, and more removals than usual from New Hampshire into Maine, &c.

New York has fallen about 97,000 short of our estimate. New Jersey is very near to our calculation—so is Pennsylvania. Delaware is short about 6,000. Maryland has reduced her slaves 7,000 more than we expected, yet increased her whole population 11,000 beyond the estimate. Virginia has exceeded the calculation in about 46,000 persons, though having 5,000 less slaves. North Carolina exceeds the estimate in 23,000, while not so much increased in slaves as we anticipated. South Carolina is very near the estimate, but has 20,000 more slaves than was calculated—having, in all, 58,000 more slaves than free persons. Georgia has exceeded the estimate in the large amount of 90,000 persons, of which increase 27,000 are in slaves. [Have the Indians been numbered, as it was said that they would be?] Kentucky has fallen short of the calculation in 45,000 persons, 10,000 of which are slaves. There has been a heavy emigration from Kentucky, to Missouri and the cotton lands of Tennessee—but this state is now rapidly gathering new strength and prosperity. Tennessee shews an increase over the estimate of 114,000 persons, of whom 32,000 are in slaves. Ohio is less than the estimate in 51,000 persons. Indiana in 10,000. Illinois in 36,000. Missouri in 29,000. Louisiana exceeds the estimate in 16,000 persons, 9,000 of them being slaves. Alabama falls short of the estimate 28,000 persons. Michigan 22,000, Arkansas 55,000. These things shew that the force of emigration to the new states or territories is very uncertain. The current is perpetually changing. The great increase in Georgia and Tennessee rather surprises us. This probably checked Alabama and Arkansas.

But our general calculation, made about nine years ago, is astonishingly near the truth. We estimated the whole population in 1830, at 12,778,812. It appears to be 12,834,936, shewing a difference of only 56,124. We supposed that the slaves would amount to 1,962,000—the number is 1,940,000, those in Mississippi not being added, or about 1,975,000 in all. Such estimates are rather curious than useful—but it is pleasant to look a-head.

We have added certain columns to shew the present representation of the states, and how it will stand, if the ratio of 50,000 should be agreed upon—that being the number which heretofore was most spoken of.—But we now think that it will not be accepted as the ratio. Maine, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Vermont, North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana, Mississippi and Missouri—eleven states, will have large and imposing fractions. So will New York, Virginia and Kentucky—though the loss of a member may be less important to either than to smaller states. The ratio will very well suit New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Maryland, South Carolina, Illinois, Alabama and Delaware—seven states. New Jersey and Louisiana will remain rather indifferent on the question, and the result will probably stand thus: 11 states decidedly against the proposed ratio, and 3 states that may be better suited by some other number—8 decidedly for the ratio, and two indifferent.

We count by states because of their power in the senate.

DINNER TO THE VICE PRESIDENT.

From the Pendleton Messenger.

Pendleton, March 28.

DEAR SIR—A respectable number of your neighbors and friends, who while they regret the events which gave rise to it, are highly gratified at the clear and conclusive vindication lately presented to the people of the United States, of your personal and political integrity, as developed in the recent "correspondence," are desirous of testifying, in a public manner, their regard for your character and services.

The undersigned, a committee on their behalf, are authorised to invite you to a dinner at Mr. William Hubbard's, in this village, on Friday next.

With high respect, your obedient servants,

F. W. SYMMES,
J. WARLEY,
J. B. FERRELL,
M. C. LIVINGSTON,
S. A. MAVERICK.

Hon. John C. Calhoun, vice president U. S.

Mr. Calhoun's reply.

Fort Hill, March 28.

Gentlemen—I accept with pleasure the invitation, which you have so kindly presented, in the name of my neighbors and friends, to partake with them of a public dinner on Friday next. I am much gratified, that a portion of my constituents, for whom I have so sincere a regard, as I have for my neighbors, should consider my vindication against the unprincipled and artful attempts to destroy my private and public character, "clear and conclusive."

In the various public stations I have occupied, I ever relied for support solely on a faithful discharge of my duty. The manner in which I have been sustained by my constituents on the occasion to which your note alludes, has confirmed me in the safety of the reliance. The trial was severe, and, I will add, painful; but, if the result shall serve to strengthen, in the public estimation, the side of duty, and weaken the opposite, I shall feel amply indemnified for all the difficulties and dangers to which I have been exposed. Nothing could more certainly add to the duration and success of our political institutions, than a general conviction, that an honest and fearless performance of duty, will ever find a certain refuge, even against the highest power and influence, in the enlightened and virtuous verdict of the people.

With sincere regard, I am, &c. &c.

J. C. CALHOUN.

F. W. Symmes, J. Warley, J. B. Ferrell, M. C. Livingston, S. A. Maverick, esqrs.

Agreeably to the above invitation and acceptance, the company sat down at 3 o'clock, to an excellent dinner prepared by Mr. Hubbard. Gen. Joseph N. Whitner presided, and Jesse P. Lewis, esq. acted as vice president. We subjoin the regular toasts and all the volunteers with which we have been furnished. Many gentlemen were present who have not handed in their toasts. We regret that we were not furnished with all.—On no public occasion of a political nature have we ever seen so much unanimity of opinion displayed. In our immediate section, we know of no dissentient.

Toasts.

The constitution of the United States—An invaluable legacy; let those to whom it has been bequeathed, watch with lynx-eyed jealousy the smallest attempt at its infraction, and stand up manfully in its defence.

The revolutions of 1776 and of 1801—Each contributed, but by different means, to elevate the character of our country, and to preserve the rights of man. The actors in both will be held in grateful remembrance.

Freedom of speech, freedom of trade, and freedom of the press—These are liberty; when either is infringed; she is curtailed of her privileges.

Our guest and fellow citizen, the vice president of the U. States—The secret intrigues of cunning aspirants, may alienate some; but candor, honesty, and talent, must take the station to which they are entitled in the confidence of the great body of the people.

When the repeated plaudits which followed this toast had subsided, the vice president replied:

I rise, gentlemen, not to make a speech, but simply to return you my thanks, which I do with the most heartfelt sincerity. On no occasion could the approbation of my fellow citizens be more acceptable, than the present, when I have been compelled, by the most artful and profligate movements, to appeal to them, as my constituents, in vindication of my character, impeached in the highest quarter, in an important political transaction. The manner in which I have been sustained in the appeal by the great body of my constituents, and particularly by you, my friends and neighbors, who have the best means of judging my conduct in all of the relations of life, public and private, will ever be remembered by me, with feelings of the most lively pleasure, and profoundest gratitude.

But, if these emotions were to be the only consequences of the incident to which your sentiment relates, however interesting they might be to me individually, to the community they would be of little importance. I trust, however, that such will not be the fact, but that others far more durable and important will follow.

Our government is founded on the intelligence and virtue of the people. Without them our free institutions cannot be preserved. One of the severest and most interesting trials to which their virtue and intelligence can be put, is in the case of an humble individual, unsustained, except by the force of truth and justice, coming into conflict with the most popular name, backed by the power and patronage of the government. How the people have stood this test in the present instance, history will record, and I trust, so record, as to impress indelibly, as a great and salutary truth with the American people, a public servant, honestly discharging his duty, need look to no other protection but the enlightened judgment of the community.

Before I sit down, permit me, gentlemen, to offer you the following sentiment:

The people of the United States.—When their public servants shall cease to confide in their intelligence and justice, the days of our liberty will have been numbered.

The state of South Carolina—In times of peril she proved her devotion to the union and the general good; let none say she is recreant to the cause.

The union—May the period be indefinitely postponed when we may be compelled to choose between its dissolution, and submission to a government of unlimited powers.

Political honesty and private integrity—

"Be thou chaste as ice, as pure as snow, Thou shalt not escape calumny."

VOLUNTEERS.

By col. F. K. Huger. Our republican institutions—To be preserved by devotion and disinterestedness, but cankered and undermined by sordid interest and selfish ambition.

By col. R. Anderson. The judges of the appeal court of South Carolina—Firm and independent.

By gen. Whitner, (president.) A speedy dissolution of any party which will not justify and sustain the vindication of innocence and exposure of intrigue.

By Jesse P. Lewis, esq. vice president. Robert Y. Hayne—The able and distinguished advocate of the true American system: Free trade and unrestricted industry.

By B. Hasell, esq. The honest statesman, the unblemished patriot, the exemplary citizen—He who is known in the community where he resides, to unite these excellencies of character, cannot stoop to "duplicity." Like the sun, his visible brightness may be occasionally obscured by clouds immeasurably beneath him; but to those who know the man and the luminary of heaven, it is unnecessary to prove that both, though hidden from the eyes, are shining beyond these intervening mists in inextinguishable and undiminished lustre.

By Mr. E. B. Benson. The Virginia senators—Honest politicians, breathing the sentiments of that enlightened and patriotic state.

By F. Burt, esq. The "correspondence"—

"Thrice is he armed, who hath his quarrel just;
And naked he, though locked up in steel,
Whose bosom with injustice is corrupted."

By Mr. Ferrell. Condy Raguet—The honest and lucid expositor of the American system, the zealous defender of the constitution, and the able and indefatigable supporter of state rights. "Well done thou good and faithful servant."

By Dr. Evins. The controversy of our executive officers—The barbed dart has missed its object, and the envenomed arrow has lost its poison.

By Dr. Symmes. The petition of the blacksmith's of Philadelphia—It tells more for the intelligence of the mechanics of our country, than the formation of a hundred "working men's" societies.

By James E. Reese, esq. The federal constitution—Despoiled of its original beauty and just proportions by a forced and fraudulent construction, can only be restored and perpetuated by a triumph of the principles contained in the exposition and protest of 1828.

The following was communicated by col. John E. Colhon.

State rights—To threaten is one thing, but to assail is another; strenuously to be maintained, when obviously assailed.

By col. Grisham. The hon. John McLean—Combining ability with integrity, perseverance and industry. He has shown himself capable of managing the most complicated affairs of our country—may the highest office in the gift of the people be his reward in due time.

By Mr. Dreffsen. The vice president of the United States—Ambitious only to promote, and to be incorporated with, the glory of his country.

By Mr. Wentworth. Martin Van Buren.—

"Ah! that deceit should steal such gentle shapes,
And with a virtuous visor hide deep vices."

By Mr. T. H. Harris. The present administration—It does not answer the purposes anticipated by its supporters.

JUDGE McLEAN.

From the Philadelphia Sentinel.

The following correspondence has been politely handed to us for publication:

To the hon John McLean, of Ohio.

SIR—The undersigned feeling a desire in common with a large number of your fellow citizens, to convey to you their sense of your merits and public services, have the honor to request you to accept an entertainment on the 11th inst. They have noticed with peculiar pleasure a private life without reproach, united to a career of usefulness, of industry, of devotion to the public weal, and of sound practical wisdom in the discharge of the duties of the several important stations you have occupied, which it is always gratifying to contemplate. In the councils of the nation during the late patriotic war, at the head of an important public department, and now as a member of the most honored judicial tribunal of the nation, your fellow citizens have always found the talented, laborious and faithful public servant, pursuing unobtrusively, yet steadfastly and vigorously, the public good, and attaining most worthily the public confidence. They recognize in you also one who having sprung from the ranks of the people, has always been the undeviating adherent of popular rights, of sound democratic principles, of the permanent constitutional union of the states, and of those measures of public policy for the support of our domestic industry, which as Pennsylvanians we value as so essential, and which we think are never to be surrendered. We take pleasure in expressing the satisfaction with which we shall meet you at the social table, and the great personal respect and regard with which we are your friends and fellow citizens.

George N. Baker, Jacob Souder, Daniel H. Miller, John Naglee, Miles N. Carpenter, Jonathan T. Knight, Benjamin Crispin, John Goodman, Michael W. Ash, George W. Riter, Isaac Boileau, Francis J. Harper, Philip Peltz, Thomas D. Grover, Richard Palmer, Wm. G. Alexander, George McLeod, Walter Thompson, Wm. H. Hood, Wm. Harvey, Wm. McGlinsey, N. C. Foster, Frederick G. Wolbert, F. A. Reybold, P. Oakford, Alex. W. Reid, Morgan Carr, John W. Ashmead, John Darragh, Thos. S. Smith, James M. Linnard, John R. Neff, John Wurts, James Page, Thomas Roney, Wm. M. Meredith, Wm. K. Kane, James Harper, Jos. Burden, Alex. Cook, Alex. McCaraher, John McClintock, Archibald Randall, James L. Dougherty, Saml. Paton, John R. Vodges, Thomas Richards.

April 5th, 1831.

Philadelphia, 8th April, 1831.

Gentlemen—I have received your invitation to a public dinner on the 11th instant, with feelings of gratitude, and beg leave to tender to each of you, my thanks, for the kind manner in which it is given. Coming from so respectable a source, I am deeply sensible of the honor conferred by it, although no one can be more conscious than myself, that I am more indebted for this honor, to the high character of those eminent men, with whom I am now connected, and to others, with whom it has been my fortune to be associated, in the public service, than to any personal merit of my own.

My experience in public life has confirmed the opinion which I had formed, before entering upon it, that an honest and persevering effort in the discharge of official duties, could never fail to secure a reasonable share of approbation. By a public servant, who has a just estimate of his responsibility, there is no inheritance so highly appreciated as this. It more than compensates him for his days and nights of labor, and anxiety, and holds out the highest motive for the utmost vigilance, to all public agents.

My very humble services to which you have referred, in so kind a manner, were commenced at a crisis of great importance. The country being involved in war, with a powerful nation, was reduced to great emergencies; and doubts were entertained, by many, whether we should not be forced to conclude an inglorious peace. It was at this period, and under such circumstances, that I learned to appreciate the great moral power of the state of Pennsylvania.

True to herself and the nation, she nobly sustained the war, and elevated the character of the nation. Attached to the principles of republican government, she has maintained, in the national councils, that policy which is best calculated to perpetuate our institutions. A judicious encouragement of our home industry, and a developement of our resources, by works of public improvement, have received from her, a constant and an efficient support.

Her central position, her agricultural pursuits, the steadiness of her principles, and her intelligence, eminently entitle her to the distinguished appellation of being "the key stone in our political arch."

There is much in the aspect of the political world, to cheer the hopes and encourage the efforts, of the friends of popular rights. The people seem determined to bring their rulers to a solemn account.—Absolute monarchy may be considered, as having nearly finished its career. If the people of the old world shall not become free, in the republican sense of the term, they will at least limit the powers of their governors, and in a good degree, secure their own personal privileges.

What can be more gratifying to a citizen of our republic, than the reflection, that to the moral influence of his own government, may these movements, in some degree, be attributed. The impulse was given, by the successful establishment of popular rights in this country, and the consummation, so much to be desired, may be looked for with confidence, if we shall be true to ourselves, and to the great principles which lie at the foundation of our government.

Whether we look to the happiness and prosperity of our own, or to the political regeneration of other countries, we see the importance of preserving our institutions in all their purity and vigor. If we shall fail in the mighty experiment, the cause of liberty must perish, perhaps forever.

The fundamental law of our union was formed in a spirit of compromise; and to this law are we indebted for our national prosperity. Without it, we should have constituted small republics, having little or no character at home, or respect in the estimation of foreign nations.

During the revolution, a sense of common danger united us; but after the close of that struggle, local interests gave rise to divisions, which must have broken up the confederacy, and eventually destroyed the republic which composed it. This fatal result was prevented by the happy union that was formed. The federal constitution, which is the basis of this union, should be viewed as the rock of our political salvation. We can rest our national happiness and glory, on no other foundation.

With what veneration should the principles of this constitution be cherished, and how strictly should they be guarded against encroachment.

In a country so extensive as ours, and so diversified by climate, soil and production, different views of national policy must be expected to arise, from local causes; but these views must be fully presented, through the representatives of the people, and receive due consideration.

The measures of the government should always be influenced, by those high and patriotic motives, which led to the formation of the constitution.—No particular interest should be advanced, to the destruction of other interests; but an exact equality of benefits or responsibility cannot be expected from legislative enactments. This cannot be attained, even within the limits of a state. No public improvement can be made by a state, which shall be equally advantageous to all its citizens. From their local position, or some other cause, a part of them will derive greater benefits from the work than others. The same inequality may result from other laws of a general nature, which are required by the public interest.

To limit the boundaries of legislation to laws which shall affect in the same degree, the interests of all parts of the community, would destroy the legislative power, both in the general and state governments.

There can be no restriction to the constitutional powers of the national legislature, but that which is imposed by an enlightened discretion, exercised on a full view of the interests of all the states. The corrective against a law, which is generally or partially oppressive, will be found, not in acts of violence, but in the force of public sentiment, expressed by remonstrance, and in the exercise of the rights of suffrage.

In conclusion permit me to say, that circumstances connected with my official relation to the country, would seem to require, that I should forego the great pleasure which an acceptance of your invitation would afford me. Whilst yielding to this impression, suffer me again to offer you my cordial thanks for your kindness, and to observe, that I shall cherish a recollection of your favorable opinion, with a gratification which can only be limited by a conviction, that you place too high an estimate on my public services and personal merits.

My claims to consideration rest alone on a sincere and constant endeavor to discharge the trusts committed to me, with an exclusive reference to the public interests. It would embitter my recollection of the past, if, in the exercise of my discretion, I had done injustice to any one, or had wilfully omitted to do, what my duty to the public enjoined.

With the highest regard, I am most sincerely your obedient servant, JOHN McLEAN.

To Messrs. Jacob Souder, Dr. George W. Riter, Philip Peltz, Samuel Paton, James M. Linnard, committee.

POLITICAL MEETINGS.

JACKSON TOWN MEETING.

"Our federal union. It must be preserved."

At a general town meeting of the democratic citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, friendly to the re-election of Andrew Jackson to the presidency of the United States, convened in Independence square, on Monday afternoon, 18th April, at 4 o'clock, in pursuance of public notice, and being the largest meeting held in this city on any occasion since the second war of our national independence.

Henry Toland, esq. presided, assisted by Henry Horn, John Naglee, William Duane, Robert Patterson, Philip Peltz, Joseph S. Riley, John Thompson, George W. Riter and William J. Leiper, esqrs. as vice presidents. Freeman Scott, Peter Fritz, Charles Hedelius and T. W. L. Freeman were chosen secretaries.

The meeting being thus organized, James Page, esq. addressed the chair in his usual eloquent and appropriate manner, and then submitted the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, the period has arrived for the citizens of this commonwealth to express their opinion upon subjects of great and general interest, both to themselves and the people of these United States; and whereas, the state of Pennsylvania, second to but one in the confederacy in point of population, and inferior to none if her capital, enterprize and resources be regarded, was the first to select, and the most ardent in the support of the distinguished patriot who now presides over the destinies of the nation, and has therefore reason to look to him for the protection of her cardinal interests; and whereas, we are satisfied, that Andrew Jackson, in whose virtue, stern republican integrity, and devoted attachment to the constitution, we place implicit confidence, only desires to hear the voice of the people properly and consistently expressed in order to obey it, and that it is not only the right, but the duty of this great state fully to apprise him of the principles by which she is influenced, and express her opinion of the course so far pursued by the general executive. Therefore be it—

1. Resolved, That the main and important objects contemplated by the American people in their choice of Andrew Jackson, as a national chief magistrate, have been by him early, decidedly and successfully obtained, and that his acts have met their wishes, confirmed their confidence, and given fresh cause for their already well founded gratitude towards him as a public benefactor.

2. Resolved, That we rejoice in the opportunity of manifesting an inflexible devotion to the fundamental leading principles of the union and the constitution, and that we will heartily re unite in promoting the election of the illustrious citizen, who acts upon the emphatic declaration that "they must and shall be preserved."

3. Resolved, That we regard the inviolability and supremacy of the judiciary of the United States as a matter of deep and important concern to the welfare of this growing republic; the source to which we are to look for a calm, clear and dispassionate decision of conflicting interests.

4. Resolved, That the veto on the Maysville road bill is in strict accordance with the constitution of the United States, and that the views of the president in relation to great public and local improvements meets with our decided approbation.*

5. Resolved, That we approve of the present tariff, believe its operation to be beneficial, and that any extensive change therein would be injurious to the interests of the state of Pennsylvania; that its continuance will conduce to the prosperity and independence of the nation and that every portion of the republic is alike interested in its preservation.

6. Resolved, That the payment of the national debt is an object deeply desired by the people of the United States, is considered by them as a leading feature of the administration, and should be hastened by strict economy on the part of the general government.

7. Resolved, That the persevering efforts made by the partizans of an often repudiated candidate to force him by means of misrepresentation, combination and artifice into the executive chair, deserves our most indignant condemnation, indicating alike, as they do, a contempt of the popular will, an overruling attachment to an individual in defiance of public judgment and a disposition to thwart, deceive and depreciate the American people.

8. Resolved, That our relations at home as well as abroad, are evidence of the talents and energy of our present chief magistrate, evince on his part a constant anxiety for the interests of our common country, and a devotion to duty rarely witnessed in such exalted stations.

9. Resolved, That Andrew Jackson, in consenting again to stand as a candidate in opposition to his known personal wishes, fully confirms the impression, that he is as ready now, as upon all former occasions, to make any and every sacrifice for the public good.

The meeting was then addressed by Francis G. Brewster, esq. in a very forcible manner, and followed by George M. Dallas, esq. in a strain of eloquence rarely equalled and never surpassed.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the chairman appoint a committee of correspondence, consisting of seven from each of the three congressional districts, in addition to the committee appointed at the last democratic town meeting.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be published in all the democratic papers of the city.

Resolved, That the thanks of the meeting be presented to the president, vice presidents and secretaries, for the able manner in which they conducted the proceedings of the same. Adjourned.

HENRY TOLAND, president.

HENRY HORN,
JOHN NAGLEE,
WILLIAM DUANE,
ROBERT PATTERSON,
PHILIP PELTZ, sen.
JOSEPH S RILEY,
JOHN THOMPSON,
GEORGE W. RITER,
WILLIAM J. LEIPER,
} Vice presidents.

Charles Heidelius, T. W. L. Freeman, Freeman Scott, Peter Fritz, } Secretaries.

On the same day that the "Jackson meeting" was held in the city, there was a large meeting of the friends of Henry Clay in Philadelphia county—Mr. Jacob Gardner was called to the chair, and Messrs. John Rush and T. R. Rotch were appointed vice presidents. Messrs. Thomas Connell and A. S. Logan officiated as secretaries.

After the "crowded assemblage" had been addressed by W. B. Reed, esq. a committee was appointed to draft and report resolutions, &c. and while they were out for that purpose, Messrs. Hart and Bethel addressed the meeting, with much approbation. The committee having returned, reported a preamble and the following resolutions, all which were adopted—

Resolved, That we disapprove of the existing administration of the general government, because the principal features of our national policy, such as internal improvements, and protection of manufactures have been obstinately neglected or opposed; and believing the vital interests of Pennsylvania in common with the other states, to depend upon the American System, we shall not be guilty of the inconsistency of upholding a man whose measures we so decidedly condemn.

Resolved, That general Jackson has disregarded the will of the people as expressed by their representatives, and evaded both the spirit and letter of the constitution, by fortively obtaining the sanction of the senate to several partisan appointments, which had already been acted upon and rejected by that august body.

Resolved, That we concur in opinion with the legislature of our state as expressed by their resolves upon the subject of manufactures, improvements, and the constitution—and we approve of the votes of the Pennsylvania delegation in congress, so repeatedly arrayed in opposition to the favorite schemes of the administration; and therefore we cannot consistently approve or support an administration whose policy is adverse to those resolves and votes, and whose continuance in power would endanger the interests and overthrow the policy of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the extravagance committed under the sanction of the department of state in the salary and outfit of John Randolph, and the expense of sending him to Russia in a ship of war, with a previous permission given to absent himself from his post, fills our minds with surprise and disgust;—and that we see in it the first instance which has yet disgraced our country, of a mere pension or reward for partisan services without the pretence of an expectation of the performance of official duties.

Resolved, That the extra allowances made by the post master general, without proof of extra services, ought to rouse the vigilance of a free people, to require a more faithful and accountable disbursement of the public treasure.

Resolved, That the numerous appointments of members of congress to office by the present executive, far exceeding the number made by all prior administrations—and directly in the teeth of the professions previously made by gen. Jackson, that where such things are done corruption must soon become the order of the day—furnish sad reason to distrust the sincerity of all his professions, or to doubt the firmness of his purposes.

Resolved, That we will use all honorable exertions to insure the election of Henry Clay to the presidential chair, having implicit confidence in his abilities, and his uniform and sound policy, which has been the same since the commencement of his political career. By electing him we know what course will be adopted, and we believe it to be the only one that will restore confidence to the people, and reconcile the different sections of the union, after the fluctuating and vicious policy that has been pursued.

Resolved, That we approve of the proposed national convention, to be held at Baltimore on the second Monday in December next, and recommend to the citizens of Pennsylvania to meet, in their respective congressional districts, to nominate delegates to represent them in the proposed convention.

Resolved, That this meeting recommend to the citizens of the third congressional district to meet in their respective wards, and election districts, in order to elect delegates to select on the 18th day of June next, a person to represent this district in the general convention, to be held at Baltimore, in December next.

JACOB GARDNER, president.

J. RUSH, T. R. ROTCH, } vice presidents.

Thomas Connell, A. S. Logan, } secretaries.

LIVERPOOL RAIL WAY.

From the Baltimore American.

We lay before our readers this morning a document of a highly interesting character, the "report of the directors of the Liverpool and Manchester rail road company," which is so fully satisfactory, and states facts in themselves so conclusive of an important question, that we were almost tempted to present it without comment. We need do nothing more, in fact, than state that the following striking results are now fully ascertained by positive and frequent experiment:

1. All doubts as to the adaption of rail roads to the transportation of heavy commodities are removed by the plain fact, that the Liverpool and Manchester road has reduced the price of 15*s.* per ton, the price heretofore charged by the canal, to 10*s.* that is, to two-thirds.

2. Its advantage in the conveyance of passengers is so great, that the charge has been reduced from 10*s.* to 5*s.* that is one-half.

3. Its capability of extensive transportation is for all practical purposes unlimited. In all the different channels of communication hitherto open between Liverpool and Manchester, 4,000 tons were conveyed daily; now, by the single channel of the rail road, this whole amount can be carried without occupying any particular part of the road more than 15 minutes, that is, 1-96 part of the twenty-four hours.

4. As to speed, the regular travel between the two places is performed in less than one hour and a half; and the distance being 32 miles, the rate is more than twenty miles an hour.

*This appears to be a severe censure on gov. Wolf for approving the bill to which we referred in the last Register. Surely, Philadelphia having received the aid of the general government to make the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, and now enjoying the expenditure of large sums of money on account of the "breakwater" will not pronounce such proceedings unconstitutional! We should like to know the meaning of this resolution, and discourse a little with the "philosopher" who drafted it. To us, the veto on the Maysville road bill is almost as incomprehensible (in itself), as Mr. Van Buren's resigning letter. Ed. Reg.

5. It is ascertained from the experience of a winter unusually severe, that there need never be any positive interruption of this travel from the accidents of the seasons, even when that in ordinary modes may be wholly prevented.

6. Travelling on roads of this description, with all this enormous increase of speed, is declared to be the safest kind of travelling, fewer accidents occuring for the number of persons conveyed.

7. And connected with the last fact is another, that carriages have been constructed of strength quite sufficient to bear this increase of velocity.

It appears that the success of the rail road system in convincing the public, has been commensurate with these remarkable results; there has been in this case no gradual and tardy transition from old modes to the new. Subordinate rail roads are advancing rapidly to completion, and no doubt remains that the completion of the principal work is to be reckoned one of the most important eras in mechanical improvement, and will be attended with most striking consequences to public wealth, and the whole business of society. The directors have, therefore, conferred a lasting benefit, not only on their own country, but the whole world. It is evident what an important stake our own city has had in the determination of this question, and what signal benefits must devolve on it from this most satisfactory and triumphant issue.

LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER RAIL WAY.

Fifth annual report.

Liverpool, 28th March, 1831.

The directors in laying before the proprietors a statement of their proceedings on the present occasion, are fully sensible of the new and responsible situation in which they stand. Hitherto they have appeared as the advisers of a great public measure, and as the conductors of the various operations required for carrying that measure into effect. At the present moment, however, they have to acknowledge a more serious responsibility, as being amongst the original promoters of an undertaking of immense magnitude, which through every stage of its progress they have contended would be of signal benefit to the towns of Liverpool and Manchester, at the same time that it would afford a safe and lucrative investment to the proprietors. The rail way has now been in practical operation for six months; and they will proceed to show, that the experience of these six months has justified the favorable sentiments they have, from the first entertained.

The rail way was partially opened to the public, for the conveyance of passengers, on the 16th of September last; and in this department of their business, the company have not been required to wait for that gradual and tardy transition, which usually takes place, when long established modes and customs have to be superseded by the introduction of new schemes, and an untried system. Within fourteen days from the opening of the way, the number of passengers conveyed between the two towns was about 800 per day; and before the end of October the number of passengers amounted to 1,200 per day; while the whole existing establishments of stage coaches and mails, on the turnpike-road, prior to the opening of the rail way, would not accommodate more than seven hundred persons per day. This sudden and extraordinary influx of passengers, claiming to be conveyed between the the two towns, must be ascribed to the unexampled ease, rapidity and cheapness, with which the journey was effected. Two hours was then the usual time allowed, and since the late arrangement, by which the first class trains have been relieved from the frequent stoppages to take up and sit down passengers on the road, the journey of thirty miles, by these carriages, is generally performed under an hour and a half: and thus, in a few months, has been effected a new and extensive system of intercommunication, highly important to the interests of a mercantile community, and so extraordinary and complete in its character as to form an era in the progress of national improvements, and a striking epoch in the advance of mechanical science. For this gratifying result the company are, of course, mainly indebted to the high talents and persevering energy of their engineer, Mr. Stephenson, who has executed the work with a precision and effect truly wonderful. The company are also under great obligations to their treasurer, Mr. Booth, for the plan of the boiler, which has given the locomotive engine such additional power.

But the quick speed of rail way travelling, which constituted its recommendation with the public, brought on the directors an increased anxiety, and the necessity for unceasing exertions, in order that the strength and general structure of their engines and coaches might, as soon as possible, be made capable of resisting the strain, to which, from their unexampled speed, they were subject. In their efforts to provide carriages both commodious and strong, in every way suitable to the object and satisfactory to the public, the directors believe that they have succeeded. Upwards of 130,000 passengers have been booked at the company's office, besides many thousand persons taken up at intermediate stopping places; and they have reason to believe, that the conviction is now general, that travelling by the rail way is the safest as well as cheapest and most expeditious mode of public conveyance ever presented. It is true, that since the opening of the rail way four fatal accidents have occured to workmen employed by the company, owing to neglect or carelessness; but the directors have the satisfaction to state, that only two accidents have occurred to passengers, one a trifling contusion, the other attended with loss of limb, resulting from the party having imprudently, and against remonstrance to the contrary, jumped off while the trains were in rapid motion.

In the merchandise department, the increase of traffic, though more gradual, has been very satisfactory. In December last, the weight of goods passed along the line between Liverpool and Manchester was 1,432 tons; in January 3,848 tons; in February 4,818 tons; and in the present month, up to the 26th, 5,104 tons. The directors are preparing a cattle station, at Broad Green, and are building carriages calculated for the conveyance of live stock. This branch of their business the directors have always considered would afford a great accommodation to the public, as well as profit to the company; and they hope speedily to bring this department into active operation.

Of coals, only a few thousand tons have as yet been brought by the rail way; the pressing demands made on the company for the conveyance of merchandise and passengers, have required the whole of the engine power which the directors have, on the onset, been able to command; they look forward, nevertheless, to this branch of traffic constituting an important item in the revenue of the concern.

But while the business of the rail way, in its various departments, has been thus satisfactorily established, it must not be disguised that the expenses of the company, in some items, have exceeded the previous estimates furnished to the directors. This has especially been the case in respect to the locomotive engines; the wear and tear of which, owing to the rapidity of their motion, and to the machinery, in the first instance, being found much too weak, (a defect which experience only could discover), has exceeded all former calculation. The directors, at the same time, see no reason to regret the exertions they have made to establish a system of travelling as perfect as possible; being persuaded that the great increase in travelling, which may be ascribed to the completeness of the system, will soon overbalance, even in a pecuniary point of view, the extra cost of wear and tear in engines and carriages.

The directors take the present opportunity of replying to an observation which has been circulated with much industry, namely, that the rail way was not adapted for the conveyance of heavy or bulky goods. The exact contrary is the fact. In the last three months the capability of the rail way for the transit of merchandise, on a large scale, has been brought to the most effectual of all tests, the test of experience; and the result is complete and satisfactory. On the 25th of February, an experiment was made with a new and powerful locomotive engine, the Sampson, constructed by Messrs. Robert Stephenson & Co. Her load was 107 tons of merchandise, in 30 wagons, the gross weight conveyed, (besides the engine and tender), being about 150 tons. She was assisted up the inclined plane by three other engines, and without further aid proceeded to Manchester, where she arrived with her train in two hours and 35 minutes from the time of starting. Indeed, the vast capability of rail ways for the transit of merchandise appears to be very imperfectly understood. It may be easily demonstrated that the passage along the line of 4,000 tons of goods per day, being about three times the quantity that now passes by all the existing conveyances, would not occupy any one portion of the line above fifteen minutes in the day, or a fraction of time amounting to 1-96th part of the twenty-four hours. Nor will this be surprising to those who have observed and considered the quiet and almost deserted appearance of nearly the whole line of rail way, even on the busiest days. Hence the capability of the present undertaking to discharge any imaginable increase of the trade between the two towns; and hence how unnecessary a rival road, founded on the alleged incapability of the present rail way! The directors are prepared to carry three thousand passengers per day, being three times the number now passing; and in a short time will be able to convey all the goods which may be offered to them. It is admitted that the Sampson is of more than the usual size, and her performance extraordinary in proportion; but, though it may be found expedient, (for the accommodation of the diversified traffic on the rail way), to use smaller engines, with fewer wagons attached to them, this is matter of arrangement, and will depend on the varying circumstances of the case, the experiment, nevertheless, is complete in itself, and exhibits a practical answer to the confident, but ignorant, assertion, that rail ways are not calculated for the conveyance of heavy goods. To the mercantile public, the result will be every way satisfactory; they had been led to expect an important reduction in the cost of conveyance, both of goods and passengers, and this has already been effected: the cost of conveyance for cotton, the staple commodity of the two towns, has been reduced 33 per cent.—namely from 15*s.* to 10*s.* per ton; and the charge for passengers, in a still greater ratio, namely, from 10*s.* to 5*s.* each.

Since the last annual meeting, the Kenyon Junction rail way has been completed, by which a cheap and direct communication is effected, through the Bolton and Leigh rail way, to Bolton, and thence, by water carriage, to Bury and the surrounding country. Already about 40 tons of goods are conveyed daily between Bolton and Liverpool, in addition to the traffic between Liverpool and Manchester, and there is no doubt of this branch rail way bringing a valuable accession of toll, both in goods and passengers, to the Liverpool and Manchester line. The Warrington and Newton rail way, the Wigan rail way, and the St. Helen's branch, are all in the course of execution, thereby opening an advantageous communication with the great coal fields in the vicinity of the two latter lines, and, together with the Kenyon and Bolton rail ways, intersecting in three different directions the great coal fields in this part of the country; also affording a cheap and convenient access to the manufacturing districts of Hindley, West Houghton, Chowbent, Tildsley and Leigh.

Before leaving this branch of the subject, the directors will advert to the system of management on which it has hitherto been deemed expedient to conduct the business of the company. It was the wish of the directors, in the summer of last year, to make such an arrangement with one of the carrying companies on the old river navigation as would have induced it to transfer a part at least of its carrying establishment to the rail way; after repeated interviews and discussions, the company alluded to demanded, as their share of the charge to the public, in order to defray the expenses of their establishment at Liverpool and Manchester, 9*s.* out of every 15*s.* per ton, while for the remaining 6*s.* the rail way company were to grant the use of the rail way, to provide locomotive engines, moving power for the tunnel inclined plane, wagons for the goods, guards on the road, and every other contingent expense. Such an extravagant demand from a company having experience in the carriage business, and one, whose direct and evident policy it was to establish itself on the rail way, afforded little encouragement to rely on the co-operation of any of the existing concerns. The directors, therefore, saw the necessity of being themselves, (in the first instance, at least), carriers, as well as receivers of toll, on the rail way. They accordingly provided a carrying establishment, on a limited scale, at each end of the line; by means of which they have brought the rail way into immediate, useful and profitable operation. In the travelling department the necessity was still more apparent, for the company to establish their own vehicles, subject to their own arrangements. And while their success, in the conveyance both of merchandise and passengers, has fully justified the principle and plans which they have adopted, (the directors trust, with no less advantage to the public than to the company), it does not prevent any arrangement being made, either with independent carriers or with coach proprietors, should the accommodation of the public or the interests of the concern require the adoption of such a course of proceeding.

It may be expected that after a winter of more than ordinary severity, both from snow and frost, some notice should be taken of the interruptions to the traffic on the rail way, which to a certain extent, must unavoidably have been occasioned. The statement will be very satisfactory; on no one day were the trains of goods prevented passing between the two towns—on no one day was the number of trips performed by the coach trains diminished—some delay, in point of time, was certainly experienced, but the extent of the evil amounted to this,—that on two or three occasions the rail way coaches were as long on the road as the stage coaches were accustomed to be, in their ordinary course of travelling.

By the statement of accounts, which will be submitted to the meeting, the proprietors will observe that the expenditure towards the completion of the works has considerably exceeded the anticipations of this time last year. The sum authorised to be borrowed, under the original act of parliament, has been raised and expended, making the amount of original capital and of sums borrowed, which the proprietors will have authority, by the new bill now before parliament, to incorporate, by the creation of new shares, £865,000; and from the present prospect of a large increase of business, the directors are of opinion it will probably be found expedient to extend very materially the carrying establishment, in engines, wagons and warehouses, in order that the company may reap the full benefit of that vast traffic which the increasing trade of the town, and the ascertained capability of the rail way, will place at their disposal.

By an inspection of the balance sheet of the company's accounts, up to the 31st of December last, the proprietors will perceive the amount of profit derived from the working of the rail way, from the 16th of September to that date; and the directors have great satisfaction in being able to recommend to the proprietors a dividend of £2 per share, chargeable on the nett profits of the concern, to the end of last year. It is gratifying to the directors to be able to announce so prompt a return on the capital subscribed, and they have full confidence in regarding this first dividend as an earnest of that permanent and substantial prosperity, which it will be the duty and the pleasure of successive directors, at future annual meetings, to record.

Before concluding their report, the directors cannot refrain from expressing to the proprietors their acknowledgements, for the uniform confidence which they have experienced at their hands. In the expenditure of so large a capital, and in the exercise of the discretionary power with which they have been invested, they have had occasion for all that candor and liberal consideration which the proprietors have uniformly shown. The undertaking intrusted to their charge is now fairly launched into operation, and the proprietors, under whose sanction the work has been carried on, will have the satisfaction of reflecting that the result has been, not more advantageous to themselves as individuals, than beneficial to the country at large.

CHARLES LAWRENCE, chairman.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 11—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, MAY 14, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1025.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

HISTORY OF IRON, &c. A much valued gentleman of New Hampshire has sent us the first contribution towards our proposed history of the iron manufacture in America—being a copy of the British order of 14th April 1750, communicating an act of parliament, to "encourage the importation of pig and bar iron from his majesty's colonies in America, and prevent the erection of any mill or other engine for slitting and rolling iron, or any plateing forge to work with a tilt hammer, or any furnace for making steel in the said colonies," &c. To which is annexed the reply of the then acting governor, Wentworth, dated Portsmouth January 10, 1750-51, saying that he had caused the said act to be published, and had made particular enquires, and was "fully satisfied that there is not within the limits of New Hampshire any such mill or engine, and but one forge that makes bar iron.".

The gentleman also gives us one or two referenees, by which other particulars may be obtained—and we tender to him our best thanks for his attention to the subject.

There is much exceedingly interesting matter scattered through the history of the several American colonies, (now the United States)—but, though our recollections are strong, and means of reference considerable, it is not to be supposed that we can either call to mind all that we have read, or lay our hands upon all the facts useful for the information of our friends and the public; hence, gentlemen, in all parts of the United States, are requested to brush up their recollections, and examine their books, to aid in accomplishing the work that we have proposed; and, though our special desire is to obtain information relative to the origin, progress and present state of the manufacture of iron, it will equally assist our general purpose if accounts are furnished of the resistance of the "mother country" to the establishment of any, or every, other kind of manufacture in the colonies. As before observed, it is of no importance in what manner the facts may be presented, and the editor will cheerfully pay for copying appropriate articles, if required, as well as the postage on all such communications.

We desire to establish an important fact—that Great Britain, as well in a broad political point of view as in the narrow pursuit of her own avarice, labored to prevent the establishment of manufactures in her colonies; and that she was specially jealous of all those most needful to a state of war. Hence works of iron were particularly discouraged, or forbidden. As a matter of political policy, the great William Pitt, (though he finally justified the resistance of our fathers), would have prevented even the manufacture of "a hob nail" in America. And if we shall exhibit the facts as we know that they exist, the transition is easy from things as they were, to things as they are. For our own part, we believe firmly, that the British government and people have been as zealous since the revolution, as they were before it, to render and keep us as mere "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for them—as shepherds, to supply raw hides and skins—or simple husbandmen, to furnish provisions by the "sweat of our brow," in exchange for the more profitable products of capital and scientific power—by which, one small girl at Manchester, for example, might produce a value equal to the labor of six hard-working men in the United States—the exchanges of values being confined to the two parties. This is seen in the facts already stated: because that we had much wood to supply fuel, and any quantity of iron ore, and water power, the British government would encourage the first or rudest manufactures of iron, but with these, it was COMMANDED that we should stop! And it should be remembered also, that even those rude manufactures could be exported by us only to the dominions of Great Britain. The history of the progress of manufacturing industry in the United States, since the acknowledgment of our independence by the treaty of 1783 to the present day, abounds with incidents to shew the same disposition in the British government and people. Every clang of the hammer or clash of the saw, every turn of the spindle or stroke of the shuttle, in the United States, is regarded by Britain as an act of hostility towards her! And how base and contemptible are some of the means which have been resorted to, to keep us down? The writer of this believes as decidedly as in his own existence, that much English money has been expended to support the anti-tariff press in the United States—he believes that his own press might have been sold for a large sum, had he been willing to part with it, from certain dark and distant overtures that have been made concerning it; and he firmly believes that English money, to a great amount, has been expended to effect some of our important elections—He is almost ready to believe, that he could put his hand on the head of more than one who has been the representative of British policy and British manufacturers in the congress of the United States. There is no other way, he thinks, of accounting for some things which have happened. He is satisfied, that about two hundred thousand pounds sterling were subscribed in England some time ago, and sacrificed in the United States, to break down certain of our manufactures; and has no doubt that a million could be instantly had for such an invasion of our tariff laws as would lead to the destruction of our manufactures of iron, the pioneer in other things now about to be attempted. He will go further and express his decided opinion, that the late mighty outcry about NULLIFICATION was on 'BRITISH ACCOUNT," while he certainly believes that the vast majority of those who made it were honest and sound-hearted, but deceived or mistaken, AMERICANS.

Under such impressions, the editor will continue to exert every faculty that he possesses to support and extend the "American System"—the glorious effects of which are visible in every part of our country which has embraced its principles, in the splendid prosperity that prevails among all classes of the people. These benefits are not confinable by geographical lines—but if any reject them, let not such be offended because others enjoy them. It is a subject on which so far as in him lies, he now rejects all "non committals" or "ju-di-cious" arrangements. He goes, for EFFECTUAL PROTECTION—without "combination" or "compromise;" because that such protection, so far as it has been afforded, has had one invariable tendency—to furnish profitable employment to producers and lessened cost of commodities to consumers. It is a fact—a glorious fact, that, (to say nothing of the market opened to the farmers for their surplus productions at home), a reduction in price has speedily followed the protection of any particular manufacture in the U. States—while the greater part of the articles which are yet without the pale of our protecting laws retain their old high prices, for the benefit of foreign labor and capital. What more is necessary to shew the wholesome and benevolent operations of the American system? Reduced prices are the inevitable result of COMPETITION. While the Dutch held the spice islands they destroyed ten times as much spice as they sold, that the value might be kept up—the tenth selling for more money than ten times as much would have produced in the market. But to bring the subject more home—the price of spades, shovels, hoes, &c. which are extensively manufactured in the United States, is much reduced; but articles of ironmongry, in general, which are not so manufactured, as well as steel and its chief manufactures, are at about their old prices. Let these things be accounted for, except in the competition which we commend!

There is one fact just now presented to us, in the "New Haven Register," which laughs at "free trade philosophy." The good that was to be rendered to the poor by the reduced price of salt, in a diminished duty, was long and lustily proclaimed. This proceeding has had effect to discharge many persons from the manufacture of salt, and, will, perhaps, nearly break up all the establishments in the eastern states, because of ruinous uncertainty in the market. And what is the result? asks the New Haven paper, which adds—"We have before us a New York price current of March 27, 1830, when the duty was 20 cents per bushel, and a New York price current of April 19, 1831, under the reduced duties, of 15 cents per bushel, from which we make the following extracts:—

	March 27, 1830. (Duty 20 cents.)		April 19, 1831. (Duty 15 cents.)
Turks Island, per bush.	45 to 47 cts.		50
St. Ubes,	44	45	none.
Cadiz,	40	41	42	43
Lisbon,	43	44	43
Liverpool ground,		40	not quoted.
Do. sack,	2 05	2 12	2 00	2 25

Thus it will be seen that the article now averages a higher price than it did last year with the duties up. Turks island salt, which goes into most common use, is nearly five cents higher than it was, though the duty is 5 cents less. Every man, therefore, who puts salt in his porridge, must now pay this extra price to benefit foreigners. This is taxing the many for the benefit of the few, the foreign few, with a vengeance."

The occasion is an apt one to introduce the following article from the Philadelphia Gazette, and we should like a "return of the compliment," by a publication of our remarks upon it—

The publication of the "The Banner of the Constitution" has commenced in this city. The twenty-third number of the second volume reached us to day. The editorial articles are characterized by clearness, energy, and spirit; and the editor seems unwilling to utter any sentiment, or proposition, without supporting it by facts, and explaining it in all its bearings and ramifications. Sedate and cool, he labors to convince, not to enforce the reader; and, confiding in the palpable justice and plausibility of his efforts, he proceeds with cheerfulness, confidence and hope. He has proposed to raise a fund for the gratuitous weekly circulation of the four last pages or folds of the Banner, containing the editoral and original matter, upon the following terms:—

1. There shall be published 1,000 extra copies, on cheap common paper, for gratuitous circulation throughout the fifty two counties of Pennsylvania, in the ratio of their representation in the state legislature.

2. Every editor of a newspaper of every party, every member of the legislature, and every member of congress, shall receive a copy, if he is willing to pay the postage of it. The other copies will be distributed to other public officers, and to such private individuals as may be considered the most inclined to co-operate.

3. The distribution of the papers, and the sole management of the fund, will be placed under the supervision of three respectable gentlemen, who, at the expiration of one year, will close their accounts, and furnish each contributor to the fund with a report of their operations.

4. The charge which will be made for these one thousand copies, will be the precise amount, and no more, of the actual cost of the paper, the press-work, postage on letters, and the expenses incidental to the distribution, the editor desiring no advantage from this extra edition, except what may ultimately result to him from a more enlarged circulation of the paper.

5. The publication of this extra edition shall be commenced as soon as a sum shall be obtained adequate to cover the expenses for six months, and will be continued for one year, provided the fund contributed shall hold out so long. Should the fund contributed amount to more than sufficient to pay for the one thousand copies for one year, the surplus will be applied to the publication of additional copies to be distributed as the committee of supervision shall direct.

☞We propose that—

1. Twenty four thousand extra copies of NILES' REGISTER shall be printed for circulation through the twenty four states of the union, according to their ratio of representation in congress.

2. Any body and every body may have a copy of it, the subscription being paid, if willing to pay the postage?

3. "The distribution of the papers and the management of the fund"—(the latter especially), shall be placed in the hands of the editor, who will endeavor to give a good account of all his operations—and carry the war into every strong hold of the enemy, domestic or foreign, with an ever-patient industry and boundless zeal; for money, which causes the parson to preach, the lawyer to plead, and the doctor to prescribe—will also make the pen and press go more "glibly."

4. The charge for these 24,000 copies will be in the precise amount of 120,000 dollars, except that persons, or companies, who subscribe and pay for 100 copies in advance, shall have a deduction of 20 per centum.

5. The publication of the extra copies will gladly be commenced next week, and continued so long as they are paid for—the surplus earnings to be appropriated to the benefit of the editor's wife and children, and his own ease and comfort, if he shall live longer than he is able to work.

☞Here we have it—against and for the "American System!" We shall see who will make the most of the subject—not forgetting the money! Mr. Raguet seems to think that six months will be long enough to do all that he can against the tariff, and we also believe that the great question may really be settled by the movements of the people in the current year. But if not, with this handsome addition to his business, the editor pledges himself to support the "American System," so long as he can talk or write about it with the hope of being useful—provided always, his future notions of policy, guided by better prospects from the other side, shall not induce him to put his veto upon the further support of his press! He must have some "non committal"—leave a "little hole to creep out at," as convenience serves: the public, however, will determine on the probability of change in his opinions, first entertained when in the 18th year of his age and never for one moment doubted, but extended and confirmed by the experience of thirty-six years.

THE LATE "CABINET." We continue our extracts for the instruction or amusement of our readers.

The editors of the "Richmond Enquirer" think that there is nothing ambiguous in Mr. Van Buren's resigning letter, and say, in their paper of the 3d instant:—

"Mr. Van Buren tells the president at once, why he wishes to withdraw from the cabinet. The party is divided and distracted about the succession. He himself is now held up as a candidate for the chair, in spite of his "anxious wishes and zealous endeavors to prevent a premature agitation of the question." He is suspected of employing the great influence of his office for the advancement of his own views. The president is attacked through his sides The administration is embarrassed and weakened—objections are raised against it by some of its own party—jealousies are engendered and there is no knowing to what extremes these discords may be hurried. To put an end to this state of things—to reconcile and re-unite the party—to give the administration the united aid of all its friends—and thus to carry through all the reforms which may be in contemplation, during the president's two terms of office; and to bring to a happy close his "patriotic, toilsome, and eventful public life," Mr. Van Buren avows his determination to retire from the state department. Is there any thing so mysterious in this course, that it cannot be understood? Is it so very wonderful, that a man may wish to save his own feelings, at the same time he consults the peace and efficacy of the administration—by surrendering the power and patronage, which he is charged with abusing?"

"No pains too, are spared—no insidious insinuations are wanting, to rouse the suspicions and resentments of Messrs. Branch and Ingham—and eventually, should the opposition succeed in this design, appeals will be made to the state pride of North Carolina and Pennsylvania!—But it is not possible, that this insidious plan can succeed. Mr. Branch and Mr. Ingham will see through it, and will despise it. The president, we have no doubt, has truly assigned the reasons for renovating the cabinet. It is perfectly consistent, that he should bear testimony to their zeal and integrity, and public services, and at the same time should wish to replace them. Was not an entirely new cabinet better calculated for the harmony, at least, which might pervade it, "to command (as he says), the public confidence, and satisfy public opinion?" In one sense at least, the cabinet should be considered as an unit. A and B may go in, if C and D will—but may not, perhaps, if E and F continue. There is a difficulty, not merely of getting proper men to serve, but men who will serve together. Half of the cabinet being out, it was not so easy to supply their places, when the other half remains, with feelings too, already excited by past events, as when an entire set of men is called in, who may be suited to each other's dispositions and opinions."

"On the whole, however much the opposition may seem to chuckle at the dissolution of the cabinet, yet it puts them worse off than they were before. They will try to make as much mischief as they can. This is too much their scheme of tactics. But their means of mischief are much reduced. Their great plan of sowing the seeds of strife between the friends of Calhoun and Van Buren is broken up.—Van Buren has withdrawn to retirement; *perhaps is going across the Atlantic. He has no longer the ear of the president—nor the weight of office; nor any of those appliances, which he has been charged with abusing. The opposition can no longer, therefore, turn these things to account. They can no longer insidiously fan the flame of jealousy, and scatter discord in the republican ranks.—

The following is also copied from the Richmond Enquirer—"A Rhode Island paper inquires, why Mr. Barry was not swept off with his colleagues—it concludes, that "the good of the people has not been consulted in this breaking up of the miserable cabinet at Washington" and it civilly insinuates, that Mr. Barry is still wanted to carry on the system of 'national police,' in making the post office department subservient to the re-election of Andrew Jackson." Another Rhode Island paper, a friend to the administration, viz: the "Providence Patriot," gives the solution, that Mr. Barry has offered his resignation, but that the president requires his continuance in office till the investigation of the charges lately brought against him shall have been completed." This is the true state of the case. We [the editors of the Enquirer], understand that Mr. Barry did tender his resignation—but the president told him that charges had been made against his office, which ought to be met and put down. Mr. Barry at once acquiesced—feeling the force of the remark—and seeing that it was due both to himself and to the administration, to see out the false charges which had been made against his department."

The Pennsylvania Reporter, the official print at Harrisburg, thus speaks of Mr. Ingham, in regard to the late derangement at Washington:—"As Pennsylvanians, we pronounce it with pride, that no public functionary ever retired from a high public trust, who had secured a larger share of the public confidence, by an able and faithful discharge of his duty, than Mr. Ingham—he is removed from the public councils for a time, but he is not lost to the eyes of the nation."

The Carlisle (Pa.) Volunteer, says—"It affords us pleasure, to see the manly firmness of our statesman, Mr. Ingham, who, feeling no self-condemnation, could not voluntarily join with those whose 'public spirit' induced them to cease from their labors, for the public good."

From the Charleston Mercury—Van Buren and his presses are out against state rights. They call the doctrines of Thomas Jefferson "foolishness," and himself a "traitor." They have joined the presses of Clay and Webster, and their cry is, "down with the state rights party!" More anon.

The Fayetteville Observer of the 20th ult. said—"It is worthy of remark, that at the dinner to Mr. Calhoun, an interesting account of which will be found in this paper, the president of the United States was not toasted. In Mr. Calhoun's speech and the toasts, we have further assurance, if any were needed, that neither Mr. C. nor his friends will give any further support to the administration."

In reply to a remark in the Federal Union, of Milledgeville, that "Mr. Calhoun will not be a candidate for the presidency," the Observer, adds—

"In one sense, this formal annunciation may be true; that is, the Union may be authorized to say that Mr. Calhoun will not offer himself as a candidate for the presidency. We never expected that he would. But it is not authorized to speak for the large and respectable body of friends to Mr. Calhoun throughout the country? We trust that they will bring Mr. Calhoun fairly before the people as a candidate. As one of his friends, we are willing to abide the issue now; because we have no confidence in the present executive, or in Mr. Clay; and because we have no expectation that president Jackson can be re-elected, if the tide of popularity continues to set so strongly against him and his administration as it has done for the last six months. Mr. Van Buren is a weight which can hardly fail to sink him.*

The Richmond Enquirer has said:

"We now repeat for the last time, most solemnly, that in all the intercourse we have had with this man, [Mr. Van Buren], we never heard him, directly or indirectly, by insinuation, word, or whisper, make the slightest allusion to the presidency. No not one! Judging of what has been said of others by what we know of ourselves, we are satisfied that great injustice has been done to him. We hope now he is going to PRIVATE LIFE, that all such absurdities may be consigned to the 'vile dust from which they spring.' It is not by electioneering, it is not by intrigue, that such a high office as the presidency of the United States ought to be won. We repeat it for the thousandth time, the office belongs to the people, and they will give it to whom they please. When they want a chief magistrate, they will call him, whether it be Cincinnatus at the plough, or H. Clay, mending his fences."

The Middlesex Gazette offers the following to explain Mr. Van Buren's motives in retiring from the department of state.

"Many years ago, (of course long before cold water associations were dreamed of), Mr. —— came into the city upon a warm summer's day. He drank very freely of punch, and on his return found it impossible to sit steady on his horse. In one of his reelings he lost his balance, but by clinging to the mane of his horse he broke his fall, and came upon his feet. A lad who was in his company asked him what he got off for? Oh, said he, I only got off to get on better!"

From the Telegraph of April 30. The late resignations have produced a great sensation throughout the country; and have been the subject of much comment in all the leading political journals. The ex-secretary of state, however, seems to have acquired by far the greatest share of public notoriety; to him has been attributed, both by friend and foe, the credit or censure of having caused this unprecedented explosion. The Courier and Enquirer ascribes to Mr. Van Buren the powers of sorcery, for it says he had only to raise his wand and the whole cabinet vanished; and the Enquirer, positive, comparative, and superlative, together with all their echoes, while they waste much breath, and more ink, in endeavoring to prove the purity, sincerity, and disinterestedness of his motives, still laud him as the master spirit who raised the storm.

On the other hand, the presses not exclusively devoted to the ex-secretary, are loud in their denunciations

*There is a strong report that Mr. Van Buren will succeed Mr. McLane as minister at London—to "quit the scenes of contention and field of electioneering." Something like this seems to have been intimated in the president's letter to him.

*This seems to have been borrowed from the Telegraph, which said sometime before the resignations—"We admonish the partisans of the secretary of state to beware; strong as general Jackson's popularity is, his weight is too much for it to carry."

of his ambitious intrigues; on his devoted head are poured all the phials of public wrath; and the republican party have decreed for him retirement and oblivion—the inevitable fate of all those who, for their own selfish purposes, have attempted to distract and divide them. His doom has been pronounced in language too plain to be misunderstood; and whether he goes to St. James's or St. Tammany's, to become an out door pensioner of its hall, in a few, very few years, it will emphatically be said of him—fuit, or virgit.

The United States Gazette has a letter from Washington, from which we make the following extract. Those who attribute so great a degree of management to Mr. Van Buren, will see, or think that they see, in it, a lucid explanation of his late resignation and so forth:

"Mr. Van Buren, it is understood, will be sent to England, to take the place of Mr. McLane, as soon as the acceptance of the latter of his new office shall have been received. He has played his cards very adroitly, and the expectation is, that he will be run on the Jackson ticket, for vice president—that Gen. Jackson, on the plea of ill health, and increasing infirmities, would immediately after his re-election, resign the office, and Mr. Van Buren would thus slide easily into the vacant seat. Thus, by a process of prospective management, Mr. Van Buren proposes to secure the presidency for himself, without any reference to the opinion of the people, and this is strong presumptive evidence that the general and his secretary of state have confidence in their own popularity."

☞ We cannot see any thing unreasonable in this. We heard the friends of the late secretary of state, at Albany, in the extra session of the legislature in 1824, hundreds of times openly say, that the "preservation of THE republican party" made it indispensably necessary, that the people of the state should not be allowed to vote for a president of the United States. The whole then, is in good keeping—so far as one of the parties is concerned.

*From the Boston Transcript. The following is sent to us as a translation of Mr. Van Buren's letter of resignation:—

"Dear Sir—The great moving spring of atheistical doctrines, premeditated and promulgated by the influence of superstition, and converted into an union clothes warehouse, cannot be more gratified than Jeptha was when he was commander under the influence of the mail stage, connected with the Providence line, coming in full contact with belles letters.

"That class of beings who are never intrusted with any thing, should be careful what use they make of it; for it is a well known fact, that heterogeneous matter, compounded with a sour stomach, renders the garment unfit for use; therefore, buff vests are more suitable for the rising generation, especially when dampness does not conspire to prevent horticulture from springing up amid the vapours of enthusiasm, which would wholly destroy the circumference of Buren's hallucinations, connected with an air pump, that could not inspire genius with Junius' Letters, altho' he might have had a hand in hanging Gibbs, the pirate.

"Yours, ——— ———"

Mr. Livingston, having accepted the place of secretary of state, will probably be succeeded in the senate by Mr. Brown, late minister of the United States at Paris.

The resigned secretaries are yet acting, (except Mr. Van Buren, whose place is occupied by Mr. Livingston), so far as signing the names to official papers, &c.

Washington, May 3. We are requested to state, that "the hon. E. Livingston arrived in the city on Thursday in one of Messrs. Stockton & Stokes' elegant steel spring coaches, by way of the rail road, at an early hour.

Mr. Livingston has, we understand, entered on the duties of the office.

The National Intelligencer says—It is rumored, here, that the office of attorney general has been tendered to Henry St. George Tucker, of Virginia, and declined by him. He would have filled the office with great respectability.

From the Richmond Enquirer. We are sorry to see the U. S. Telegraph losing its manners as well as its temper. As soon as it has cleared its skirts, in a frank and manly way, of the shame of palming off "upon the 'Old Dominion' a detected and unblushing defamer—known to us, and known to the Telegraph, to be unworthy of the countenance of any decent journalist in the country,"—we will speak further with the Telegraph.

Economy. The best specimen of economy which the president has exhibited since he came into office, was the sending to Mr. Branch a transcript of his letter to Mr. Ingham, instead of taxing his private secretary with the labor of writing an original.

[New Hampshire Journal.

RAIL ROADS AND CANALS—brief remarks and scraps. The second division (12 miles), of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, will be ready for use in the present month; but, for some weeks, will be chiefly occupied for the conveyance of materials to the workmen employed. The scenery on this division is highly spoken of for its beauty, the route being in the valley of the Patapsco.

The city of Frederick is soon to profit by this rail road, and become the centre of a great interior trade. Hagerstown, further west, begins to feel the influence of internal improvement, and the rich and beautiful county of Washington is in a state of high prosperity. This county and its neighbor, the great county of Frederick, are among the happiest seats for a full enjoyment of the benefits of the "American System," which the mountain county, Alleghany, will also feel. Her now faintly worked mines of iron and coal, and her forests that perish without profit to their owners, will speedily be within 20 hours of the market at Baltimore, whither her exhaustless supplies of coal may be carried for one cent a bushel!

The Albany Argus of April 16 says—The water has not yet been let into the Erie canal between this city and Schenectady; but the navigation is uninterrupted from the latter place westwards. The packet boat commences her regular trips this day, we understand, between Utica and Schenectady.

The "Bethny, Wayne, county, Penn. Enquirer," of April 7, stated that the Delaware and Hudson canal will be ready for navigation on the 20th inst. The rail road is in operation.

☞ These canals have been closed nearly five months, since the 1st May 1830. Travelling on the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, was stopped only one day, in the same time.

Lake Erie was closed with ice on the 4th inst. The great Ohio canal, then, except for transportations south, or on its southern sections, will annually be of little use four or five months, if the winters are severe—including the casualties to which such works are liable; but articles on the Ohio river, adjacent to the rail road, when made, will always be within three days travel of Baltimore.

The Baltimore and Susquehannah rail road is proceeding with spirit, on its first division—passing up the valley of Jones' Falls, which abounds with romantic and beautiful views of lofty hills and highly improved farms, water falls and cascades, flour mills and other factories.

A grand experiment was to be made at Liverpool to transport one thousand bales of New Orleans cotton to Manchester at once, by the locomotives Sampson and Goliah. It would not be very strange—if ships from Orleans, "taking their land tacks on board," should unlade at the warehouse of some "lord of spinning jennies," in Manchester—and returning, be plunged again into the water, to carry to Orleans a cargo of Manchester goods! But the present rail way, perhaps, though power for the operation is at command, may not be fitted for such transport of ships!

That part of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal which is finished is in full operation, and much flour and other commodities are descending. Excursions to the "Great Falls" are spoken of as delightful, and the pleasure boats are handsomely fitted.

* If Mr. Van Buren has any laughter in his soul, he must himself, laugh heartily at this.

A meeting of the Lexington and Ohio rail road company was held at Lexington on the 16th ult. Henry Clay, esq. in the chair. The meeting was large, upwards of 500,000 dollars of the stock being represented. Several gentlemen addressed the company, and, in the course of his remarks on the occasion, Mr. Clay, "candidly acknowledged, that the doubts and misgivings which he once entertained had been removed by the favorable exposition of the prospects of the company, and the zeal manifested in favor of the work. In his absence, his friends had subscribed for him a larger sum to the stock of the company, than he thought he could conveniently spare; but he had become satisfied that the experiment ought to be made and that the benefits likely to result from the completion of the road had not been exaggerated. He now thought that a sum sufficient could be obtained; and he had determined to stand by his friends, and ratify what they had pledged his name for during his absence."

The trustees of the town of Lexington subscribed $25,000 to the stock of the company.

It was ordered that this important work should be immediately commenced.

The rail road from New Orleans to lake Ponchartrain was opened, with much pleasing ceremony, on the 23rd ult. the state and city officers attending, and travelling over it.

The Albany Argus says—The business on the canal, thus far, has been greater than in any former year.—The collector at this place commenced clearing boats on the 16th of April, and on Saturday the 30th, three hundred and fifty-eight boats had been cleared, and about twenty-eight thousand dollars collected for tolls; being an average of more than $2,000 per day. Last year the canal opened on the 20th of April, and the average daily receipts at the office in this place, for the residue of April, was about $1,500.

The greatest amount of toll paid in a single day, was on the 23rd of April, on which day the collector at this place received $4,483; exceeding the receipts of any single day before, by about $800.

The Chambly canal is about to be made in New York. It is to be about 12 miles long, and is designed to make a navigation from St. Johns to Chambly, along the margin of the river Sorel, or outlet of lake Champlain. The completion of this canal will make a continuous navigation, by canal and steam boats, from New York to Quebec, a distance of more than five hundred miles.

The Alexandria Gazette, has the following communication, addressed to the editor—

Permit me to call your attention as a friend to internal improvement, as well as your subscribers generally, to a small work just published in London, by William Fairbar, engineer, detailing some important and interesting experiments on canal navigation, made but a few months ago. The following are among the best ascertained, and most prominent facts which resulted from those experiments:

1st. That with long and narrow boats of light draught, and not exceeding 60 ewt. a velocity of at least 14 miles per hour is attainable on canals, without injury to the banks from the agitation of the water.

2nd. That although generally the force of traction required, is less on deep and wide canals, yet that those of smaller dimensions are quite as well adapted for this rapid transit; a velocity of from 6 to 8 miles, producing much greater surge in the wide canals.

3rd. By the intended introduction of steam as a moving power, it is confidently anticipated that passengers will be transported with much greater rapidity, and goods more regularly, and at a cost at least one-third less, than by the present mode of towing with horses.

The friends of canals owe much to the rival genius of the admirers of rail roads, for thus awaking them from the sleep of half a century, to a sight of advantages in their reach, which may restore the balance now fast preponderating towards rail roads. May it not be hoped that our ingenious countrymen, will not be slow in appropriating to their own use the science and experience of Europe, or rather should we not expect to see Americans leading the way in every thing that tends to promote the art of navigation.

The first boat, for the season on the canal, arrived at Buffalo, April 27.

Baltimore and Ohio rail road. One of the editors of Poulson's Philadelphia Advertiser, having recently paid a visit to this city and to the rail road, speaks of our great enterprise in the following terms:—

The untiring zeal and industry exhibited by the directors of this company, through a series of appaling and almost insuperable difficulties, should be recorded as an example truly worthy of imitation, as it is of all praise. The feasibility of the entire completion of this great work, by many deemed visionary, by some impracticable, is at this time demonstrable, from the actual success achieved upon the most expensive portion of the route; forty miles of which will shortly be completed, and in full operation, with locomotive engines of the most approved construction. In relation to this undertaking, the citizens of Baltimore are no less entitled to the meed of applause, having sustained the company in their arduous labors with a constancy that has thus far produced the happiest results, and is an ample guarantee to the successful termination of this unparalleled and magnificent road.

Temperance. The contracts now offered for the grading of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, include abstinence from the use of spirituous liquors, on the line.

Line of communication to the Ohio canal. We have the pleasure to state, that it is ascertained by the survey just completed by J. Thompson, esq. civil engineer, that a rail road from the Ohio river opposite this town to a navigable point on Stillwater, can be located at a grade under 30 feet to the mile: distance only 55 miles 104 poles. It is expected that a permanent slack water navigation will be opened to the point of intersection, by the Stillwater navigation company, during the present season. Nothing will then be wanting but 35 miles of rail road to complete the line of communication to the Ohio canal. [Wheeling Gaz.

Charleston rail road. From the late annual report of the Charleston, (S. C.) rail road company, it appears eighty-eight miles of the road are now under contract. Several miles extending from Charleston, were completed during last summer, and a locomotive steam car placed on it—the performances of which were highly satisfactory, and served to give a new impulse to public opinion in that region, in favor of rail roads. The whole length of the Charleston rail road when completed will be about 135 miles, extending from that city to the Savannah river, at a point near the Augusta bridge.

The canal. The great benefits of our canal are now beginning to be realized. With the exception of a comparatively small portion of land carriage, goods have been brought from Philadelphia to this city by water! 7,927 lbs. of merchandise, consigned to Birmingham & Carlisle, arrived in this city from Philadelphia on Saturday last, having been but 15 days on their passage.

[Pittsburg Mercury.

The accounts from the Union Canal are most encouraging. The trade, since the communication to Pittsburg has been opened, is daily increasing. The number of boats which passed the canal from Friday, 28th ult. to Friday, 5th, inclusive, were 226, paying $3,198 28 cents toll.

CONSTITUTIONAL. We have some fifty large quarto volumes of scraps and fugitive pieces, for which an index is preparing. In vol. 21, page 27, we meet with the following, which appears to have been extracted from the "Portsmouth Journal," and probably from one of the numbers of that paper which issued in July, or August 1821.

"The Richmond Enquirer, after stating that whiskey and sweet milk are both of a price in the Atlantic states, and whiskey and butter milk the same in the western states, proposes that congress impose a tax upon whiskey while it continues below a certain price, the avails of which shall be appropriated in every county in the U. States, to the improvement and embellishment of roads."

If the preceding is a fair representation of what Mr. Ritchie said, he must have "gone the whole" on internal improvements. We should much like to have a copy of the original publication.

CONSISTENCY. The "Louisville Journal" gives the names of nineteen gentlemen, who, being members of the legislature of Kentucky, voted for certain resolutions urging the aid of the general government on behalf of the Maysville road, as a national object; and says that the same gentlemen were members of the late "Jackson Convention," and approved the veto of the president on the passage of the law of the United States, to aid in making said road, because that it lies wholly within the limits of Kentucky.

THE LEATHER MANUFACTURE. The New York "Age" publishes the following as derived from a respectable source, in London. That such a speculation is indulged, is very possible, for our leather manufactures in the United States are worth more than all the cotton and tobacco produced, and the British would gladly break them up, and so dismiss one hundred thousand fighting men from their present means of subsistence in our country; but, unless at a great loss to the British government, these manufactures are now so well established in the United States, by the protection afforded to them, that this pleasant prospect cannot be realized. We rather think that boots, shoes and hats are cheaper in America than in England, any duty or excise levied upon them in the latter being deducted.

"Among the rumors that are afloat here as to the measures to be adopted by the new government, is one, that a bounty is to be allowed on the exportation of leather, and all articles manufactured from it. Ministers, it is said, consider this article as much or more entitled to the fostering care of the government than printed cottons. Should this measure be adopted, we may expect to revive our trade to your country in boots and shoes, and the numerous articles made from leather, which, some twenty years since, constituted one of our greatest articles of export to the U. States; and should this measure succeed, we have little doubt government will soon turn their attention to hats, and the various articles into which the fine wool and furs enter so largely."

EDITORIAL QUARRELS. The editors of the Washington "Telegraph" and "Globe" have exhausted their whole stock of vile and abusive terms, furiously casting them by cart-loads at one another---and the people think that each knows the other excellently well. A quarrel quite as wicked, though less famous, has broken out between Mr. Mumford, editor of the New York Standard, and Mr. Noah, editor of the Courier and surveyor of the revenue of the port of New York. Mumford charges Noah with all sorts of turning and twisting, as always ready to take any side, money being a-head—says that he was cow-skinned, and makes him out to be perjured, and calls him a base coward and irreclaimable liar; and dubs him "Mordecai Molasses Manassah Noah." We do not see the "Courier," yet it seems that Mr. Noah is not to be excelled in the use of scurrilous epithets; but he appears specially desirous to make it out that Mumford "is craz'd." And so they go on. And each of these four, who thus dishonor the art of printing, values himself as a great chief or high priest, of "the republican party."

☞The gentlemen above named had better take care what they are about. The "Missouri Republican" of the 10th ult. relates the issue of a suit instituted by Mr. S. W. Foreman, late a "Jackson editor," against Messrs. Keemble and Brooks, "Jackson editors" of the famous "St. Louis Beacon." It appears that the parties had been in contest for supremacy—like Messrs. Green and Blair, or Mumford and Noah; and that the latter had charged the former with a disgraceful crime; and the jury, after hearing the arguments of able counsel, returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of five thousand dollars. The court refused a motion for a new trial.

OUR RIVERS. The following paragraph, from the St. Louis Beacon, is highly indicative of that spirit of enterprise and hardihood for which our fellow citizens of the west are justly renowned:

"A new and handsome steam boat, belonging to the American Fur company, arrived in this port on Sunday last, and proceeds to-day, it is understood, for the mouth of the Yellow Stone, where is situated the highest trading establishment on the Missouri. This point is about nineteen hundred miles above St. Louis; not more than six hundred miles by water, and a much less distance by land from the base of the Rocky Mountains. No steam boat, we believe, has yet passed Council Bluffs, situated one-third of the way between St. Louis and the mouth of the Yellow Stone. Should the company succeed in reaching this point with their boat, we have good reasons for believing that success will repay them for all the expense, and toil, and risk, which must necessarily attend them; and we shall have the pleasure of beholding what, it was thought the other day, was reserved for the next generation."

[St. Louis, the starting place, is about 1,168 miles from the sea!]

WOOL. Late public sales at Boston firmly maintain the high prices which we last quoted. Spanish Rs. 81 a 102—coarse Spanish 64, English fleece 60, do. pulled 51 a 59, Buenos Ayres 21 cents—4 bales sold, the rest withdrawn.

COMMERCE. The Washington Globe of the 30th ult. after stating the activity of the ship yards of Baltimore, from the Baltimore American, he adds, "All the ports of the union begin to exhibit 'the bustle and activity of former years.' We owe this to the treaties which opened the seas of Turkey and the West Indies to our trade."

The treaty with Turkey has been made upwards of 11 months, and ratified three, but until the 9th April no vessel, says the United States Gazette, had cleared from our ports for Constantinople, and the first was the brig Fortune of Boston. We shall see what the West India trade will have done, when we get the commercial tables of the last and present year, that we may compare the figures. The opening of the British West India ports has certainly, thus far, rather injured than benefitted the navigation of Baltimore.

THE MAILS. The following is from the Richmond Enquirer, addressed to the editors--

It has become an intolerable grievance to this neighborhood, that the Enquirer is so irregularly received as to be of little value for the news it contains when gotten---so stale are its contents. Whether the fault rests with the editors or post masters, I do not enquire, as the evil would most probably not be remedied by ascertaining.---Suffice it, however, that the Dover mail very often goes on to Charlottesville and returns, leaving no Enquirer. I take no other paper, and it not unfrequently happens, that our Richmond correspondents meet their letters returning from a trans-mountain excursion.

I am, gentlemen, A SUBSCRIBER AND WELL-WISHER.
April 15th, 1831.
N. B. Publish this if you please.

COM. CREIGHTON. A letter dated Philadelphia, April 11, says—By this day's mail commodore Creighton has received from Washington, the proceedings of the court martial for his trial. The result is a full and honorable acquittal of that officer, on all the charges and specifications, except that charging him with having twice received pay for the month of July, 1829. The sentence says:—

"But the court, adverting to the manner in which the time for entering his name upon the books of the Hudson was ascertained, and also the fact that any error in such entry or in the amount charged or received by him must necessarily be discovered upon the first examination of his accounts by the accounting officers, do not believe that commodore Creighton was guilty of any intention to deceive or impose upon the accounting officers of the navy department of the United States; and notwithstanding the irregularity of the proceedings, there was nothing suspicious connected with them. The court sentence com. Creighton to be admonished by the secretary of the navy, to be more circumspect in his accounts for the future."

MR. RANDOLPH. A writer in the "Richmond Enquirer," exhorting the people of the district to support

Mr. Boulden for congress, against Mr. Randolph, says—"In the fall of the year 1829, Mr. Randolph returned from the convention, and in a speech at Prince Edward court house, informed the people, that he was done with political life. Yet, at that moment, he contemplated his acceptance of the Russian embassy. Nay, he had actually received the letter of president Jackson, offering to him the appointment. Mr. R. had frequently declared that there was no gift within the power of the executive to bestow, that could tempt him to an acceptance; and behold him grasping with avidity at the first one which is offered. Where are the monuments of his public labors? During his thirty years of public life, what measure of importance has he originated?—Where are the trophies of his fame, beyond the shaft of wit or the lash of satire? True, the brilliancy and keenness of his talents rendered him long the admiration of the public. But who has ever attributed to him the calm patience of investigation, the solid endowments of mind, the logical precision of reasoning, necessary to constitute a statesman of the first order? In vain may we look for these among his oratorical effusions. But even those talents, he once possessed in their highest perfection, have been injured by time and disease. Cannot it be fairly asserted, that he has never attached himself to any cause to which he did not, at least, as much harm as good?

South Carolina. Mr. Felder's majority over Mr. Preston, for congress, in the place of judge Martin, was 260. It seems that this election district was the very seat of nullification---and yet the people have nullified the nullificator, who is represented as a very worthy and capable gentleman, and preferred Mr. Felder, who "laughs at the idea of becoming a citizen of the kingdom of South Carolina," as the "Camden Journal" informs us---the union being rendered "null and void," by the nullifiers.

The Wabash. The commerce of the Wabash appears to be rapidly increasing. From the 5th of March to the 16th of April last, we learn from the Western papers, there were fifty-four arrivals and departures of steam boats at and from Vincennes. It is also estimated that one thousand flat boats entered the Ohio river from the Wabash during the spring. Their cargoes are supposed to be worth $2,000 each. The whole exports of the Wabash country, for the last year, are estimated at $700,000.

Arrival of the Java. The U. S. frigate Java, arrived in Hampton Roads, on Tuesday last, from Mahon. She touched at Havana, where a report was in circulation, said to have been brought to Principe, by a brig direct from Cadiz, stating that the king of Spain had been deposed, and had fled with his family to Gibraltar; and that the constitution had been proclaimed throughout Spain. It was understood at Havana that the public authorities there had received official intelligence of the revolution, but kept it secret; the people, however, only waited for the confirmation of the report, to revolt.

Free persons of color. A law of North Carolina, (and we believe that South Carolina and Georgia have some such regulations), imposes a quarantine of 40 days on all vessels having a free person of color on board. As these are always employed as cooks or stewards, (places to the acceptance of which white sailors have much repugnance) great inconvenience and much loss is felt—for even the vessels that belong to the ports of North Carolina, without being subjected to the quarantine, cannot bring those back whom they may have taken out. It is stated that vessels are now much wanted at Wilmington, and other places, to carry away the produce of North Carolina, and a writer justly observes that a string may be stretched till it breaks. We have always thought it strange that such a law should have existence in North Carolina. In South Carolina or Georgia, in which a "calculation of the value of the union"—or a resistance of the laws of the United States, were trifling things, we might expect such a law—seeing that the sending into these of half a dozen copies of a pamphlet written by a negro, half-scared thousands to death.

Royalty. Extract of a letter from London to the junior editor of the "Village Record"—

"The king amuses himself by attending the theatres, and holding levees at the palace. He was at Drury Lane a short time since, attended by his suite, where he was welcomed by a crowded and brilliant audience. Before the performance was over, their majesties, the king and queen, were refreshed by some coffee as they sat in the royal box. The queen, in the true spirit of love and affection, humbly condescended to put cream and sugar into his majesty's coffee. This she did by taking up the cream-jug and "sugar-tongs," which were undoubtedly of the purest silver, in her delicate white hand, and with an indescribably graceful motion of the elbow, she managed to deposit the wholesome and indispensable ingredients in her royal consort's delightful beverage. I thought the audience would have gone into hysterics. There is something so sublime, so much like magic, in the fingers of royalty coming in contact with a cream-jug, which I will leave you to imagine, rather than attempt to describe it. The king, in the plenitude of his kindness, has dubbed prince George, of Cumberland, a lieutenant general. He has quite a warlike appearance, being about nine years of age. A few such chieftains, with a national debt of eight hundred millions, will render England entirely invincible.

The London Age says, this year has been ominous for princes, and adduces the following circumstances:

"Three have died—the kings of England and Naples, and the pope of Rome.—Three have been driven from their dominions—the kings of France and Saxony, and the duke of Brunswick.—Queen Donna Maria has been refused admittance into her kingdom; and the king of Holland has lost half of his; while the two thrones of Belgium and Greece, are going a begging."

Handsome compliment. An article in the foreign Quarterly Review for January, in relation to England and America, and particularly commendable of the latter, concludes with this paragraph:

"Nothing, indeed, can be more honorable to the American government than the temper and forbearance which it displayed throughout the trying times that succeeded the French revolution. For some time it had even to struggle with the opposition of the people. When Washington issued his celebrated neutrality decree, the feelings and prejudices of the majority of the American people were in open hostility to the measure, and even the venerable character and well known patriotism of the president did not preserve him from those attacks which were now, for the first time, openly directed against him. The talents of that administration, to which America has never seen one equal, carried the vessel of state safely through the dangers that menaced it; Washington and Adams filled the offices of President and vice-president, Hamilton, one of the authors of the Federalist, and Jefferson, were also in the cabinet. Had European governments constantly shown the same spirit of moderation, the same disinclination causelessly to plunge their countries into the miseries of war, it is not too much to say that half the evils which that pestilence has inflicted on Europe might have been avoided."

Horrid outrage. From the North Carolina Spectator—A gentleman from Spartanburg district, S. C. has stated to us the following particulars of one of the most wanton outrages that we ever heard of. Mr. —— Woodruff, a very respectable and wealthy gentleman, was about to pay a visit to his father-in-law, Mr. —— Dean, who was sick; he was met a short distance from Mr. Dean's by five negro men, belonging to Mr. D. four of them on one side of the road busily engaged him in conversation while a fifth crept up on the opposite side, and with a heavy club felled him to the ground, where they killed him; they then placed the lifeless body on the horse, placing the feet in the stirrups, and directed the horse towards Mr. Dean's; when three o the murderers went back to Mr. Dean's and two fled to the woods. The negroes had scarcely reached home when the horse of Mr. W. came, with the shoe of its owner still hanging in the stirrup. The murderers with hypocritical alarm exclaimed that their master Woodruff had fallen off his horse and got killed. The horse was tracked back, and the inanimate body of Woodruff found—the search was continued still further until they came to the spot where he had been murdered, where the deadly club was found and marks of blood and violence on the ground, together with the prints of the negroes' feet. Suspicion immediately fell on the negroes belonging to Mr. Dean, and three of them were taken up and tried, and, as we are informed, two of them hung on Friday 15th instant, and the third retained to testify against the two others when they shall be apprehended. The cause we have heard assigned for the perpetration of this atrocious deed was, that Mr. Dean being sick, and as his son-in-law would become his heir in case of his demise, and the negroes, from some cause, not wishing to fall into the hands of Mr. Woodruff, took the measure above related to prevent such an event.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

An arrival at New York brings Paris advices to the 1st of April, being two days later than those previously received.

FRANCE.

An association had been formed in Paris by the national creditors, and business portions of the inhabitants generally, to suppress anarchy. A disturbance took place in Nismes, on the 21st March, which recalled to mind the terrible days of 1792. Three orders of arrest were issued from the cour royale, in consequence of assassinations committed on the 27th February. One of them was executed on the morning of the above day. The people collected to attempt his rescue, which was prevented by the energetic conduct of the military and police. The town was thrown into a great ferment.

A soldier belonging to the national guards had been expelled, for crying vive le roi! il nous faut la guerre, as the king passed in review.

The ambassadors of Russia, Austria and the Belgic envoy, had each had private audiences with the king of the French on the 30th March; and count Vilain, a member of the Belgian congress had arrived at Paris on a special mission.

A law had passed authorising the city of Paris to raise 15,000,000 francs by loan. "The "Tribune" asserts that M. Cassimir Perier had addressed a note to the Austrian ambassador demanding explanations as to the occupation of Bologna by the Austrian troops, stating that France would not consent to it. The Austrian ambassador is said to have replied that the occupation of Bologna, was concerted between Russia, Prussia, England and Austria, and that the latter government had determined to crush every revolutionary movement wherever it might present itself in its dominions.

BELGIUM.

The dates from this distracted country are not later than those previously received. All the attempts of the prince of Orange had failed. The prince of Saxe Coburg is still spoken of as king. The Prussian corps, amounting to 90,000 men had assembled in the Rhenish provinces.

POLAND.

Though the dates are not later than those previously received from this country, some additional items are given. An expedition had been sent by gen. Sacken, the object of which was to re-establish the communication with Lomza, the road having been infested with partizan corps of Poles. In one affair, the Poles are represented to have lost 600 men, and in another in which they lost Lublin, their killed, wounded and prisoners are variously stated at from 500 to 2,000. A body of Cossacks had penetrated into Cicellanow, but were soon driven back. Several new appointments had been made by the provisional government.

SPAIN.

The report prevailed at Bayonne that the constitutionalists, had taken possession of Malaga. A letter dated Madrid March 22d states that numerous arrests had taken place there, which have afforded proofs of an extensive conspiracy in various parts of Spain. Military commissions were ordered to be organized in the provinces.

ITALY.

The mail had been stopped from Rome, which was said to be in consequence of the fall of Civita Castellana—others ascribed it to the apprehensions of a banditti, and disturbances in Rome. The Gazette de France, says that it is known to be in consequence of a body of five or six hundred revolted Bolognese, which had intercepted the communication with Rome.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Letters from Munich announce the opening of the chambers by the king of Bavaria on the 1st of March. The king, in his speech, congratulated himself on being the sovereign of a people who had been faithful to him, whilst insurrection prevailed far and near in foreign countries. His majesty then spoke of the favorable state of the finances, of reducing several taxes, and of bringing before the chambers various laws. The king's speech concludes with these words: "No one can be more faithful to the constitution than myself. I would not be an absolute sovereign. I have not only sworn to observe the constitution, but to cause it to be observed. In this I shall be as immoveable as the Bavarians will be unshaken in their attachment to me."

Cavan assizes—March 16th, extraordinary scene—Hugh Ward, Edward Duffy, and Michael Farrelly, were on Wednesday found guilty on a charge of Whiteboyism. A very curious scene took place at the close of the day. Just as the judge finished pronouncing the awful sentence of the law on those three unfortunate men, one of them, Farrelly, turned round in the dock, and exclaimed:—"The sentence is welcome: I dont care a curse for it." An indescribable scene of confusion followed—the country people, who crowded the court in great numbers, seemed inclined to attempt a rescue—the police screwed on their bayonets and loaded their pieces—the judge retired in haste—the jury ran into the jury room—barristers, attorneys and solicitors, in fact the whole posse of the law, fairly took to their heels, and ran across the table into the judge's room. So the sitting for this day terminated; altogether the scene may be much better imagined than described. The prisoners were ordered to be executed on the 12th of April.

[Irish paper.

Polish spirit.—The following is one of the many incidents shewing the fine spirit of the Polish soldiers. Can such a nation be exterminated by mercenaries?

Field marshal Diebitsch having, with his own hands, pulled the different orders of merit gained on the field of battle, off the breast of major Kiwerski, who had been severely wounded and made prisoner, the major, in consequence of such an insult, being hurt to the extreme, answered, with dignity, to the marshal, "You may take upon yourself to have us shot, but not disonor us, for when a nation declares war upon another, there are no rebels." The field-marshal, enraged at such an answer, ordered his Cossacks to take the prisoners into the interior.

London. At Bow street, a wretched looking man was brought before sir R. Birnie, charged with an act of vagrancy, in being found sleeping in the open air the preceding evening. Sir Richard said he did not know what to do with the prisoner. All the prisons were filled: in the house of correction there were 1,100 prisoners, and in the new prison there were 900, and not a single bed was empty. After considering a minute or two, sir Richard ordered him to be committed for a fortnight.

There has been a destructive fire at Guayaquil—loss estimated at three millions of dollars.

Peru and Bolivia are at war—and their respective armies were about to come into contact; one being resolved to nullify the other.

The work of nullification is also going on in the shore-province of the Rio de la Plata, against those of the interior. Col. Pacheco, of the former, has defeated col. Pedernera, of the latter, killing about 60 of his men and making 80 prisoners, &c. and we hear more about other generals and colonels, some of whom having killed-off their rivals or superiors, will become governors or presidents, in due season—to be themselves hunted down, after a while.

The small items of news that we have from Greece are discouraging. The people do not seem much, if any, better off, than when the Turks domineered over them.

Turkey is in a state of rapid improvement. Old habits are giving way, in a very unexpected manner. A letter from Smyrna says—

A boy with a slate slung over his shoulder, and a girl with a book under her arm, are now among the most common sights in the streets of Smyrna. The shops also, in their array of slates, present quite a new article of traffic. Schools are getting up in the interior, and only want a little fostering aid in the outset.

BRIEF NOTICES.

The British brig Billow, from Bermuda to Halifax, with soldiers and their wives and children, about 100 in number, with all her crew, was lost on the 9th ult.

Gold. The Fredericksburg, (Va.) Arena informs, that large quantities of gold are found in that neighborhood—that the diggers are numerous and successful. In the county of Orange, at one place, the value of 700 dollars was gathered in one week. The number of laborers is not stated—but it does not appear to have been large.

Detroit, April 14. Our express men arrived from L'Ance Kewgwenon, on the 26th of last month. By them we learn that the Indians (Chippewas) inhabiting the borders of lake Superior, were in a wretched state of starvation. Many of them, we are informed, are reduced to such a state of weakness as to crawl on all fours.

In Louisiana, although interspersed with sea marsh, swamps, ponds, lagoons, and bayous, and subject to the periodical inundations of several large rivers, the average length of human life, particularly in the French parishes, is as great as in the valleys of Switzerland. On the Teche, the La Fourche, and other streams, it is no uncommon sight to see grandfathers, and sometimes great grandsires mingling in the same cotillion with their children's children.

The nest of gold. The Winyaw (S. C.) Intelligencer confirms the account of the discovery of an isolated bed of gold, valued at $200,000, an amount, we believe, unprecedented in the history of mines and mining.

Vessels of war. It is computed that fifty acres of the most heavily timbered land do not contain wood enough to build a ship of the line—and yet such ships, on an average, do not last longer than 14 years.

Money loaned. A report made to the legislature of New York says—

It appears that near fifty millions of dollars are loaned in the city of New York, on mortgage, and the major part of it at an annual interest of seven per cent.

That in the months of April, May and June, 1830, $2,228,054 were loaned in that city, on mortgage, at the following rates viz:

At 5 per cent.	$20,700
At 5½ "	26,200
At 6 "	1,545,970
At 6½ "	34,000
At 7 "	601,184
	$2,228,054

The U. S. ship Fairfield, captain Parker, has arrived at Norfolk from the Mediterranean, all well. Left the Brandywine, Constellation, Concord and Boston, all well.

A salmon, weighing 18 lbs. was lately caught in the Hudson River opposite Catskill—a rarely known visitor of the waters of that river.

General Bernard, lately in the service of the United States, and who returned to France a short time since, has been re-instated in his former grade in the French army, as an officer of engineers, and called into actual service.

Donations—The late James Lloyd, of Boston, bequeathed $5,000 each to the asylum for indigent boys, and to the female orphan asylum, in Boston.

Expensive amusement.—At a late circuit court held at Salem, Indiana, an action of damages was brought by one individual against some twelve or thirteen others, for tarring and feathering. The complainant got a verdict of $600 damages.

A pair of asses. A Mr. Farnes, says a Liverpool paper, is amusing the Liverpuddlean lovers of the drama, "by placing a real donkey, alive on the top of a ladder, and balancing the same on his own proper chin, without any deception."

Diligence lost by an avalanche.—On the 26th of February last, a horrible accident happened to the Diligence travelling from Turin to Lyons. On the passage of Mont Cenis, it was struck by an avalanche, and precipitated in an instant into a valley below the road. What rendered the accident more frightful was that the Diligence was conducted on a traineau, (on account of the snow) and consequently, in addition to the six passengers, the conductor and the postilion, and six countrymen are lost, and eighteen horses. Two individuals only have been saved.

Imprisonment for debt. The legislature of Massachusetts has passed a law exempting from imprisonment for debt, all debtors for sums under ten dollars, and females for debts to any amount contracted after the passage of the law.

[We shall, in time, be ready for the abolition of all laws to compel the payment of debts—"a consummation devoutly to be wished."]

Tobacco. It has been found that tobacco, from Cuba seed, will grow as well, and be as good in Alabama, as in that favored isle. We may soon have Dos Amigos cigars equalled, if not surpassed, at Mobile.

The dey of Algiers in Italy. Amidst the grave occurrences of which Italy is now the theatre, it is hardly in keeping to talk of such a personage as the dey of Algiers; but he has taken the fine country house of his banker, near Leghorn, from which place he lately went to Florence to attend the carnival, where his highness was shocked at the waltzing of the ladies. His chief attendants were his prime minister and his executioner! (Bourreau.)

A steam boat measuring 1,370 tons, called the Royal William, was lately launched at Quebec.

Iodine. The most satisfactory results have been produced at the hospital of Saint Louis in Paris, by the administration of preparations of iodine in scrofulous cases, even of the most desperate characters.

Saxamelodicon. The name given to his invention by M. Backstein, of Cassel, who strikes flints together with so much skill as to produce very agreeable sounds.

Royal tenderness. The emperor of China has reproved the sheriff's for strangling the wrong subjects by mistake, and requests them not to do so in future.

"THIEVES"—"ROBBERS"—"MURDER!"

We have met with the following in the Gazette, published at Franklin, Tennessee, and suppose that it is really taken from Mr. Raguet's paper; and, always willing that our readers should see "both sides of the question," we give it a place in the "Register."

1. The tariff has caused the building "of the splendid palaces at Washington,"—though these were projected and nearly finished before the tariff, as an oppression, was thought of.

2. "The splendid uniforms of the officers in the army and navy, in the retinue of servants, and the large fortunes of contractors," are all owing to the tariff.

3. The appearance of every "ragged, sauntering wanderer about the streets, entreating in vain for employment"—the "north west wind," the "hectic cheek," the filling of the jails, penitentiaries and state prisons, with the occupancy of the gallows, are all owing to the tariff.

4. The supply of 600,000 muskets, at the cost of 8,313,750 dollars, exactly, provided in a time of peace, is all owing to the tariff.

5. The grave yards are filled by the tariff—consumption is caused by the tariff—the obligation to "clothe the naked" is forbidden by the tariff—though a great complaint is made in the south that the people of the north live better and are more comfortably supplied, because of the tariff.

6. It becomes every body, when at the "interment of a poor person," to make a speech about the tariff.—☞ We humbly recommend the reading of one of Mr. Raguet's essays, on all such solemn occasions.

From the Banner of the Constitution.

The effects of invisible taxation are visible in every thing touched by government. They are to be seen in the splendid palaces at Washington, in the splendid uniforms of the officers in the army and navy, in the retinue of servants, and in the large fortunes of contractors. Among those not connected with the government, the effects of this system are manifest in different forms, the general aspect of society, as effected by the invisible taxation, is indeed, relieved by pleasing appearances, the spacious dwellings of a few capitalists, and a few well built manufacturing villages.

The appropriate character of the restrictive policy is visible in the ragged, sauntering wanderer about the streets, intreating in vain for occupation—while his family wants bread—in thread-bare coats; in naked feet; in the cold hearth, surrounded by a shivering family, when the north wind blows keenly, and the stock of fuel is exhausted; in ragged, half clothed children, in the hectic cheek, in the pale brow of the father of a family, who cannot provide for its wants; in the courts; in the lists of insolvent and imprisoned debtors; in the common jails; in the penitentiaries and state prisons and sometimes on the gallows.

Muskets. The tariff, the peculiar vice of this country, is a Proteus, which assumes every form. One of its shapes is the ordnance department. This country, in time of profound peace, has provided herself with six hundred thousand muskets. Not only so, but the poor, the principal contributors, have paid for them the enormous average price of thirteen dollars and a quarter for a single musket and bayonet. The annual supply of muskets of thirty thousand, it is said, is to be increased this year to thirty-four thousand. When the contracts for this year shall have been performed, the United States will have a nominal capital in muskets amounting to eight millions three hundred and thirteen thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars.—The price of so simple a manufacture as a gun and bayonet, shows that the country has been tolerably well protected against making any advance in this particular mode of domestic industry by the protecting system.

All this comes from the people in the shape of increased prices of goods, by the effect of the unknown tariff, invisible taxation, the American System. How much better would these eight millions of dollars have been in the pockets of the people than invested in guns in the United States' or state arsenals.

Sickness and death. The bills of mortality and the grave yards bear witness against the tariff. The presumption is, that the taxes of congress which increase, by one half, the price of woollen clothing for the poor, increase the disease of consumption—and those who deny that such is the effect of these laws, take upon themselves the burden of proof. I mention consumption as the prevalent disease of the country, and usually caused by exposure to cold.

Humanity, charity, the obligations imposed by the religion professed in the country—especially the obligation to "clothe the naked," forbid the extravagant injustice of forcing the garments necessary to render the poor comfortable, to double prices.

If the partisans of the tariff seek to continue this injustice, let them frankly avow it, and not add to injustice the crime of deception. The manufacture of cheap woollen cloths has been very much improved; comfortable woollen clothing, at its natural price, has been very cheap, and would be, generally, attainable by the poor, if it had not been forced to artificial prices by the tariff party.

Every interment of a poor person, who has been exposed to suffering from the want of comfortable clothing, should remind the by-standers of the protecting system.

WOOLLEN MANUFACTURERS' MEETING.

Pursuant to public notice, a meeting of woollen manufactures of the state of New York, was held at the Eagle tavern in Albany, on Thursday, the 5th May inst. for the purpose of appointing delegates to a national convention of woollen manufacturers, to be held in the city of New York, on the third Wednesday of May.

The meeting was called to order, when William Phillips, esq. of Orange county, was called to the chair, and P. H. Schenck, of New York, and Elias Titus of Dutchess county, were appointed secretaries.

The object of the meeting having been briefly stated, the following resolution was moved and adopted:

Resolved, That twenty-one delegates be now appointed by this meeting, to represent the woollen manufacturers of this state, in the national convention, to be held in the city of New York, on the third Wednesday in May inst.

The following gentlemen were accordingly appointed said delegates:

S. Newton Dexter, Nathan Williams, Ephraim Hart, Isaac Northrop, David Driggs, Nahum Tilder, of Oneida county; John B. Yates, of Madison county; Jedediah Tracy, Dr. Corning, Renselaer county; Hiram Holcomb, of Herkimer county; —— Stott, of Columbia county, Moses Phillips, Jesse Scofield, Jonah Decker, of Orange county; Elias Titus, Thomas Williams, A. L. Ulrich, of Dutchess county; Walter R. Jones, Samuel Weeks, of Queens county; Henry Dubois, Peter H. Schenck, of New York.

Resolved, That the foregoing proceedings be published, and the secretaries are hereby requested to send written notices to the delegates (not present) of their appointment, with a request that they would attend. Adjourned. WILLIAM PHILLIPS, chairman.

P. H. Schenck, Elias Titus, secretaries.

At Boston.

At a meeting of manufacturers in this city last evening, for the purpose of appointing delegates to represent the manufacturers of woollens in Massachusetts in a convention to be held in the city of New York, on the third Wednesday of the present month, after discussing the subject, it was declared to be the general understanding and wish of the manufacturers of this state, that the attention and efforts of the convention should be confined to the single object of preventing a repetition of the extensive frauds on the revenue which have recently been practised in the entry of woollen goods.

The following gentlemen were appointed delegates:—

Hon. Henry Shaw,	Joshua Clapp,
Hon. Aaron Tufts,	Benj. Poor,
Jonas B. Brown,	Lyman Tiffany,
Gen. David Mack,	John Slater,
Dr. Edward H. Robbins,	Isaac Bangs,
Maj. John Brown,	Geo. H. Kuhn,
John Bumstead,	William W. Stone.
Lemuel Pomroy,

JOHN BROWN, chairman.

Geo. H. Kuhn, secretary, Boston, 4th May, 1831.

☞ We have an able address from the committee in Rhode Island, concerning the frauds on the revenue, which are complained of, and shall give it a place, that the facts which it contains may be more spread among the people and better preserved for use. It gives great and well deserved credit to Mr. Peter H. Schenck, of New York, who has, singly, breasted the whole host of foreign gentry in that city, and much discomfitted some "natives" who understand "how to import cloths"—whose exertions have probably added a million of dollars to the public revenue, in checking forgery and perjury, though but feebly assisted, in most cases, by those who ought most firmly to have stood by him.

THE LATE MR. MALLARY.

From the Vermont Statesman.

It becomes our painful duty to announce to the public the death of our worthy representative in congress from this district, the hon. Rollin C. Mallary; who died at Baltimore, Maryland, on Friday, the 22nd inst. at 8 o'clock in the afternoon, in the 47th year of his age.

This melancholy event has truly spread a gloom over our whole country, and more particularly over the district and neighborhood in which he resided. From the decline of his health, the solemn tidings had for some weeks been feared; yet while life remained, his friends, who were the whole community, indulged hopes and an anxious solicitude, that he might again return among them, and be restored to his former usefulness. When the shock came, grief was literally depicted on the countenance of every person with whom he had associated.

In the death of this truly eminent man, this neighborhood, this state and our common country, have lost one of their brightest ornaments. His long and arduous services in congress, his unwearied zeal for the welfare of his constituents and his country, and his able and triumphant endeavors in favor of the protecting system, are fame enough for one man to enjoy—and are known, appreciated, and felt, better than an humble citizen can describe.

His station as chairman of the committee on manufactures has been the most laborious, and, perhaps the most important one in the house of representatives for the last six sessions, and no member from the northern states has received more homage and respect, or exerted more influence in that body, than the lamented subject of our remarks. He was an able statesman, an accomplished scholar and gentleman, a public spirited citizen, the kind-hearted friend, and the affectionate husband and parent. To say that he was without failings, would be to say that his nature was not human; but his faults were few, while his virtues were manifold and illustrious.

The warmth and frankness of his disposition was nurtured by a pure republican education which made him rise above every thing like artifice and intrigue: he would have looked upon the highest office in the gift of the people, obtained by such means, as a mere post of degradation. He arose from low beginnings by his untiring energy and perseverance, without the aid of wealth or friends, he ascended from the humble peasant boy to the exalted station which he occupied at the time of his death. Let the youth of our country, who admire the greatness and goodness of our deceased friend, and who would die with his honors, early imbibe his principles of honesty, and follow his habits of industry and benevolence.

[In our notice of the deposit of the remains of Mr. Mallary in a vault—(that they might be transferred to Vermont, as we learn that they have been), we omitted to notice the attending clergymen. The rev. Mr. Nevins, before leaving the house, pronounced one of the most awfully sublime and affecting prayers that we ever heard—it was felt by every person present. On entering the burying ground, the rev. Mr. Johns commenced the funeral service, with that powerful eloquence and fervency of manner for which he is so much admired—and the rev. Dr. Henshaw delivered a brief address and earnest exhortation, which no one heard without profit. The ceremonies were uncommonly solemn, as well as respectful to the memory of the deceased.]

Ed. Reg.

AMERICAN NAVY.

From the N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

There are now in commission, in ordinary, or on the stocks, twelve ships of the line and seventeen frigates, (besides various smaller vessels), most of which could be got to sea on short notice. In general, it would require a longer time, and much greater expense, to repair the vessels in ordinary, than to launch those on the stocks. The ships of the line, although rated as 74's, are generally larger, several of them carrying from 90 to 120 guns; and most of the new frigates are on a corresponding scale, both as to size and weight of metal. So that in fact, our navy is much more efficient in these respects than would be inferred from the number and rate of the vessels composing it. The following are the ships of the line:

Independence,	in ordinary,	at Boston.
Columbus,	do.	do.
Ohio,	do.	New York.
Franklin,	do.	do.
Washington,	do.	do.
Delaware,	do.	Gosport.
North Carolina,	do.	do.
Alabama,	on the stocks,	Portsmouth.
Vermont,	do.	Boston.
Virginia,	do.	do.
Pennsylvania,	on the stocks.	Philadelphia.
New York,	do.	Norfolk.

The following are the frigates:

Java,	in commission,	Mediterranean.
Brandywine,	do.	do.
Hudson,	do.	Brazil.
Guerriere,	do.	Pacific.
Constitution,	in ordinary,	at Boston.
United States,	do.	New York.
Potomac,	do.	Washington.
John Adams,	do.	Gosport.
Macedonian,	do.	do.
Congress,	do.	do.
Santee,	on the stocks,	Portsmouth.
Cumberland,	do.	Boston.
Sabine,	do.	New York.
Savannah,	do.	do.
Raritan,	do.	Philadelphia.
Columbia,	do.	Washington.
St. Lawrence,	do.	Norfolk.

Contracts have been made, under an act of March, 1827, for the live oak frames of five additional ships of the line, five frigates, and five sloops of war. In fulfilment of these contracts, deliveries have been made, at different navy yards, of 321,714 cubic feet of said timber, for which has been paid the sum of $368,300.

The policy of the United States in building their ships-of-war a size larger than the nominal rate, has put the naval powers of the old world to considerable inconvenience, who at once perceived that in case of war with this country, their 74's would be a source of perpetual embarrassment and anxiety, as they could not, single-handed, encounter a first-rate American 74, without an almost certainty of being captured. And so of their frigates: none of which could stand against the first class of American frigates. The consequence would be, that they would either have to run away from vessels of the same class with themselves, or submit to the still more mortifying alternative of being captured. Foreseeing this, the French have already followed our example, to a considerable extent, and the English are "beginning to think about it." A late number of the London United Service Journal says,—

"The classification of our ships is of vast importance, and difficult, not so much in the suggestion, as in the execution. We have but to look to what other nations are doing in order to determine on the best rates, throwing aside all attachment to old models, and suiting our opinions and speculations to the times. The most obvious arrangement seems to be that hitherto adopted by the Americans, and in the course of being followed by the French.

I. A large three-decked ship, carrying from 120 to 130 guns, like the Pennsylvania (3,010 tons,) Wagram and Nelson.

II. A two-decked ship like the Ohio, carrying with guns on her gangways, 102 guns, without them 90.

III. A 60-gun frigate, not less than 1,706 tons, like the Brandywine, (1,750 tons), and Barham, (1,760.)

IV. A corvette from 24 to 28 guns, like the Boston, (700 tons), or what the razeed L'Aigle will be, and what the ships built after the Hebe, and cut down, would be.

V. A ten-gun brig, and

VI. The separate but not less important class of steamers.

In such ships, and in such only, British seamen will stand a fair chance. They will be in the situation where their bravery and noble spirit alone deserve to be placed, by a country which owes much of its riches and success to their exertion. These are unexceptionable classes; containing English frigates which can never receive orders "not to engage ships of superior force," meaning American frigates: and in which captains will never be placed in the heart-breaking dilemma of either running away from an enemy nominally of the same class and with the same number of decks, and being branded in his country as a coward, or of submitting to be butchered and disgraced by a ship large enough to swallow him.

A 74, such as the Northumberland, would not be a safe ship to send to sea on a declaration of war. If she had the misfortune to fall in with the North Carolina, a two-decked ship of 102 guns, the Americans would laugh at her and blow her to atoms.

The idea, then, of continuing the antiquated seventy-four, must be dismissed. Cut them down to such splendid frigates as the Barham, which may be economically done. The Lancaster and Winchester measure only 1,460 tons, that is, they are 290 tons smaller than the foreign sixties.

After reading the above, can it be believed that a naval officer should write in this way? The pamphlet, speaking of the Endymion, of 44 guns and 1,250 tons, says, "such a ship, well-manned and well-managed, might go along-side the finest single-decked ship in the world" (the Potomac for instance, a 1,750 ton 60) "with perfect confidence of success." She must be a witch, indeed.

The new nondescripts, frigates mounting only 36 guns, of heavy calibre, are generally found fault with. The commander naturally asks, what are they meant for? A corvette might fairly decline to fight them, and a sixty would annihilate them. Another novelty has just been announced; we give her size and armament alongside of an American's of the same class, which will speak for itself.

New English corvettes Acorn and Argus.

Date.	Description of guns.	Guns.	Tons.	Men.
1831	18 medium 32 pounders	18	under 500	not known.

American corvette Lexington.

Date.	Description of guns.	Guns.	Tons.	Men.
1826	4 long 24 pounders 20 medium ditto	24	630	1 capt. 4 lieuts. 8 mid. 180 men

The idea of converting the 46 and 52 gun-frigates into fine corvettes is excellent; and the actual transformation of L'Aigle bids fair for the execution of this just and reasonable project.

COPY-RIGHT LAW OF THE U. S.

An act to amend the several acts respecting copy rights.

Be it enacted, &c. That from and after the passing of this act, any person or persons, being a citizen or citizens of the United States, or resident therein, who shall be the author or authors of any book or books, map, chart, or musical composition, which may be now made or composed, and not printed and published, or shall hereafter be made or composed, or who shall invent, design, etch, engrave, work, or cause to be engraved, etched, or worked from his own design, any print or engraving, and the executors, administrators, or legal assigns of such person or persons, shall have the sole right and liberty of printing, re-printing, publishing and vending such book or books, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving, in whole or in part, for the term of twenty-eight years from the time of recording the title thereof, in the manner hereinafter directed.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That if, at the expiration of the aforesaid term of years, such author, inventor, designer, engraver, or any of them, where the work had been originally composed and made by more than one person, be still living, and a citizen or citizens of the United States, or resident therein, or being dead, shall have left a widow, or child, or children, either or all then living, the same exclusive right shall be continued to such author, designer, or engraver, or, if dead, then to such widow and child, or children, for the further term of fourteen years: Provided, That the title of the work so secured shall be a second time recorded, and all such other regulations as are herein required in regard to original copy-rights, be complied with in respect to such renewed copy-right, and that within six months before the expiration of the first term.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That in all cases of renewal of copy-right under this act, such author or proprietor shall, within two months from the date of said renewal, cause a copy of the record thereof to be published in one or more of the newspapers printed in the United States, for the space of four weeks.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this act, unless he shall, before publication, deposit a printed copy of the title of such book, or books, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving, in the clerk's office of the district court of the said district wherein the author or proprietor shall reside, and the clerk of such court is hereby directed and required to record the same thereof forthwith, in a book to be kept for that purpose, in the words following, (giving a copy of the title, under the seal of the court, to the said author or proprietor, whenever he shall require the same:) "District of to wit: Be it remembered, that on the day of Anno Domini, A. B. of the said district, hath deposited in this office the title of a book, (map, chart, or otherwise, as the case may be), the title of which is in the words following, to wit, (here insert the title), the right whereof he claims as author or proprietor as the case may be); in conformity with an act of congress, entitled 'an act to amend the several acts respecting copy-rights.' C. D. clerk of the said district." For which record, the clerk shall be entitled to receive, from the person claiming such right as aforesaid, fifty cents; and the like sum for every copy, under seal, actually given to such person or his assigns. And the author or proprietor of any such book, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving, shall within three months from the publication of the said book, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut or engraving, deliver or cause to be delivered a copy of the same to the clerk of the said district. And it shall be the duty of the clerk of each district court, at least once in every year, to transmit a certified list of all such records of copy-right, including the titles so recorded, and the dates of record, and also all the several copies of books or other works deposited in his office according to this act, to the secretary of state, to be preserved in his office.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this act, unless he shall give information of copy-right being secured, by causing to be inserted, in the several copies of each and every edition published during the term secured on the title page, or the page immediately following, if it be a book, or, if a map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving, by causing to be impressed on the face thereof, or if a volume of maps, charts, music, or engravings, upon the title or frontispiece thereof, the following words, viz: "entered according to act of congress, in the year by A. B., in the clerk's office of the district court of " (as the case may be.)

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any other person or persons, from and after the recording the title of any book or books, according to this act, shall, within the term or terms herein limited, print, publish, or import, or cause to be printed, published, or imported, any copy of such book, or books, without the consent of the person legally entitled to the copy-right thereof, first had and obtained in writing, signed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, or shall, knowing the same to be so printed or imported, publish, sell, or expose to sale, or cause to be published, sold, or exposed to sale, any copy of such book without such consent in writing, then such offender shall forfeit every copy of such book to the person legally, at the time, entitled to the copy-right thereof; and shall also forfeit and pay fifty cents for every such sheet which may be found in his possession, either printed or printing, published, imported, or exposed to sale, contrary to the intent of this act, the one moiety thereof to such legal owner of the copy-right as aforesaid, and the other to the use of the United States, to be recovered by action of debt in any court having competent jurisdiction thereof.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That, if any person or persons, after the recording the title of any print, or cut, or engraving, map, chart, or musical composition, according to the provisions of this act, shall, within the term or terms, limited by this act, engrave, etch, or work, sell, or copy, or cause to be engraved, etched, worked, or sold, or copied, either on the whole, or by varying, adding to, or diminishing the main design, with intent to evade the law, or shall print, or import for sale, or cause to be printed or imported for sale, any such map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving, or any parts thereof, without the consent of the proprietor or proprietors of the copy-right thereof, first obtained in writing, signed in the presence of two credible witnesses; or, knowing the same to be so printed or imported without such consent, shall publish, sell or expose to sale, or in any manner dispose of any such map, chart, musical composition, engraving, cut, or print, without such consent, as aforesaid; then such an offender or offenders shall forfeit the plate or plates on which such map, chart, musical composition, engraving, cut, or print, shall be copied, and also all and every sheet thereof so copied or printed, as aforesaid, to the proprietor or proprietors of the copy-right thereof; and shall further forfeit one dollar for every sheet of such map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving, which may be found in his or their possession, printed or published, or exposed to sale, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act; the one moiety thereof to the proprietor or proprietors, and the other moiety to the use of the United States, to be recovered in any court having competent jurisdiction thereof.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be construed to extend to prohibit the importation or vending, printing, or publishing, of any map, chart, book, musical composition, print or engraving, written, composed, or made, by any person not being a citizen of the United States, nor resident within the jurisdiction thereof.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons, who shall print or publish any manuscript whatever without the consent of the author or legal proprietor first obtained as aforesaid, (if such author or proprietor be a citizen of the United States, or resident therein), shall be liable to suffer and pay to the author or proprietor, all damages occasioned by such injury, to be recovered by a special action on the case founded upon this act, in any court having cognizance thereof: and the several courts of the United States empowered to grant injunctions to prevent the violation of the rights of authors and inventors are hereby empowered to grant injunctions, in like manner, according to the principles of equity, to restrain such publication of any manuscript as aforesaid.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That, if any person or persons shall be sued or prosecuted, for any matter, act, or thing done under or by virtue of this act, he or they may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That, if any person or persons, from and after the passing of this act, shall print, or publish any book, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving, not having legally acquired the copy-right thereof, and shall insert or impress that the same hath been entered according to act of congress, or words purporting the same, every person so offending shall forfeit and pay one hundred dollars; one moiety thereof to the person who shall sue for the same, and the other to the use of the United States, to be recovered by action of debt, in any court of record having cognizance thereof.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That, in all recoveries under this act, either for damages, forfeitures, or penalties, full costs shall be allowed thereon, any thing in any former act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That no action or prosecution shall be maintained, in any case of forfeiture or penalty under this act, unless the same shall have been commenced within two years after the cause shall have arisen.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That the "act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such copies during the times therein mentioned," passed May thirty-first, one thousand seven hundred and ninety, and the act supplementary thereto, passed April twenty-ninth, one thousand eight hundred and two, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed: saving, always, such rights as may have been obtained in conformity to their provisions.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That all and several the provisions of this act, intended for the protection and security of copy-rights, and providing remedies, penalties and forfeitures, in case of violation thereof, shall be held and construed to extend to the benefit of the legal proprietor or proprietors of each and every copy-right heretofore obtained, according to law, during the term thereof, in the same manner as if such copy-right had been entered and secured according to the directions of this act.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That, whenever a copy-right has been heretofore obtained by an author or authors, inventor, designer, or engraver, of any book, map, chart, print, or engraving, or by a proprietor of the same: if such author or authors, or either of them, such inventor, designer, or engraver, be living at the passage of this act, then such author or authors, or the survivor of them, such inventor, engraver, or designer, shall continue to have the exclusive right to his book, chart, map, print, cut, or engraving, with the benefit of each and all the provisions of this act, for the security thereof, for such additional period of time as will, together with the time which shall have elapsed from the first entry of such copy-right, make up the term of twenty-eight years, with the same right to his widow, child, or children, to renew the copy-right, at the expiration thereof, as is above provided in relation to copy-rights originally secured under this act. And if such author or authors, inventor, designer, or engraver, shall not be living at the passage of this act, then, his or their heirs, executors and administrators, shall be entitled to the like exclusive enjoyment of said copy-right, with the benefit of each and all the provisions of this act for the security thereof, for the period of twenty-eight years from the first entry of said copy-right, with the like privilege of renewal to the widow, child, or children, of author or authors, designer, inventor, or engraver, as is provided in relation to copy-rights originally secured under this act: Provided, that this act shall not extend to any copy-right heretofore secured, the term of which has already expired.

Approved, February 3, 1831.

MESSRS. TAZEWELL AND TYLER.

The New York Courier, has said—"Whatever may be the conclusion of impartial minds, the subject is now before the nation, and we have no doubt it will be sifted to the bottom. Messrs Tazewell and Tyler will be weighed in the balance of public opinion and their exact weight marked upon their foreheads, so that they may be estimated for what they are really worth hereafter. The speech of Mr. Livingston will aid this inquiry."

The United States Telegraph says—"It is understood, that Mr. Tazewell, at an early day of the session, informed Mr. Van Buren that he could not by any vote of his, recognize the power of the president to originate a mission. That his opinion upon the construction of the constitution was not only deliberately formed, but fully expressed in the case of the Panama mission. He was willing that the expenses of the treaty should be paid, and would have voted for an appropriation of the money in a shape which would not conflict with his construction of the constitution. Instead of asking the appropriation in the shape suggested, it was placed in the general appropriation bill, and assumed the power of the president to originate missions at his will. Mr. Tazewell was then called upon to take back what he had said on the Panama mission, and to approve in Mr. Van Buren, what he had condemned in Mr. Adams. He did not hesitate. He discharged his duty as a Virginian senator should do, and he is now receiving, as he expected, the abuse of a servile and profligate press. Governor Tyler has ably and fearlessly sustained his colleague. Both houses of congress sustained the ground assumed by them. Mr. Van Buren was glad to accept the appropriation in such a shape as to save the principle; and Virginia will laud the independence, and sustain the popularity of her senators."

Extracts from the speech of Mr. Tazewell, of Virginia, in the senate of the United States, respecting the Turkish mission.

"Mr. President, I have presented to the senate my views of the constitution, so far as it applies, to the matter before us. If I am right in these views, all must agree with me, that the power exercised by the president upon this occasion, was without warrant, and therefore unlawful, that it is a manifest violation of the rights of the senate; and if the act was done with that view, it is a flagrant usurpation of their constitutional powers.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. President, my strength is almost gone, and your patience must be at least as much exhausted, yet a few words more—I hope they may be the last with which I shall have occasion to trouble you. For many years I have watched the workings of this government, and have seen it steadily advancing to that condition to which our most sagacious statesmen long ago predicted it must one day come. Occasionally obstructions to its onward motion, have sometimes cheered me with the hope, that these predictions would not be verified. Nor will I ever part with this hope, while this body remains true to itself, and faithful to the states whose sovereignties are here represented. But what I have seen and heard of late is not well calculated to cherish hope. The time is not far distant, nay, it is at hand, when the theoretic maxim of the British law, will become a practical rule for the American people. The English jurists tell us, that "the king can do no wrong," and soon may we expect to hear this fiction of the British government transferred to ours, as a solemn truth affirmed of our president. I wish we may be able to introduce with this principle, the corrective it finds in the government from whence it is borrowed.—There, although the king can do no wrong, his ministers are responsible for all the bad advice they give him.

"In the instance before us, I am willing to believe, that the president has not knowingly violated the constitution, or designed to impair the rights of the senate, or desired to usurp for himself the entire and absolute control over all appointments, although such certainly, is the effect of his acts. In the mode in which business of this kind is done, as we all know many circumstances have existed to absolve the president from all design to exert any such power as has been here put in practice, in order to produce such effects. But what must we say of his ministers, the bounden duty of some of whom it is, to present to him the facts as they know them to be:—Of his cabinet, four were members of this body during the memorable Panama discussion. One of them, (the secretary of the navy) was the mover of the resolution declaratory of our rights, and denying to the president the power then claimed, and here exercised. Another of them (the secretary of state) stood by my side in that debate, the able advocate of those rights, eloquently denouncing the claim of power then preferred, as but a part of a long settled system covertly to increase the influence and patronage of the executive. And all four united with me in the vote given upon that occasion. Surrounded by such advisers, if no voice was raised to admonish him, if no friendly caution was given to him by any of those whose opinions upon this subject were so well known, and one of whom had in his own office a full representation of all the facts existing in the case, it ought not to be matter of much astonishment, if the president should have regarded it as one of common occurrence; and the omission to lay the appointments before the senate at their next session, may possibly have been accidental. I know not how this matter stands; but this I know, that if such a representation had ever been made to the senate, I should never have been heard to censure mere oversights, or acts of any kind unconsciously done. When honorable senators, however, instead of excusing, seek to justify what has been done; and this too by such arguments as we have heard, which, if sound, must suffice to perpetuate this power, the case assumes a very different aspect indeed. Under this different aspect I have been obliged to consider it.

"For thus regarding it, I know well what I am to encounter. I have seen the writing on the wall. I know the finger by which it was inscribed. It needs no Daniel to interpret it. But, sir, it is my consolation to know the balance in which I shall be weighed will never be held by any executive officer of this government, be he whom he may. They who sent me here, placed me as a warder on the watchtower, to warn of the approach of danger. I will not play the shepherd's boy, and cry when there is none. But when the danger stands confessed before me, come in what 'questionable shape' it may, I will do my duty."

[In his remarks on some observation of Mr. Livingston, as to the meaning of certain words of the constitution, Mr. Tazewell said—

"Then, the president would need but await until the senate adjourned, and he would have authority to fill up all vacancies. Nay, should he graciously please to refer his appointments to the senate afterwards, and they should reject them, instead of watching a fit occasion to renominate, (a) the president might wait for the adjournment, and then re-appoint the same individual, and so on, toties quoties, to the end of the chapter. A more summary method to divest the senate of all authority, and to invest the president alone with complete power over all appointments, could not well be devised."]

GENERAL BLAIR.

From the Columbia, (S. C.) Telescope.

In our paper of the 25th March, there is the following article:

Intrigue. Gen. Blair, some time since, was unadvised enough to charge upon the state rights' party, intrigue, in the late senatorial election. We let it pass, at that time as a charge too vague, coming from too ill an authority to be worth denial. Some of the poor echoes of the submission-party have caught up the accusation; and, in order to spare them any farther bandying of it, we must, at once, call upon gen. Blair for proofs fit to found so grave a charge upon. He must feel that nothing short of direct and strong proof will be sufficient to impeach the honor of a body of men, whose motives and characters occupy the very highest ground. If he can exhibit any proofs, however, great or small, let him speak, "or for ever hold his peace."

To this demand of proof, made of a public man, on a public question, which he was himself the first to start, we received, on the 4th instant, the following very decent reply.

Red Oak Camp, 31st March, 1831.

Editor of the Columbia Telescope,

Sir:—When you furnish the proof that I have, "charged the 'state rights' party' or any other party, with intrigue in the late senatorial election," I will determine whether I am under any obligation to respond to a chatechiser so contemptible as the editor of the Columbia Telescope. JAMES BLAIR.

Superscription FREE,

JAMES BLAIR,
House of representatives, U. S.

If this letter means any thing besides mere insolence and bullying, it unquestionably means a denial that he had ever charged intrigue, in the senatorial election, upon any party. He defies us to the proof. He shall have it, to his heart's content.

In his letter to the rev. Reuben Tucker, published in the Camden Journal, January 15th, he uses these precise words, speaking of Dr. Cooper:

"I believe his unwarrantable interference and tampering, in the late intrigues, by which judge Smith's re-election to the senate of the United States was defeated, is no secret to any body."

Is this sufficient? Is general Blair satisfied? Is there here no charge of intrigue? Is not Judge Smith's election declared to have been defeated by intrigue? And, unless he means to charge judge S's own friends with having defeated his election by intrigue, whom or what, except the states' right party, could he possibly have alluded to?

The epithet of "contemptible" will scarcely stick, except to him who has committed the wrong and the indecency, in this transaction. The public will readily decide upon whom it is to be fixed, gen. Blair, or ourselves.

Contumely and violence are the habitual weapons of gen. Blair; but they shall never, for an instant, save him from exposure, wherever his conduct seems to us to demand it.

DINNER AT COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA.

A public dinner was given to Mr. Hamilton, governor of the state of South Carolina, and Messrs. Hoyne and Miller, its senators in congress, at Columbia, on the 15th ult. Each of the gentlemen, on being toasted, returned thanks, &c. but we have not seen reports of what they said. The following are some of the volunteer toasts given on the occasion:

By governor Hamilton: The best sustenance for a just cause—Perseverance, cool heads and firm hearts.

By gen. R. Y. Hayne: The constitution of the United States, the ark of the political covenant, which we have sworn to "preserve, protect and defend." When assailed by the hand of power, shall we consent to its violation, or stand forth manfully in its defence?

By the hon. S. D. Miller: The citizens of Columbia—distinguished for their sound principles and liberal hospitality—may their wealth and commercial prosperity increase in proportion to their wealth and enterprise.

By Thomas Harrison, esq. state rights, and state remedies—It is idle to talk of one without the other. If a state has any sovereign right, it must necessarily have a sovereign remedy; for the right and remedy must be of the same character. If the right is legal, the remedy is legal—If the right is sovereign the remedy is sovereign. To say that a sovereign right is to be asserted in a court of law, is of all legal absurdities the most preposterous.

By Theodore Stark, esq: Unauthorised taxation—Freemen can as little brook it in sister states, as in a mother kingdom.

By Mr. Cruger: The honorable Daniel Webster—His honor and magnanimity are well tested by his late dinner speech; wherein, he so wilfully and pitifully misrepresents the doctrines of the south, as intended to nullify not the infractions of the constitution, but the constitution itself.

By Mr. I. W. Hayne: Dum spiro spero—but my hope, is in the rising spirit of the oppressed not in the returning clemency of the oppressors.

By J. L. Clark, esq. State rights—The right to resist oppression at home or abroad, the legitimate rights of a state, to resist the usurpations of the general government in all infractions of the constitution.

By Mr. W. Finn: The tariff of 1828—If enacted according to the spirit of the constitution, the people of South Carolina would submit—if enacted, as a bounty, on northern manufactures, we say it should be repealed, or opposed at all and every hazard, by the people of the south.

By Dr. James Davis: Ireland and South Carolina- Of what advantage is the representation of Ireland in the British parliament? Just the same as the representation of South Carolina in congress. Rapacious despots? Go on and prosper: but remember there is a period in which the patience of the tamest slaves rises into fury and revenge.

By Mr. Edw. Wm. Johnson: The tariff—A thing too detestable to have been contrived, except by Yankees: to be enforced, except by Kentuckians; or to be endured, except by the submission men of the south.

By Mr. Lewis Cruger: Col. Wm. C. Preston—Though the malice of his enemies has prevailed against him—as "the towering eagle is hawked at and struck by mousing owls"—we have yet the consolation to know that his brilliant talents and noble spirit, though confined to a narrower, will still be exerted in a more useful sphere of patriotism.

☞The toasts of the principals at this entertainment are less earnest than might have been expected. The argument in Mr. Harrion's toast is curious. Mr. Finn would do well to inform us if the minority is to pronounce upon the true spirit of the constitution. The Mr. Preston complimented by Mr. Cruger we suppose to be the gentleman who was lately defeated by the anti-nullificatory candidate for congress, in the place of Mr. Martin, appointed a judge.

—

A public dinner was lately given at Mobile, to Mr. King, one of the senators of the United States from Alabama. On being complimented, Mr. King returned thanks, in "a very able and appropriate speech, (says the Mobile Commercial Register) which charmed the attention of the audience for about half an hour. We regret exceedingly that we have not been able to procure a copy of it for publication, as we can scarcely trust our memory so far as to attempt a sketch of it. He alluded in the first place to the condition of the state when admitted into the union, with a debt of rising twelve millions of dollars hanging over our citizens, and contrasting in eloquent terms their depressed condition at that period, and for a few succeeding years, with their present prosperity, owing, next to their enterprise, to the timely relief afforded by the national legislature in the various laws passed from time to time on that subject. He next referred in terms of pointed reprobation, to the dangerous doctrine of nullification, admitted the oppressive operation of the tariff laws upon the cotton growing states, but contended that, great as those evils manifestly were, it was the dictate of patriotism to resist them as became intelligent freemen, in the manner pointed out by the constitution."

—

At a public dinner given to Mr. Lewis, one of the representatives in congress from Alabama, the following toast was drank:

"The union of the North American states, and the fundamental principles of our government—may the former continue, and the latter govern for ever and ever, world without end, amen."

POLITICAL CURIOSITIES—ALL SORTS.

From the Pennsylvania Inquirer.

A portion of the public seem not to be aware of the supposed cause of Mr. Tazewell's defection from the Jackson party, and his transformation into its bitter and virulent opponent. A letter just received from a friend places this matter in its proper light. We subjoin an extract:

"The conduct of Messrs. Tazewell and Tyler never surprised me. From the first moment that Mr. Tazewell was disappointed of a seat in the cabinet, he resolved on his course of opposition, in concert with Mr. Tyler. You must recollect, that, in order to conciliate him, he was offered the mission to London; which he rather indignantly refused.—

This was in March 1829. No man can gild his conduct with more plausible pretexts, than Mr. Tazewell! But this disappointment still rankles in the breast of Mr. Tazewell. He determined at the start, to thwart the administration of general Jackson, right or wrong, by every means in his power. Had he been received into the cabinet, you never would have heard of the foolish talk about editors. These Virginia senators started to vex, and destroy the good old hero; whom they could not otherwise reach, and embarrass. Any pretext will do for men predetermined to find fault, and to throw impediments in the path of the administration. I like old Virginia—or rather did love and admire her in old times—but ever since Mr. Ritchie pronounced "the election of Jackson a curse to the country"—she seems to have been thrown off her centre, and to have lost her equipoise. She is not satisfied—and yet is too proud to say so—knowing that she has been overlooked in the cabinet, and but poorly complimented by the Russian mission."

From the Winchester Virginian.

Amongst many other strange things which have recently taken place at Washington, not the least strange are the speeches of the Virginia senators, Messrs. Tazewell and Tyler, on the motion of the former to expunge from the general appropriation bill the item providing for the payment of the commissioners who negotiated the late Turkish treaty. We are not yet sufficiently informed on the subject to enable us to decide whether the appointment of the commissioners in this case is sanctioned by the constitution; but whether that be so or not, we do not hesitate to condemn the manner in which these gentlemen have chosen to express their dissent. They should leave such terms as they have applied to this mission and to the secretary of state, to such men as Tristram Burgess and Mr. senator Barton. The people of Virginia approve decidedly the general course which this administration has pursued; and if those who administer the government should occasionally fall into error, as the best may sometimes do, they will not denounce them as guilty of "rank usurpation," "lawless violation of the constitution," &c. &c.

From the Lynchburg (Va.) Republican.

"The inquiring reader may ask, where was Mr. Blair, where was Mr. Kendall (editors of the Globe) when Duff Green, taking his life in his hands, ventured forward, and bearded the lion in his den? They were in Kentucky, crying out at every cross road "hurra for Henry Clay, the lion of the west!" They were echoing the notes of "———— in Virginia, and calling out, "down with the curse!" And are those sons of Amalek, to be made elders judging the twelve tribes of Israel!"

From the Georgia Journal of March 17.

Mr. Crawford charges Mr. Calhoun with being a nullifier; and neither Mr. Calhoun, nor any of his adherents, ready as they have shown themselves to be, to repel what they conceived to be injurious imputations on their patron, have denied it, so far as it has come to our knowledge. Is it possible that Mr. Calhoun is not only a nullifier, but at the head of the nullifiers? If it be so, there is, in that single fact, strong reason to suspect the doctrine to be all wrong. Abjure it, and call it heresy. But we will wait awhile yet.

Verily, here is a revolution in the wheel of politics for you. We, who have been, during the whole of our editorial lives, opposed to Mr. Calhoun and his doctrines, are now found side by side with him, if he is accused truly, in the doctrine of nullification—so called—though ours is not exactly the same sort of a thing that goes by this name in South Carolina. And the ancient adversaries of Mr. Crawford in this state, those who have been unceasing in their opposition to him, in season and out of season, are now found by his side in the doctrine of anti-nullification!! Verily this is a bran-new predicament for us all to be in. It almost induces us to ask, as an acquaintance of ours once did an eminent lawyer:—"If you give a man all the appellations in the world, and take from him his cognomen, what will he offer at next?"

There are others, it seems, in the same condition with ourselves; on other points, though, as is shewn from the following extract. We reckon we had better all wipe out and begin anew.

From the Kentucky Gazette.

Mr. George McDuffie, that pink of nullificatinn and consistency, has failed, from some cause or other, to call up his proposed amendment to the constitution of the United States, which was covertly intended to operate retrospectively on our present venerated chief magistrate. When such traders and intriguers as himself are driven from the halls of congress, we may then hope that legislation will be directed to some useful purposes.

The Columbian Telescope

Speaks of the editor of the New York Courier, as "the tremendous capt. Webb, at once the Thersites and Achilles of his party; and cautions Mr. Van Buren to beware, and adds:

"The hireling zeal of his minions may outrun all discretion, as it does all decency. The public sense is not so lost, but that a general indignation may be excited, when it is seen that men of the most distinguished services and highest character, to whose talents and zeal the cause of Jackson owes so much, are to be thus set upon, the instant that they shrink from any part of the measures of the administration, with which their principles are irreconcilable."

From the Washington Telegraph.

"Who does not see that those who abused general Jackson in 1824, who sustained Mr. Clay in 1825, and who joined our ranks when they saw the irresistible impulse of the hero's popularity, are now endeavoring to use the name of general Jackson to promote their own purposes? What do they care for him, his fame, or his principles, so that they can use his name?

From the Richmond Enquirer.

We do not approve of every act of gen. Jackson. We state this in the firmest, frankest, but most respectful spirit. But he is an honest man; he has the power to render us many acts of public service—and he has the weight of character to rebuke the genius of the father of the American System. When his re-election is accomplished, then let us take some man who is qualified to save the constitution and serve the country. Put aside, if you please, either Van Buren or Calhoun—take some other man of the republican party who deserves and commands its confidence—keep out Mr. Clay and preserve the constitution, and as some gentlemen fear, the union itself from a total wreck.

*This blank may be filled with the word "Ritchie." Ed. Reg.

As for ourselves, we are pledged to no mortal man. The appointment of a successor to gen. Jackson will become the object of the greatest solicitude—when the time shall come for making the selection. But if we go on dividing, as we have done for the last four weeks, suffering our feelings to be played upon, not by each other, but by the opposition, we shall be too much distracted ever to re-unite—gen. Jackson will not be endangered—but what comes next is "clouds and darkness!"

"The stolen letter."

How a certain confidential letter from president Monroe to Mr. Calhoun got into the hands of general Jackson, without the consent or knowledge of Mr. Calhoun, is still a mystery. The Washington Telegraph thus closes a reply to the New York Standard, on the subject:—

"As we have said, it has been seen that names in this matter are substantial things; and it may be that the names of the member of congress, and of the person who assumed to be Mr. Calhoun's friend, would cast much light upon this subject, and enable the public to determine how far their agency goes to prove or disprove a plot. It is argued that, because they professed to act with Mr. Calhoun's consent, therefore there was no plot. If this argument be good, the fact that they acted without Mr. Calhoun's knowledge and against his consent, is conclusive proof that there was a plot. And we ask the editor of the Standard what he will say if it shall appear that the letter was purloined, and that, so far from acting under the sanction of Mr. Calhoun, this professed friend, after travelling from Washington to Nashville for the purpose of placing the letter in the hands of general Jackson, travelled to Albany to report progress? ☞We believe that all this will appear, if the names be given. We ask for the names, not only of the member of congress, but also of him who, the Standard says, "can tell how he got the letter."

From the Georgia Courier.

The call for a meeting of the friends of Henry Clay, in Philadelphia, was signed by 900 persons. Some of our friends say we will be in the minority again. We answer, time will show. Old Hickory is a hard horse to beat. We ride him this time—not that we believe he is absolutely the best racer in the field, but that he is as good as any, and will, suit the purposes to be answered for the peace and happiness of the country with greater probability. The only objection we think worth mentioning at present, to his success is, we do not like many of his grooms. We think several of them could be changed for better, and will probably give place to more disinterested politicians.

The Fredericksburg Arena

calls to mind the fact, that Mr. Kendall, charged by Mr. Duff Green as being editor of the "Globe," owes his appointment as 4th auditor to the casting vote of Mr. Calhoun.

From the Columbia Times of March 23.

"The letter from a Virginia member of congress to the editor of the Richmond Enquirer, published in to-day's paper, will be read with interest. It may be regarded as strong proof that Virginia is becoming perfectly sound. She is growing more and more alive, every day, to the dangerous tendencies of the government administered on its present principles. Tazewell and Tyler in the senate have taken a bold and noble stand against them, which she approves. When they returned home from Washington, the Van Buren faction, of which Ritchie is the tool and organ, trusting too much to the popularity of Jackson, proposed, not formally, however, to pass a vote of censure on their conduct. It was soon discovered that such a proposition would be rejected with indignation by a large majority. The tables were turned, and Ritchie and his party had to stretch every nerve, and resort to every shift, to prevent a vote of thanks. We may calculate on Virginia as being at this time more thoroughly and firmly with us in the present contest than she has ever been.

From the Lynchburg Republican.

"His [Mr. Clay's] privacy should not be suffered to avail him—he should be pursued through every lane of life, until the infirmities of nature shall render him impotent to do evil. This man has a large account yet to settle with his country. He has not fully paid the penalty of his iniquities: he must be made to drink to the dregs the cup of degradation for his bold defiance of the people's will. If, then, it shall be his purpose to withdraw for a season from public life—for it will only be for a season, with his consent—we warn the people, solemnly, to keep him, and the ever memorable and no less corrupt deeds of his past life, in their recollection. Throw not the pall of oblivion upon offences the highest which can exist as between constituent and representative. If two years hence, or less time, as we forbode, Henry Clay shall be presented for the forgiveness and votes of his country, we trust that country will rebuke the steadfast adhesion of his party, and such unconquerable impudence in himself, in such a manner as will prostrate him and it. The thought of having Henry Clay paraded upon the stage, annoying the community—defiled, as he is, with the moral filth of the "bargain," is intolerable. A daily ablution in the king of rivers can never make him clean. There is "not rain enough in the sweet heavens" to purify him."

From the Fincastle (Va.) Patriot.

"Truth is truth, and it is useless to cone al it. The tide of party feeling has swelled to such an alarming height, that it threatens to bury in destruction our most sacred rights, to deprive us of the privilege of freemen—the privilege of judging and acting for ourselves and our country. We yield to none in the sincerity and earnestness of our political friendship for general Jackson. We believe him to be a firm and incorruptible statesman—a man of Roman virtue and integrity; and so long as he continues true to his country, he shall have our feeble, but honest support. But general Jackson is not a God."

From the Washington Globe.

"We have seen enough of private letters and public papers to satisfy us, that Mr. Calhoun's ill-advised attempt to bring his private quarrels into the political discussions of the country, has utterly destroyed all chances for his political advancement, which his "nullification" had left."

"The nullification party unite in the scheme of the coalition, and strive to persuade the people that they do not assail the president, but those to whose arts they pretend he is a victim. They would have us to believe that he is under control, because they found on a memorable occasion, that no artifice could deceive him, nor any influence swerve him from the great cause of the country, and induce him to give his countenance to the interested schemes of partisans, however they might profess devotion to himself. The public have not forgotten the celebrated nullifying dinner got up under the pretence of commemorating the principles of the patriot Jefferson, and to which the patriot Jackson was invited to lend the sanction of his presence. Toasts and speeches were prepared to recommend the new doctrines to which the vice president had committed himself in the south, and they were so artfully disguised in the garb of state rights, that it was supposed, amidst the enthusiasm and applause of surrounding friends, the president from sympathy, would catch the contagion, and unite in proclaiming the principle of nullification, or in other words, the right of one state to dissolve the union. A copy of the toasts were placed at the plate of the president, that he might be prepared to join in the spirit of the proceedings; but no sooner had he run his eye over the paper than he endorsed on the back of it his own commentary, and put his veto upon it. This was like the night attack on the enemy, on the twenty-third of December. He rebuked, at once, the politicians who sought to entrap him, through the consenting feelings natural to such an occasion, by his peremptory toast—"The federal union must be preserved." From that moment Mr. Calhoun felt that his principles were out of favor; and he resolved to take the ground that the president was the "victim of political intriguers," when he found him superior to all intriguers. He found that no flattery nor management on the part of himself and his friends, could bend the noble minded and single hearted patriot, to give the weight of his character and station to the designs of artful and ambitious partizans, and he has sought, through every avenue, to destroy that influence which he could not propitiate to his purpose. The good sense of the people will foil him in this, as the good sense of the president foiled his first attempt."

☞We had a very different view of this dinner. We thought it was a mere political juggle, as the editor of the "Globe" regards it—but for a very different purpose. "The chief cook" was Mr. Benton, of Missouri—it seemed as if the whole affair rested on his broad shoulders—and his chief aids were Messrs. P. P. Barbour, Woodbury, Hayne and Grundy. We believed it was gotten-up for effect against internal improvements and the protection of manufactures. Of the 24 regular toasts and 80 volunteers—one hundred and four in all [bless the bellies and the heads of those who swallowed them!] no voice was raised in favor of internal improvements, and only one on behalf of the tariff—by Mr. Craig, of New York. It was because of these things, that the Pennsylvania delegation to a man—(though they had been coaxed out of their money), refused to eat or drink with the party—and very few of the western members of congress were present. It was regarded as a grand movement against the tariff by Mr. Raguet, the editor of the "Banner of the Constitution," then resident at Washington, who filled his paper with the official account of the proceedings, shouting—

☞"From this time forth, the days of the miscalled AMERICAN SYSTEM are numbered. The toscin is sounded and the BANNER OF POLITICAL PRINCIPLES is unfurled." "The occasion was a solemn one, one more intimately connected with the future organization of political parties in this country, than may at first sight be supposed," &c.☜

Mr. Raguet has made a melancholy change of his tone, in the short space of a year—he is now doling out chapters of lamentations, that the days of the "American System" are not numbered. But its no great matter what he says.

At this "nullifying dinner" as the "Globe" calls it, let us see who were the chief persons present, so far as a list of the names may be gathered from the volunteer toasts.

John Roane, of Va. was president—Messrs. Bibb, of Ken. Woodbury, of N. H. Grundy, of Ten. Cambreleng, of N. Y. Gordon, of Va. and Overton, of Lou. vice presidents. Andrew Jackson, president and John C. Calhoun, vice president of the United States—Messrs. Van Buren, Eaton, Branch and Barry—(Ingham missing), with Mr. Speaker Stevenson, Hubbard, of N. H. Wayne, of S. C. Desha, of Ten. Monell, of N. Y. Alexander, of Va. Davis, of S. C. White, of Ten. Yancey, of Ken. Troup, of Geo. McDuffie, of S. C. Archer, of Va. Hill, of N. H. Benton, of Mo. Boulden, of Va. De Wit, N. Y. Davenport, of Va. Maxwell, of N. Y. Carson, of N. C. Johnson, of Ken. Clay, of Ala. Johnson, of Ten. Lewis, of Ala. Polk, of Ten. Wickliffe, of Ken. Speight, of N. C. White, of N. Y. Dudley, of N. Y. Kane, of Ill. Craig, of N. Y. S. Smith, of Md. and Potter, of N. C. These are all the members of congress that are on the list of volunteers before us. How many of them were or are nullifiers?

The "Globe" has made a charge which, if substantiated, will severely strike many of the best friends of the president—and two of them, if report speaks truly, are to be called into the new "cabinet."

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 12—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, MAY 21, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1026.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞ The editor is, unexpectedly absent from his post this week, and any delay that may attend his usual private correspondence, &c. he hopes will be excused.

☞ We compliment our readers with eight extra pages—to get-in certain long and valuable articles for present and future use; especially the masterly report of the committee of the late house of representatives, through judge Hemphill, concerning internal improvements, to which we have added a curious estimate of costs, furnished in a message of the president of the United States, for the better understanding of some parts of Mr. Hemphill's report.

EFFECTS OF THE "SYSTEM." We have already noticed the wholesome condition of Baltimore. The city never was in a better state than at present—and the prospect a-head is cheering, indeed. The "decayed and deserted Baltimore" of Mr. John Randolph in 1824, has increased her population 25 per cent. since that time, and the fee of the property within her boundaries is worth twice or thrice as much as it was in that year. Just as many new houses are now building as there are materials and workmen to erect them—so, also as many ships and other vessels. The foreign trade has also much increased. It is stated, that the duties already secured at our custom house in the present year, is equal to their late usual annual amount. But we shall further shew below, that the tariff has not "ruined" the commerce of the country, as the foreign trade is called by the "philosophers" by way of eminence, though its whole amount does not equal that of our home manufactures, of which the hides and skins of animals are the materials of chief value—and would hardly pay for the potatoes, turnips, cabbages, parsnips, pumpkins and puddings, consumed by the people of the United States. We are not joking. Let any one calculate for himself, and he will find that we are quite serious in this matter.

In 1824, Mr. Randolph said Philadelphia was in a "state of atrophy"—"could NEVER have a foreign trade to any great amount, or become a great manufacturing town, for which she wants all the elements of climate, COAL and CAPITAL!" We do not know of any defect in her climate—she is the greatest coal market in America, and yet more and more increasing her supplies; and twenty millions of dollars can be raised in this city in twenty days, for any new and profitable investment. There is an enormous amount of wealth and surplus capital in Philadelphia. Her manufactures are in great variety and of prodigious value—not less than thirty millions a year; and her crowded streets shew also a mighty amount transacted in foreign manufactures—some of the pavements, for whole squares together, being hardly passable for packages of such goods. She has a "great amount" of foreign trade,*—and her coasting and inland trade is exceedingly important. I lately walked seven or eight miles through different streets of this beautiful city, to gratify my curiosity and for the sake of exercise—and was astonished at the bustle and business displayed. Extensive grounds, that were as waste lands, during my apprenticeship there, are covered with new and elegant buildings. Hundreds of good houses have been latterly torn down that more splendid or commodious edifices might be put up!—and especially on Market street. It is supposed, that at least two thousand houses are now under contract to be built in the present season; and it is thought that the whole number erected will considerably exceed 2,500, in the current year!* From my own observation, I cannot think that this statement is exaggerated. Bricks and mortar, and piles of lumber, are to be met with every where, even in the thickly built parts of this city. It is computed that not less than twenty-five thousand of the inhabitants of this city are directly supported by manufactures, which will appear reasonable from the employment in one branch of industry, of which we have an account that is accepted as being nearly correct: Watson's Annals inform us that Philadelphia contains 104 warping mills, 4,500 weavers, 3,000 spoolers, 200 bobbin winders, and 200 dyers, whose wages amount to $1,470,000, and the consumption of indigo 114,000 lbs. per annum; and that they manufacture 81,000 yards per day, or 24,300,000 yards per year.

New York and Boston are equally prosperous. Labor is in great demand in both, and bricks and mortar are in earnest request. The tariff has not ruined the commerce of either—as the following paragraphs will shew:

The New York Mercantile Advertiser says—The number of vessels arrived at our port within a few weeks past, is almost unprecedented, and the custom house during the whole of the month of April, has been crowded from opening till closing: the clerks have been occupied not only during the regular hours, but to keep up with the great press of business, have been engaged till near midnight. On Saturday last 357 entries were made, and 78 vessels were cleared—being a greater number than ever was known in any one day before. When the account for April, of the duties secured, and the business done, shall be made up, we believe it will be found to exceed that of any previous month in the annals of the custom house.†

And the "Boston Patriot" had the following paragraphs:—

The amount of duties at this port for the quarter ending April 1, 1831, is estimated at one million of dollars! being an excess over the corresponding quarter of 1830 of $500,000. The duties for the present month, up to this day, [about the 23rd April] amount to about $600,000.

In addition to the above, we are gratified to state that preparations are making to build extensively, and that

* The Philadelphia Daily Chronicle informs us, that the amount of duties at that port, for the quarter ending April 1, 1831, is estimated at one million of dollars; being an excess over the corresponding quarter of 1830, of $500,000. The duties for April, up to the 27th, amount to about $600,000, and the arrivals from foreign ports up to the 20th were fifty-six more than in the same time last year.

In the month of April, the arrivals at Philadelphia from foreign ports were 14 ships, 9 brigs and 4 schooners, measuring 6,142 tons, and the coastwise were 87 vessels—7,874 tons. There cleared in the same month for foreign ports 9 ships, 20 brigs and 9 schooners—7,841 tons, and coastwise, 174 vessels—19,733 tons.

* Mr. Randolph also said Philadelphia was "overbuilt" in 1824!

† The amount of revenue collected at New York in 1830 was $15,012,553—or two millions more than in 1829. But the receipts of the present year, it is said, will largely exceed the receipts of the last year. "The imports for the last ten days of April, were upwards of thirty thousand packages; the duties alone, for the same period, were nearly one million. In the last seven months, out of more than eight millions of bonds, less than $250 laid over; the rest was paid punctually. The first quarter of the present year will be a million of dollars more than the first quarter of 1830. There is every reason to believe that the imposts of the year will exceed, by four millions, the amount collected in 1829."

he prospect is, that mechanics, as well as every other kind of business, will be in active and profitable operation.

We learn that the Liverpool packet company will continue their operations, and that they have ordered the keels of two first rate ships to be laid.

The number of arrivals from foreign ports up to the 20th inst. exceeded that for the same time last year by *fifty-six.

Hundreds of towns and villages in the north, east and west, give us like indications of prosperity—but we cannot go into particulars now. Among the most remarkable are New Bedford, Providence, Albany, Troy, Rochester—Pittsburg, Cincinnatti and Wheeling. And many towns and villages, that were in a state of decay, have been revived and are greatly extended, by the benevolent influences of the "American System." The little city of Hudson, "away up the North river," has four large ships employed in the whale fishery; and it is mentioned as a remarkable fact, that a forest tree, cut down in the western part of New York, 360 miles from the "salt sea-side," in March 1830, and transported to Hudson, by the canal and river—was there fashioned into a mast for one of these ships—and before March 1831, had performed a South Sea voyage, and returned to its port.† At Vincennes, the late distant and almost unknown Vincennes, there were 54 arrivals and departures of steam boats between the 5th March and 16th April, of the present year, and from 450 to 500 flat-boats passed that town. It is estimated, that the whole number of such boats that entered the Ohio, from the Wabash, this spring, is not less than 1,000—and the value of their cargoes have been calculated by the intelligent editor of the "Vincennes Gazette," at 750,000 dollars! A larger amount of this value reached the factories about Boston, than the British West Indies!—and yet there are two cotton mills at Vincennes. During the month which ended on the 4th April 500,000 dollars worth of flour, whiskey, pork and lard arrived at Cincinnati, by the Miama canal, only, there being 37,642 bbls. flour, 18,384 do. pork, &c.

The following is given as the probable value of the exports of that district of country north and east of the Kentucky river, and a few counties bordering on its south side:

Hogs, alive and in pork, bacon, and lard	$1,000,000
Horned cattle	200,000
Horses and mules	500,000
Hempen fabrics	750,000
Tobacco	150,000
Iron in castings, pigs, and bars	50,000
Wool, ginseng, feathers, &c. &c.	100,000
	$2,750,000

"Should the contemplated rail-road to Louisville, and turnpike to Maysville, of which there is scarcely a doubt, be realized, a very great increase in our exports may certainly be expected. These roads will pass through nearly the middle of the richest portion of our state, possessing a soil of such exuberant fertility as to be capable, under improved cultivation, of trebling its present amount of products; which it will do whenever the completion of these works give encouragement, by an easy, quick, and cheap mode of transportation to market. They will also create new articles of trade, which, from their bulk and weight, will not bear transportation by the roads and means of conveyance now used."

"From the best means of information within my reach, the office of the United States bank at Lexington during the last year negotiated exchange transactions to an amount exceeding $1,500,000, equal to one half of the estimated exports of this section, the larger part of which was probably for the benefit of the stock drivers. In thus promoting the general commerce of the country, its advantages are extended to all classes, and the institution should be, and I believe is, viewed as one of the great causes of our sectional prosperity, and has thereby gained a corresponding popularity."*

Manufactures, instead of being "sinks of vice" are rather schools of virtue. Indeed, the indulgence of bad habits or vicious propensities cannot be tolerated in factories—and the females employed are remarkable for the correctness of their conduct, far beyond their sisters in the same walk of life. The men too, are compelled to behave correctly. The stake is too large to be committed into the charge of unsteady men.

The proprietor of a manufactory in Boston pays the workmen a premium of $10 per annum, for dispensing with drinking at 11 and 4 o'clock, but allows them the requisite time to eat luncheons.

THE LATE MR. MALLARY. The Columbia, (S. C.) Telescope has the following indecent and indelicate paragraph, and on another account it is worthy of the reckless being, (Dr. Cooper), lately reprehended by Mr. Blair—see page 154.

"Mr. Mallary—the American System man—died in Baltimore, on the 15th inst. We should like to know whether or not he will be permitted to introduce his system in the place to which he has gone? It would be a great improvement there."

Tribute of respect to Mr. Mallary.

At a meeting of members of the bar of the county of Rutland, holden at the court house in Rutland, on the 29th ult. Robert Temple, esq. announced the melancholy intelligence of the death of the hon. Rollin C. Mallary, representative in congress, from this district.

Whereupon, Robert Temple, esq. was called to the chair, Rodney C. Royce, esq. appointed secretary to the meeting, and gen. John Kellogg, Gordon Newell, and Selah H. Merrill, esqrs. appointed a committee, to draft resolutions expressing the sense of the meeting upon this afflicting dispensation of Providence.

In pursuance of their appointment, the committee would express, in behalf of the members of this bar, their deep affliction at the intelligence of the death of the hon. Rollin C. Mallary, our late worthy and efficient representative in congress, by which our country has been deprived of one of its most active and useful public servants; our own state of one by whose talents and services it has been alike honored and profitted; our bar of one of its brightest ornaments, and society of an esteemed and favorite citizen. He has been taken from us in the vigor of active life, in the progress of useful exertion, and in the prospect of coming years of increasing usefulness, and accumulating honors: wherefore,

Resolved, That the members of the bar of Rutland county, deeply sympathize with the afflicted widow, in the mournful dispensation of Providence, in the removal of her companion.

Resolved, That we hold in the highest estimation the public services and private character of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a manifestation of respect for the deceased, the members of the bar will wear a badge of mourning on the left arm, for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of the proceedings of this meeting be presented to the widow of the said deceased, signed by the chairman and secretary.

R. TEMPLE, chairman.

R. C. ROYCE, secretary.

---

* At Boston, on the 4th inst—one day, there were booked at City Hall news room, the cargoes of eighty-five vessels, eleven being from foreign ports, and seventy-four coastwise. Nearly all the coastwise vessels were from southern ports with breadstuffs, &c. no small portion of which will probably be consumed by manufacturers. The aggregate of flour received was 11,471 whole, 151 half bbls. 40,822 bushels corn, 29,230 bushels oats, 1,650 bushels rye, and 1,072 bales cotton.

What a flourish of trumpets should we have had, if so great an amount of bread stuffs had been exported to the West Indies, in one day!

† This ship was fitted for a three years cruise, but returned in less than one year, fully laden with the cargo desired—so great was the "fishermen's luck."

* This account of the exports, &c. of a part of Kentucky is copied from the National Intelligencer, derived from a highly respectable merchant, whose character guarantees the accuracy of his statements.

DIFFERENCES OF OPINION. Mr. Jefferson has the following remarks in one of the volumes of his works just published:

"I see too many proofs of the imperfection of human reason, to entertain wonder or intolerance at any difference of opinion, on any subject; and acquiescence in that difference as easily as in a difference of feature or form: experience having long taught me the reasonableness of mutual sacrifice of opinion among those who are to act together for any common object, and the expediency of doing what good we can, when we cannot do all we would wish."

THE NEW CAP. The beautiful effects of what some people stigmatise by the name of luxuries or superfluities, is well exemplified in a simple little story related by Dr. Franklin. "The skipper of a shallop," he says, "employed between Cape May and Philadelphia, had done us some small service, for which he refused to be paid. My wife, understanding that he had a daughter, sent her a present of a new fashioned cap. Three years after, this skipper being at my house with an old farmer of Cape May, his passenger, he mentioned the cap, and how much his daughter had been pleased with it. But, said he, it proved a dear cap to our congregation. How so?—When my daughter appeared with it at meeting, it was so much admired, that all the girls resolved to get such caps from Philadelphia; and my wife and I computed that the whole could not have cost less than a hundred pounds. True, said the farmer, but you do not tell all the story. I think the cap was, nevertheless, an advantage to us; for it was the first thing that put our girls upon knitting worsted mittens for sale at Philadelphia, that they might have wherewithal to buy caps and ribbons there; and you know that that industry has continued, and is likely to continue, and increase, to a much greater value, and to answer better purposes. Upon the whole, I was more reconciled for this little piece of luxury, since not only the girls were made happy by having fine caps, but the Philadelphians by the supply of warm mittens."

☞Franklin, of all men who ever lived, had the happiest way of illustrating more important things by familiar applications. The little story above related is one of the best commentaries on the "American System" that we have met with. But it especially rejects the idle notion entertained, that the protection of the industry of the people, in manufactures, will so affect the revenue, as to make a resort to direct taxation necessary to the support of government. It is true, the prophecies of the anti-tariffites have proved themselves false—and yet our desire always has been, and is, that direct taxation, the most honest of all, should be mainly depended on. In that case, "East room stories" would no longer be found in our newspapers. But the point of the narrative is in this—as we have many times stated, that desire presses on means; and that the enjoyment of little luxuries, while adding most to the comfort of the laboring classes, may rather increase than diminish the national wealth, in the more cheerful and extensive industry of the people—the source of all wealth.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH. The value of the livings in the gift of the archbishops and twenty-five bishops of England, including their own salaries and dues, is about £3,450,000—or $15,200,000, equal to about five hundred and sixty thousand dollars for each of those persons!—Besides these there are livings in the gift of the king, the nobility and gentry, the ministers, &c. in all making the revenue of the clergy for England only, at £7,000,000, or 30,000,000 dollars. The population of England was less than 12,000,000, in 1830, so that there was paid for every man, woman and child the sum of more than two dollars and a half, for the support of "the church," and yet about 7,000,000 of the people are not members of that church, and have to support their own clergy besides. In Ireland, the income of "the church" is about £1,300,000—say 6,000,000 dollars; but the members of that church in Ireland is only about 400,000 persons, though the whole population is 7,000,000—the clergy of the 6,600,000 receiving only £261,580!

SPANISH STATISTICS. There are in Spain 62 bishops, 23,093 canons, 1,899 prebendaries, 16,481 curates, 4,929 vicars, 17,421 clergymen holding benefices, 27,757 persons in orders, 14,015 sacristans and acolytes, 3,927 serving men belonging to the order, 38,422 professed ecclesiastics, 2,559 novices, 20,340 lay brothers, 28,111 nuns, 896 novices and 7,393 lay sisters; making in all 182,371 persons devoted to religion. In Spain there are 1,323 grandees or Castilian noblemen, 402,059 nobles, 27,243 government employers, 149,340 military men, 5,883 judges or advocates, 9,655 notaries; 13,274 proctors, agents, alguasils, &c., 4,346 physicians, 9,772 surgeons, 3,872 apothecaries, 5,708 veterinary surgeons, 29,812 students, 364,514 proprietors of the lands they cultivate, 327,423 farmers, 805,235 laborers, 25,530 proprietors of cattle and flocks, 113,628 shepherds, 6,824 merchants, 18,531 retail dealers, 5,899 individuals cultivating the fine arts, 31,238 sailors, 16,427 fishermen, 2,886 huntsmen, 489,493 artisans and workmen of all sorts, 214,000 mules, 140,000 horses, 1,065 oxen or cows, 230,000 asses, 12,000,000 sheep, 2,521,000 goats, and 126,000 pigs.

BRIEF NOTICES.

Destruction of the penitentiary and jail at Milledgeville. On the night of the 2d instant, the penitentiary and jail at Milledgeville, Georgia, were consumed by fire. They were, it is supposed intentionally set on fire by one of the convicts, who had a few nights before made an attempt to break out, but was caught and punished for it. Several other houses were on fire, but by the great exertions of the citizens were saved. The loss in stock and raw materials is estimated at between seven and ten thousand dollars. One of the prisoners, a man by the name of Wilkinson, made his escape. He was committed on a charge of robbing the mail, and the grand jury of the U. S. circuit court had found two bills against him. The penitentiary cost 150,000 dollars.

Steam boat disaster. The steam packet Washington, capt. Tomlinson, which left New York on Saturday afternoon for Providence, R. I. when off New Haven, at 20 minutes past 12 o'clock on Sunday morning, was run foul of by the Chancellor Livingston, capt. Comstock, from Providence for N. York and sunk in 20 minutes. The boats were going at the rate of 11 miles an hour, in opposite directions, and came in contact with such violence as to throw some of the passengers out of their births. Owing to the great exertions made, before the Washington sunk, $20,000 in specie, the same amount in bills, and about 50 packages of merchandise were removed to the Chancellor Livingston, and thus saved. There were 52 passengers on board the Washington, all of whom were saved. Edward Sherman, the pilot of the Washington was killed when the two vessels came in contact. It is supposed that the Washington can be raised, as her stern remains four feet above the water. There was no insurance on the Washington, which cost originally about $60,000.

Fire at Albany. The extensive fur factory of Messrs. Packer, Prentice & Co. situated on the pier at Albany, was entirely destroyed by fire, together with its contents, on the 11th instant. The loss is estimated at from $12,000 to $15,000, upon which there was an insurance of $10,000.

An explosion. Another explosion took place in one of the buildings attached to the powder works of Mr. Daniel Rogers, near Newburgh, N. J. on the 9th instant. One man was killed.

Hail storm. The neighborhood of Levana, in Brown's county, Ohio, and Dover, in Mason county, Ky. were on the night of Saturday the 7th inst. visited with a severe hail storm—the hail fell in some places to the depth of three inches, and the stones as many inches in circumference. The shingles from many of the houses are represented as being almost wholly torn off. The town of Paris, Ky. also suffered severely from the same storm. Snow and hail fell in considerable quantities in the neighborhood of Mayslick, Ky. on the 9th instant.

Dreadful tornado. A destructive tornado, says the Charleston Mercury, occurred in the neighborhood of Flea Bite Swamp, situate about 40 miles from that city, on the South Carolina state road, on Saturday night the 7th inst. All the houses, and fences on several of the plantations were blown down. The roads were literally covered with trees, &c. and many accidents happened to wagons from the horses taking fright.

Cumberland road. The National Intelligencer states that this road is in much better repair than it has been represented to be.

The Pensacola Gazette of the 30th ult. says:—"On the 17th inst. there occurred an unhappy affray between some of the sailors of the United States ship Vincennes, and a portion of the citizens of this place. The sailors were ashore on liberty, and being intoxicated made an attack on some young men near the Catholic chapel, who were assembling there for the services of the afternoon. In the affray, one of the sailors, Christopher Pearl, was stabbed, and has since died of his wound. An individual has since been arrested and examined for the offence. But the examining court was satisfied, that he was not the person who inflicted the wound, and had nothing to do with Pearl whatever. The circumstance of the affray is deeply lamented as being the first serious dispute between the citizens and seamen."

Tattersalls. The Arabian horses, brought over by Mr. Rhind from Smyrna in November last, were sold by auction on Monday last at Tattersalls, N. Y. and brought the following prices:

Stamboul, chesnut	$575
Kochlani, bay	450
Zeleaadi, chesnut	430
Yemen, grey	535

Mr. Mann, who has been publisher of the "Morris Palladium" N. J. some thirty years, has retired from the arduous duties of the editorial chair. His successor is Mr. Nathaniel H. White, who is a devoted friend to the "American System."

We learn from the Nashua Gazette of the 13th inst. that an attempt was made on the night of the 9th inst. to break into the Amherst bank. The robber succeeded in breaking into the house, and through one or two partitions, but was unsuccessful in his attempts to enter the bank. The cashier, Mr. Prentiss, resides in the same building, where the bank is kept. He heard a noise and got up, and as he was coming down the stairs, he met the robber, who immediately surrendered.

The robber first entered the parlour of Mr. Prentiss' house, and cut through the partition, which separates this room from the entry, which leads to the bank. He attempted to break open the bank door but failed, and then proceeded to the office of Mr. Means, which is directly over the bank, and endeavored to cut through the floor into the bank, it was the noise, which he there made, that alarmed Mr. Prentiss. When he met the robber, he had his lantern and tools in his hand, and when Mr. Prentiss had obtained assistance from his neighbors, the robber was conducted to jail.

Troy jail. An attempt was made on the 11th instant by the prisoners confined in the jail at Troy, N. York to effect their escape. The attack was commenced, by a criminal by the name of Parmelee upon Mr. Reed, the turnkey, when he opened the cells in the morning Reed had his ear dreadfully lacerated, and was otherwise badly injured. His cries soon brought the sheriff to his assistance, who, with the aid of one of the prisoners, succeeded in securing the prisoners in their respective apartments.

The rail road connecting lake Ponchartrain with New Orleans, has been completed. The distance as lately travelled through the bayous was about fourteen miles; upon the road it is about six, and by the help of steam power, will be travelled in from ten to fifteen minutes. The trade between Mississippi and Alabama, and the city and the transportation of goods and passengers in both directions, would seem to ensure the success of the enterprise.

The directors of the bank of Penn township, Philadelphia, on Friday the 13th inst. elected ELIJAH DALLETT, esq. president, in the room of Daniel H. Miller, esq. deceased.

Fire! A warehouse and distillery at Dover, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, were destroyed by fire on the 30th ult. with seven thousand bushels of wheat. Total loss about $10,000.

A new meeting house, just finished in Geauga county, Ohio, was destroyed by fire on the 21st ult.

On the 4th inst. nearly half of the town of West Alexander, Pa. was destroyed by fire commencing at a blacksmith's shop, and probably originating from the heating of a wagon tire near the door. The loss is estimated at $25,000.

Mr. Ingham. The Intelligencer, published in Bucks county, Pa. says, that this gentleman has taken a house in New Hope, in that county, for the present accommodation of himself and family.

Mysterious disappearance. The Albany Evening Journal of Saturday says—"A drover from Dutchess county of the name of Hurd, (a brother of gen. J. N. M. Hurd of Albany), was lit to bed at Lewis' tavern, in Washington street, about four weeks ago, since which time no trace of him can be found. He had $2,200 in his possession, and had taken his seat west in Messrs. Thorp and Sprague's stage, but did not go. The police, we understand, have taken the investigation in hand."

Extraordinary snow storm. On Monday last, says the New York Commercial, a snow storm swept over the western section of the state of New York, from the valley of the Mohawk to the Genesee country. The fruit trees in the gardens of Rochester were thickly hung with isicles. It snowed furiously the whole day, so that its depth would have been from 10 to 12 inches, had it not dissolved rapidly.

Military movement. A detachment of the 1st U. S. artillery, under the command of major R. M. Kirby, composed of companies A. and G. from Wilmington, N. C. whence they marched on the 2d inst. via Newbern, Washington and Plymouth, passed through Norfolk on Saturday morning last, and arrived the same day at the head quarters of the regiment, at fortress Monroe. The march of 175 miles, to Plymouth, was performed in nine days. The route of the detachment was from the latter place, through Albemarle Sound to Elizabeth City and the Dismal Swamp canal, from Elizabeth City to Norfolk, in the transportation boats, the troops had the unprecedented despatch of 22 hours. The officers are major R. M. Kirby, commanding, capt. M. A. Patrick, and lieuts. D. D. Tompkins and R. C. Tilghman.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By an arrival at New York on Sunday afternoon from Liverpool, papers from that place to the 9th April have been received.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The statement of the quarter's revenue appeared in the London Times, of the 7th of April, and shewed a decided improvement, there being an increase on the customs and excise of £648,054. Parliament adjourned on the 1st of April to meet again on the 14th, when the question of reform would be brought forward. The question of a dissolution of parliament was again undergoing a discussion. The London Courier says that circulars were received there on the 5th of April, by the principal houses interested in the hemp trade, from the government requiring a further supply of 1,000 tons hemp, and that it had caused some speculation. Between five and six thousand ounces of gold had been shipped to Holland, supposed to be connected with some arrangement between the king of Holland and certain capitalists in England. Private advices represent his majesty as being in very embarrassed pecuniary circumstances. England, it appears coincided with France in the principles of the note addressed by the government of the latter to Austria, protesting against the occupancy by that power of the Italian states.

IRELAND.

Mr. O'Connell had written a letter to the people of Queen's county, calling upon them to return sir Henry Parnell without a contest and free of expense. Sir R. Ferguson had been returned for Derry. Sir Richard O'Donnell had presented 52 tons of potatoes to the starving peasantry of the county of Mayo—three persons in the district of Newport had starved to death. Col. Fitzgerald, son of the celebrated lord Edward, it was rumored would offer as one of the candidates for the county of Kildare. Ministers intend to form a loan for the relief of the people of Ireland. It is their intention to furnish employment to the poor. It is, however, suggested that the proposed loan will be inadequate to the object in view.

FRANCE.

The question of peace or war between France and Austria was still undecided, though from the tone of the French ministers, it would seem they are of the opinion that they will be able to maintain the relations of peace. The reply of Austria to the explanations demanded by the government of France had not been received. The war party in France were still clamorous against the ministers, and if the tone and opinions of their presses, are to be taken as evidence of public opinion, one would be led to believe that M. Casimer Perrier was scarcely less unpopular than prince Polignac. The majority of them declare he does not understand the revolution of July—that he has belied its principles, and that he is a minister of the restoration, instead of being the friend of the new sovereign. It had been stated by the secretary for foreign affairs in the chamber of deputies, that baron Strongonoff and field marshal Deibitsch, had been at Berlin, endeavoring to procure permission for the passage of the Russian troops through the Prussian territories—they had, however, failed, Prussia being firmly determined to act upon principles of justice towards the other nations of Europe, and thus contribute her mite towards the preservation of peace. It is generally believed in Paris that the eldest son of M. Casimir Perrier had been despatched to London to assure the English government that France places entire confidence in its justice, and that she will only take up arms, if forced to do so, in defence of her dignity, and her national honor, and not for the purpose of aggrandizement. The French government have come to the determination of not giving up fugitives. M. Salverte in a speech in the chamber of deputies, declared that the Carlists of La Vendee were busily at work, forming associations and levying contributions. Admiral De Rigny, as minister of marine, had been sworn into office. General Lamarque, denounced the policy of France towards Belgium, said that the protocol of the 28th of February, to which France was a party, had sacrificed Belgium to Holland; and that the former had been punished for following the example set her by France. The minister for foreign affairs replied to general Lamarque, and denied the propriety of his strictures, and entered into a detailed view of the principles of the protocol and the relative situation of Belgium and Holland, and defended the course pursued by government. He declared that the French government were anxious to preserve peace, and hoped to be able to do so.

The Messager des Chambres states that the language of the minister for foreign affairs was irreconcileable with the state of the country; that it was pacific, and yet the Austrians were overrunning Italy, and France was making immense preparations on the Piedmontese frontier. The chamber of deputies have been charged with being engaged in intriguing to prevent the passage of the law to extend the franchise of elections, fearing that the return of a more democratic chamber of deputies would overthrow the peerage entirely, and appoint a senate in its place.

The French government wishes to raise, by loan, 120,000,000 francs in capital, which will require the issue of between 6 and 7,000,000 of 5 per cent. rentes.

Large magazines are forming in Toulon and the environs, of flour, wheat, biscuits, forage, oats, &c. for the supply of the troops to be stationed on the frontiers of Piedmont. Several bodies of this corps were already on the march, and were to be cantoned in the department of the Var, for the present. Six batteries of artillery were preparing at Toulon, and others were daily expected from the interior. There would be, when completed, 100 pieces of cannon, with all the necessary material.

BELGIUM.

Proceedings had been commenced on the 2d of April against general Nypels and colonel Borremas, both of whom were in confinement. The principal instigators of the excesses at Brussels and Leige of the 28th and 29th March, were in the hands of justice and would be punished. Tranquillity had been restored. A. M. Voortman, a manufacturer, of Ghent, supposed to be favorable to the house of Orange, had been mobbed by the populace, and dreadfully mutilated. He was ultimately rescued from their hands but his life is despaired of. The minister for foreign affairs in the states-general of Holland, had delivered a speech in the chamber, which nearly amounted to a declaration of war against Belgium.

RUSSIA AND POLAND.

Accounts from Poland up to the 24th March furnish nothing new of importance; but we are happy to perceive represent the affairs of its brave and noble defenders in a comparatively prosperous condition. Never was a nation animated with a purer and more ardent spirit of patriotism, or disposed to make greater sacrifices for their liberty any independence. The polish army, assembled in and near Warsaw, amounts to 60,000 men, and the corps of general Dwernicki and the other free corps, is 20,000. Dates from Cracow to the 20th March repeat a rumor that Polish deputies sent to the Russian head quarters had been received there, and have opened negotiations. General Chlopicki had got better. There had been no new operations with the Russian army, but it was still struggling against bad weather, scarcity, diseases and the partial insurrections of the peasants in the Palatinates of Lublin and Augustowo. It is stated in a journal of Warsaw of March 22d that the sultan had declared war against Russia. This report is iterated by the French papers, which add, that a communication had been opened between the sublime porte and the Poles; that each government had sent envoys to the other, and that an insurrection had broken out in Courland. Neither of these reports rested upon better foundations than rumor. The Russians have begun to make use of frightful means to depopulate the country. They carry off all the men. The cruelty which the Russians practice in Poland, must ultimately prove fatal to them. The Russian couriers cannot even now travel in any part of the country unless accompanied by a strong guard. Over the whole country from Pultusk to Augustowo, terror is so widely spread among the Russians, that, large detachments dared not pass the night in towns without previously entrenching themselves. In quitting Lublin, they chained the Polish col. Rielenske to a cannon, and thus carried him off. Col. Rielenske is a brave veteran officer, who made all the campaigns of Italy under Dumbrowski.

AUSTRIA AND ITALY.

The corps of the Austrian army invading Romagna consists of from 15,000 to 18,000 men, and baron Frimont, the commander in chief, has formally announced that he entered the Roman states on the application of the pope made to the emperor of Austria. The Austrian troops entered Bologna on the 23d March; and a te deum was to be performed in honor of the victory thus gained over the liberty and independence of Italy. The Austrians have not stopped at Bologna, but have continued the march of their army, in three columns. Rimini and Forli were already occupied on the 24th March, and it is understood to be the plan of the invading army to proceed to Ancona and Rome, without any intention of entering the capital.

The Italian patriots, are driven back every where being unable to make resistance. A number had taken refuge in the Apennines, the remainder will take refuge in Ancona. Such of the patriots as are seized are thrown into prison. The patriots are collecting their forces at Rimini, and are determined to resist the passage of the Austrians.

After four days of combat between Novi and Modena gen Zucchi, yielding to superior force, had retired from Bologna, taking with him two pieces of brass cannon, six small pieces, much ammunition, and three or four millions of silver taken from the government chest. These sums have been remitted to a responsible agent, and will be devoted to the defence of the free provinces. Before retiring from Bologna, the government placed its authority in the hands of a commission, the president of which was professor Giacomlah, who waited upon general Frimont on the 21st March, to inquire his intentions. The general told them that he came to re-establish the authority of the pope. Arrests of the patriots are daily going on; many officers of the national guards have already been seized.

SPAIN.

Discoveries of conspiracies are increasing. The house of an officer of the engineers was entered at a time when he was engaged in writing a despatch to Mina; he however made his escape. Several persons were taken who were also similarly engaged. The correspondence seized implicates a number of Frenchmen, and proves that large sums of money had been distributed to the troops. The revolution was to have broken out on the 18th March. From the direction which the public mind has taken in Spain, but little doubt remains but that a violent commotion will shortly take place. The arrests at Madrid continued. More than 40 of the heads of the principal families have been subjected to trials before military commissions. The insurrection in Valencia had been put down. Several persons of distinction had been arrested there, as well as at Bilboa, Vitoria and Saragossa. Report says that 2,000 prisoners had been shot in the Isle de Leon. Torrijos, the patriot chief had but 1,800 men with him, a force too small to combat with the one opposed to him.

STILL LATER AND MORE IMPORTANT.

Since the foregoing intelligence was in type there has been another arrival at New York from Liverpool bringing papers from the latter place to the 16th ultimo inclusive.

RUSSIA AND POLAND.

We are highly gratified at the cheering news from Poland. The Polish commander in chief, Skryznecke, who was raised, as it will be remembered, from a subordinate station to the chief command, for his distinguished services in the contests of February, has proved himself worthy of the distinction conferred upon him, and fully equal to the important trusts confided to him.

Victory of the Poles over the Russians.

The Polish generalissimo having learned that marshal Deibitsch had divided his forces, and only left a small corps of his army to observe the capital, took the resolution to pass to the right bank of the Vistula with a great part of his troops, after having previously sent general Uminski towards Ostrolenka, to keep in check the corps of general Sacken, and the guards who were advancing there. He quitted Warsaw during the night of the 30th March and attacked, at Wawer, the corps of gen. Geismar, who were there entrenched in very strong and advantageous positions. By this bold and skillful movement upon the Russians, the Polish generalissimo was enabled to surprise their army of observation, and beat it back upon the corps of gen. Rosen, which was in its turn overwhelmed and driven upon that of gen. Geismar.

All the Russian positions were carried by storm in detail. On the 1st of April the divisions of Rosen and Geismar were brought again to battle, and an officer who set out from the camp, as early as half past one o'clock on that day and arrived at Warsaw at 5, reported that before he left they had made 2,000 prisoners, among whom were many general officers. They had also taken six cannon and magazines and muskets.

Whole battallions laid down their arms in the battle of the 31st March. This is supposed to be the first time that such an occurrence ever took place in Russian regiments.

These brilliant affairs resulted in a loss to the Russians of 6,000 killed and wounded, 6,000 prisoners, 15 pieces of cannon, several thousand stand of muskets and 2 standards, and 15 wagons filled with ammunition.

The Russian divisions under Geismar and Rosen were in full retreat, hardly pressed by the victorious army of Skryznecki, while that under Deibitsch, the commander in chief, at his head quarters of Sieneca was cut off by the Polish corps which had been despatched on the line of the Bug to meet it through the Palatinate of Augustowo.

There was a report that the Poles had obtained at Grochow a new and important victory over the Russians; that the corps of Geismar, had been entirely destroyed, that that officer was severely wounded, and among the number of prisoners; that marshal Deibitsch was closely hemmed in by the army and peasantry of the Poles in the marshes, and is thus in the most critical position; and that 6,000 prisoners and 26 pieces of cannon were gained by the poles by this victory. This report wants confirmation.

The enthusiasm of the Poles is represented to be so great that all the nobles at Posen who could bear arms, although at the risk of their property being confiscated by the Prussian government, have abandoned it and proceeded to Poland. A new regiment of cavalry of 1,200 men had been formed at Warsaw, composed of volunteers from the Dutchy of Posen. The Polish army consists of 90,000 men, well armed, of which there are 25,000 superb cavalry, and a number of scythe bearers.

The report of an insurrection in Luthuania is confirmed. The Warsaw Gazette has published a proclamation found on gen. Iermoloff, an officer decorated with the order of St. George, who was killed in a recent affair. This manifesto calls on the Russians "to insist in demanding a constitution from the ultra tory of the north, the infatuated emperor Nicholas."

ENGLAND.

In Great Britain the parliament had re-assembled, and the question of reform was again under incidental discussion. The ministers had in some degree modified the details, without altering the principles of the bill. Mr. Hunt astonished all parties in the house by declaring that the bill was not approved by the people—as not going far enough in giving the right of suffrage.

Mr. O'Connell and Mr. Hunt disagreed on the character and efficiency of the reform bill, and abused each other most violently in the house of commons. Mr. O'Connell found fault with Mr. Hunt for his declaration that the people of several popular districts, whom in the recess he had addressed, were, without exception, opposed to the bill—and spoke of Mr. Hunt as a pretended reformer. Mr. Hunt retorted, and charged Mr. O'Connell with negotiating with the government for office and compromising his principles for a place. Mr. O'Connell in reply said "he was not surprised at this attack, for he was frequently attacked by tories, and the hon. member for Preston had become a tory."

He added,—"As to the hon. member for Preston, he courted his hostility, for he could no longer recognize him as a brother reformer. He was quite ready to make a present of him to the tories, and a lumping pennyworth they would have of him, [a laugh.] He did not say that the hon. member had sold himself to the tories, for he did not think that they would buy the hon. member, but he seemed to have courted the offer of purchase by giving earnest of what he was worth, [a laugh.] He saw in the proposed measure a means of getting a great practical good, and he did not scout it like the hon. member."

To this Mr. Hunt replied: "He had not charged the honorable and learned member with any thing, he had insinuated that he was trafficking for seats in parliament—that he Mr. O'C. was the last man who should accuse another of trafficking, for he himself had trafficked for the law. Before, he Mr. H. had only insinuated, then he would tell him, Mr. O'Connell in the face of the house and the country, that before the close of the last session of parliament he Mr. O'C. had trafficked with the marquis of Angelesey for that seat on the bench which was now occupied by Mr. Doherty. There would have been no agitation in Ireland if Mr. Doherty had not got the situation, instead of the hon. and learned member. That Mr. Bennett was the go-between in this negotiation.

Mr. O'Connell denied the accusation in the most positive and emphatic terms.

Mr. Hunt re-affirmed the truth of what he said; admitted that he did not know it of his own knowledge, but said he had seen Mr. Bennett, who was acquainted with the whole proceedings, and called upon Mr. O'Connell to allow his case to be brought before parliament, and he Mr. H. would be able, he thought, to produce abundant evidence of the transactions to which he alluded. Mr. O'Connell rejoined: he said, in substance, that he, Mr. O'Connell, had no knowledge, agency or connexion with any such negotiations, and if Mr. Bennett said so, he had given utterance to what was untrue. He Mr. O'Connell said that he believed that Mr. Bennett had said so, but that he had calumniated him.

SPAIN.

An extraordinary courier who arrived at Paris brought letters from Madrid up to the 7th April, with news from several parts of the Peninsula which announced that tranquillity prevailed in Spain, and that several persons who had been arrested in consequence of the insurrection had been set at liberty.

TURKEY.

An insurrection had broken out in Turkey, says report, and it is added that if it be the case, it will relieve the emperor Nicholas from all apprehension from this quarter.

IRELAND.

A horrible murder had been perpetrated by the peasantry of the county of Clare, Ireland. On Easter Monday, a holyday in the country, the police of Doolen were informed that the insurgents were actively engaged in administering unlawful oaths to the peasantry. Five police-men proceeded in search of the insurgents, and at a certain house found two men administering the whiteboy oath to its inmates. These two were made prisoners, and were being brought to Dolen, in custody, when the country people assembled in great numbers, and attacked the police with stones. The police retreated, but being pursued by the mob, who continued to assault them, were ultimately compelled to commence firing, which they continued as long as they had any ammunition. The five policemen were finally overcome and stoned to death.

A letter from Loughrea of April 5th states that that part of the country was in a state of open rebellion, and that a party of 5,000 men, many of them well armed, proceeded to the house of sir J. Burke, the member for the county, and smashed all his doors and windows, and took 13 stand of arms and a quantity of ammunition. This party had committed other outrages; and the county was pretty much at their mercy, there being no police sufficiently efficient to arrest their course.

A clerk of Messrs. Brooks & Dixon, bankers of Dublin, had absconded with £2,400 of their cash.

FRANCE.

On Sunday, April 10, the Paris Polish central committee gave a grand dinner to the Polish envoy. The room was hung with likenesses of Polish chiefs. General Lafayette in the uniform of the first grenadier of the national guard of Poland, took the chair, and towards the close of the banquet made an animated speech.

BELGIUM.

Nothing more definite than at previous dates. A report prevailed that the territory was to be parcelled out; it was not however believed. An article in a Brussels paper states that official intelligence had reached there that the French government had agreed to the occupation of Luxemburg. It was not credited.

FINANCES OF FRANCE.

From the Paris National.

The result of the calculations and investigations presented to-day by M. Humann, in the name of the committee of inquiry, shows the overplus of the expenses for the last month of 1830, added to the deficit of 160 millions, left by the last government, will form a vacuum in the treasury to the extent of 251 millions; 220 millions of extraordinary expenses will, besides, add to the burdens of the present year; so that we have really to cover an expense exceeding 471 millions. No resource has been created to meet this exigency. In our present state the outlay exceeds the income by 37 millions per month. The wants of the year in 1831 will amount to 1,450,000,000 francs (58 millions sterling), whilst the resources of the same budget are only stated to be 1,225,000,000 (not entirely 50 millions sterling.) It will, of course, be necessary to supply that deficit, and to reduce the floating debt. It was to provide for these wants that the ministry proposed to increase the direct taxes nearly 100 millions.

The committee to whom the plan was referred was, however, of opinion that it was preferable to appeal to credit and to the tax-payers, and not to lay additional burdens on licences, at a moment when trade was in so deplorable a state.—Thirty additional hentimes to the existing taxes instead of 55, will only be called for—an augmentation which will produce 46,450,000 francs; and recourse will be had to a vote of credit for a capital of 56 millions. The new project of law, in which the demand for the provisional twelfths is included, rests, then, on that double basis, and the committee thinks that, by dividing in that manner the sum required by the ministry, the increase will press less heavily on the public.

STEAM ENGINES.

Among the improvements of this wonderfully progressive era, may be justly placed in the first rank, rail roads and their attendant locomotives. It was so late as 1802, that Trevethick & Vivan patented the first steam carriage, and in compacting the apparatus for the purposes of locomotion, produced a steam engine of great beauty and simplicity. In 1804, one of these locomotives was put to use at a mine at Merthyr Tydvil, in South Wales, and conveyed at the rate of nearly five miles and a half per hour, ten tons and a half of iron. The cylinder of this interesting experimental machine, was eight inches in diameter, and the piston moved through a space of four feet. It made eighteen strokes in a minute, and the pressure was about sixty-five pounds on the square inch. As it raised, when employed in elevating water, 15,875,100 pounds one foot high, in one hour, its power, according to Mr. Watts' mode of computation, must have been equal to that of eight horses.

At the opening, a short time since, of the Darlington and Stockton rail road, it was ascertained that a single locomotive engine could travel at the rate of eight miles an hour, conveying in its train with ease and safety ninety tons weight. As yet no idea had been formed of the rate at which locomotives might be made to travel on a good road and with light burdens. But in the course of last summer, the spirit and enterprize of the directors of the Liverpool and Manchester rail road induced a trial of speed, which delighted while it confounded the spectators. A variety of the most beautiful engines were brought from different places, and tested both as to speed and power. With burdens three or four times the weight of the engines, these astonishing machines moved with almost the speed of the wind, going at the rate of from 15 to 25 miles an hour. Without loads, some of them flew onwards with a velocity the maximum of which was 42 miles an hour. That road is now in use for the conveyance both of goods and passengers, and has answered every expectation, even of the most sanguine. For once, in this anticipating age of daring speculation, conjecture has been left lagging, and the dreamer about rail roads has found his vision behind the truth of every day practice. Passengers at greatly reduced cost, and greatly increased velocity, pass daily by hundreds between Manchester and Liverpool, with fewer accidents or mishaps than would befal an equal number conveyed in any other manner.

The Sampson has descended from Manchester with a load of 178, tons, equal to the freighting of a goodly ship, and that too in a period of time little greater than is usually occupied by the lighter engines in the conveyance of passengers. A friend of the writer, on leaving Manchester one morning, saw his goods under preparation for transportation to Liverpool. On reaching Liverpool, he spent but a very short time in town, and then repaired to his vessel, where the goods had already arrived, and were in part actually "stowed away" in the hold.

To see more clearly the curtailing influence of these roads on space and time, let us suppose that at less speed by a third than in this early stage of locomotive experiment, has been already safely accomplished, a passenger was to set out on a rail road towards the west. He might reach Lancaster in 2 hours, Pittsburg in 10 hours, New Orleans in less than 2 days, and return to Philadelphia within a week. At the rate of conveyance ordinarily executed on the Liverpool rail road, the merchant might place his goods in Lancaster in three hours, in Pittsburg in 15 hours, and in New Orleans within three days.

With improvements of such a nature extensively laid over the face of our country, we should, in the event of a war, be able, in a very few hours, or at most in two or three days, to concentrate the whole disposable force of the country on a single point, either for attack or defence. Of such resource, an invading foe could never avail himself, since a road could be rendered impassable in a few moments by those who occupy the country.

As such works proceeded, the rapidly enlarged boundaries of our country will, in a still more rapid manner, be brought, in point of time, nearer to each other, and our children, under a patriotic and liberal government, may live to see the representatives of Arkansas or Huron, reach the metropolis at less expense of money, time or convenience, than is now demanded for the journey from Pittsburgh to Washington. If I could promise to my hopes such an administration as would look to road-making with half that is expended in cabinet-making, there would be even in our time a ratification of the greater part of expectation, which would probably be outstripped by the reality; for such has been hitherto the case, in all that relates to steam, but in a more remarkable degree in all that relates to its locomotive applications, whether on the land or the water. The engines of Fulton found their pathways already prepared; those of Trevethick and Stephenson must stand still until the exhaustless energies of free and liberal institutions are permitted to address themselves to the noblest work to which the voice of philosophy has ever summoned the political economist: a work which carries with it the promise of numberless and magnificent benefits to individuals, to states, to the nation, boundless prosperity in peace, perfect security in war; intercourse subversive of all local prejudice, divided interests rendered identical; every evil repudiated by frequent comparison, every good adopted from familiar trial of its excellence, distant schools of greater excellence brought into our domain, superior marts as accessible as the worst religious "privileges" no longer withheld. Who is there in the community to whom some sweet stream would not flow from the mighty waters of such a lake. The mere traveller, the friendly visitor, the merchant, the artist, the manufacturer, the farmer, the school boy, the sectarian, the gay and the grave, the busy and the idle, the young and the old, all—all—may have even yet a delightful draught, provided the alterations of the drawers of the Washington bureaux should not entirely consume the spare time of the great cabinet-maker of the nation.

In the mean time, to prepare every one for a just estimate of the value of these improvements, which are, like Antonio's goods, "in supposition," I would exhort every person to indulge a liberal curiosity by visiting the beautiful engine at the museum, which is at present delighting the public by its wonderful scientific feats. Mr. Baldwin, a distinguished mechanician, has formed that locomotive after the model of the lightest and most beautiful of the English engines: and for grace of action, ease and smoothness of motion, it will not be disparaged by comparison with any impulsive instrument hitherto constructed. On a visit to the museum I was so much pleased with its performance, that I made particular inquiry into its powers, and learned from the intelligent, ingenious, and skilful director of the museum, the following particulars.

The rail road, which is constructed of well seasoned wood, extends entirely round the extensive suite of rooms, to a length of 140 yards. Its curves are necessarily very sharp, being on a radius of 24 feet. To obviate any risk of overthrow at the curves, projected strips attached to the rails confine the engine car securely to the line. The cars, lightly and elegantly formed, present in the structure of the hind wheels, a neat specimen of the ingenious contrivance of Winans for getting rid of much of the friction. That should be carefully examined by those who have not seen it already. The engine, including its boiler, furnace, chimney, cylinder and iron wheels, weighs only 224 lbs. and looks as if it weighed scarcely so much. The boiler holds above two gallons of water; the cylinder is two inches in diameter, and the length of the motion of the piston, is four inches and five eighths; and it is effected 266 times per minute. The safety is regulated so as to make the pressure in the boiler 60 lbs. on the square inch.

The following is a hasty estimate of its power:—Square of the diameter of the cylinder multiplied by 7,854, and that by 60 lbs. gives the power of the steam which propels the piston—a deduction of one-third, which is a large allowance for frictions, gives us 125,664 lbs. as the power of motion. The extent of motion per minute, is represented by the product 102,52 feet of the length of stroke 4 5-8 inches multiplied by the number of strokes per minute 266. By multiplying the power of motion 125,664 by the extent of motion, 102,52, we obtain 12 882½ lbs. raised one foot in one minute. Taking 27,472 lbs.* raised one foot per minute as the representative of one horse power, we perceive that this instrument, less than — of the weight and size of a horse, is able to raise nearly half as great a weight in the same space of time.—On the score of speed the comparison becomes still more favorable to the engine.

The engine weighs	224 lbs.
The car	96
Two heavy men	480—800

With this burden the engine traversed the whole round of 140 yards in 30 seconds, going therefore at the rate of 9 1-2 miles per hour. A man of moderate size, by taking along with him fuel and water, the food of this brazen horse, might travel, with such a machine, upwards of two hundred miles a day, and find his bearer as fresh as when the journey commenced. The younger part of our readers will be surprised to learn, that two gallons of heated water afford the whole power in this case; for the machine itself merely directs that power, and rather lessens than adds to its energy.

COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES.

We obtain the following information from the letter of the Register of the Treasury transmitting the annual statements of the commerce and navigation of the United States.

The imports during the year ending on the 30th September, 1830, have amounted to $70,876,920; of which amount $61,035,739 were imported in American vessels, and $4,841,181 in foreign vessels.

The exports during the year ending on the 30th of September, 1830, have amounted to $73,849,508; of which $59,462,029 were of domestic, and $14,387,479 of foreign articles. Of the domestic articles, 51,106,189 were exported in American vessels, and $8,355,740 in foreign vessels. Of the foreign articles $12,376,529 were exported in American vessels, and $1,010,950 in foreign vessels. 967,227 tons of American shipping entered, and 971,760 tons cleared from the ports of the United States. 131,900 tons of foreign shipping entered, and 133,436 tons cleared during the same period.

	tons. 95ths.
The registered tonnage as corrected for the 31st December, 1829, is stated at	650,142 88
The enrolled and licensed tonnage	500,858 10
And the fishing vessels at	100,796 78
	1,260,797 81

Of the registered tonnage amounting, as before stated, at 650,142 88 there were employed in the whale fishery 57,284 38.

The total average of shipping built in the United States during the year 1829, was,

Registered	28,876 74
Enrolled	48,221 86
	77,098 65

The tonnage on which duties were collected during the year 1829, amounted as follows:

The registered tonnage employed in the foreign trade paying duty on each voyage		850,431 26
The enrolled and licensed tonnage employed in the coasting trade paying an annual duty; also, the registered tonnage employed in the same trade paying duty on each entry	748,750 72
Fishing vessels the same	131,099 50
Duties were also paid on tonnage owned by citizens of the United States engaged in the foreign trade, not registerd		1,752 85
Total on which duties were collected		1,732,034 43

UNITED STATES' BANK.

From the American Sentinel.

"Bribery and corruption."—The New York Standard states that the editor of that paper has been offered ONE

*The mean of the calculations of Desaguliers, Smeaton and Watt.

THOUSAND DOLLARS to come out in favor of rechartering the UNITED STATES BANK! and insinuates that several other papers heretofore opposed to the bank HAVE BEEN BRIBED TO SILENCE! Mr. Otis in the New York legislature alluded to these transactions, when a resolution against the rechartering of the bank was before that body. From all that we have seen, it is apparent, that the bank attempts to sustain itself by a system of corrupt bribery—that this system procured the passage of the Pennsylvania resolution in favor of the bank, and that by this system an attempt has been made to prevent the passage of the New York resolution against the bank. This last the bank was not able to effect, and the resolution passed by a vote of 73 to 35, and is in the following words:

"Resolved, (if the senate concur), That the charter of the bank of the United States ought not to be renewed."

When such a state of things is disclosed in regard to that mammoth institution, is it not time for the friends of freedom to look about them." [N. H. Patriot.

With the many injudicious and discreditable publications which have been made, charging the bank of the United States with bribery and corruption, it has not been our business to interfere—but the paragraph at the head of this notice challenges animadversion from all those who have at heart the honor and character of the state of Pennsylvania, and the purity and independence of its legislature. We confess our very great surprise and regret that such a print as the New Hampshire Patriot should have so far forgotten what is due to the parties thus inconsiderately calumniated, as to originate the libel. We confess still greater surprise and regret, that such a print as the Washington Globe should republish the libel. "A system of corrupt bribery procured the passage of the Pennsylvania resolution in favor of the bank of the United States." Such is the unqualified and blasting accusation—Of whom? The bank alone? By no means: the whole legislature of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, senate and house of representatives; for nearly all of them voted for the resolution. Why not include the governor too, for he signed it? and thus declare that an act of the constituted authorities representing the people of Pennsylvania was procured by bribery and corruption. In the name and vindication of the state thus wantonly outraged, we pronounce the charge an abominable defamation. In the name and vindication of a democratic legislature, we submit to the authors and propagators of the charge, that if they have any proof of it, that proof should be made public; that if they have no proof of it, they owe it to this state, to the legislature representing it, and to truth and justice, to make a suitable apology and atonement for so wanton and outrageous an accusation. For let them bear in mind, that if there was bribery and corruption, the bank, at whom the blow is struck, is only one of the guilty parties—the legislature being the other. To charge a legislature with being bribed, seems to our simple notions, in the pure air of Pennsylvania, to imply gross ignorance of the characters of those whom our people elect to the legislature. To bribe a legislature! We believe this is the first time such a thing was ever thought, much less published, of the legislature of this state, at any rate. We hope the Patriot and the Globe will see the propriety of withdrawing the highly exceptionable and offensive charge originating in the one and included by the other, against the legislature of a state, whose votes they will both be in need of, and whose motto they ought to know, is "Virtue, liberty and independence."

THE LATE "CABINET."

From the North Carolina "Star."

Gov. Branch.—The following letter from the hon. John Branch, late secretary of the navy, to a gentleman in this city, has been handed to us for publication:

Washington city, May 3d, 1831.

My dear sir:—You have, no doubt, before this, seen in the papers accounts of the resignations of the secretary of state and the secretary at war, and the dismissal of the other members of the cabinet.

The letters of the two former, addressed to the president of the United States, present their reasons; and the motives for the dismissal of the others are assigned in the answer of the president to the secretary of the treasury and myself. In these the president admits that the dismissed officers have faithfully discharged their respective duties; but intimates that the want of harmony in the cabinet, and the protection of the two retiring secretaries "from unjust misconceptions and malignant misrepresentations," made it necessary the others should go out also.

So far as regards the members of the cabinet, this measure is comparatively of little moment. It is, however, a matter of deep concern as affecting the character of the government. In this point of view the American people have a right to know the whole truth; from whence the alleged discord originated; by whom and for what purpose, it has been fostered; and in what respect and wherefore it has been connected with the public administration of the affairs of the nation. The president is bound to make these explanations to the people.

If it were intended to be intimated that I am responsible for the want of harmony in the cabinet, the charge is unjust. I deny that I pursued a course that invited hostility. On the contrary, I went as far as a man of honor could go, in endeavoring to promote a good understanding and cordial official co-operation with all the members of the cabinet. But it seems I was expected to go still farther, and not doing so, it has been held good cause for my dismissal. If it is asked, why I did not abandon the cabinet, and expose to the world the malign influences by which it was embarrassed? I would reply, that I constantly looked forward to a favorable change. That especially I relied for this upon the wisdom, firmness, and justice of the chief magistrate. I have been disappointed. I have had the deep mortification to see him gradually discarding from his counsels and friendship his old and long tried supporters, and throwing himself into the arms of persons whose cold-hearted selfishness and artifices were played off upon him for true and faithful service.

Rest assured, however, that whatever may be the public judgment as to the merits of this question, no consideration arising from personal feeling will induce me to take a course which I should not believe calculated to maintain the character and promote the interest of the state which gave me birth.

Business of importance, especially as enabling me to settle down permanently in North Carolina, will probably require my presence in Tennessee, where I may be detained until August next. On my return to my family, I hope to meet you, when I shall be highly gratified to renew that social and friendly intercourse, which heretofore, so much to my satisfaction, has subsisted between us. In the mean time, I beg you to receive assurances of great respect and esteem. JOHN BRANCH.

The following paragraphs are from the National Intelligencer of Monday last:

To the letter of Mr. Branch, it is rumored, will soon be added an exposition, by Mr. Ingham, of the causes of the late dissolution of the cabinet. No commentary can add force to the expressions made use of by Mr. Branch. Any attempt, on the contrary, to make his language clearer would but detract from the strength which it derives from its simplicity, plainness, and directness. We therefore abstain for the present from any observations upon it.

We have not conversed with either Mr. Ingham or Mr. Branch since their dismission from office; but we know, if they have a spark of human pride or feeling about them, that they must feel indignant at the treatment they have received. Our conjecture is confirmed, beyond doubt, as to one of them, by the above interesting exposition; and it can hardly be doubted that a kindred feeling pervades the bosom of Mr. Ingham. It is said that he, too, like his late colleague in office, is about to return home without waiting, as he had been desired to do, for his successor.

Our own information, (unofficial) confirms the information contained in the following paragraph, which we find in the U. States Gazette, of Saturday:

"Mr. Van Buren has, we understand, been appointed minister to England, in the place of Mr. McLane. Mr.

V. B. will embark on the 1st of June, in company with Mr. Vaughan."

Concerning the late dissolution of the cabinet, the Pendelton (S. C.) Messenger, a paper friendly to the administration heretofore, makes the following short and sharp remarks:

"The resignation of the members of the cabinet is an extraordinary event in the annals of our country. As the most important intelligence of the day, we have made room for the correspondence which took place, to enable our readers, if possible, to comprehend the causes of the occurrence. We acknowledge our own inability to understand the explanations of Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Eaton. These letters have succeeded in mystifying the matter very considerably."

MR. RANDOLPH.

We have not published any of the particulars of the strange conduct said to have been exhibited by Mr. Randolph during his few days sojourn at St. Petersburgh—but feel it due to him as a high public functionary, to give the following certificate in his behalf from the young gentleman who accompanied him as secretary of legation.

To the editors of the Richmond Enquirer.

Gentlemen:—Having seen in your paper of the 9th November, 1830, an epitome of a publication in the N. York Journal of Commerce, and the New York Commercial, relative to Mr. John Randolph, of Roanoke, envoy extraordinary of the United States of America to Russia, and seeing with indignation, that the accounts of that gentleman's deportment at St. Petersburgh, as published in those papers, are utterly devoid of truth, I deem it to be my duty to contradict them, in the most positive manner.

Mr. Randolph's conduct, on all occasions, was that which became himself and his office—such it was and will always be, to persons who are worthy of his notice. The gross slanders contained in the paragraphs alluded to above, are so preposterous that they can scarcely impose on the most credulous;—but as the writer of them may have had his own purposes in view, it may be well to disappoint him, by a flat contradiction of his statements. But, to be more particular:

It is said, that Mr. Randolph conducted himself in a most ridiculous manner, before the emperor. This is false; and the best proof of its being untrue is, that his imperial majesty has expressed the greatest esteem for him; which would certainly not be the case, if any thing outre had happened at the presentation. As for the other acts said to have been done—such as tearing the cards of the foreign ministers to pieces, &c. &c.—the idea of endeavoring to impose on the public with such trash, is so shallow, and, at the same time so base, that folly itself would laugh at it.

Then, say these inventive editors, Mr. Randolph refused, at first, to receive a note from prince Lieven, the principal minister of state. This I know to be false also; and moreover state that there was the most cordial, I may say friendly, intercourse between the minister and the American envoy—so much so, that when I went to ask for Mr. Randolph's passports, and to explain the urgent necessity of his leaving St. Peterburgh, on account of the very dangerous state of his health, prince Lieven expressed the utmost concern, on hearing the news, and immediately proposed to see Mr. Randolph, which was only prevented by a mistake of mine, in giving him the wrong number of the house.

All the other charges are as much founded in truth, as those which I have noticed particularly.

It is thus, that the wicked traduce the characters of the just: and it is thus, that envy, conscious of its own demerits, endeavors to assassinate the reputation of the exalted and worthy. Conscious of the badness of their cause and still anxious to set rolling a ball, that will attract the notice of a gossip for a moment, the busybodies of our nation invent the grossest calumnies, and to effect their designs, they always lay hold of the most conspicuous and generous men.

This is no defence of Mr. Randolph's conduct—for, it defends itself. To conclude—and as small events go far in circumstantial evidence, to prove that facts are true or not so—it may be well to observe, that it is stated by these lovers of veracity, that, "Mr. R. took an upper chamber at Mrs. Wilson's;" whereas the fact is, that both Mr. Randolph and myself occupied lower rooms in this good lady's house. This last, although rather a minute circumstance to notice, serves to show that the correspondent of the New York editors imagined he lived at Mrs. Wilson's, and imagined the whole tissue of slander and abuse. I am, gentlemen, your most obedient servant,

JOHN R. CLAY.

Secretary of legation and charge d' affaires of the U. States at St. Petersburgh.

St. Petersburgh, January 17th, 1831.

MR. RANDOLPH'S SPEECHES.

Certain late references to this gentleman has induced us to examine our files a little—and present the two following extracts from his speeches in the late Virginia convention, in verification of some things that we have said of him.

EXTRACTS.

"Sir, I see no wisdom in making this provision for future changes. You must give government time to operate on the people, and give the people time to become gradually assimilated to their institutions. Almost any thing is better than this state of perpetual uncertainty. A people may have the best form of government that the wit of man ever devised; and yet from its uncertainty alone, may, in effect, live under the worst government in the world. Sir, how often must I repeat that change is not reform. I am willing that this new constitution shall stand as long as it is possible for it to stand, and that, believe me, is a very short time. Sir, it is vain to deny it.—They may say what they please about the old constitution—the defect is not there. It is not in the form of the old edifice, neither in the design nor the elevation: it is in the material—it is in the people of Va. To my knowledge that people are changed from what they have been.—The 400 men who went out to David were in debt. The partizans of Cæsar were in debt. The fellow laborers of Cataline were in debt. And I defy you to shew me a desperately indebted people any where, who can bear a regular sober government. I throw the challenge to all who hear me.

I say that the character of the good old Virginia planter—the man who owned from five to twenty slaves or less, who lived by hard work, and who paid his debts, is passed away. A new order of things is come. The period has arrived of living by one's wits—of living by contracting debts that one cannot pay—and above all, of living by office hunting. Sir, what do we see? Bankrupts—branded bankrupts—giving great dinners—sending their children to the most expensive schools—giving grand parties—and just as well received as any body in society. I say, that in such a state of things the old constitution was too good for them; they could not bear it. No, sir—they could not bear a freehold suffrage and a property representation. I have always endeavored to do the people justice—but I will not flatter them—I will not pander to their appetite for change. I will do nothing to provide for change. I will not agree to any rule of future appointment, or to any provision for future changes called amendments to the constitution. They who love change—who delight in public confusion—who wish to feed the cauldron and make it bubble—may vote if they please for future changes.

"At that time, sir, the commonwealth of Virginia was throughout a slave holding commonwealth: (WOULD TO GOD SHE WERE SO NOW.) And is it, then, so wonderful that slaves should have been a subject of taxation? Yes, sir: Virginia was then not only throughout, a slave holding, but a tobacco planting commonwealth. You can't open the statute book,—I mean one of the old statute books, not those that have been defaced by the finger of reform,—and not see that tobacco was, in fact, the currency, as well as staple of the state. We paid our clerk's fees in tobacco: verdicts were given in tobacco; and bonds were executed payable in tobacco. That accounts for it all. While a large portion of the state has ceased to be a slave holding, and a still larger portion has ceased to be a tobacco planting community, the burden has rested on the necks of a comparatively small, unhappy, and I will say it, a proscribed caste in the community."

"Sir, when I speak of danger—from what quarter does it come; from whom? From the corn and oat-growers on the Eastern Shore, the Rappahannoc and the Pamunkey? From the fishermen on the Chesapeake? The pilots of Elizabeth City? No sir, from ourselves.—from the great slave-holding and tobacco-planting districts of the state, I could not have brought myself to believe; it—nothing could have persuaded me that the real danger which threatens this great interest, should spring from those districts themselves."

"Mr. Chairman, since I have been here, the scene has recalled many old recollections. At one time I thought myself in the house of representatives, listening to the debate on the tariff; at another time, I imagined myself listening to the debate on the Missouri question; and sometimes I fancied myself listening to both questions debated at once. Are we men met to consult about the affairs of men? or are we, in truth, a Robin-hood society, discussing rights in the abstract? Have we no house over our heads? Do we forget that we are living under a constitution which has shielded us for more than half a century; that we are not a parcel of naked and forlorn savages, on the shores of New Holland; and that the worst that can come is, that we shall live under the same constitution that we have lived under, freely and happily for half a century? To their monstrous claims of power, we plead this prescription; but then we are told, that nullum tempus occurrit Regi—king whom?—KING NUMBERS."*

"If the naked principle of numbers only is to be followed, the requisites for the statesman fall far below what the gentleman from Spottsylvania rated them at.—He needs not the four rules of arithmetic. No sir, a negro boy with a knife and tally-stick, is a statesman complete in this school."

"Yet, let me say with the gentleman from Accomac, (Mr. Joynes) whose irresistible array of figures set all figures of speech at defiance, that if there were not a negro in Virginia, I would still contend for the principle in the amendment. And why? Because I will put it in the power of no man or set of men who ever lived, or who ever shall live, to tax me without my consent. It is wholly immaterial whether this is done without my having any representative at all, or, as it was done in the case of the tariff law, by a phalanx stern and inexorable, who being the majority, and having the power, prescribe to me the law that I shall obey."

"It is the first time in my life, that I ever heard of a government, which was to divorce property from power. Yet, this is seriously and soberly proposed to us—sir, I know it is practicable, but it can be done only by a violent divulsion, as in France—but the moment you have separated the two, that very moment property will go in search of power, and power in search of property. —"Male and female created He them," and the two sexes do not more certainly, nor by a more unerring law, gravitate to each other, than power and property; you can only cause them to change hands."

"Yes, sir, to this constitution we owe all that we have preserved; (much I know is lost and of great value), but all that we have saved from the wreck of our political fortunes. This is the mother which has reared all our great men. Well may she be called magna mater virum. She has indeed, produced men and mighty men."

"For my share, this is the first convention in which I ever had a seat, and I trust in God it will be the last. I never had any taste for conventions; or for new constitutions made per order, or kept ready made, to suit casual customers."

"Yet, as the gentleman from Spottsylvania says, I am no candidate for martyrdom. I am too old a man to remove: my associations, my habits, and my property, nail me to the commonwealth. But were I a young man, I would, in case this monstrous tyranny shall be imposed upon us, do what a few years ago, I should have thought parricidal. I would withdraw from your jurisdiction. I would not live under king numbers. I would not be his steward; nor make him my task master. I would obey the principle of self-preservation, a principle we find even in the brute creation, in flying from this mischief."

Vide, "Dictionary of Quotations," a book that seems to be always on Mr. Randolph's table, and we learn by it that the literal translation is "no time impedes the king,"—that is, the rights of a sovereign are indefeasible by any lapse of time.

It may be well here to add some extracts from the reply of Mr. Alexander Campbell to Mr. Randolph.

Extracts from Mr. Campbell's speech.

"But I am told that universal suffrage, (I am no advocate for universal suffrage), or more correctly, general suffrage, was the invention of the age of lord proctor Cromwell—that it sprung up for the first time during the commonwealth of England. It is called novel doctrine.—Were it so, that would not prove it false. Steam boats are a novel invention, and many other useful arts are comparatively novelties. The new race of men which modern science has created and made, is a new invention. I mean the wooden, brazen and iron men, which neither eat, drink, sleep, nor get tired; which are adults, without being infants, full grown men as soon as born.—These new men, these novelties, are likely to be a very useful race, for when inspired by steam, they are as rational as our black population.—England has two hundred millions of them, and these United States have more than ten millions of them. They are all revolutionists, and will as certainly revolutionise the world as ever did the art of printing, or any conquering invader. They are all novel too. No prophetic eye, nor prophetic pen, can describe their progress, or foretel their destiny.—All novelties are not fictitious.—But sir, notwithstanding the general historic accuracy of gentlemen on the other side, they have mistaken the date of the origin of general suffrage. It is more ancient than the British, the Roman, the Grecian, or the Persian governments. It is now 3,329 years old. I have heard gentlemen quote the Mosaic history on this floor. It will be no sin, I hope for me to quote the same authority.—Now sir, if gentlemen will look into the Exodus of Israel, they will find that the Virginia constitution was not the first written constitution, nor the general suffrage the invention of Oliver Cromwell. Cromwell, sir, was a prodigious genius, but this he did not invent. When Israel became a commonwealth, and, sir, they were a commonwealth, and were so denominated 2,000 years ago by a very high authority. I say when Israel became a commonwealth, they received a constitution from him who led them through the red sea. Israel in the wilderness amounted to 600,000 fighting men. The God of Israel first proposed a social compact. It was called in Hebrew Berith, in Greek Diatheke, in Latin Constitutio, in Scotch Covenant, after the manner of the solemn league and covenant; It is precisely equal to our English word constitution. This was written, and it is the oldest written document upon earth. After it was written, it was submitted to every man upon the muster roll of Israel. Their vote was required, and they voted for it as their national compact. So old, sir, and so venerable is the origin of general suffrage.

"I was sorry to hear, the other day, the eloquent gentleman from Charlotte, (Mr. Randolph), protest against his majesty king numbers, and declare his readiness to revolt from his government, and to migrate from his dominions. King numbers, Mr. Chairman, is the legitimate sovereign of all this country. Gen Jackson, the president of these United States, is only the representative, the lawful representative of king numbers. And, whither sir, can that gentleman fly from the government of this king? In the north, in the south, in the east, and in the west, he can find no other monarch. Except he cross the ocean, he can put himself under no other king. And whenever he may please to expatriate himself, he will find beyond the dominion of king numbers, there is no other monarch save king blood, king cypher, king sword, or king purse. And, sir, permit me to add, there is none of those so august as our king. I love king numbers, I wish to live, and I hope to die under the government of this majestic personage. He is, sir, a wise, benevolent, patriotic and powerful prince—the most dignified personage under the canopy of heaven."

"But, sir, one gentleman, (Mr. Randolph), referred us to the great men, which the present system in Virginia had produced. We doubt it not sir. I have lived in a country in which there were many great men: very learned and very powerful. But how were they created, sir? For one noble lord, there were ten thousand ignoble paupers, and for one great scholar there were ten thousand ignoramuses. That is the secret sir. I never wish to see this mode of making great men introduced into this commonwealth. I trust, sir, we will rather strive to make many middling men, than a few great or noble men. When we adopt the English mode of making great men, we will soon adopt the English mode of speaking to them. I have heard of but one "noble friend" in this committee, as yet; but sir, it is a contagious spirit. There are many sorts of great men. It is not necessary to create them in advance of the demands of society. Peculiar crisis call them into being. This sort of great men, has always been the creature of circumstances. One of them was found on Mount Horeb, another on the way to Damascus—one at Mount Vernon, and another was found in the county of Hanover, with a fishing rod in his hand. The Island of Corsica, produced one when he was wanted.—There is no occasion to devise any plan for creating this sort of great men. But sir, under a proper system of government, we should be able to multiply other sorts of great men a hundred fold, and we should not fail to derive benefits of every sort, intellectual, moral, and political, incomparably surpassing any sacrifice we should be obliged to make in commencing such a system.

—

Extracts from a speech of Mr. Randolph delivered in congress two or three years ago, as quoted by Mr. Burges, in his speech on the Russian mission:

"Sir, what can the country do for me? As for power, what can it have for one like me? If power had been my object, I must have been less sagacious than my worst enemies have represented me to be, if I had not obtained it. * * * * * What, sir, to drudge in your laboratories in the departments, or be at the tail of your corps diplomatic in Europe? (Exiled to Siberia.) Alas! sir, in my condition, a cup of cold water would be more acceptable. What can the country give me that I do not possess in the confidence of such constituents as no man ever had before? I can retire to my old patrimonial trees, where I may see the sun rise and set in peace. * * I shall retire upon my resources—I will go back to the bosom of my constituents. * * * And shall I give up them and this? And for what? For the heartless amusement and vapid pleasures and tarnished honors of this abode of splendid misery, of shabby splendor? for a clerkship in the war office, or a FOREIGN MISSION, to dance attendance ABROAD instead of AT HOME—or even for a department itself? Sir, thirty years make sad changes in man. * * * I feel that I hang to existence by a single hair—that the sword of Damocles is suspended over me."

—

Extracts from John Randolph's letter to his constituents, dated "York Buildings, Jan. 7, 1815."

"Nine years have now elapsed since he raised his voice against the commencement of a system of measures, which, although artfully disguised, were calculated, as he believed, to produce what we have all seen and fated long to feel. Had they who derided what they were then pleased to term his "mournful vaticinations, the reveries of a heated and disordered imagination," confided less in their own air built theories and taking warning ere it was too late, they might be riding on "the full tide of successful experiment," instead of clinging with instinctive and convulsive grasp to the wreck, which themselves have made of public credit, of national honor, of peace, happiness and security, and of faith among men. The very bonds, not only of union between these states, but of society itself are loosened, and we seem approaching towards that awful dissolution, the issue of which it is not given to human forsight to scan. In the virtue, the moderation, the fortitude of the people is, (under God), our last resource. Let them ever bear in mind, that from their present institutions there is no transition but to military despotism, and that there is none more easy. Anarchy is the chrysalis state of despotism; and to that state have the measures of this government long tended, amidst professions, such as we have heard in France and seen the effects of, of liberty, equality invincibility. None but the people can forge their own chains; and to flatter the people and delude them by promises never meant to be performed, is the stale but successful practice of the demagogue, as of the seducer in private life."

"Give me an arm," says the wily politician. It is only to fight the English to maintain "free trade and sailors rights"—and dazzeld by the "pride, pomp and circumstance of glorious war," heedless of the miseries that lurk beneath its splendor, the people have said Amen! Of these the heavy debt and grinding taxes that follow in its train are, perhaps, the least. Disease and vice, in new unheard-of forms, spread from the camp throughout society. Not a village, not a neighborhood, hardly a family escapes the infection. The searching miseries of war, penetrate even into the hovel of the shivering negro, whose tattered blankets and short allowance of salt bear witness to the glories of that administration, under which his master is content to live. His master, no doubt, some "southern nabob,"—some "haughty grandee of Virginia," the very idea of whose existence disturbs the very repose of our tender consciences, is revelling in luxury, which the necessary wants of his bondsmen are stinted to supply. Such is the stuff that wretced dreams are made of! The master consumed by cares from which even the miserable African is free, accustomed to the decent comforts of life, is racking his brain for ways and means to satisfy the demand of the tax gatherer. You see the struggle between his pride and his necessity. That ancient relic of better times, on which he bends his vacant eye, must go. It is itself the object of a new tax. He can no longer afford to keep it. Moreover he must find a substitute for his youngest boy, called into service. His eldest son has perished in the tentless camp, the bloodless but fatal fields of the fenny country—and even for the cherished semblance of this favorite child, he must pay tribute to Cæsar. The tear that starts into his eye, as he adds this item to the inventory of exaction, would serve but to excite a philosophic smile in the "grimm idol" of the levee and its heartless worshippers. Such is the condition of the better and more enviable classes of society. There is more than one beneath it—a husband, the sole support of a wife and helpless children, a son, the only stay and comfort of a widowed mother. You have the outline—fill up the picture—for you can do it with a master's hand.—We shall then see the patch work of the cradle and the party colored rugs of squalid poverty, fluttering amidst the ensigns and standards which some cadet for military promotion lays at the feet of our president's lady, on his knees."

The course of measures, to which during seven years I had opposed myself in congress, drew in the session of 1811-12, to that catastrophe, which I felt it my duty to arrest by the best efforts of my understanding. In the exercise of this high constitutional duty—at once a duty and a right—I was arbitrarily silenced on the floor of an assembly calling itself deliberative, abusing the once venerated name of an American congress—Then was the time as I thought, and still do think, for the members of the opposition to have quitted their seats, and to have abandoned an infuriated conclave to the misrule of their own mad passions, instead of lending by their presence the countenance of deliberation to an assembly, that had ceased to be deliberative! Gentlemen, whose opinions I hold in the utmost deference thought otherwise. To resign my commission into the hands of those from whom I had received it, was the next step that occurred to me. But I immediately perceived that this act of political suicide would at once gratify my oppressors and injure my constituents, who would be thereby deprived of a vote on the great question of war, which was soon to come before congress. My part was taken—to remain at my post and calmly await the consequences."

"To my constituents I made my appeal. The war was declared—the election supervened, and they disavowed me.

The editor of the "Richmond Patriot," the paper in which the address appeared, in publishing it, said—

"There was a time when we admired him—but for his want of charity to others, we should now pity him, so much is he "crazed with care" and disappointment."

—

Extract of a letter from WILSON J. CARY esq. dated Fluvanna, Dec. 14, 1814, and published in the Richmond Enquirer, March 1815.

"We were speaking generally of political concerns, and I adverted to the conduct of the British in their attack upon capt. Porter upon a neutral coast, and condemned it in strong terms, Mr. Randolph justified it by remarking that our government had not respected the neutrality of Spain in regard to the occupation of West Florida. Amongst other observations I recollect he asked, suppose they had met upon the coast of Kamptschatka, would you have them respect the neutrality of that coast? I made some observations to shew the difference between the case put, and the affair as it actually occurred, but not necessary to be repeated. The conversation then turned on the capture of Washington—I reprobated the destruction of the public buildings—and to my great astonishment, Mr. R. justified it—I cannot remember the precise language he used, but certainly it went to the point of justifying the conduct of the enemy in that transaction."

ANTI-TARIFF PROSPECTS.

From the Banner of the Constitution.

The readers of this paper will have observed, of late, a wavering of our faith in the potency of argument, as an efficient means of rescuing the country from the fate that awaits her in the event of the American System's being fastened upon us as the settled policy of the country. So long as we felt a strong confidence in the issue of the struggle, we spoke in language calculated to cheer the drooping spirits of our southern friends—and as soon as we began to doubt, we felt ourselves bound to say so. The truth is, that the questions of the tariff, and of internal improvements, which are sheer questions of political science and constitutional law, have now been so interwoven into the party politics of the day, that it would seem to be altogether vain to expect a decision upon them on any other than party grounds. The late dinners given in this commercial city, to Mr. Webster, the leader of the American System party in the senate, and to Mr. Burges, the leader of the same party in the house of representatives, have fully convinced us that a great portion of the merchants of New York, are prepared to sacrifice all their predilections and convictions in favor of free trade upon the altar of party. We have too much reason to fear the same result at Boston. A friend in a late letter says—"Here the whole free trade party are going over to Clay, and are well rewarded, by dividends of ten, twenty and thirty per centum. More than five millions of dollars are now invested in new factories, within sixty miles of Boston, and twenty millions more will follow the next two years.—Some of the stock is twenty-five to thirty, and one corporation fifty-five per centum premium per annum."

Now, if the party adverse to Mr. Clay were in decided opposition to the American System, there would be ground for indulging the strongest hopes. This, however, unfortunately is not the case. In some states the Jackson party is as clamourous in favor of the tariff and internal improvements, as their opponents, and there is not, it appears to us, the slightest chance, under present appearances, of there being a majority in congress, at the next session, hostile to "the system," although there may possibly be a majority opposed to some of its measures. What then, is to be done? Shall we give up the ship, and strike our colors in despair of ever awakening the people north of the Potomac to a true sense of their own interests, and of the demands of justice and patriotism? God forbid that the cup of patience should be dashed from our lips until it be drained to the last dregs. In a government originally founded upon conciliation and compromise, much must be borne before we abandon hope altogether. What said Mr. Jefferson on this subject? "Are we then to stand to our arms? No! that must be the last resource—not to be thought of until much longer and greater sufferings. If every infraction of a compact of so many parties is to be resisted at once as a dissolution of it, none can ever be formed which would last one year. We must have patience, then, with our brethren, while under delusion. Give them time for reflection and experience of consequences; keep ourselves in a situation to profit by the chapter of accidents; and separate from our companions only when the sole alternatives left are the dissolution of our union with them, or submission to a government without limitation of powers."

We are aware that this wholesome advice of Mr. Jefferson was given so long ago as the 26th December, 1825, about six months before his death, and that many persons believe that the crisis designated by him has already arrived. A majority of the southern people, however, does not so believe. They will wait yet longer: but, according to the indications we have seen, we are of opinion, that, should the next session of congress close without a material modification of the restrictive policy, all hopes of an amicable adjustment of the question will be abandoned. There has been no time, since the presidency of Mr. Jefferson, we think, at which, in the southern states, the doctrine of "principles first—men next," has more extensively prevailed; and, should the Jackson party in congress, representing the middle and western states, yield nothing of their devotion to the American System, in accommodation to the state rights party of the south, which almost to a man supports the present administration, we should not be surprised to see a withdrawal from the electoral field, in 1832, of a great portion of that party, upon the ground that professed political friends were as hostile to their interests as political foes.

THE SOUTHERN GOLD MINES.

The following paragraphs are extracted from an account of a tour in North Carolina, addressed to the editors of the "New York Observer," and are very interesting.

This state is rich in gold mines, as you are aware. The gold region is far more extensive in the south, than most suppose. It commences in Virginia, and extends south-west through North Carolina, nearly in the middle of the state as regards its length; along the northern part of South Carolina, into Georgia, and thence north-westwardly into Alabama, and ends in Tennessee. The mines in North Carolina and Georgia, are now worked to a great extent; those of Virginia and South Carolina to a small extent; and those in Tennessee have not been worked at all, although it is probable that they will be soon. In this state, the counties of Burke and Rutherford contain the best gold washings, as they are called, —that is, the gold there is found in small and pure particles mixed with the sand, which lies in deposites, as it it occupied (as the miners believe) the beds of what were once streams of water, creeks, rivers, &c. The gold is there obtained by washing away the sand, and it is a simple process. But the counties of Mecklinburg, Rowan, Davidson and Cabarras are the richest [illegible] that may be properly called gold mines—that is, where the gold is found in ore, and not distinguishable by the eye, and which is separated by smelting, using quicksilver for the purpose of detaching the gold from the gross earthy substances. This is done by first pounding the ore, (what the miners call stamping it), then grinding it, mixed with the quicksilver, to a fine powder, (like flour), and afterwards distilling the whole in an alembic, which separates the quicksilver from the gold. This part of the business is simple and easy. But to become an expert and skilful miner, to detect gold in the ore with certainty, and to know how to conduct, if I may say so, the perforations, that is, sinking shafts, (like wells) and forming and fortifying galleries or horizontal perforations to reach the veins, &c. requires great ingenuity as well as experience.

The best veins of gold are not horizontal, nor often vertical, but have a dip of 45 degrees to the horizon. They vary in width from a few inches to several feet. They are not confined to hills at all, but are found also in the low lands. These veins are often parallel to each other at unequal distances. Their depth in most places has not been ascertained! There have been no shafts sunk lower than 120 feet. In some of the mines the galleries, or lateral perforations, (or arched entries as they may be called), extend a great distance in various directions from the main shafts, and so reach the veins. They are usually about 20 feet, one above another, which enables the miners to work with the greatest advantage.

It is not five years since these mines began to be worked to any considerable extent; indeed it is hardly half that period. And yet many of them are worked upon an extensive scale. And mills for grinding the ore, propelled by water or by steam, are erected in vast numbers. One of the Messrs. Bissels, who are probably doing more at the business than any others, told me recently, that their company employs 600 hands! And he stated that the whole number of men now employed at the mines in these southern states, is at least 20,000. He also estimated the weekly product of these mines to be equal in value to $100,000, or $5,000,000 annually! But a small part of the gold was sent to the U. S. mint. By far the larger part is sent to Europe, particularly to Paris.

The chief miners (I mean laborers) are foreigners—Germans, Swiss, Swedes, Spaniards, English, Welch, Scotch, &c. There are no less than thirteen different languages spoken at the mines in this state! And men are flocking to the mines from all parts, and find ready employment. Hundreds of land owners and renters, work the mines on their grounds on a small scale, not being able to encounter the expense of much machinery.

I am pained to learn that the morals of these miners is deplorably bad. Indeed I can hardly conceive of a more immoral community than exists around these mines. Drunkenness, gambling, fighting, lewdness, and every other vice, exist here to an awful extent. Many of the men, by working three days in the week, make several dollars, and then devote the remaining four to every species of vice. The colored people—slaves—are generally the most moral.

Mr. B., of whom I have spoken above, informed me that he and his brothers were very desirous of seeing something done to promote Sunday schools, and the preaching of the gospel among the miners. By the efforts of a devoted female, one Sunday school is maintained, possibly there may be more. Several of the miners who were imported from Cornwall are excellent men, belonging to the Methodist church, and one or two of them preach, if not with success among the miners, yet quite so among the country people around. Cannot something to be done for these people? Ought not something to be attempted by our missionary societies? But let them not send any man, unless they can send one of the right stamp—cheerful as well as serious, devoted, and pungent in his preaching, of much vivacity and tact in getting along with such ungodly men,—full of meekness and kindness, and patience and perseverance.

The village of Charlotte, in Mecklenburg county, is in the immediate vicinity of several of the largest mines. It is growing rapidly.

Before I conclude this brief account of the gold mines, I ought to state one fact which is of deep interest, that is, that there are indubitable evidences that these mines were known and worked by the aboriginal inhabitants, or some other people, a long period since. Many pieces of machinery which were used for this purpose have been found. Among them are several crucibles of earthenware, and far better than those now in use. Mr. B. told me that he had tried three of them, and stated that they last twice or three times as long as even the Hessian crucibles, which are the best now made.

These gold mines prove that the whole region in which they abound, was once under the powerful action of fire. And it is a fact not generally known that the miners who have come from the mines in South America and in Europe, pronounce this region to be more abundant in gold than any other that has been found on the globe. There is no telling the extent of these mines; but sufficient is known to prove they are of vast extent.

I have no means of ascertaining the number of mines which are now opened; it is however very great, and constantly increasing. These mining establishments are of every variety as to extent of operation. There is a vast amount of capital invested by the different companies which are now embarked in this business. A large portion of this capital belongs to foreigners.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL.

From the National Intelligencer.

We have at length had an opportunity of passing up the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, as far as the great falls of the Potomac, being something more than half of the distance that is now navigable. What we have seen of it has filled us with admiration of the grandeur of the enterprize, and the boldness and skill with which it has so far been carried into execution. It exhibits indeed one of the noblest conquests that we can imagine of art over nature. The craggy rocks have been subdued, and the valleys lifted up, to form a commodious passage for the fruits of man's industry to the markets of the world. It is impossible for any thinking man to look at this wonderful work, and in imagination to pursue it along its progress to its termination, without a deep conviction of the important political as well as social benefits which may be anticipated from it. Let him then consider that three years ago the first contract for the construction of the work had not been entered into, and he can hardly credit his senses when he perceives how much has been already accomplished, in an undertaking which was but a few years before regarded by many but as the wild dream of visionary enthusiasm.

It is not easy to imagine a more delightful excursion for pleasure at this season of the year, than that in the canal packet boat to the falls, or even to Seneca. The boat is very handsomely fitted and furnished for the service it is employed in, and, in visiting the falls, the Crommelin hotel affords a most accommodating resting-place. We recommend the jaunt to all our readers who can spare time and means for such enjoyment. The grandeur of the scenery through which the canal passes, and that of the great falls adjacent, independently of the gratification of curiosity in seeing the canal, will afford them ample compensation for the time which they will spend in the journey.

Along the whole line of the canal we observed not a single defect, nor any evidence of there having been any. The hands at some of the locks are not as dexterous in the management of them, perhaps, as longer practice will make them. The passenger who is not on his guard, may chance thus to get a jolt or two; but as this involves no danger he will not regard it. The bridges over the canal are few; and a moderate inclination of the body enables those who stand on the roof, (or deck), of the boat to pass under them; whilst those who remain in the cabin are as much at ease and as comfortable as if they were in their parlors or drawing rooms at home. The packet-boat is drawn by three horses, at the rate of six miles an hour whilst in motion. The passage of the locks of course causes some detention, but we made the whole passage to the falls, with about seventy persons on board, in less than four hours. The number of locks from Georgetown to Crommelin is twenty, of which sixteen are now in use. The distance ascended by the canal to overreach the great falls is a hundred and sixty-one feet above tide-water, being the most expensive and difficult work upon the line. Four locks more are passed to arrive at the aqueduct which crosses the Seneca creek, and only seven more to reach Harper's ferry.

The ascent from tide-water to Cumberland is estimated at 586 feet. So that the lockage from tide-water to Crommelin is more than a fourth of what will be required for the whole distance to Cumberland.

MANUFACTURES OF IRON.

We accidentally obtained sight of the following letters, and deemed them so creditable to all the parties, that we were very unwilling they should be withheld from publication. Messers. Barnett, Shorb & Co. finally, after a very earnest request, furnished us with a copy of the correspondence, and reluctantly permitted us to give it publicity. [Pittsburg Gazette.

Pittsburg, March 22, 1831.

Henry Clay, esq.—Dear sir: Accompanying this you will receive, by the hands of our mutual friend, Mr. Stephens, a few articles, which we beg you will do us the honor to accept. They were made by Messrs. Packard & Estep, of this place, from steel of our own manufacture. We have just commenced this branch of business, and it affords us great pleasure in having this favorable opportunity to present for your acceptance these first fruits of our successful labors. We hope you will receive them, not only as one sample of the many good effects produced by that course of policy of which you have been the able and untiring advocate, but also as a token of our high regard for your private character and eminent public services. There is a peculiar propriety, as we conceive, in making you a present of this kind, (however trifling), from this place, inasmuch as whatever has a relation to a city and state which owes so much to your exertions, must be gratifying to a statesman who, we sincerely believe, looks for the reward of his labors only in their beneficial effects. It will no doubt be agreeable to your patriotic feelings, to be informed that every particle in the composition of these utensils, from the ore to the finished instrument, is the produce of American soil, skill and labor. The iron was made under our personal inspection, and the steel in our convertory, under the direction and according to the improved process of an American gentleman, Mr. E. L. Losey. We therefore take a pride and pleasure in warranting these articles to you as good. In conclusion, we beg leave to tender you the assurance of our high regard and best wishes. Your obed't serv'ts

BARNETT, SHORB & CO.

P. S.—The carving knife and fork were manufactured by Mr. E. L. Losey. B. S. & Co.

—

Ashland, 3d May, 1831.

GENTLEMEN: I postponed answering your obliging letter of the 22d March last, borne by Mr. Stephens, until the fate of the articles also committed to his care for my use was certainly ascertained. After various narrow escapes, from accidents unfortunately occurring, I believe, to several steam boats, I have the pleasure to inform you that I yesterday safely received them, consisting of a spade, shovel, axe, hoe, and carving knife and fork. They are all excellent of their kinds, and do great credit to the artisans by whom they were made. I beg your acceptance of my grateful thanks for them, for the friendly spirit which prompted you to tender them, and for the flattering terms in which they are conveyed. Their value is much enhanced, in my view, as you justly anticipated, by the fact that every particle of these utensils, from the ore to the last finish, is the produce of American soil, skill and labor. The successful manufacture of steel at Pittsburgh was a desideratum, and I am happy to perceive, from the specimen in these articles, that the quality of it, as far as I can judge, realizes every wish.

You are right in supposing that I derive very great satisfaction from witnessing the prosperity of Pittsburgh, and the complete success of our American System. Never had the friends of any great measure of national policy more cause to rejoice, never were the predictions of the foes of any such measure more fully refuted, than in the instance of the triumph of that system. It was objected to it, that it would dry up the sources of the public revenue. The revenue has been increased. It was said that our foreign commerce would be destroyed. Our foreign commerce has been greatly nourished and extended by its operation, changing only some of its subjects. It was urged that it would impair our marine. Our navigation, and especially the most valuable part of it, has been rapidly extended. It was reproached with comprehending enormous burthens to consumers, by obliging them to purchase worse, and at dearer prices, articles of American origin, than similar articles of foreign manufacture. Almost every protected article has been greatly reduced in price, and, in some instances, so much that the cost of the article scarcely equals the duty of protection. It is in vain that the opponents of the system seek, by subtle and ingenious solutions, to account for this gratifying fact; the fact itself falsifies their predictions, and it is worth a thousand hair-splitting theories. Finally, it was urged that the system would be a fruitful source of vice, immorality, and depravity. It has rescued from impending ruin, thousands who, or the want of employment, would have been lost to society, and has filled their abodes with comfort, abundance, and happiness. It has saved and made virtuous members of the community, thousands, of both sexes, who, but for its existence, would have become victims to vice, indolence and dissipation: and I sincerely believe that every part of our common country has been benefited by it.

With my best wishes for your prosperity and happiness, I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

H. CLAY.

Messrs. Barnett, Shorb & Co.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

House of representatives—February 1831.

Mr. Hemphill, from the committee to which was referred that part of the president's message [of December 7, 1830] relating to internal improvements, made the following report:

That they had bestowed upon it that deliberate consideration to which its high character and importance are justly entitled.

The essential benefits to a nation from good roads and canals, and the improvement of water courses, are so universally acknowledged, that the committee will not investigate the subject by tedious reasoning. A brief notice will be all that is necessary. Their object is rather to bring into review the laudable ambition and ardent desire, so long manifested by the people, for the enjoyment of these real blessings.

Mr. Fulton, in his letter of the 7th December, 1807, to the secretary of the treasury, to enable him, in part, to prepare his report of the 4th of April, 1808, remarked that, "it is obvious to every one, who will take the trouble to reflect, that, on a road of the best kind, four horses, and sometimes five, are necessary to transport only three tons, but on a canal, one horse will draw twenty-five tons, and thus perform the work of forty horses; the saving being in the value of the horses, the feeding, wagons, and attendance." Rail roads, where they can be adopted, being now considered of similar value to canals, like results will follow from the use of them.

The whole saving, on any given line, must, in a great degree, be conjectural, unless resort is made to a very minute calculation. But any one can perceive, from this simple statement, that a very large proportion of the expenses of transportation would be a certain gain to the consumers, and, indirectly, to the whole community.

A barrel of flour can be shipped from Philadelphia to Liverpool, a distance of three thousand miles, for fifty cents, while, on a turnpike road from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, a tenth of the distance, it would cost five dollars.

A few facts will show the enormous expense of transportation in time of war. In the late war, flour, in some instances, cost the government nearly one hundred dollars per barrel, and pieces of artillery each near one thousand dollars; and owing to the delay, were useless when they arrived. The first of transportation across the peninsula between the Delaware and Chesapeake bays, a distance of only sixteen miles, amounted in one year to a little less than half a million of dollars. The saving to the union by good roads and canals, would be immense, and amount to many millions in a year, besides the wealth gained by the additional quantity of articles from the bowels and surface of the earth, raw and manufactured, which the expedition and cheapness of conveyance to market would inevitably bring into existence.

The internal trade of a country increases with amazing rapidity, and it is considered by the ablest writers on political economy to be the most profitable trade; customers contract acquaintances, and no sea risk is incurred.

We have already seen between two and three thousand sloops, of upwards of fifty tons each, engaged in the North river. In England, there are more than five hundred ships, none under two hundred tons, and many over three, carrying the single article of coal from Newcastle to London. In China, it is said that, in consequence of the cheapness of their conveyances, their home trade is nearly equal to the whole market in Europe.

The commerce of the United States with South America should attract our earnest attention. The independence of these republics will form an important era in the history of this country. No country can offer to us commercial advantages more rich, or more within our reach, than the Spanish American republics. Our territories touch.

The ports of Louisiana and Vera Cruz are connected with the same sea. Our access to Mexico will be easy; and, as regards the importance of this country, it is illustrated by the circumstance, that it is the richest and most extensive of all the Spanish American republics. It exceeds in magnitude Spain, France, and Italy united. All the eastern coast of Mexico, the kingdom of Terra Firma and Paraguay, are nearer to us than the ports of Europe, presenting a wide range for the commercial intercourse of the United States. It must be enlightened policy on our part, as soon as possible, to place the country in a condition to compete with the nations of Europe, and to draw a fair proportion of the South American commerce into our own ports, before its rich channels are pre-occupied, in consequence of their superior facilities and cheapness in the principal transactions of their internal trade.

The idea of improving the country with national aid was coeval with the government. The "Federalist" noticed it among other advantages of the union.

In No. 14, written by Mr. Madison the objections made against the constitution from the extent of country were answered; and, with other reasons it was said:

"Let it be remembered, in the third place, that the intercourse throughout the union will be daily facilitated by new improvements. Roads will be every where shortened, and kept in better order; accommodations for travellers will be multiplied and ameliorated, an interior navigation on our eastern side will be opened throughout, or nearly throughout, the whole extent of the thirteen states. The communications between the western and Atlantic districts, and the different parts of each, will be rendered more and more easy by those numerous canals with which the beneficence of nature has intersected our country, and which art finds it so little difficult to connect and complete."

The same distinguished statesman gave a practical construction to those views of the effect of ratifying the federal constitution, by submitting to the house of representatives, in 1796, seven years after it went into operation, a resolution to cause a survey to be made of a road from north to south, through all the Atlantic states, with a view to the foundation of a system for their improvement. That the capacities of the country for improvements are equal to any on the earth, there is no difference of opinion.

Its vast extent, its varity of soil and climate, its mountains, and valleys, intersected with streams of every size; its geographical separation into distinct natural parts, each inviting the commercial intercourse of the others, by artificial means—the portion along the shores of the Atlantic, and back to the Allegany mountains, being one; that on the lakes and St. Lawrence, another: and that watered by the Mississippi and its branches composing the third.

As soon as the funded debt of the revolution was nearly extinguished, and Louisiana acquired, the improvements of the country were commenced. Mr. Jefferson caused a reconnoissance and survey to be made of a road between the city of Washington and New Orleans.

In 1806, congress authorized the construction of the Cumberland road, thereby assuming the principal power for which the real friends of the policy have ever since contended. In 1808, Mr. Gallatin's celebrated report appeared, exhibiting much solid information on the subject; but the attitude of our relations soon after with England and France, and the final declaration of war against England, retarded the execution, while it evinced, in the strongest manner imaginable, the propriety of this policy. It was seen from actual experience, that the money wasted in consequence of the want of national improvements, would have been sufficient to construct the chief of those of the most prominent character.

After the war, the spirit of internal improvement again revived. It rose up in the south; and on the 16th of December, 1816, on motion of Mr. Calhoun, a committee was appointed to inquire into the expediency of setting apart the bonus and nett annual profits of the national bank, as a permanent fund for internal improvements. On the 23d of the same month, a bill to this effect was reported.

On the 6th of February following, a motion was made to strike out all the first section after the enacting clause, and insert a bill differently expressed, "for the construction of roads and canals, and improving the navigation of water courses, in order to facilitate, promote, and give security to internal commerce among the several states, and to render more easy and less expensive the means and provisions necessary for the common defence," the fund to be applied to such objects as congress, with the assent of the states, might direct.

Mr. Calhoun moved to amend the amendment, by striking out the words "with the assent of the states," which being lost, the amendment was carried; and on the 8th of February, 1817, the bill, as amended, passed the house of representatives. After being agreed to in the senate, it was sent for the approbation of Mr. Madison, who, on the 3d of March, 1817, rejected it on constitutional grounds.

On the re-consideration, there was still a majority of the representatives of the people in favor of the bill.

This was the last act of Mr. Madison's administration. Mr. Monroe being then secretary of state, and president elect, probably accorded with his predecessor in the rejection of the bill, as, at the next session, the first of his administration, he gave his concurrent opinion in advance, without waiting to hear the arguments of the new congress. On the 3d of December, 1817, this part of the message was refered to a committee, and on the 15th of December a report was made, in direct contradiction of the sentiments of the president. The resolution which closed it, resting the power in question on the assent of the states, it was stricken out, and the house finally resolved, by a majority of 90 to 75, that congress had power, under the constitution, to appropriate money for the construction of post roads, military and other roads, and for the improvement of water courses. Motions to amend, by inserting "with the assent of the states," were negatived. Thus, it appears that, on the first opportunity, after the opinions of two presidents were declared, the representatives of the people independently expressed their own sentiments to the country.

"During the same session, two resolutions were adopted—one directed to the secretary of war, and the other to the secretary of the treasury, of nearly the same import, requiring them to report to the next session a plan for the application of such means as are within the power of congress to the purpose of opening and improving roads, and making canals, together with a statement of the undertakings of that nature, which, as objects of public improvement, may require and deserve the aid of the government; and, also, a statement of works, of the nature above mentioned, which have been commenced; the progress which has been made in them, the means and prospect of their being completed; the public improvements carried on by states, or by companies or incorporations which have been associated for such purposes, to which it may be deemed expedient to subscribe or afford assistance; the terms and conditions of such associations, and the state of their funds; and such information as, in the opinion of the secretary, shall be material in relation to the objects of this resolution."

"Ill health prevented the secretary of the treasury from acting on the subject; but the secretary of war, on the 7th of January, 1819, made an interesting report: 'A judicious system (he said) of roads and canals, constructed for the convenience of commerce and the transportation of the mail only, without reference to military operations, is itself among the most efficient means for the more complete defence of the United States. Without adverting to the fact that the roads and canals which such a system would require, are, with a few exceptions, precisely those which would be required for the operations of war, such a system, by consolidating our union, increasing our wealth and fiscal capacity, would add greatly to our resources in war. It is in a state of war, when a nation is compelled to put all of its resources in men, money, and skill, and devotion to country, into requisition, that its government realizes, in its security, the beneficial effects from a people made prosperous and happy by a wise direction of its resources in peace."

"But I forbear to pursue this subject, though so interesting, and which, the farther it is pursued, will the more clearly establish the intimate connexion between the defence and safety of the country, and its improvement and prosperity, as I do not conceive that it constitutes the immediate object of this report."

After many appropriations for the repairs of the Cumberland road, and other acts of congress manifesting their steady pursuit of this subject, a select committee, in 1822, was raised, which, on the 2nd of January, brought in a report, accompanied with a bill to procure the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, to be made, of the routes of such roads and canals as the president might deem of national importance, in a commercial or military point of view, for the transportation of the mail.

In 1823, it was partially acted on, and, on the 30th of April, 1824, it became a law. The object of this bill was to obtain information, and lay a solid foundation for the improvement of the country by the aid and direct action of the general government.

Mr. Monroe signed the bill, and, in the same session, he approved of the act authorising a subscription to the stock of the Chesapeake and Delaware canal company.

At this period, Mr. Monroe seems to have yielded to the current of public opinion, as far as is necessary for most practical purposes.

The survey bill was considered as the precursor to all future improvements. Its design was to obtain an accurate knowledge of the topography of the country, by the examination of scientific men, under the direction of the president, who were to make plans, &c. of such objects as the president should direct, reserving to congress to select in succession the routes which they might deem the most urgent, and of the highest national importance, to be first executed.

In virtue of this act, many important parts of the country have been explored, of whose capacities for improvement we were ignorant. The spirit of this act accorded with the practice of France and other countries, where every information of this kind is considered valuable, and collected and deposited in their respective bureaux.

It was not expected that every survey made should be acted on immediately; many years, it was known, would pass away, before all could be effected. Still, the information was desirable, and advantageous to the union, the states, and individual enterprise; it afforded a store of knowledge, at all times accessible, and free of expense.

The proceedings of the engineers produced effects of salutary importance. They were every where welcomed: states were awakened from their lethargy; and, aided by the science of which they were in possession, companies arose, to whom they imparted their valuable assistance, and the people became inspired with a desire of enjoying the natural advantages of their country, and, in accordance with this spirit, were acting with increased animation in the promotion of its best interests.

The assistance given by the general government to the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, deserves here especial notice. It had been in contemplation for more than half a century. The first attempt failed; the second had to contend with unforeseen embarrassments; and, notwithstanding the boldness and energy of those conducting it, to say the least, it is probable that individual enterprise would have sunk under the many obstacles which were presented, and the work have been abandoned, had not the United States interposed, and aided, by their liberal subscription, for stock in the company. The value of this noble improvement to the nation, as a link of the Atlantic canal along the sea coast, cannot be too highly appreciated.

The Louisville and Portland canal, and the Dismal Swamp canal, were equally indebted to the countenance and protection of the federal government.

President Monroe deemed an avenue over the Alleganies mountains of such national magnitude that the route of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal was the first which he caused to be surveyed under the act of the 30th of April, 1824. This magnificent undertaking has likewise received the countenance of the United States, by the subscription to its stock of a million of dollars.

Acts passed to improve the navigation of the Ohio river, by removing bars and other impediments; to free the Mississippi from the danger of snags and sawyers, and for the clearing of many other rivers. In accordance with the same spirit, the Cumberland road, without reference to the assent of the state, was continued from Canton, in Ohio, to the Muskingum river, at Zanesville, in that state; and additional provisions were occasionally made for the repairs of this road, and its further extension; a variety of roads in the territories, and for military purposes, had been effected; and at the last session, congress passed laws to subscribe for stock in the Maysville and Lexington turnpike company, by a vote in the house of representatives of 96 to 87; for stock in the Washington and Frederick turnpike company, by a vote of 74 to 39; and for stock in the Louisville and Portland canal company, by a vote of 80 to 37.

In the two last cases, there was little if any doubt as to the nationality or expediency of the object; and the principle of the policy alone governed the members. They present the fairest test of the opinion entertained by the representatives of the people, concerning the propriety of subscribing for stock in private companies. Wherein, then, it is most respectfully asked, consists evidence of a change in the public mind on this interesting subject? It may be presumed that the message alludes to those public prints which justified the veto on the Maysville road bill? Is it not a fair answer, that the opinion, thus partially ascertained, was founded on a belief that the road was of a local, and not a national character. Whether it was or was not, is immaterial at the present moment; because it never was pretended, by the friends of internal improvements, that congress had power over mere local and state objects; and, for this reason, they have always disputed the right to distribute money, generally, among the states, for internal improvements, as the money in that case, might be expended on local objects, over which congress had no authority. The act to set a part the bonus and dividends of the bank of the United States, to be divided among the states according to the ratio of their representation, retained in congress the control over the objects on which the money was to be expended. This, alone, sustained its constitutionality. Lands have also been granted for the same purpose for specified objects.

The committee are aware of no instance in which congress can distribute money generally among the states, unless it be in the case of education, which is clearly distinguishable from that of internal improvements.

Congress has established the military academy; it has also agreed with the land purchasers in the new states to allow a certain proportion of the soil in each township for the benefit of schools, without indicating the mode and manner of instruction. Education in every stage is designed to qualify the rising generation for all the ends of citizenship. In the improvement of the mind, whether by common schools or the elevated seminaries of learning, there can be no departure from nationality.

The committee will quote the words of the present executive, from his message, to show its equal application to the power of the United States over internal improvements.

"The power to impose duties originally belonged to the several states. The right to adjust those duties with a view to the encouragement of domestic branches of industry is so completely incidental to that power, that it is difficult to suppose the existence of the one without the other. The states have delegated their whole authority over imports to the general government, without limitation or restriction, saving the very inconsiderable reservation relating to the inspection laws. This authority having thus entirely passed from the states, the right to exercise it for the purpose of protection does not exist in them; and consequently if it be not possessed by the general government, it must be extinct.

"Our political system would thus present the anomaly of a people stripped of the right to foster their own industry, and to counteract the most selfish and destructive policy which might be adopted by foreign nations. This surely cannot be the case: this indispensable power, thus surrendered by the states, must be within the scope of the authority on the subject expressly delegated."

To apply the above where the object of any internal improvement embraces two or more states, the committee will observe, that, antecedent to the union, the states as separate sovereignties, could have entered into negotiations and treaties to execute any extended line of road or canal; but, after its adoption, they were excluded from forming any compact with each, without the consent of congress. The states, then, have wholly surrendered the power under which alone they could have effected great leading and permanent roads or canals, for their mutual accommodation, and cannot regain it by the mere exercise of their own wills. If the power be not extinct it is wholly within the control of the U. States, and must fall within the scope of the authority over the subject expressly delegated to congress, and be directly incidental to them.

Again: the power to regulate commerce among the states is granted in the same words with that to regulate commerce with foreign nations. In the one case, it is agreed that imports can be cheapened by public works; the same reason will apply to the power to cheapen the transportation of inland trade, that being of importance, equal to foreign commerce; and the power must be as necessarily incidental to the express power.

This directly incidental power carries with it the full means of execution and protection, and does not rest on the undefined tenor of continued and uninterrupted usage, which is said to have been employed "at the expense of harmony."

The committee will pursue this subject no farther than to say that, in their opinion, the same constitution which legalizes the removal of brambles for the free passage of the surveyor's chain, gives equal right to construct the contemplated work. That there is no partition of power. If congress can act at all, it can act, with effect; if it can make a road or a canal, it can employ the accustomed means of the country to keep the work in repair.

In relation to the subject of internal improvements that there is a line between national and merely state objects, of a sound and practical meaning, is generally admitted; and where this line is, the wisdom of congress must decide in each case as it arises.

With no pretension of describing the precise line, the committee will suggest that an object of national improvement may be entirely within a state, as a road to a fortification, such as that from New Orleans to Fort St. Philip, in Louisiana; or perhaps a better illustration is supplied by the Delaware and Raritan canal, lying wholly in the state of New Jersey. The object may embrace parts of two states, as a bridge over a river dividing the states; in this instance, congress could erect the bridge, if necessary for any national purpose. In every case where the improvement is to take a wide range through many states, in instances within a state where an object is considered as a link of an extended line; and in all cases where its end is to connect, by artificial means, the grand geographical divisions of the country, to draw the line, it must be expected, will sometimes give rise to debate, but not more frequently, nor of a more perplexing nature, than will occur in attempting to draw the line of correct legislation on various other subjects.

The tariff to protect American industry is declared by the president, constitutional, but does he prescribe the exact limit required for this object? Congress can impose direct taxes, yet in the exercise of this power, excesses would be real grievances.

But a road or canal, even of a doubtful character as to its nationallity, would benefit the country; so it would seem that no federal power can be exercised with less cause of alarm.

In adverting to the message, the committee will not examine it by paragraphs, for fear of committing any error. A particular part of it can be better interpreted in connexion with the whole; they will only make allusion to some of the ideas conveyed by it, concerning which there can be no mistake; leaving the application of their general observations, where they come in collision with any part of it, to the judgment of the house, to be considered as an answer.

The president, after carefully revolving in his mind, the whole subject, has formed these opinions—that it is improper and inexpedient to subscribe for stock in private associations; that, unless an entire stop be put to the practice, certain bad consequences will follow; and that the course heretofore pursued to advance the internal improvements of the country; is the worst, perhaps, that could exist.

Among the reasons for these opinions, it is asserted, that, when an improvement is effected by the funds of the union, the citizens ought to enjoy it without being compelled to pay tolls; that money so raised ought to be subject to the rule of revenue; that discredit might result from the government's embarking with its constituents in joint stock associations, and that, in certain instances, the control of a portion of the public funds would be delegated to an authority unknown to the constitution.

To these objections and reasonings the committee reply, in the first place, that, if it is constitutional to subscribe for the stock of private companies, which does not appear to be controverted, none of the agencies thereunto appertaining can be alien to the constitution.

In regard to the idea that the citizens, respecting public improvements, ought to be exempt from tolls or any imposition of that character, this doctrine would apply to the states with the same force as it would to the federal union. In the states, however, it is the universal practice to receive tolls from those who use the roads of incorporated companies, in which a sovereign state is interested. The traveller gains an equivalent, and is not heard to complain. To say nothing of the consequent ruin of state enterprises, if the citizens should be treated better by any mode of internal improvement, under the auspices of the general government, than by the laws and institutions of their respective states, their affections might be unwarily weaned from the one and bestowed upon the other. As yet, such favor has not been extended, even to American genius. The inventor of the most valuable discovery has to pay for his patent.

With reference to the rule of revenue, it is provided by the constitution that all duties, imposts, and excises, shall be uniform throughout the United States; but the paying of tolls is clearly a tax of no description. A valuable consideration being received, it is no collection of revenue. It is only a profit on the revenue on hand. It is as much a contract as the purchase of public land, in which case the buyer is to pay for the value he receives; and in like manner the scientific inventor has to purchase his patent. Respecting the impropriety of subscribing for stock in private companies, this committee, and former committees, and both houses of congress, have deemed that the most eligible and least objectionable mode of effecting many of the improvements of the country. The opinion has been as generally entertained, that the direct agency of the government should be resorted to only in cases where states or private companies had not sufficient interest or means to induce them to embark in their execution.

The committee cannot discover how any deception could be practised in this mode of expenditure, more than in the direct application of the public money. No circumstance respecting the former can be better concealed. The United States' engineers can give as accurate information in the one case as in the other. In each, the same inducements will exist for additional appropriations, when the first have proved inadequate.—Besides, when subscriptions are made, congress will have the opinion of state legislatures, and the guarantee of private subscriptions of stock, as to the importance of the undertaking, before they are begun; and in conducting them afterwards, the advantage of the vigilance and zeal of interested and enterprising individuals. In what manner disguise could be practised, the committee are at a loss to conjecture. It must be admitted that unforeseen obstacles will occasionally obstruct the progress of such improvements, and call for additional aid, in defiance of the skill, foresight, and honesty of man. The Chesapeake and Delaware canal, and the Louisville and Portland canal, afford instances of uncommon occurrence. In the first, the embankment for a considerable distance, sunk about one hundred feet; and the latter had to be excavated through a solid rock of unusual and unexpected hardness.

In ordinary cases, the construction of roads and canals is reduced to strict rules, and contracts can be formed with reasonable certainty. Throughout the union, such works are now executed by such contracts; which incorporated companies are as capable of making as the government and much more likely to execute with vigor.

The committee on roads and canals, in 1825, after describing what they considered improvements of the first class, proceeded as follows: "The committee, however, are of opinion, that there is a secondary class of cases in which the general government and states can act conjointly by the subscription of stock on the part of the United States in companies incorporated in the respective states for internal improvements."

"The plan proposed, after much reflection, has been deemed the most judicious of any that can be devised. It is a plan of encouragement, and in its operation will not interfere with objects of the first class. It will excite the states to incorporate companies for such objects as will be sufficiently national to induce congress to countenance them. It leaves congress to decide in each case, when presented, upon its own circumstances and merits. The committee cannot conceive how the general government can aid in the internal improvements of the country, in most cases, with greater propriety than by subscriptions in companies incorporated by the respective states. Congress will have the opinion of the United States' engineers, who will make the necessary surveys, plans and estimates; and it will have the opinion of the state in each case, and intelligent stockholders, as to the important and probable profit of each work; and, finally, congress will exercise its own judgment on the utility and national character of the work. The prosecution of the works, besides, will be conducted by interested individuals, with less expense and delay than perhaps it could be done by the public."

The plan of subscribing for stock in companies has, also, the advantage of augmenting the expenditures on public works far beyond the sum invested by the general government. Congress may adopt the principle, that no subscription shall be made to any incorporated company until a certain proportion, say two-thirds, of the estimated expense be subscribed by a state or by individuals. By this plan, ten millions belonging to the United States would cause the expenditure of thirty millions on public undertakings; and, in time, congress might dispose of their stock, and use the same fund to aid in other works.

The practice of subscribing for stock in private companies by state sovereignties, has long and extensively prevailed, they have joined their constituents in creating banks, and in promoting improvements. Without any disparagement to the general government, state sovereignties, in this respect, stand on the same footing, and would be equally subject to inconveniences, if such really existed. The states of Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware, subscribed for stock in the Chesapeake and Delaware canal; Virginia and Maryland subscribed to the stock of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal; and the practice has been approved by four or five distinct congresses. To impair a principle so long acted upon, it would seem to the committee to require a train of abuses and inconveniences plainly to be laid before the people. How can any discredit result from the government's embarking with its constituents in the great work of national improvements?

It cannot be expected that the general government would ever associate itself with companies merely with a view of pecuniary speculation; and by the report of the committee on roads and canals in 1825, and the bill accompanying it, a provision was introduced, allowing the state or states creating the companies to purchase, at pleasure, the stock of the United States in such companies.

Congress, it is believed, will never be disposed to act without the co-operation of the states, except in a national work, in which the states or individuals, for want of interest or adequate resources, are unwilling to embark, or, if commenced, are unable to continue and complete. Such cases, in the opinion of the committee, may be considered as of the first national class, and cannot be included under any specific system.

The action of the government in the first class will require other direct appropriations, to be expended under the agency of the United States, or subscriptions for stock in private companies. In this class, also, it is obvious, and by none denied, that no rule of equal distribution can be adopted. The localities of the country will require that much larger sums should be expended in some parts of the country than in others. As an illustration of this, the Chesapeake and Delaware canal would absorb the equal distribution to which the state of Delaware would be entitled for perhaps a half century, while this state is far less benefitted by the construction of the canal than many other sections of the union.

Fair and important considerations may, likewise, induce more than a proportional expenditure of money in certain divisions of the country. For instance: while the erection of public works on the seaboard cheapens importation, and diffuses a general benefit among consumers, whether in the exterior or interior of the country, it must be acknowledged that the expenditures on lighthouses, beacons, fortifications, &c. afford an additional advantage to those sections of the nation wherein they are erected, by the circulation of large sums, amounting, in fact, to many millions, among the people of those districts.

The new states do not enjoy corresponding advantages; and any degree of equal benefit, in this respect, cannot be effected, unless more than the representative proportion of the funds of the union be expended among them. As internal improvements are the only objects of magnitude alike advantageous to the new states and to the union, it is by acting on these alone that congress can equalize the public benefits of the country. The new states have no unsettled land to constitute a fund for this purpose and the nett proceeds of the sale of public lands will avail very little towards the execution of their leading roads. The rise and condition of the western states have, in an eminent degree, augmented the power and consequence of the union. The citizens of these extensive regions have purchased our wild lands, and converted them into useful farms. The intercourse between them and the Atlantic states is daily increasing. For the mutual enjoyment of the internal commerce thence arising good roads and canals are indispensable. It is true, the old states, with few exceptions, have prosecuted their own improvements to a great extent without federal aid; but many of these states possessed funds derived from the sales of public lands, and other sources not attainable in the west. It will be no more than an act of generous and good feeling in the Atlantic states to aid their younger sisters. A passage from the late message of the governor of Pennsylvania we admire for its public spirit and truly American patriotism. It is as follows:

"Although extensively engaged in the construction of works of internal improvement within her own limits, and at her own individual expense, Pennsylvania has uniformly, with a magnanimity and a spirit of patriotism which does her honor, advocated and maintained the constitutional right of the general government to aid in the construction of works of internal improvement of a national character, tending to bind, and to connect more closely together, the remote parts of our widely extended territory; to multiply the facilities of communication between the different parts of the union; to diminish time and distance in the intercourse of its citizens with each other, to beget, by means of such intercourse, feelings of amity, kindness and friendship, instead of those sectional jeaousies, local prejudices and unkind and uncharitable prepossessions, which a want of free and friendly intercommunication is always seen to produce; and generally to increase the comforts and promote the prosperity and happiness of the people of the United States."

If we descend from this elevation, and confine ourselves to the narrow, parsimonious pursuits of gain, no policy more substantial could be devised. What roads or canals, except cross roads for neighboring purposes, can be made in the west, which will not benefit the states on the Atlantic?

In what direction will they look for their sales and barter? It must certainly be towards the seas and manufacturing districts. All their national highways will be calculated to meet the eastern improvements, namely, those of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina and Georgia. The Cumberland road, the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, the canals of James river, of Roanoke, and others, yet farther to the south, are all designed to conquer the mountains between these two great sections of our common country.

In the secondary class of cases, congress can appropriate money to national objects with as judicious arrangements among the states as the true interests of the country will demand. They can, as in the bill of 1816, for the gradual increase of the navy, set apart a fund for the gradual improvement of the country, and appropriate so much per annum to be applied to national undertakings to be completed, or towards the discharge of expenses incurred on national objects already executed by the several states. Under such a provision, states which have led the way in improving the face of the country can, in part, be reimbursed for their valuable exertions.

No tribunal can be so competent to regulate these national concerns as congress; they bring intelligence from the various parts of the nation, and can impart to each other a knowledge of the course of trade, and of the bearings which particular improvements will have on each other, for the good of the whole.

Internal improvements accommodate themselves to all the leading interests of the nation; by their facilities the farmers will be enabled to produce more and sell cheaper, by them foreign imported articles will reach the consumers in the interior at reduced prices. But with none are they more intimately connected than with the manufacturing interest, as they will cause a diminution of the expenses of transportation to and from their factories; and, in time, will enable the proprietors to bear, without injury, a reduction in the tariff. Thus, while the duties on imports supply, in part, the means of internal improvement, those improvements, good roads and navigable canals, to a still greater extent, lessen the cost of those imports to the consumer, and, in enhancing the value of his produce, enlarge his means of comfort and enjoyment.

The opponents to the immediate execution of internal improvements, speak, repeatedly, of judicious plans and systems, without disclosing their ideas upon any practicable scheme to supplant that which they condemn. The sincerity of their motives is not questioned, although the tendency of their scruples cause only procrastination, and leave us equally as unenlightened. What system have the states adopted to regulate improvements between the different parts of their respective territories, better than that hitherto pursued by the United States?

The wisdom and experience of the legislative bodies constitute the tribunals which govern as the objects are presented.

It has also been urged that the project of national improvements with the funds of the union creates corrupt passions and excites vicious practices. If the mere allegation of corruption is to check the prosecution of internal improvements, it will interpose a barrier against all public works; for it is equally applicable, whether the improvements are to be completed by the states or by the federal government. The human heart will remain unchanged, and the motives of influence can never be eradicated. If a road is to be located for sixty or one hundred miles, the individuals interested in the route will be actuated by the same zeal, and practice the same means of gratifying their wishes, whether the improvement is to be effected by a county, by a state, or by the United States. Whenever a state engages largely in public undertakings, motives of interest can, with equal propriety, be ascribed to the members of the state legislatures, as to the representatives of the same people in congress.

The following passage in the president's message early attracted the attention of the committee: That "the expenditures heretofore made for internal improvements amount to upwards of five millions of dollars," and that the estimated expense of works of which surveys have been made, together with that of others projected and partially surveyed, amounts to more than "ninety-six millions of dollars." The committee, apprehending some mistake on this head, directed their chairman to offer a resolution requesting the president to transmit to congress a statement of the expenditures heretofore made for internal improvements, specifying the several works, and the expenditures of each; also, a statement of the estimated expense of the works of internal improvement for which surveys have been made; together with a like statement of the estimated expense of other works projected and partially surveyed.

In compliance with this request, the president transmitted a report from the secretaries of war and treasury, from which it appears that the meaning of the president comprehended objects which the committee, heretofore, had not included under the head of internal improvements. Their idea was, that the term internal improvements did not embrace works affording facilities to foreign commerce; that the popular acceptation confined it to roads and canals in the interior of the country, and to the clearing of rivers above tide water.

It appears from the treasury documents, that the item of "five millions of dollars and upwards," for internal improvements, embraces not only expenditures for roads and canals, but also the expenditures of the government, since its commencement, "in building piers, improving and preserving ports, bays and harbors, and removing obstructions to the navigation of rivers."

The latter objects, and others of a similar character, made up nearly one-half of what is called "expenditures for internal improvements."

In reference to the item of ninety-six millions of dollars and upwards, the communication, in answer to the call of the house, arranges the works into three distinct classes—works commenced by the general government; works not commenced, for which surveys and estimates have been made; works projected and partially surveyed; the estimates for the last class being conjectural. The first class includes all the works commenced by the general government, and amounts only to three millions seven hundred and thirty-two thousand dollars, embracing altogether about fifty distinct works; forty-three of which are building piers, improving bays and harbors, and removing obstructions to the entrance and navigation of rivers. The other works contained in this class are roads now under construction, all of which, except the Cumberland road, are in the territory of Michigan.

The estimated expense of the second class is near fifty millions. It embraces fifty-four works, of which thirty-seven are for the improvement of harbors, opening the navigation of rivers, and the erection of piers and break-waters. The other seventeen are surveys and estimates of routes for roads and canals.

With reference to the remaining class, estimated also at about fifty millions, it is made up of all the variety of works embraced in the other two classes. It is conjectural, and founded on no ascertained data.

The works executed or commenced for the benefit of foreign commerce have emanated from the committee on commerce.

As to internal improvements proper, the president is authorised by the act of the 30th April, 1824, to cause the necessary surveys and estimates to be made, and most of them have originated from this executive source. There are but few instances in which congress would be expected to bear the whole estimated expense. Under the head of the second class, the Chesapeake and Ohio canal is put down at an estimate of near twenty-two millions and a half of dollars. The eastern section of this canal, a space of 189 miles, between Washington and Cumberland, and more than half the length of the entire canal, computed separately at 8¼ millions of this sum, is now in progress under the direction of an incorporated company, with no other aid from congress than the subscription of a single million of dollars, and with resources acquired or anticipated, adequate to its completion without further assistance form the general government.

Under the same head, a canal from Baltimore to the Potomac river is estimated at nearly three millions of dollars; but the project is abandoned: and in lieu of it, a rail road is projected, and contemplated to be made with private funds.

When we consider that all the works now in progress, on the seaboard, and in the interior, only amount to three millions seven hundred and thirty-two thousand dollars, no fears need be entertained of the caution which congress will always observe in making appropriations of money.

The committee consider the detailed communication from the president as very important; and lest any erroneous impressions be made concerning it, they have deemed it proper to have it annexed to this report.

As to the "five millions of dollars and upwards," expended on internal improvements, the committee refer to the report of the secretary of the treasury of the 20th December, 1830, in compliance with a resolution of the house of representatives of the 26th of May, 1830, which is also appended to this report.

On the subject of the Maysville road, the Louisville canal, and the Washington and Frederick turnpike, the committee will barely remark that the two latter, in their judgment, are clearly of national character. The one connects the seat of government with the whole western country, and the other is greatly interesting to nine or ten states.

The Maysville road lies in the heart of a fine country, and the travelling on it is continual. It is calculated to facilitate the trade of a rich portion of the union with Pittsburg, the lakes, and the towns and villages lying on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, onwards to New Orleans.

It is represented "that the present state of the road requires about thirty-six hours for the transportation of the mail from Maysville to Lexington, a distance of sixty-five miles, and that too, on horseback, exposed to every incident of weather. This state of things generally continues about six or seven months during the year, making an average of about thirty hours, or a little over two miles per hour, for the transit of the great western mail; the tardy and frequently impeded progress of which, the people of the west have long considered a national grievance." A good road, it is believed, would reduce the transit of the mail from Maysville to Lexington from thirty to six hours, in all seasons of the year; and create a saving in carrying the mail, nearly equal to the interest of the money proposed to be subscribed by the United States.

This is but a limited view of this improvement. It is in a direct line, and designed as a link in the contemplated national road through the states of Ohio, Kentucky, Alabama, and Mississippi, to the great southwestern mart in the state of Louisiana, passing by many towns; traversing states abounding with iron ore and the various productions of the soil, calculated for military defence and internal trade.

In a case thus circumstanced, the committee think that the immediate representatives of the people were the appropriate judges.

The veto power had been exercised, in cases of expediency, but two or three times in the last forty years.

The committee will pass over these recently made, and confine themselves to the principles which the power contains.

The presidential veto, considering the difficulty of obtaining two-thirds, is nearly as absolute here as in England.

No cause of alarm is here suggested, as either actually existing, or shortly to arise; still we may fall on evil times, when a vain and ambitious man, armed with his constitutional patronage, would seize on the example afforded by a popular president in days of political calmness.

Should the people become familiarised with the exercise of this power, it would lessen respect for themselves and their immediate representatives, and be a virtual change of the spirit of the constitution.

It would enable a designing man, with but ordinary address, to "ingratiate the favor of the people, even in opposition to their own representatives; and, as soon as the sacred spark of confidence in the capacity of the people for legislation, through their representatives, shall be dimmed or extinguished, then indeed, fears for the liberties of the country should be seriously entertained. This, of all other powers delegated by the constitution, ought to be more cautiously exercised.

In similar views on this subject, the committee have been preceded in the report to the house of representatives on president Monroe's message of 1817, which grew out of a difference of opinion between the legislature and the executive on the constitutional powers of congress.

Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, as chairman of the committee, made a report, in which the following passage occurs in relation to this contested power:

"Involving, as it is supposed, a great constitutional question on the one hand, and intimately connected on the other with the improvement, the prosperity, the union, and the happiness of the United States, it presents the fairest claims to candid and diligent investigation. Nor is it without additional interest from the division of opinion to which it has heretofore given rise between the executive and legislative branches of the government—a difference which, in the indulgence of the rights of free opinion, will be still found to exist between the sentiments promulgated in the message of the president, and those which will be advanced by your committee in this report; nor do they conceive that the expression in the message of the president of an opinion unfavorable to the constitutional powers of the general government, should be permitted to have any influence on the disposition of congress to legislate on this interesting subject. For, if the constitutional majority of the two houses should differ with the executive department, the opinion of the latter however respectable, must yield to such an expression of their will. On the other hand, if, from deference to an opinion promulgated in an executive communication, congress should refrain from entering upon the consideration of a question involving constitutional doctrine, it might happen that the opinion of the president would prevent the enaction of a law, even though there should be the constitutional majority of two-thirds of both houses in its favor. Thus, by the introduction of such a practice, the presidential veto would acquire a force unknown to the constitution, and the legislative body would be shorn of its powers, from a want of confidence in its strength, or from indisposition to exert it. Whilst your committee are perfectly aware that nothing like this is contemplated by the executive branch of the government, they presume the house of representatives will scrupulously avoid a course which may be construed into a dereliction of their privileges."

In reviewing the ground over which we have gone, the committee cannot perceive the "wrongs of the past" or "the evils to be arrested." Who among those most unfriendly to national improvements, could rejoice in the annihilation of what has been already accomplished? The Cumberland road, admitting its great expense, growing out of want of experience in the construction of such works at the time, has been of inestimable benefit to the country. Who would wish its advantages destroyed, and the dilapidation of the dwellings and flourishing villages to which it has given rise? Who would desire ignorance of the topography of many important parts of the union, in preference to the accurate knowledge of which we are now in possession? To whom would it give pleasure to behold the impediments in the Ohio and Mississippi rivers replaced? Would any patriot resist the efforts of the nation in the assistance given to effect a communication over the Alleghany, from the Chesapeake to the Ohio, which general Washington had so much at heart, and to which, in his opening message of 1825, president Monroe invited the attention of congress? And lastly, could any citizen desire the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, and the Dismal Swamp canal, to be monumental ruins of the enterprise of their countrymen?

The committee do not propose to meddle with "the discharge of the public debt," as now provided for by existing laws. But, even supposing an interference, should its trivial amount retard the rising prosperity of the country?

If we desire to be an example to the other nations of the earth, let us not fold our arms. It is the employment of the mind, and the activity of the body, that bestow true glory on a nation. We can perform no action more beneficial to ourselves and posterity, or afford no precedent of more valuable instruction to others, than to improve the natural advantages of a country which the beneficence of Providence has given us to dwell upon, and which is surpassed by none within the compass of the globe.

When can we expect a more favorable opportunity to pursue this great and good cause on a scale intrinsically worthy of its importance, and of the extensive resources of this powerful nation?

If station gives influence to individual opinions, the committee are fortified with those of the president's two predecessors, who agreed in sentiment that the time had arrived to prosecute national improvements with the funds of the union. Mr. Monroe used these emphatic words when the public debt was more than double its present amount: "It is of the highest importance that the question should be settled. If the right exists, it ought forthwith to be exercised."

The committee will trouble the house with only a few additional remarks.

A change of public sentiment by the great body of the people is intimated, and made, in part, the foundation of future action.

The people, ever watchful of the true interests of the country, embarked early in this cause and persevered in a manner the most remarkable and praiseworthy. Although checked by the vetos of two presidents, and not cheered heartily by the countenance of any, they never abandoned the pursuit of this important object; and, at the commencement of the present administration, after the severest contest the country had ever witnessed, the representatives of the people, coming fresh from among them, and acquainted with their feelings and wishes, manifested again their unrelaxed zeal in favor of promoting their country's prosperity by national improvements.

If there is any change of public opinion, it is important that it should be known.

No citizen reveres the voice of this tribunal more than our chief magistrate, and none can give more accurate information on the subject than the immediate representatives of the people.

The committee therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient that the general government should continue to prosecute internal improvements by direct appropriations of money, or by subscriptions for stock in companies incorporated in the respective states.

For the public information, as well because it is a real curiosity, we add the document, in extenso, on which the committee of the house of representatives have made such free remarks in the previous report.

House of representatives, Jan. 5.

A message was received from the president, accompanied by letters from the secretary of war and chief engineer, transmitting the following statements upon the subject of internal improvement.

A statement exhibiting the estimated cost of the several works of internal improvement which have been carried on, or for which surveys and estimates have been made, under the direction of the engineer department; and conjectural estimates of the cost of those projected and partially surveyed; made in pursuance of a resolution of the house of representatives of the 17th Dec. 1830.

Works commenced.

Building a pier at Steele's ledge, near the harbor of Belfast, Maine	dolls. 1,033 76
Removing obstructions in the Kennebeck river, at Lovejoy's narrows, do.	12,500 00
Erecting piers and removing obstructions at and near the entrance into the harbor of Saco, do.	7,000 00
Removing obstructions in the Berwick branch of Piscataqua river, do	8,000 00
Repairing pier at the entrance of Kennebunk river, do	7,175 00
Repair of Plymouth beach, Massachusetts	43,560 90
Deepening the channel over the bar at the mouth of Merrimack river, do.	47,841 33
Extending a pier at Edgartown, do.	4,273 56
Improving the harbor of Hyannis, do.	25,567 82
Preservation of Deer island, in Boston harbor, do.	99,390 00
Preservation of a point of land forming Provincetown harbor, do.	11,000 00
Improving the harbor of Nantucket, do.	41,541 50
Erecting a pier, and a beacon thereon, at Allen's rocks, in Warren river, Rhode Island	4,000 00
Erecting piers or other works at Stonington harbor, Connecticut	37,145 00
Removing obstructions in Saugatuck river, do.	1,500 00
Improving the harbor of Mill river, do.	6,097 00
Improving the harbor of Sackett's Harbor, N. York	6,096 18
Improving the entrance into Big Sodus bay, do.	71,931 20
Improving the entrance into Genesee river, do.	53,919 16
Improving Black Rock harbor, do.	37,367 70
Improving the harbor of Buffalo, do.	62,594 00
Improving the harbor of Oswego, do.	72,435 87
Improving the harbor of Dunkirk, do.	23,728 20
Improving harbors in Delaware river, Pennsylvania and Delaware, (including cost of dredging for 10 years to come)	84,413 00
Improving the harbor of Presque Isle, Pennsylvania	44,313 43
Repairing the Cumberland road from Cumberland to Wheeling, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia	230,274 00
Continuation of the Cumberland road in Ohio, Ohio	1,023,076 92
Continuation of do. in Indiana, Indiana	493,582 95
Continuation of do. in Illinois, to Vandalia, Illinois	210,883 81
Improving the navigation of the Conneaut creek, O.	20,001 65
Removing obstructions at the mouth of Grand river, do	26,997 81
Removing obstructions at the mouth of Ashtabula creek, do.	28,357 41
Removing obstructions at the mouth of Cunningham creek, do.	6,473 82
Removing obstructions at Huron river, do.	20,706 84
Removing obstructions at the mouth of Black river, do	2,334 22
Improving Cleaveland harbor, do.	27,653 91
Improving the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, Ohio, Virginia, &c. (estimated cost to the close of the year 1831)	305,000 00
Improving the navigation at Ocracock inlet, N. C.	58,000 00
Improving the navigation of Cape Fear river below the town of Wilmington, North Carolina	72,393 25
Improving the inland navigation between St. Mary's in Geo. and St. John's, in Florida, Georgia and Florida	15,000 00
Removing obstructions in the Appalachicola river, Florida	13,000 00
Improving the navigation of river and harbor of St. Macks, Florida	23,936 00
Improving the harbor of Mobile, Alabama	30,000 00
Deepening the channel thro' the Pass au Heron, Ala.	18,000 00
Removing obstructions at the month of the Pascagoula river, Mississippi	25,500 00
Improving the navigation of Red river at the Great Raft, Louisiana	25,000 00
Constructing a road from Detroit to the Miami of lake Erie, Michigan	37,914 75
Constructing a road from Detroit to Chicago as far as the boundary line of Illinois, Michigan	85,850 00
Constructing a road from Detroit to Saganaw bay, do.	50,000 00
Constructing a road from Detroit to Fort Gratiot, do.	40,000 00
Completing a pier at La Plaisance bay, do.	6,996 61
	Dolls. 3,732,658 56

Works not commenced by the general government, for which surveys and estimates have been made.

Marking out the ship channel of the Penobscot river, Maine	410 00
Improving the navigation of the Cocheco branch of the Piscataqua river, New Hampshire	4,199 36
Improving the harbor of Marblehead, Massachusetts	271,927 59
Improving the harbor of Holmes' Hole, do.	47,807 00
Improving the harbor of Sandy bay, do.	48,692 60
Improving the navigation of North river, do.	16,283 02
Improving the harbor of Bass river, do.	19,930 00
Constructing a breakwater at the island of Nantucket, do.	898,393 14
Canal from Buzzard's bay to Barnstable bay, do.	669,522 00
Improving the harbor of Church's Cove, R. Island	24,062 85
Constructing a pier at the N. end of Gnat island, do.	13,669 12
Improving the harbor of Black Rock, Connecticut	6,201 20
Improving the navigation of the river Thames, do.	72,650 13
Improving the harbor of Westbrook, do.	23,678 57
Improving the harbor of Norwalk, do.	15,668 95
Improving the harbor of Stamford, do.	13,250 05
Rail road from Hudson, N. York, to Berkshire county, Massachusetts, Massachusetts and N. York	420,000 00
Rail road from Catskill to Canajoharie, N. York	698,506 78
Rail road from Oswego to Ithaca, do.	177,028 00
Road from Painted Post to Genesee river, near Rochester, do.	333,540 00
Road from Painted Post to Sackett's Harbor, in Oswego, do.	660,600 00
Improving the harbor of Salmon river, do.	17,060 95
Improving the harbor of Silver creek, do.	33,209 30
Improving Portland harbor, do.	39,966 19
Improving the harbor of Little Sodus, do.	32,327 59
Improving the harbor of Big Sandy creek, do.	36,465 30
Improving the harbor of Pultneyville, do.	30,896 69
Improving the harbor of Sag Harbur, do.	31,087 65
Preserving the harbor of Tucker's Island, N. Jersey	5,695 40
Improving the harbor of Twenty Mile creek, Penn.	4,067 03
Marking out the channel of entrance into Sandusky Bay, Ohio	360 00
Road from Washington city to Buffalo, N. York, District of Columbia, Maryland, Penn. and N. York	1,856 646 90
Improving the navigation of Back creek, Maryland	40,000 00
Improving the harbor of Baltimore, (estimated annual cost of dredging), do	12,391 58
Road from Washington city to Fredericktown, do.	118,833 15
Canal from Baltimore to the Potomac river, Maryland and District of Columbia	2,980,815 40
Chesapeake and Ohio canal, District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania	22,375,427 69
Continuation of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal to Alexandria, District of Columbia	202,562 00

Road from Cumberland to Leesburg, Virginia	383,132 70
Improving the navigation of Deep creek, do.	29,000 00
Road from Washington to N. Orleans (by middle route) District of Columbia, Virginia, &c.	5,997,802 30
Improving the navigation of Pasquotank river, N. C.	2,500 00
Opening Roanoke inlet, do.	568,573 60
Rail road from Charleston to Hamburg, S. Carolina	687,342 00
Connecting the Tennessee and Altamaha (by a canal and rail road), Georgia and Tennessee	4,443,734 42
Improving the harbor of St. Augustine, Florida	35,640 00
Improving the entrance of the harbor of Pensacola, do.	106,690 00
Improving the navigation of the Tennessee river at the Muscle and Colbert shoals, Alabama	1,687,280 46
Marking out the channel between Mobile bay and lake Pontchartrain, by light-houses, &c. Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana	37,500 00
Canal from lake Pontchartrain to the Mississippi river, Louisiana	974,304 00
Improving the entrance into the river Teche, do.	30,000 00
Road from Zanesville to Florence, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama	2,195,477 75
Canal from the village of Monroe to La Plaisance bay, Michigan	24,259 00
Improving the harbor of Chicago, Illinois	59,722 74
	49,311,082 15

Works projected and partially surveyed.

Canal from Merrymeeting to Casco bay, Maine	140,000 00
Canal from the Kennebec at Gardiner, to the Androscoggin at Leeds, do.	600,000 00
Canal along the valley of the Androscoggin river, do.	1,500,000 00
Canal from the Androscoggin to the Connecticut, by the valleys of the Ammonusuc and Dead rivers, N. H.	480,000 00
Improving the navigation of Kenuebec river from Augusta to Seowhegan falls, Maine	150,000 00
Canal from lake Winnipiseogee to the Cocheco at Dover, New Hampshire	600,000 00
Canal from the Merrimack near Plymouth, to the Connecticut at Haverhill, do.	1,000,000 00
Canal from the Merrimack near Concord, to the Connecticut, by the Sunapee lake, do.	1,400,000 00
Canal from the Connecticut to lake Memphremagog, by the valley of the Pasumsic, Vermont, (considered impracticable)
Canal to connect lake Memphremagog with lake Champlain, do.	2,000,000 00
Canal to connect lake Champlain with the Connecticut, by the valleys of Onion and White rivers, do. (practicability not determined.)
Canal from Rutland to White hall, do.	560,000 00
Improving the navigation of the Connecticut river, N. Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts and Conn.	2,400,000 00
Canal from Taunton to Weymouth, Massachusetts	1,250,000 00
Rail road from Catskill to Ithaca, New York	1,500,000 00
Canal to connect the Delaware & Raritan rivers, N.J.	1,500,000 00
Improving the navigation of the Delaware and Raritan rivers near the outlets of the canal proposed to connect them, do.	200,000 00
Post road from Philadelphia to Baltimore, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland	600,000 00
Improving the Alleghany river from Pittsburg to Franklin, Pennsylvania	2,500,000 00
Canal to connect the Pennsylvania and Ohio canals, Pennsylvania and Ohio	2,800,000 00
Road from Union Town, through Pittsburg, to lake Erie, Pennsylvania	500,000 00
Road to connect the Black Swamp road, in Ohio, with Cumberland road and Pennsylvania turnpike, Pennsylvania and Ohio	500,000 00
Canal from Annapolis to the line of the proposed canal from Baltimore to the Potomac, Maryland, (considered impracticable.)
Canal from the Potomac to the Rappahannock, Va.	600,000 00
Canal to connect the James and Kenhawa rivers, do.	3,000,000 00
Canal to connect the Roanoke and Kenhawa rivers, do.	2,300 000 00
Canal from the Neuse to the North river, N. C.	200,000 00
Canal from Elizabeth river to Lockwood's Folly, do.	100,000 00
Canal to connect the Tennessee and Savannah rivers, S. Carolina and Tennessee	4,400,000 00
Canal to connect the Gulf of Mexico with the Atlantic, Florida	3,900,000 00
Improving the passes at the mouth of the Mississippi river, Louisiana, (practicability not determined.)
Canal to connect the Hiwassee and Coosa rivers, Tennessee, and Alabama rivers	4,000,000 00
Improving the navigation of the Kentucky river, improving the navigation of Licking river, improving the navigation of Green river, Kentucky, (practicability not determined on.)
Removing obstructions at the Falls of Ohio, Kentucky, (practicability not yet determined on.)
Canal around the falls of Ohio, on the Ind. side, Ind.	520,000 00
Canal to connect the waters of lake Michigan with those of the Wabash and White rivers, do.	5,000,000 00
Canal to connect the Miama of lake Erie with the Wabash, Indiana and Ohio	2,000,000 00
Improving the navigation of the Wabash river, from its mouth to Eel river, Indiana	200,000 00
Canal to connect lake Michigan with the Illinois river, Illinois	1,800,000 00
Continuation of the Cumberland road from Vandalia to the seat of government of Missouri, Ill. and Mis.	1,000,000 00
Marking out a road from the western confines of Missouri to the boundary of N. Mexico, Missouri ter.
	51,200,000 00

RECAPITULATION.

Works commenced	3,792,658 86
Works not commenced, (by the general government), and for which surveys and estimates have been made	49,311,082 15
Works projected and partially surveyed	51,200,000 00
Dolls.	104,243,740 71

Engineer department, Washington, 21st Dec. 1830.

Statement of expenditures made on account of internal improvements, to include the 30th September, 1830, specifying, as far as practicable, the several works, ascertained from the books of the 3d auditor—furnished in pursuance of a resolution of the house of representatives of the 17th December, 1830.

Building piers at Steel's Ledge, dolls.	1,033 76
Erecting of piers, placing beacons, &c. at Saco harbor,	7,000 00
Removing obstructions in the Berwick branch of the Piscataqua river,	8,000 00
Survey of the Piscataqua river,	190 46
Removing obstructions in the Kenebec river	3,220 32
Repairing piers at the entrance of Kenebunk river,	5,000 00
Repairs of Plymouth beach	38,896 90
Preservation of Plymouth beach	1,850 00
Making surveys, and improving the harbors of Edgartown and Hyannis, mouth of the Merrimack	11,150 00
Extending a pier at Edgartown harbor	3,725 27
Deepening channel over the bar at the mouth of Merrimack river	35,606 72
Completing breakwater at Hyannis harbor	6,517 82
Preservation of Deer island	86,803 50
Survey in relation to constructing piers in the harbors of Holmes' Hole and Marblehead	249 42
Survey of Saugatuck river and harbor	400 00
Removing obstructions to the same	1,471 97
Survey of Stonington harbor	200 00
Erecting piers at Stonington harbor	23,351 77
Improving the harbor of Nantucket	29,406 00
Erecting a pier and beacon at Allen's Rocks	3,811 44
Improving the harbor of Mill river,	6,097 00
Improving the harbor of Sackett's Harbor	5,487 00
Improving the entrance into Big Sodus bay	25,680 00
Improving the entrance into Genesee river	20,856 05
Improving Black Rock harbor	33,198 00
Improving the harbor of Buffalo	64,694 00
Improving the harbor of Oswego	50,403 93
Improving Dunkirk harbor	20,155 50
Improving the harbor of Presque Isle	35,223 18
Examination and survey of piers at Port Penn, Marcus Hook and fort Mifflin	9,476 89
Examinations and surveys of piers at N. Castle, Port Penn, Marcus Hook and Chester	6,600 00
Examination and survey of the piers at Chester	28 25
Closing the breach in the peninsula of Presque Isle bay	7,390 25
Repairing the Cumberland road	145,000 00
Continuation of the Cumberland road	605,749 00
Continuation of the Cumberland road through Indiana	37,000 00
Continuation of the Cumberland road westwardly of Zanesville	118,212 82
Opening of the Cumberland road through Illinois	2,000 00
Payment of a balance due John McClure for repairs on the Cumberland road	510 00
Improving the navigation of Conneaut creek	13,200 00
Removing obstructions at the mouth of grand river	20,318 29
Removing obstructions at the mouth of Ashtabula creek	21,343 75
Removing obstructions at the mouth of Cunningham creek	6,473 76
Removing obstructions at the mouth of Huron river	17,228 71
Removing obstructions at the mouth of Black river	15,540 00
Improving Cleaveland harbor	23,100 00
Completing a pier at the mouth of Grand river	1,000 00
Purchase of a dredging machine, &c. for removing obstructions or shoals at Ocracock inlet	38,800 00
Improving the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers	212,253 97
Improving the navigation of Cape Fear river	24,260 00
Improving inland navigation between St. Mary's Georgia, and St. John's, Florida	13,498 75
Survey of Pamptico sound	932 70
Removing obstructions in the Appalachicola rivers	5,000 00
Improving the navigation of the river and harbor of St. Mark's	5,000 00
Survey relating to a canal to connect the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico,	19,680 90
Improving the harbor of Mobile	11,578 78
Deepening the channel at Pass au Heron, near the bay of Mobile	11,950 00
Preservation of the harbor at the mouth of Pascagou river, &c.	9,600 00
Improving the navigation of Red river	17,924 00
Road from the northwest boundary of the state of Ohio, near the rapids of the Miami of lake Erie, to Detroit	20,000 00

Road from Detroit to Chicago	39,000 00
Road from Detroit to Saganaw river and bay, and to fort Gratiot,	11,773 56
Completing road from Detroit to fort Gratiot	15,000 00
Completing a pier at La Plaisance bay	6 095 86
Survey of the ship channel at Penobscot river	297 30
Survey of Cocheco branch of Piscataqua river	59 76
Survey to ascertain the particability and necessity of constructing piers in the harbor of Holmes' Hole and Marblehead	249 42
Examining pier at Sandy bay	150 00
Survey of North river, &c.	178 94
Survey of Bass river	149 43
Survey of the harbor of Nantucket	2,99 37
Survey of a canal route to connect Buzzard and Barnstable bays	2,023 13
Survey of Church Cove and town of Little Compton	195 19
Survey of the river Thames	150 00
Survey of the harbor of Weshrook	130 00
Survey of the harbor of Norwalk	80 00
Survey of the harbor of Stamford	100 00
Survey of the mouth of Sandy creek	127 44
Survey of the bar at the mouth of Sag harbor	150 00
Survey of Flat Beach Tucker's island	100 00
Survey of Deep creek	80 00
Survey of Pasquotank river	80 00
Survey of the harbor of St. Augustine	300 00
Survey of the Muscle and Colbert shoals,	200 00
Survey of the water tract between Mobile bay and lake Pontchartrain	175 00
Survey of Sandusky bay	350 30
Survey of the passes at the mouth of the Mississippi	411 40
Sea wall for the preservation of George's island	7,260 68
Survey of the Wabash river	500 00
For a road from the western frontier of Missouri to the confines of New Mexico	20,000 00
Survey of southern shore of lake Ontario	390 53
Survey of Oswego bay and harbor	200 00
Survey of the Genesee river	300 00
Building piers at New Castle	25,000 00
Repairs of certain roads in the Creek Nation	10,000 00
Completing the public road through do.	3,621 01
Opening a road from Reynoldsburgh through do.	4,000 00
Survey of the river and harbor of St. Mark's	302 75
Military road from the mouth of the Matanaweook to Mars' Hill	61,708 65
Completing military road from Plattsburgh to Sackett's harbor	3,500 00
Opening and repairs to Old King's road	6.740 30
Opening a road from Pensacola to St. Augustine	33,000 00
Opening a road from St. Mary's river to Tampa bay	18'000 00
Opening a road from cape Sable to Suwanee river	3,000 00
Opening a road from or near Turner Brashears', on the old Natchez road to a point on the military road	5,000, 00
Opening a road from fort Smith to fort Towson on the Red river	11,114 65
For connecting the Detroit on the river Raisin with the Maumee and Sandusky roads and opening the same	17,900 09
Survey of La Plaisance bay	110 80
Surveying and making a road from opposite Memphis, Tennessee, to Little Rock	24,065 00
Surveying and making a road from Little Rock to cantonment Gibson	10,000 00
Military road between Pensacola and Blakely and Mobile point	3,000 00
Repairing the Military road between Pensacola and Tallahassee	3,000 00
Repairing the military road between St. Augustine and Tallahassee	3,000 00
Completing repairs of road between Alachua court house and Jacksonville	1,000 00
Making a survey of the water courses tributary to, and west of the Mississippi, also, those tributary to the said river, and north and west of the Ohio	9,803 46
Making surveys, maps and charts of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, from the rapids of the Ohio at Louisville to the Balize	4,186 21
For the survey, and completing the survey of ports and harbors	12,003 53
For the survey of the coast of the United States	46,726 66
Erection of a breakwater at the mouth of the Delaware bay	318,134 50
Survey of the Pea Patch island, &c.	25,000 00
	Dolls. 2 740,373 78

Expenditures under the act of the 30th of April, 1814, &c. for surveys, roads and canals, viz:

Survey of a canal route between the Mississippi and lake Pontchartrain	dolls. 186 37
Reconnoissance of a route for a road from Zanesville Ohio, to Florence, Alabama	175 23
Survey of a canal route to connect the Tennessee with the Coosa river, and a survey to improve Tennessee river at the Muscle shoals	2,184 41
Survey of a canal route from Weymouth to Taunton river, Massachusetts	2,539 45
Survey of a canal route from Boston bay to Narraganset bay	1,446 86
Survey of Mill river, Fairfield and Black Rock	110 46
Survey of Newport and Warren, Rhode Island	387 59
Survey of a rail road route from Hudson, N. York to Pittsfield, Massachusetts	327 08
Survey of a rail road between Ithaca, Catskill, &c.	2,538 61
Survey of a canal route between lakes Memphremagog and Champlain by Black river and the La Moile	5,733 05
Survey of a canal route between Pittsburg and the mouth of the Elk river	5,467 73
Survey of the Allegany river	806 70
Survey of canal route from Baltimore to the Potomac	3,760 97
Survey of the James river and Kenhawa canal route	9,951 90
Survey of the James and Kenhawa and the Roanoke and Kenhawa canals	1,731 20
Survey of the road from Cumberland, via Winchester, &c. to the district of Columbia,	1,533 49
Survey of the Charleston and Hamburg rail road	5,949 51
Surveys between the Savannah and Tennessee rivers	1,448 78
Survey of a canal route between the Tennessee and Altamaha	8,496 25
Surveys in the state of Indiana	27,116 23
Surveys of Kentucky, Licking, Green and Batren rivers	337 24
Surveys of routes to connect the Black Swamp road with the Cumberland road	714 46
Survey of the Ohio and Erie canal	68 31
Reconnoissance of a road from Cleveland to Uniontown	4 10
Survey of the Cumberland road to the District of Columbia	1,438 13
Survey of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road	6,685 83
Survey of a road from Washington city to Buffalo	485 00
Survey of a road from Baltimore to Philadelphia	423 08
Survey of a road from Washington city to N. Orleans	4,626 88
Survey of a road from Washington city to lake Ontario	1,479 10
Survey of the Chesspeake and Delaware canal	51 00
Survey of various canal routes in Florida, Louisiana and Alabama	4,864 46
Surveys for Pennsylvania and Ohio canals,	6,181 20
Survey of the Dismal Swamp canal	339 40
Surveys, (in common), in Indiana and Ohio	1,809 12
Survey of the rapids of the Mississippi river	152 21
Surveys in Vermont and New Hampshire	3,288 69
Surveys in Kentucky	190 20
Surveys of the Michigan and Illinois canal	7,876 94
Survey of Kennebeck river	3,442 22
Bridges across the Ohio river, &c.	45 18
Survey of the Connecticut river	3,179 61
Survey of the Hudson and Berkshire rail road	885 19
Surveys of the Delaware river, &c.	469 73
Survey of the Raritan river	553 30
For various expenditures incident to the board of engineers for internal improvement, and for the topographical officer at the seat of government, purchase and repair of instruments, &c. and for surveys of rivers, &c. which could not be particularly ascertained or designated, and for pay of civil engineers, &c. &c.	94,777 12

Total amount on account of surveys, plans, and estimates, &c. upon the subject of roads and canals, per act 30th April, 1830, &c. dolls. 226,219 62

It may be proper to remark, that the accounts for internal improvements were not generally referred to this office for adjustment prior to the act of 30th April, 1824, hence, the expenditures contained in the foregoing statement do not include any other than those the accounts for which have been settled in this office.

Treasury department, third auditor's office, Dec. 31, 1830.

PETER HAGNER, auditor.

Statement of payments made at the treasury of the United States for sundry objects of internal improvements, the accounts of which have been kept and settled under the head of the civil list, from the commencement of the government to the 16th of December, 1830.

Opening roads in the Northwestern territory, now Ohio	dolls. 5,264 53
Road from Nashville to Natchez,	3,000 00
Road from Georgia to New Orleans	5,500 00
Road under the treaty of Brownstown	5,367 29
Road within the Indian territory, Nashville to New Orleans	7,920 00
Road from the Mississippi to the Ohio river	5,539 35
Roads in the territory of Illinois	8,000 00
Repairing the road in the Indian country, Mississippi	15 000 00
Repairing the post road in the state of Alabama	6,000 00
The Cumberland road 1,057 325 20 } Repairing the Cumberland road 25,000 00 }	1 692,325 20
Roads and canals within the state of Indiana, 3 per cent. fund	131,752 82
Roads and canals within the state of Missouri 3 per cent. fund	22,702 24
Roads and canals within the state of Mississippi, 3 per cent. fund	26,385 52
Roads within the state of Ohio, 3 per cent. fund	324,096 38
Stock in the Chesapeake & Delaware canal company	450,000 00
Stock in the Dismal Swamp canal company	200,000 00
Stock in the Louisville & Portland canal company	233,500 00
Stock in the Chesapeake & Ohio canal company	410,000 00
Roads and canals within the state of Alabama 3 per cent. fund	63,654 03
Removing obstructions in the Savannah river	46 666 59
	dolls. 3,667,673 92

Treasury department, register's office, Dec. 24, 1830.

T. L. SMITH, register.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES.] No. 13—VOL. IV. BALTIMORE, MAY 28, 1831. [VOL. XL. WHOLE No. 1027.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

☞ The rightful "credit" was omitted to be given to the interesting article on "steam engines" inserted in the last REGISTER—and we have now forgotten to whom a just acknowledgment is due.

☞ The proceedings at the late Tammany dinner at New York, will amuse or interest many who look into the "politics of the day."

☞ To subscribers. Once in two years it is indispensable that a particular examination of the account of every subscriber should be made, with a view to its prompt collection, if in arrears. Many who with all possible cheerfulness and punctuality, pay hundreds and thousands of dollars, feeling able to meet our little demands at any time, wholly neglect to meet them at all, until called on—and there are some whose memories are so treacherous about money-matters, or else are always seeking some season more convenient than the present, who require frequent jogging, in behalf of the quid pro quo; and hence the publisher suffers much for the want of small sums, which cannot be important to any, in their individual character.

The editor gratefully acknowledges a much increased attention on the part of his subscribers, that his press may be promptly supplied with the "essential oil" by which it is kept running—still there are many, (the aggregate of whose accounts is exceedingly burthensome and hard to bear) who neglect to furnish their quota of this interesting material. We have endeavored to perform our duty to all these, and incessantly labored to amuse or inform them; and the book-keeper of this establishment, Mr. Philip Reigart, is now to enter upon his biennial tour of duty, to inform all such of the state of their accounts and urge the discharge of them. We wish that many—that every one, may anticipate his application, and relieve us of the necessity of such proceedings in future. But the fact is—we must have money. There "is no mistake about that."

☞ Soon after leaving the wharf at New York on Monday last, I was surprised to find in the "Courier and Enquirer" of that morning, an editorial article headed "A GRAND CONFERENCE," in which the names of several gentlemen, as well as my own, were rudely given to the public, as connected with certain political transactions, which were gravely stated as having just then taken place in that city—introduced as follows:

"A grand conference (we will not call it a caucuss, "though it is very like one), has taken place between "the leaders of the anti-masonic party, and the leaders "of the American system party, now assembled in con-"vention in this city. Mr. Weed of Albany, and judge "Morris of Butternuts, being in town at the same time, "we presume represented the anti-masonic interest. "Mr. Niles, Mr. Matthew L. Davis, and several other "gentlemen, interested in the question, are supposed to "have acted in behalf of the American system men. "The object of the conference it is understood, related "to a candidate for the presidency, to be offered by the "convention to be held next fall in Baltimore."

The editors then proceed to offer many speculations, suggestions, and positive assertions, to shew the ground taken by the parties to this "conference"—with all the firmness and precision of a person who had been present on the occasion—nay, as if notes had been taken on the spot of what was said, as will be seen in this paragraph:

"In the course of the deliberations, a curious avowal "was made. 'It is impossible,' said one of the anti-ma-"sonic agents, 'to give Mr. Clay the anti-masonic vote "of this state, of course gen. Jackson will be elected.' "'We cannot help it,' said one of the leading tariff men, "'Mr. Clay will succeed gen. Jackson—if not at the "next election, he will certainly unite the west in his "behalf after gen. Jackson retires. Should we now with-"draw him as a candidate, we sacrifice him forever, and "also our character for consistency and fidelity.'"

It is more than twenty years since I published a party political paper, and it is more than probable that I shall never be engaged in such an undertaking—unless so far as the support of old principles may bear upon passing political discussions and events: but the time has been, and for several years, when I was the proprietor and editor of a daily newspaper which, in the "reformed" language of the day, might have been called "the organ of the democratic party" in Maryland—and it was conducted with no small share of party prejudice and passion: but never was the name of a private gentleman editorially mentioned as connected with political transactions, until after a careful investigation of the truth of the matters alleged, and even then with general reluctance, lest the right of private opinion and individual action might be too roughly interfered with; not considering it decent thus to drag a fellow citizen into public notice, or as consistent with the dignity of the press to become a mere Swiss "for the preservation of the republican party," as was said when the freemen of a great state were refused the privilege of voting for a president of the United States. Tempora mutantur. In the present "improved condition of the press," every MENDEZ PINTO'S tale is accepted in preference to "proofs from holy writ," if it better answers the ephemeral and mean purposes of the day.

Now to the facts, as roundly asserted and carefully detailed to enlighten "the democratic party." I have never knowingly seen, nor corresponded with, "Mr. Weed, of Albany" or "judge Morris, of Butternuts"—their persons and political preferences are equally unknown to me, however distinguished they may be in New York, as I suppose that they are, because of this notice of them—so little informed am I of local parties at political proceedings in that state. To Mr. Davis I think that I have been twice introduced, at a long interval; the last time at Washington, in December last, when we had a general conversation of about five minutes; since then I have not seen and recognized him or communicated with him, and should not know the gentleman if meeting him on the street. So far as to the persons of those who held the conference and agreed upon certain things.

But I will go further and say, that during the three days which I spent last week in New York, I attended no meeting of persons, for the consideration of any subject whatever, except the convention of manufacturers, to which I had been invited—and discussed no matter whatsoever, unless with reference to questions which had been stated in that convention, with widely opened doors, and over whose deliberations a most worthy and highly valued citizen of New York, Nathan Williams, esq. of Utica, presided—who is, as I casually learned, a "Jackson man."* The object of this convention was solely and purely to take into consideration the best means of preventing frauds on the revenue of the United States, as committed through the custom-houses, and thereby secure that protection which the laws designed should be extended to the national industry, in all its branches.—And frauds are committed exceedingly injurious to the manufacturers of iron, and which must prove fatal as well to the growers as the manufacturers of wool, unless promptly checked with a strong arm—as I shall take occasion to shew at an early day.* And these things so occupied my time and mind—that, perhaps for ten times three years, I have hardly spoken or heard less of transient political subjects in any three days together, than in those which I last spent in the city of New York. My journey there had no sort of connexion with them, except so far as the interests of the free working people of the United States, and of all classes and descriptions, are concerned in the operation of principles which I have entertained and steadily supported for more than thirty years past—and to the yet only partial success of which I ascribe the present unexampled prosperity of my country, in all its parts where labor is honored. To be among the humblest of the agents in bringing about this glorious state of things, is a consideration which carries with itself its own reward; and is not subject to human punishment.

* Nor did I understand that any other meeting was contemplated, or held, or other subject discussed, by any of the gentlemen who attended the convention—and I think it nearly impossible that either could have happened without my privity. Besides, had any political operation been designed, it would have obtained my protest against it—for, whatever may be my own individual preferences, or however far I am willing to go in support of them, I never have, nor ever will, yield my consent to any party political arrangement concerning the "American System"—though not indisposed to take a full share in political concerns generally, as a private man.

The article in the "Courier and Enquirer" invites much reflection on the motives that led to its manufacture and publication. But I have not time to go into an investigation of them. Gentlemen engaged in [foreign] commerce may hold conventions when they please, and "caucus" in "chambers of commerce" every day—but no sooner do those concerned in a far greater interest meet together, than the British or party press opens a foul battery upon them, misrepresenting their purposes and grossly falsifying their proceedings. At the present time, and for reasons which the editors of the "Courier and Enquirer" can promptly advance, if willing to do so, every movement of the manufacturers is regarded with particular jealousy. But this will not avail any thing. Our object is to secure that protection which the law establishes, to promote the general prosperity of the republic in peace and defend it in war, and we shall obtain it, in despite of the perseverance and cunning and perjury of British agents, or the scoffs and sneers and misrepresentations of those who, on any account, directly because of pecuniary rewards, or indirectly for party purposes, support a foreign hostile interest.

The article in the "Courier and Enquirer" shews that terror-stricken state of feeling which pervades the mind of a village school boy when he passes a churchyard in the evening, and sees eyes of fire and mouths of flame in stones and stumps and harmless trees—or a spirit of mendacity which disregards means to accomplish purposes, and proclaims "all's fair in politics," even to the violation of a seal. On one of the horns of this dilemma, the editors of the "New York Courier and Enquirer," so far as it concerns myself, are placed—they will elect either which they prefer, and there stand impaled for the rudeness and wantonness of their assault upon me.

H. NILES,
Editor of the Register.

Baltimore, May 25, 1831.

 As I have no hope that the editors of the "Courier and Enquirer" will make reparation in an acknowledgment of the false statements which they have published—[I call them false, because they are too circumstantial to have been conceived in error], I respectfully request that the friends of truth in the city and state of New York, so far as they conveniently can, will give a circulation to this article, and oblige H. N.

☞ The base charge of "bribery"—of mean and rascally money-made-corruption, preferred against the members of the legislature of Pennsylvania en masse, because of their vote concerning the bank of the United States, has been indignantly repelled by some of the gentlemen implicated—see page 224. But we much doubt the propriety of this proceeding against persons whose praise or censure may be purchased for six cents the bushel—if we are right in apprehending that no others than such as these could have suggested and promulgated so foul a falsehood. Party discipline—and an unjust surrender of private judgment to political "combinations" (as on a very recent occasion and also relating to the bank), too often leads into legislative proceedings that should be severely reprehended, and individuals may be corruptly influenced—but a charge of bribery against the whole body, as it were, of the legislature of so great a state as Pennsylvania, is too gross to be entertained except in the minds of persons conscious of the vile spirit which directs their own conduct, and can hardly be called scandalous—for no other than the corrupt can believe an accusation so infamous: Hence our doubt of the propriety of the rejection of this charge. But such things, proceeding from what are called "organs of the government," are calculated to injure us abroad, and herein we discover the only excuse for those gentlemen in arraying themselves against a pair of editors. The enemies of liberty are always on the alert to make it believed, "that the people are their own worst enemies"—and that, as "every man has his price," it is better to have some sort of authority in which the fulness of infallibility may dwell, than permit the people "to manage their own concerns in their own way"—crying out, that he who has the power to "reward" or "punish" cannot do a wrong thing; so long, at least, as they themselves partake liberally of the pluckings of the public goose: and hence the present "improved condition of the press" in our own country, as shewn in a preceding article.

☞ As a matter for record, we intend to publish as soon as convenient, the letter of Richard Rush, esquire, to the anti-masonic committee of the county of York, Pennsylvania, though rejecting certain parts of his communication, and believing that his charges against the press are both illiberal and unjust. There are many persons, (and we admit ourselves to be of the number), who have some favorite object in view, which they consider so important that it should take the lead of, if not swallow up, most other considerations—and in this spirit it is, we apprehend, that Mr. Rush has preferred the charges suggested. But having yet enough to do with our own particular pursuit, we neither will, nor can, enter upon any new subject of discussion so extensive as that in which Mr. Rush has embarked, whatever may be our private opinions or public wishes concerning it. Had we given up our pages to that subject—publishing all the statements of facts on both sides of the question, as our practice is, we should oftentimes have had no room left for any thing else—and the end would have been, a complete diversion of this publication from the purposes to which it was originally devoted. The like reason must, doubtless, influence others—and we think that Mr. Rush, on due reflection, will feel disposed to withdraw a large part of the amount of accusation which he has heaped on the press. But we shall not enter upon any controversy on this point, or any other connected with it, for the causes already set forth.

EFFECTS OF "THE SYSTEM." The following is an extract from a letter to the editor from a venerable and much valued friend, resident in one of the lately built manufacturing villages in the north, and we offer it as a fair and honest specimen of the general effects of the "American System"—for similar facts do exist at every such place with which we are personally acquainted. Education, refined manners, sound morality with a close attention to what are regarded religious duties, regularity of life, economy, comfort and prosperity, issue from these establishments as exhaustless fountains of good—while an extended production, with a mightily increased value of land, irresistibly follow them. We know villages near which the price of farming land, not possessed of any extraordinary qualities or privileges (except because of its location), is held at from 100 to 300 dollars an acre—we know places lately desolate, where the water-fall wasted itself in useless foam, that are now thronged with busy men, worthy and intelligent women, and cheerful and happy children—at which there are "young ladies," who, because of their sparkling eyes, rosy cheeks and neatness of apparel, might attract attention even in the famous "Broadway displays" of female grace and beauty in New York—and whose general information or observance of that course of conduct which renders woman really respectable, will not fail in a comparison with the acquirements and proceedings of their fair sisters of that great city, at large—but are decidedly superior to the qualifications and conduct of their own classes resident therein, in all that adorns the sex, and renders them good wives and joyful mothers. The truth is—that these establishments, because of the absolute necessity of preserving order in and about them, instead of being "sinks of vice," are schools for virtue—at which the rudest and roughest materials are fashioned into rational and worthy men and women—laboring, it is true, but leaving their old rank as mere animals on the face of the earth, and assuming a consciousness of their own responsibilities and powers,—steadily looking forward, and confidently expecting, a bettering of their condition—the principle of which is the strongest of all human excitements to perseverance in well doing. How often have we wished that southern ladies would make themselves acquainted with these things, that they might influence their husbands and fathers in favor of their sex, and so rescue yet tens of thousands of the poor,—helpless orphans, perhaps, or the children of ignorant or brutalized parents, from the ignorance and vulgarity, and all the concomitant vices or crimes which flow from such sources! Woman, by nature, is always gentle, generous and kind—place her in the way of being good, and she will generally be so; but untaught the value of herself, or unable to obtain an honest and honorable subsistence, how often, alas, does she fall into habits to obtain a temporary relief which terminate in long enduring misery and premature death! Let the ladies of the south be rendered sensible of the real condition of things, and we shall have advocates for the "American System" whose generous persuasions will establish the success of our cause beyond the influence of political circumstances, or the power of foreigners, whose constant effort it is to break it down—that they may have profit in the afflictions of our laboring poor, and because of the common degradation of free American people.

* The present great demand and high price for wool, to the contrary notwithstanding.

But to the letter. Our feelings always run away with us when our mind is led to a consideration of the subjects to which it so happily relates.

Letter to the editor.

After some matters of business—"Our place increases moderately but substantially. None of our manufacturers have remitted labor for a single working day, nor neglected to settle and pay off, at the end of every quarter. About one hundred scholars in the male and female departments, are fully supplied with books, maps, charts and globes, and other requisite articles, and a classical branch is soon to be added to our school establishment. Our lands have been doubled in their production since manufacturing commenced here. The sale of spirituous liquors has been abandoned at five stores within the last two years, and they are sold no where by small measure except at the taverns, and not much in them. Out of more than twenty drunkards that we had, fifteen are under the influence of temperate habits, and, from complete tipplers, have been turned into regularly working men. No ardent spirits are used in any description of labor in this village, and thrift and comfort are apparent every where about us. These, my dear sir, are some of the fruits of the American System co-operating with temperance efforts, among a rational and industrious people. The condition of our manufacturing population would rejoice your heart—having so much contributed to bring about this happy state of things. Travelled, as I have done, from the colonial condition of my country to the present day, and personally mingled in the revolutionary contest and witnessed the departure of the last of the invaders of our land—and since then experienced several painful seasons of reaction because of temporary abandonments of the true policy of this republic, as well as felt, with tens of thousands of others, the happy state of things when that policy was recurred to—I think that I cannot be mistaken in imputing the present prosperity of all classes of persons under my observation, to the progress and developements of the AMERICAN SYSTEM. This great truth is becoming more and more apparent every day, and nothing can resist its march as education extends to make known its benefits, and exalt the character of man.

"Excuse me. I never can touch the subject without feeling an influence that I cannot resist. I did not intend to say more than to congratulate you on the success of the cause which you have so nobly espoused."

☞Such is a genuine letter, fresh from the yet warm heart of a revolutionary soldier—esteemed for long past services to his country in the time of its need, and at the head of the society in which he lives, not because of his wealth, but on account of his active virtue, sound intellect and unquestioned integrity—and I freely confess that I would rather deserve and receive the praise of such a man, than be honored with the approbation of his "most gracious" and most wise majesty, king William the fourth. And I beg leave respectfully to tender to my venerable friend the sincerest thanks for this additional act of his kindness towards me. It is pleasant to repose under the shade of such oaks of the revolution—for there is safety in the glory which surrounds them.

Extracts from another letter.

While on this subject, we may as well add some extracts from a letter of a gentleman of North Carolina, received on Thursday last.

After handsomely speaking of some money enclosed, it says—"when your paper first came under my observation, my notions considerably coincided with those of my southern brethren—but as I continued to read, they became softened, and, finally, I became very much interested in the question which has long put you and the south at variance—and to every candid and impartial mind, your illustrations of the subject have been satisfactory; yet, as it has created much contention and division, I am willing to give a still more careful and attentive perusal to your facts and figures.

"We are aware that the doctrines which you have so zealously adhered to have been unjustly assailed, and that your motives have been unwisely impeached—but whatever means may be employed to swerve you from your course, they cannot alter one jot or tittle of your support of principles, let nullifiers, disunionists and anti-American System men say what they please. You are the same, one and inseparable. You have heard it said that the southern states are on the eve of rebellion—that the day was not distant when the south would rise in her majesty, and take just vengeance on her oppressors; all this is absurd and ridiculous—we are as much opposed to disunion and nullification as any set of people in the union," &c.

☞There is some satisfaction in the matter stated by our friend in North Carolina. Many, like him, have ascertained the merits of the question at issue, being willing to receive the truth; but others not only close their own eyes against the light, but have despotically interfered to prevent others from seeing it, by proscribing this paper and abusing its editor. Yet our principles are rapidly gaining ground. Dr. Thomas Cooper and Mr. Condy Raguet have changed sides, and endeavored to write down themselves; while thousands of worthy, but hitherto prejudiced, persons have examined for themselves, and joined us in the great cause of American Independence and national prosperity, through the encouragement and support of the national industry; and tens of thousands are ready to come unto us, the opportunity to investigate the facts being allowed them. Forward, friends! "The revolution is not over"—the chains that bound us to Great Britain cannot be dissolved, while we remain dependent on her iron manufactories for ploughshares and muskets, and on her flocks and factories for clothing and blankets—the want of which latter cost us ten times more lives than we lost in battle, in the war of 1812. Thousands of brave men miserably perished, because that it had been the policy of their country to rely upon foreigners, for materials indispensable to the nation's defence. Shall the like happen again? Let the patriot answer! We say—NEVER.

REPORTS. It is reported that a vessel is to be fitted at Norfolk to convey Mr. Eaton, late secretary of war, to Russia—Mr. Randolph being soon expected home from England!

That Mr. Van Buren will succeed Mr. McLane as minister at London, but not leave the United States until after the arrival of Mr. McL.

That Mr. Van Buren will not be a candidate for the vice presidency of the United States.

That judge White, of Tennessee, because of private reasons, has declined the place of secretary of war.

That Mr. Crawford is about to make a final reply to Mr. Calhoun, under his own proper signature.

That col. R. M. Johnson, of Kentucky, will be the new secretary of war.

A CONVENTION OF MANUFACTURERS was held last week at New York, in Clinton Hall—present about 80 delegates and invited members. The hon. Nathan Williams, of Utica, was appointed president, and the hon. Henry Shaw, of Massachusetts, and Samuel D. Hubbard, esq. of Connecticut, officiated as secretaries. The object of the meeting was to check, or prevent, frauds on the revenue. The convention, having brought its business to a close, adjourned on Friday evening, the 20th inst. An account of the proceedings may be expected in the next REGISTER.

MR. INGHAM. From the American Sentinel, of May 25. The following letter from Mr. Ingham to a friend, has been handed to us for publication. The intense curiosity which prevails to ascertain the causes which produced the breaking up of the late cabinet, renders all authentic matters connected with it of general interest. Mr. Ingham it seems distinctly repudiates the existence of any want of official harmony among the heads of department.

Washington, 6th May, 1831.

Dear sir—I learn with some surprise from your enquiries, as well as those of others, that an impression has been made on the public mind to a considerable extent, that the cabinet was so much embarrassed by the dissensions of its members as to render it incapable of transacting the public business. You may be assured, that there is not the slightest truth in such a rumor. The official intercourse of the heads of departments with each other and with the president, has never, to my knowledge, been interrupted for a moment, nor has any difference of opinion as to the measures of the government, divided the cabinet in a single instance, so far as I recollect, according to the line of separation now so generally ascribed in the public papers. I am, very respectfully, yours, S. D. INGHAM.

☞ This letter appears to be in direct opposition to the facts stated by Mr. Branch, who broadly speaks of a "want of harmony in the cabinet"—says he went as far as a "man of honor could go" to promote a good understanding in it—but adds "it seems I was expected to go still farther [that is farther than a 'man of honor' could go], and not doing so, it has been held good cause for my dismissal." And the president himself, in his letter to Mr. Ingham, clearly admits that the cabinet had ceased to be a "unit." But every one will draw his own conclusions on this subject. It is now intimated that a publication which Mr. Ingham was said to be preparing for the press, will not appear. We know not whether he intended to publish, or whether he has declined it.

MR. BRANCH. The following is the reply of this gentleman, to a committee of the citizens of Bertie county, North Carolina.

Enfield, May 17th, 1831.

Gentlemen—Your communication of the 10th inst. in behalf of a number of the citizens of Bertie county, conveying their wishes that I should become a candidate to represent this district in the next congress of the United States, was handed me yesterday evening.

This manifestation of continued confidence and support, especially at this time, has deeply affected me, and I pray you gentlemen, to assure my fellow citizens of Bertie county, that while I entertain a deep sense of my own unworthiness, yet under the influence of the strongest ties which can bind man to his fellow man, I feel incapable of denying to them any services within my ability to render; and further, that were my public services ten times greater than I know them to be, the kindness of my fellow citizens would more than compensate me for any personal sacrifices which they have cost me.

My official connexion with the present administration has been dissolved under circumstances painful to me; yet rest assured that no considerations shall induce me to change my political course, or throw me into collision with the friends with whom I have hitherto most heartily co-operated.

Accept, in return for your generous wishes for my prosperity and happiness, assurances of profound respect and esteem, JOHN BRANCH.

To Jos. D. White, Alexander W. Mebane, Geo. B. Outlaw, Thos. Bond, Jos. B. G. Routhac, Robt. C. Watson, Jno. Watson, John F. Ward, Edward Hardy, Nathaniel W. Fletcher.

MR. MCDUFFIE. A public dinner was given to this gentleman at Charleston on the 19th inst.—"for his zealous and uncompromising exertions to support the rights and interests of the southern states." Elias Horry, esq. presided on the occasion, assisted by H. L. Pinckney, Jacob F. Mintzing and James Ferguson, esquires. On being toasted, Mr. McDuffie rose, and spoke for three hours. We have no other particulars of the proceedings, except that gov. Hamilton also addressed the meeting.

APPOINTMENTS. The Washington Globe, the "official organ" of Wednesday, contains the following appointments, by the president, &c.

Edward Livingston, of the state of Louisiana, secretary of state, in the place of Martin Van Buren, resigned.

Levi Woodbury, of the state of New Hampshire, secretary of the navy, in the place of John Branch resigned.

The office of the secretary of the treasury, which has become vacant by the resignation of Samuel D. Ingham, has been offered to Louis McLane, of the state of Delaware, at present envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Great Britain. Messrs. Livingston and Woodbury have entered upon the duties of their respective departments. Mr. Ingham, we understand, will remain in the treasury department until some unfinished business, upon which he is engaged, is completed. Hugh Lawson White, of Tennessee, who, on the 9th ult. was offered the appointment of secretary of war, in the place of John H. Eaton, resigned, has declined accepting it. We understand that the vacancy in that department will be forthwith supplied, and that in the meantime its duties will be performed by Mr. Eaton.

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA AMERICANA. This popular dictionary of arts, sciences, literature, history and politics, is now in a course of publication, five volumes having been already issued from the press of those enterprising and high spirited publishers, Messrs. Carey & Lea, of Philadelphia. It is for sale in most of the principal book stores in the United States, and must, from its intrinsic merit, commend itself to all intelligent and judicious readers, as it is the intention of the editors to furnish an accurate view of the sciences as they now stand. This is a desideratum much required by the rapid advances made in every branch of them, within the last few years, and particularly in those applied to the mechanic arts. In addition to the various subjects legitimately connected with the heads just given, it is the intention of the publishers to include a copious collection of articles on American biography; and, from the earnest already given in the volumes now before the public, of the attention to be paid to this particular department, we calculate on a rich treat for all who regard the fame of eminent men as consecrated property of their country.

Our time does not permit us to enter into reviews of the publications of the day; but, from a considerable examination of the volumes before us, we feel entirely justified in saying, that this must prove a valuable acquisition to all the reading and reflecting public, as the editors have managed, thus far, to present the various subjects discussed by them in a style so unostentatious that they cannot fail to win golden opinions, alike from the learned and unlearned. Every parent who has the means of so doing, should procure the work for the edification of his children; as it will be a library in itself, always ready to furnish fresh amusement and instruction.

CUNNINGHAM, late postmaster at Abingdon, Maryland. It will be recollected that this man was not found guilty of the charge of felony, though many letters that contained money had been robbed on the route on which his office was located—because that the bait which caught him was in counterfeited notes, value being necessary to sustain an action for felony; but being tried for a misdemeanor, in detaining and opening letters conveyed to his office by the mail, he was promptly found guilty, though every point against him was contested with uncommon zeal and ability. He has been sentenced to pay costs of prosecution, a fine of fifty dollars and imprisonment in Baltimore county jail for six months.

SALES OF BANK STOCK. From the Albany Argus. The Comptroller sold yesterday at auction, 845 shares of stock in the Mechanics' and Farmers' bank of this city, and 600 shares of the New York State bank.

The highest premium given on the stock of the Mechanics' bank, was forty one and a half per cent., and the lowest thirty-eight per cent. above par—the average differing a fraction only from 38 2-3 per cent. above par. The amount sold of the stock of this bank was $14,365; the premium upon which is $5,554.

The highest premium on the stock of the State bank was thirty-two and three-fourths per cent., and the lowest thirty-one per cent above par; the average being 32¼ per cent. above par. The total amount sold of the stock of the State bank was $16,800. The premium upon which is $5,389 25.

The total amount of the premium realized to the state, from the stock sold in these two banks, is ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-three dollars and twenty-five cents.

COLOMBIA. The provinces which have declared in favor of the government of Bogota, are reported as containing a present population of 1,291,421 souls. Venezuela and "the republic of the south," are not, of course, included. So it seems that there are three sovereignties in Colombia—blessed "nullification," and contests of plundering generals for power.

BRIEF NOTICES.

The New York alms house. It has been officially announced at New York, that there are now in the alms house of that city one hundred and forty children laboring under partial or total blindness from disease.

Philadelphia and Delaware county rail road. Books for receiving subscriptions to the stock of this company were lately opened in Philadelphia and Chester. Of the 4,000 shares into which the stock is divided, 2,700 were taken by the commissioners, 900 were subscribed in Philadelphia, and it is supposed that the other 400 shares were subscribed for in Chester.

Scientific and literary. According to an article in the Quarterly Review, the following sums are annually voted by the French government: or scientific and literary establishment, 69,000*l.*; for those of the fine arts, 18,875*l.*; for artists and literary men, 15,925*l.*—total 103,791*l.*

Two bucks were shot in Bath county, Va. recently, whose horns had been interlocked in a combat, so that it was found impossible to separate them. They appeared to have been so for several days: the one that was shot last, dragged the other 100 yards before he also was shot.

Imprisonment for debt. The Zanesville Messenger mentions the imprisonment of two females of good character, for debt. The amount of the debt against one of them was but a dollar and twenty-five cents. The money was collected and the women liberated as soon as their situation was made known.

Drowned veal. A butcher by the name of Campbell, in the city New York, has been fined $22 50 cents by the city authorities for selling the meat of a calf that had been drowned.

The stomach pump. A woman at Portsmouth, N. H. who had taken two ounces of laudanum, was lately successfully relieved, by the application of the stomach pump.

Commodore Barron. This officer left Norfolk for Philadelphia on the 18th instant, to take charge of the navy yard at the latter place. Prior to his leaving his late command at the navy yard at Gosport, the civil and military officers attached to the station gave him a dinner. Commodore Barron is succeeded in the command of the Gosport navy yard by commodore Warrington.

Ulster county bank, N. Y. The books for subscription to the stock of this bank were closed on the 5th instant. The whole amount of stock subscribed was $475,050, being an excess over the capital required of $375,050.

Fatal rencontre. A rencontre took place in the woods about 18 miles from Little Rock, Arkansas territory, on the 16 ult. between general Hardy Robinson and a young gentleman about 19 years of age, named Gen. F. Owen, which resulted in the death of the latter. No other person was present during the combat. Immediately on the death of Mr Owen, general Robinson surrendered himself up to the civil authority.

Damages against town officers for neglect. The Long Island Star states that Chester Kellogg, and Rufus Coles, of Amherst, Massachusetts, have each recovered damages against the town of East Windsor, for injuries received by them in falling through a bridge, in a stage in May last, which bridge belonged to the town, and which it was their duty to keep in repair. Mr. K. had his leg broken in two places, and the jury awarded him $1,500 damages; Mr. Coles had his thigh broken and the jury gave him a verdict for $1,050

University of Virginia. Great disorders are said to have been committed by the students at this institution, because that one of their fellows had been dismissed.

Col. Rochester, the venerable founder of the flourishing city which bears his name, lately died at his residence therein, in the 80th year of his age.

Florida. After a most severe political contest, col. White, though opposed, as the Tallahassee paper says, by "official influence in every quarter," has been re-elected a delegate to congress. For Mr. White 1,516—Mr. Gadsden 1,385; majority for White 131.

Norfolk. During the first two weeks of the present month there were but two deaths in the town of Norfolk, out of a population of 10,000.

Charleston. A large quantity of lumber took fire in this city on the 18th inst. and was consumed, with two or three neighboring houses.

Riot. A serious riot lately occurred at Lowell between the American and Irish working people employed therein. One life was lost because of the affray, by an accident—but several were much injured. The leaders had been arrested.

Prolific. A Mrs. Buckminster, of Franconia, New Hampshire, has had nine children at three births, all living and doing well, and all boys—3, 2 and 4. There names are Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; Elisha and Elihu; Enoch, Noah, Samuel and Elijah.

A sublime compliment. Speaking of the tag rag and bobtail gentry of New York, who occasionally visit Long Island for sport, on Sunday, the Brooklyn Patriot says, with vehemence—"We do not believe that if ten thousand tons of tartar emetic, could, by any possibility, be thrown into the very bowels of purgatory, it could vomit out such a set of animals!"

Tight lacing. A young lady at Reading, Pennsylvania, while dancing, fell down and was dead, because of tight lacing—and it is said that a female-man lately met with a like accident, from the same cause, in a neighboring city. The latter was of no consequence.

The Cherokee Phœnix of the 7th inst. states that there is a report, to which they are inclined to give credit, that the president, accompanied by the secretary of war, intends to visit the Cherokee nation some time in the course of the ensuing summer.

Buffalo harbor was first opened to navigation on the 11th inst.—"January lingering in the lap of May."

Money seems very plentiful in most parts of the United States, because of the exceeding high price of good old stocks, and the extraordinary eagerness manifested to make new investments, in banks, rail roads, &c.

Hayti. It is stated in recent letters from Port-au-Prince, that a revolution in St. Domingo had been feared; but that affairs had subsequently assumed a more quiet state.

Gibraltar. The communication between this fortress and the interior has been suspended by the Spanish authorities—who allege that the British have afforded protection to refugees.

Martinique. Accounts from St. Pierre's, 20th April, received at Norfolk, mention the execution of 150 negroes concerned in the late revolt!

Cuba. The tonnage duty on all vessels exporting 1,000 boxes of sugar and upwards, from Havana and Matanzas, is reduced from $2 50 to $1 50 per ton.

Santa Fe. We observe a paragraph from the Gazeta Mercantil, in the Argentine News of Buenos Ayres, that the government of Santa Fe has equipped a flotilla to cruise in the Parana. The schooner brig Uruguay sailed from Santa Fe on the first of March last. The rest of the vessels of war were to follow immediately. Captain Gordon was to be invested with the command of the whole flotilla.

